Pope, Dunciad, iv. 321.

6. Be eminent or conspicuous.

If there come truth from them,
As upon thee, Macbeth, their speeches shine,
Why, by the vertues on them made good,
May they not be my oracles as well?

Shakespeare, Macbeth, iii. 1.
Her face was well'd; yet to my fancied sight
Love, sweetness, goodness, in her person shined
So clear, as in no face with more delight.
Milton, Sonnets, On his deceased Wife, 10.
Cato's soul

Shines out in every thing she acts or speaks;
While winning mildness and attractive smiles
Beautify her looks, and, with becoming grace, Softens the rigour of her father's virtues.
Adrian, Cato.

The countess smooth, who forty years had shined
An humble servant to all human kind.
Pope, Moral Essays, l. 232.

Few are qualified to shine in company; but it is
In most men's power to be agreeable.—Swift.

7. Be propitious.

The Lord make his face shine upon thee, and be gracious unto thee.—Numbers, vi. 25.

8. Give light, real or figurative.

The light of righteousness hath not shined unto us, and the sun of righteousness rose not upon us.
Wisdom of Solomon, v. 6.

Shine inward, and the mind through all her powers Irradiate.
Milton, Paradise Lost, iii. 52.

Shine. s.

1. Fair weather.

Be it fair or foul, or rain or shine. Dryden.
He will accustom himself to heat and cold, and shine and rain; all which if a man's body will not endure, it will serve him to very little purpose.—
Locke.

2. Brightness; splendour; lustre.

His lightning gave shine unto the world.—Book of Common Prayer, Psalms, xlvii. 4.
Cynthia obscures her silver shine.

Shakespeare, Venus and Adonis.
Her device, within a ring of clouds, a heart with shine about it.—B. Jonson, Cynthia's Revels.

Shiness. s. Shyness.

An incurable shiness is the vice of Irish horses, and is hardly ever seen in Flanders, because the winter forces the breeders there to house and handle their colts.—Sir W. Temple.
They were famous for their justice in commerce, but extreme shiness to strangers; they exposed their goods with the price marked upon them, and then retired.—Arbuthnot.

Shingle. s. [from Norse, singl.] Coarse gravel, as chiefly found on the shore of the sea or banks of rivers.

The sole sign thereof man's habitation

Was merely a shingle Route but in a dunce
That led away indeed direct from the shingle.
Barham, Ingoldby Legends, The Bagman's Dog.

Shingle. s. [from German, schindel.] Thin board to cover houses; sort of tiling.

The best to cleave is the most useful for pales, laths, shingles, and wine-casks.—Mortimer, L'Esclapart.
I reached St. Asaph, a shingle's son, where there is a very poor cathedral church, covered with shingles or tiles.—Roy, Remains, p. 123.

Shingle. v. a. Cover with tiles or shingles.

They shingle their houses with it.—Beetyn, Sylva,
h. ii. ch. iv. § 1.

Shingles. s. [Lat. cingulum = belt; cingo = I gird.] In Medicine. Cutaneous disease, consisting of small transparent vesicles arranged as a belt, encircling, either wholly or partially, the abdomen; in Nosology, Herpes zoster: (the latter term being an approximate equivalent to cingulum, Greek root of Serpent = I gird; Latin, cingo = I gird).

Such are used successfully in erysipelas and shingles, by a slender diet of decoctions of farina-ceous vegetables, and copious drinking of cooling liquors.—Arbuthnot, On Diet.

Shining. part. adj. Exhibiting light and brightness.

True paradise closed with shining rock.
Milton, Paradise Lost, iv. 253.
Fish with their fins and shining scales. Ibid. viii. 401.

The reformation, in its first establishment, produced its proper fruits, and distinguished the whole age with shining instances of virtue and morality.—
Addison, Freehold's.

Shining. verbal abs. Exhibition of light and brightness.

The colour and shining of bodies is nothing but the different arrangement and refraction of their minute parts.—Locke.

Shiningness. s. Attribute suggested by Shining; brightness; splendour.

The epithets 'narmureus,' 'clarior,' and didus, are all applied to beauty by the Roman poets, sometimes as to their shape, and sometimes as to the shiningness here spoken of.—Spence, Crito.

Shiny. adj. Bright; splendid; luminous.

When Alderman was mounted high,
Above the shiny Castopole's chair,
One knocked at the door, and in would fare.
Spenser, Faerie Queen.

The night
Is shiny, and they say we shall embattle
By the second hour of the morn.

Shakespeare, Antony and Cleopatra, iv. 3.
While from afar we heard the cautious play,
Like distant thunders on a shiny day,
For absent friends we were admired to fear.
Dryden, Epistles, To the Duchess of York, 30.

Ship. s. [A.S. scip.] Large hollow building, made to pass over the sea with sails.

All my followers to the eager foe
Turn back and fly like ships before the wind.

Shakespeare, Henry VI. Part III. l. 4.
There made forth to us a small boat, with about eight persons in it, whereof one of them had in his hand a lipstaff, who made aboard our ship.—Baron.
Two other ships loaded with victuals were burnt,
and some of the men saved by their shipboats.
Knutles, History of the Turks.

Instead of a ship, he should levy upon his country such a sum of money, and return the same to the treasurer of the navy; hence that tax had the denomination of ship-money, by which accrued the yearly sum of two hundred thousand pounds.—
Lord Clarendon, History of the Grand Rebellion.

As the first element in a compound.

A ship-carpenter of old Rome could not have talked more judiciously.—Addison.

Ship. v. a.

1. Put into a ship.

My father at the road
Expects my coming, there to see me shipp'd.
Shakespeare, Two Gentlemen of Verona, l. 1.
The emperor, shipping his great ordinance, departed down the river.—Knutles, History of the Turks.

All the timber was cut down in the mountains of Cilicia, and shipped in the bay of Attalia, from whence it was by sea transported to Pelusium.—Ibid.

2. Transport in a ship.

The sun no warmer shall the mountains touch,
But we will ship him hence.

Shakespeare, Timon, iv. 1.
Andronicus, would thou wert shipt to hell,
Rather than rob me of the people's hearts.

Id., Titus Andronicus, l. 2.

In Portugal men spent with age, so as they cannot hope for above a year, ship themselves away in a Brazil fleet.—Sir W. Temple.

With off.

A single leaf shall waft an army o'er,
Or ship off senators to some distant shore.

The canal that runs from the sea into the Arno gives a convenient carriage to all goods that are to be shipped off.—Addison.

In Naval Language.

a. Receive into the ship: (as, 'To ship a heavy sea').

By noon the sea went very high indeed, and our ship rode forwreck in, shipped several men, and we thought once or twice our anchor had come home.—
Defoe, Life and Adventures of Robinson Crusoe.

b. Enter an engagement to serve on board a ship.

It was my great misfortune that in all these adventures I did not ship myself as a sailor; whereby, though I might indeed have worked a little harder than ordinary, yet at the same time I had learned the duty and office of a foremast-man.—*Defoe, Life
and Adventures of Robinson Crusoe.*

c. Bring the blade of the oar within the vessel.

A breeze from shore began to blow,
The sailors ship their oars, and came to row;
Then hoist their yards a-trip, and all their sails at full. Dryden, Translation from Ovid, Ceyx and Alcyon.

Shipboard. s.

1. This word is seldom used but in adverbial phrases: (as, a shipboard, on shipboard = in a ship).

Let him go on shipboard, and the merchants will not leave their starboard and larboard.—Windsor Ditch.

Ovid, writing from an shipboard to his friends, excused the faults of his poetry by his misfortunes.
—Dryden.

What dost thou make a shipboard? To what end?
Id., Translation of Persius, v. 211.

2. Plank of a ship.

They have made all thy shipboards of fir-trees of Saur; they have taken cedars from Lebanon to make masts for thee.—Ezekiel, xxvii. 5.

Shipboy. s. Boy that serves in a ship.

Few or none know me; if they did,
This shipboy's semblance hath described me quite.
Shakespeare, King John, iv. 3.

Shipbroker. s. One who procures insurances for ships.

Shipbuilder. s. Naval architect; shipwright.

Shipbandler. s. Dealer in naval stores.

Shipless. adj. Without ships.

It is by no means a shipless sea, but everywhere peopled with white sails.—*Gray, Letter to Dr.
Watson: 1764.*

Shipman. s. Sailor; seaman.

Hiram sent in the navy his servants, shipmen that had knowledge of the sea.—1 Kings, ix. 27.
I myself have . . . the very points they blow,
All the quarters that they know
I'm the shipman's card. Shakespeare, Macbeth, i. 3.

Shipmaster. s. Captain; pilot of a ship.

The shipmaster came to him, and said unto him,
What earnest thou, O sleeper! arise, call upon thy God.—Jonah, i. 1.

Shipmate. s. One who sails in the same ship.

Shipmoney. s. Imposition formerly levied on port towns, and other places, for fitting out ships; revived in King Charles the First's time, and abolished in the same reign.

Sir. Roy brought his ship-money first for maritime towns; but that was like putting in a little new,
that afterwards you may put in a greater.—Helden, Table-Talk.

(For another example see Ship, s.)

Shippen. s. [A.S. scypen.] Stable; stall; cowhouse.

Shipping. s.

1. Vessels of navigation; fleet.

Before Caesar's invasion of this land, the Britons had not any shipping at all, other than their boats of twigs covered with hides.—Sir W. Raleigh.

The numbers and courage of our men, with the strength of our shipping, have for many ages past made us a match for the greatest of our neighbours at land, and an overmatch for the strongest at sea.
—Sir W. Temple.

By viewing Nature, Nature's handmaid, Art,
Makes mighty things from small beginnings grow;

Thus fishes first to shipping did impart,
Their tail the rudder, and their head the prow.
Dryden, Annus Mirabilis, civ.

2. Passage in a ship.

They also took shipping and came to Capernaum, seeking for Jesus.—John, vi. 24.

shippy, adj. Abounding in, fit for, ships.

Rare.
Some shippy havens contrive, some raise fair frames.
And rock-hewn pillars for theatric games.
Vicars, Translation of Virgil: 1632.

Shipwreck. s.

1. Destruction of ships by rocks or shelves.

Bold were the men, which on the ocean first Spread their new sails, when shipwreck was the word.
Wallis.
We are not to quarrel with the water for inundations and shipwrecks.—Sir R. L. Estlin.
This sea-war cost the Carthaginians five hundred quingulæ, and the Romans seven hundred, including their shipwrecks.—Arbuthnot.

2. Fragments; shattered remains; wreck in general.

They might have it in their own try, and that by gathering up the shipwrecks of the Athenian and Roman theatres.—Dryden.

3. Destruction; miscarriage.

Holding faith and a good conscience, which some having put away, concerning faith, have made shipwreck.—1 Timothy, i. 19.

Shipwreck. v. a.

1. Make to suffer the dangers of a wreck.

Thou that exist still the raging of the seas,
Chastise up the winds, and bid the tempests cease,
Redeem my shipwreck'd soul from raging gusts
Of cruel passion and deceitful trusts.
Prior, Solomon, iii. 673.

A square piece of marble shews itself to have been a little pagan monument of two persons who were shipwrecked.—Addison.

2. Throw by loss of the vessel.

Shipwreck'd upon a kingdom, where no pity,
No friends, no hope! no kindred weep for me.
Shakespeare, Henry VIII. iii. 1.

Shipwrecking. part. adj. Destroying by dashing on rocks or shallows.

Whence the sun 'gins his reflection,
Shipwrecking storms and direful thunders break.
Shakespeare, Macbeth, i. 2.

Shipwright. s. Builder of ships.

Why such impress of shipwrights, whose work task
Does not divide the Sunday from the week?
Shakespeare, Hamlet, i. 1.

A miserable shame it were for shipwrights,
if they did not exceed all others in the setting up our royal ships.—Sir W. Raleigh.
Vast numbers of ships in our harbours, and shipwrights in our war-port towns.—Swift.

The Roman fleet, although built by shipwrights,
and conducted by pilots, both without experience, defeated that of the Carthaginians.—Arbuthnot.
As when a shipwright stands his workmen o'er,
Who ply the humble saws hence beam to bore,
Urged on all hands it nimbly spins about,
The grain deep piercing, till it sweeps it out.
Pope, Translation of the Odyssey, ix. 423.

shire. s. [A.S. scir.] Division of the kingdom; county; so much of the kingdom as is under one sheriff: (see last extract, also under Wapentake).

His blazing eyes, like two bright shining shields,
Did burn with wrath, and sparkled living fire;
As two broad beacons, set in open fields,
Send forth their flames far off to every shire.
Spenser, Faerie Queene.

From distant shires repair the noble youth,
And find report for once had less'd truth;
By wonder first, and then by passion moved,
They came, they saw, they marvel'd, and they loved.
Prior, Henry and Emma, 71.

The great council by which an Anglo-Saxon king was guided in all the main acts of government bore the appellation of Wittenagemot, or the assembly of the wise men. All their laws express the consent of this council, and there are instances where grants made without its concurrence have been revoked.
It was composed of prelates and abbots, of the aldermen of shires, and as it is generally expressed, of the noble and wise men of the kingdom. Whether the lesser thanes, or inferior proprietors of land, were entitled to a place in the national council, as they certainly were in the shirecourt, or county-court, is not easily to be decided.—*Hallam, View of the State of Europe during the Middle Ages, ch.
viii. pt. 1.*

As the knights of shires correspond to the lower nobility of other feudal countries, we have less cause to be surprised, that they belonged originally to the same branch of parliament as the barons, than at their subsequent intermixture with men so inferior in station as the citizens and burghers.—*Ibid. ch.
viii. pt. 1.*

In modern language, shire is synonymous with county; but some smaller districts in the North of England retain the provincial appellation of shires:
as Richmondshire, in the North Riding of Yorkshire; Halburthshire, or the hamlet of Halham, in the West Riding, which is nearly coterminous with the parish of Sheffield. Brande and Cox, Dictionary of Science, Literature, and Art.

Shiromote. s. [A.S. scir-gemot.] Anciently, a county court; meeting of the persons of the county on an extraordinary occasion.

If the matter was of great importance, it was put in the full shiromote; and if the general voice acquitted or condemned, this was final in the cause.—
*Hurke, Abridgement of English History, b. ii.
ch. vi.*
(See also extract from Italian under Shire, where the fuller or older form is given).

Shirk. v. n. [shark.] Practise mean or artful tricks.

Shirking and raking in the tobacco-shops.—Sir Harbottle Grimston, Speech against Archbishop Laud: 1630.

Shirk. v. a.

1. Procure by mean tricks; steal.

Tell me, you that never heard the call of any vocation, that are free of no other company than your idle companions, that shirks living from others, but time from yourselves; tell me, May it not be said of idleness, as of envy, that it is its own scourge?—
Bishop Rainbow, Sermons, p. 40: 1835.

2. Avoid.

Shirt. s. [see Skirt.] Garment for the upper part of the body: (generally in the way of under-clothing).

She had her shertes and gyrdles of leere.—Bishop Fisher, Sermons, v.

I would advise you to shift a shirt: the violence of action hath made you reek as a sacrifice.—Shakespear, Cymbeline, i. 3.

I take but two shirts out with me, and I mean not to sweat extraordinarily.—*Id., Henry IV. Part II.
i. 2.*

When we lay next in what we hold most dear,
Like Hercules, envious'd shirts we wear,
And glowing mischiefs.—Dryden.

Several persons in December had nothing over their shoulders but their shirts.—Addison, Travels in Italy.

Shirt. v. a. Cover; clothe in a shirt.

Ah! for so many souls, as but this morn
Were clothed with flesh, and warm'd with vital
blood,
But naked now, or shirted but with air.
Dryden, King Arthur, ii. 1.

Shirtless. adj. Wanting a shirt.

Many woolsey brothers,
Gave numbers! sleeveless some, and shirtless others.—Pope, Dunciad, iii. 115.

Shittah-tree. s. Tree which produces the wood called in Scripture shittim-wood.

I will plant in the wilderness the cedar, the shittah-tree, and the myrtle.—Isaiah, xli. 19.

Shittim. s. Kind of precious wood, of which Moses made the greatest part of the tables, altars, and planks belonging to the tabernacle. The wood is hard, tough, smooth, without knots, and extremely beautiful. It grows in Arabia.

Speak to the children of Israel that they bring me an offering . . . badgers' skins and shittim-wood.—
Exodus, xxv. 2.

Shittle. adj. Unsteady. Obsolete.

We pause not what the people say or think;
Their shittle late makes more but coward's shrink.
Mirror for Magistrates, p. 450.

Shuttlecock. s. Shuttlecock the commoner pronunciation.

You need not discharge a cannon to break the chain of his thoughts: the pat of a shuttlecock, or the cracking of a jack, will do his business.—Culver.

Shittleness. s. [?] Unsettledness; inconstancy; lightness. Obsolete.

The vain shittleness of an unconstant head.—
Barret, Alcaicus: 1580.

Shive. s. [Dutch, schijf.]

1. Slice of bread.

A shive of bread as brown as nut.
Warner, Albion's England.
Easy it is
Of a cut loaf to steal a shive.
Shakespeare, Titus Andronicus, ii. 1.

2. Thick splinter, or lamina, cut off from the main substance.

Shavings made by the plane are in some things differing from those shives, or thin and flexible pieces of wood, that are obtained by borers.—Boyle.

Shiver. v. n. Fall at once into many parts or shi

Hindst thou in aught but gossamer, feather, air,
So many fathom down precipitating,
Thou'dst shiver'd like an egg.
Shakespeare, King Lear, iv. 4.

The natural world, should gravely once cease, or be withdrawn, would instantly shiver into millions of atoms.—Woodward.

Shiver. v. a. Break by one act into many parts; shatter.

Shiver. v. n. Quake; tremble; shudder, as with cold or fear.

Any very harsh noise will set the teeth on edge,
and make all the body shiver.—Bacon.
What delicious palsy's this,
Which makes the thoughtiest divest their bliss?
And that they might her footsteps straw,
Drop their leaves with shivering awe.
Cleaveland.
Why stand we longer shivering under fear?
Milton, Paradise Lost, x. 1003.

The man that shiver'd on the brink of sin,
Thus steel'd and harden'd, ventures boldly in.
Creech, Translation of Juvenal, xlii. 130.

He described this march to the temple with so much horror, that he shiver'd every joint.—Addison.

Give up Iains to the realms of day,
Whose ghost, yet shivering on Corymbus' sand,
Expects its passage to the farther strand.
Pope, Translation of the First Book of the Theban of Statius.

Prometheus is laid
On icy Caucasus to shiver,
While vultures eat his growing liver.
Swift.

Shiver. s.

1. One fragment of many into which any-thing is broken.

He would pound thee into shivers with his fist, as a sailor breaks a biscuit.—Shakespeare, Troilus and Cressida, ii. 1.

As brittle as the chry in the flue;
Far there it is crack'd in an hundred shivers.
Id., Richard II. iv. 1.

If you strike a solid body that is brittle, it break-eth not only where the immediate force is, but breaketh all about into shivers and fragments.—Bacon, Natural and Experimental History.
Surging waves against a solid rock,
Though all to shivers dash'd.
Milton, Paradise Regain'd, iv. 13.

2. Thin slice; little piece.
The made [is] a small thin shiver of wood.—Hammond, On St. Matthew, v. vii. 3.

3. Shaking fit; tremor.

4. Spindle.

2. Thin slice; little piece.
The made [is] a small thin shiver of wood.—Hammond, On St. Matthew, v. vii. 3.

Shivered. part. adj. Shattered.

The ground with shiver'd armour strown.
Milton, Paradise Lost, vi. 383.
Showers of granadoes rain . . . the shiver'd arch.
Fly diverse, working torment.—Philips.

Shivering. verbal abs.

1. Act of trembling.
Paucity for shivering's attention
Ideally 1. 1. as base as they live.—*Water
Kest. of Confession, pt. ii.*

2. Division; dismemberment.

'Tis on the breaking and shivering of a great state,
you may be sure to have wars.—Bacon.

Shivory. adj. Loose; incoherent; inconjunct.

There were observed incredible numbers of these shells thus flatted, and extremely tender, in shivory stone.—Woodward.

Shoad. s. [?] In Mining. Mixture of ore and other mineral matters, indicating mines or veins.

Certain tin stones lie on the face of the ground, which they call shoad, as shad from the main load,
and made somewhat round by the water.—Carew, Survey of Cornwall.

The leads or veins of metal were by this action of the departing water made easy to be found out by the shoad, or trains of metallic fragments borne off from them, and lying in trains from those veins towards the sea, in the same course that water falling thence would take.—Woodward.

Shoadstone. s. Stone, or pebble, belonging to a shoad.

Shoadstone is a small stone, smooth without, of a dark liver colour, and of the same colour within, only with a tincture of a faint purple. It is a fragment broke off an iron vein.—Woodward, On Fuels.

Shoal. s. [A.S. sceole.]

1. Crowd; great multitude; throng.

When there be great shoals of people, which go on to populate, without foreseeing means of sus-tention; once in an age they discharge their people upon other nations.—Bacon.

918 Husbandry.

Tell your master that the horses want shooing.—
Swift.

2. Discharge us from a bow or gun.
I owe you much, and, like a witless youth,
That which I owe is lost; but if you please

- Shoot. v. n. To send an arrow that self way
You did shoot the first, I do not doubt
And both. Shakespeare, Merchant of Venice, i. 1.
It is murderous shoot that's shot
Not yet lighted; and our safest way
Is to avoid the aim. Id., Macbeth, ii. 3.
A troop of winding graces waited still,
And from about her shot darts of dew
Into all eyes to wish her still in sight.
Milton, Paradise Lost, viii. 61.
3. Let off; (used of the instrument).
The two ends of a bow shot off, by from one another. Boyle.
Men, who know not hearts, should make examples;
Which, like a warning-giver, must be shot off,
To fright the rest from crimes.
Dryden, Spanish Friar, v. 3.
4. Strike with anything shot.
There shall not an hand touch [the wound],
but he shall be stoned or shot through. Jerusalem, xix. 15.
5. Emit new parts, as a vegetable.
None of the trees send themselves for their height, neither shoot up their top among the thick boughs.
—Eschylus, xxxi. 15.
A grain of mustard groweth up and shooteth out great branches. Mark, iv. 32.
Till (like a tall old oak) how learning shoots,
To heaven her branches, and to hell her roots.
Sir J. Denham, Progress of Learning, preface.
6. Emit; dart or thrust forth.
That gently warms
The universe, and trench inward part
With gentle penetration, though unseen, shoots invisible virtue even to the deep.
Milton, Paradise Lost, iii. 58.
Ye boys who pluck the flowers, and spoil the spring,
Beware the secret snare that shoots a sting.
Dryden, Translation of Virgil's Eclogues, iii. 114.
The last had a star upon its breast, which shot forth pointed beams of a peculiar lustre. Addison.
7. Push suddenly.
I have laugh'd sometimes when I have reflected on those men who have shot themselves into the world;
some bolting out upon the stage with vast applause, and some hissed off, quitting it with dis-
—Dryden.
— liquid air his moving pinions wound,
And in the moment, shot him on the ground.
—Translation from Ovid, Metamorphoses, li. 1.
8. Push forward.
All they that see me laugh me to scorn; they shoot at the tip, they shake the head. Palmer, xxi. 7.
9. Fit to each other by planing.
Straight lines in joiners' language are called a int; that is, two pieces of wood that are shot, that meet, or else joined with a joint-chisel. Johnson, Mechanical Exercises.
10. Pass through with swiftness.
Thus having said, she sinks beneath the ground
With furious haste, and shoots the Stygian sound.
Dryden, Translation of the Æneid, vii. 119.
- Shoot. v. n.
1. Perform the act of shooting, or emitting a missile weapon.
The archers have sorely grieved him and shot at him. Genesis, xlix. 23.
When he has shot his best, he is sure that none ever did shoot better. Sir W. Temple.
A shining harvest either host displays,
And shoots against the sun with equal rays. Dryden.
When you shoot, and slant one eye,
You see, and think he would they
To lend the other friendly aid,
Or wink, as coward and afraid. Prior, Alms, ii. 139.
2. Germinate; increase in vegetable growth.
Such trees as love the sun, do not willingly descend far into the earth; and therefore they are commonly trees that shoot up much. Id.
Onions, as they lunge, will shoot forth. Id.
The tree at once both upward shoots,
And just as much grows downward to the roots.
Chaucer.
The monarch oak, the patriarch of the trees,
Shoots rising up, and spreads by slow degrees.
Dryden, Palanquin and Acre, iii. 1058.
Nor will the wither'd stock be green again,
But the wild olive shoots and shades the negligent plain. Id., Translation of the Georgics, ii. 426.
New creatures rise,
A moving mass: first, and short of thick;
Till shooting out with less and less wings,
The embryo proceed to bees with point of stings.
Id., iv. 137.
The corn laid up by ants would shoot under ground, if they did not bite off all the buds; and therefore it will produce nothing. Addison.
A wild, where weeds and flowers promiscuous shoot,
Or garden, tempting with forbidden fruit.
Pope, Essay on Man, i. 1.
3. Form itself into any shape by emissions from a gulfed particle.
If the menstruum be overcharged, metals will shoot into crystals. Bacon.

- That rule mass will shoot itself into several forms, till it make an habitable world: the steady hand of Providence being the invisible guide of all its motions. J. Barret, Theory of the Earth.
Expressed juices of plants, bodied into the consistence of a scum, and set into a solid place, the essential salt will shoot upon the sides of the vessels.
—Arbuthnot, On the Nature and Choice of Aliments.
4. Be emitted.
There shot a streaming lamp along the sky,
Which on the winged lightning seem'd to fly.
Dryden, Translation of the Æneid, ii. 912.
5. Protuberate; jet out.
This valley of the Tyrod lies enclosed on all sides by the Alps, though its dominions shoot out into several branches among the breaks of the mountains. Addison, Travels in Italy.
6. Pass as an arrow.
Thy words shot through my heart,
Melt my resolves, and turn me all to love.
Addison, Cato.
7. Become anything by sudden growth.
Materials dark and crude,
Of spirits fiery nature, till touch'd
With heaven's ray, and temper'd, they shoot forth
so beautiful, opening to the ambient light.
Milton, Paradise Lost, vi. 478.
Let me but live to shadow this young plant
From blights and storms: he'll soon shoot up a hero.
Dryden, Clemens, i. 1.
8. Move swiftly along.
Where Tiber at the foot of Paradise
Into a gulf shot under ground, till part
Rose up a fountain by the tree of life.
Milton, Paradise Lost, ix. 71.
Heaven's imperious queen shot down from high,
At her approach the brazen hinges fly. Dryden.
Hurling from thence to plunge herself she shoots,
But shoots along, supported on her wings.
Id., Translation from Ovid, House of Sleep.
The broken air loud whistling as she flies,
She stings and listens, and shoots forth again,
And guides her pinions by her young one's cries.
Id., Anna's Mirabilis, evil.
She downward glides,
Lights in Fleet-ditch, and shoots beneath the fish. J. Trivett, ii. 167.
Where the mob authors, swiftly shot along,
Nor idly mumble in the noisy throng. Id., iii. 51.
A sudden star shot through liquid air,
And drew behind a radiant train of hair.
Pope, Rape of the Lock, canto v.
9. Feel a quick glancing pain.
They found these mosses one day shoot and swell extremely. Tatler, no. 239.
- Shoot. s.
1. Act or impression of anything emitted from a distance.
The Turkish bow giveth a very forcible shoot, insensible as the arrow hath pierced a steel target two inches thick; but the arrow, if headed with wood, hath been known to pierce through a piece of wood of eight inches thick. Bacon.
2. Act of striking, or endeavouring to strike, with a missile weapon discharged by any instrument.
The noise of thy crossbow
Will scare the bird, and so my shoot is lost.
Shakespeare, Henry VI. Part III, iii. 1.
But come the law; now mercy goes to kill,
And shooting will in this accounted ill,
Thus will I save my credit in the shoot,
Not wounding, pity would not let me do it.
Id., Love's Labour's Lost, iv. 1.
As a country-fellow was making a shoot at a pigeon, he trod upon a snake that bit him. Sir R. L. Estcourt.
3. Branches issuing from the main stock.
They will not come just on the tops where they were cut, but out of those shoots which were w. ter-
—Bacon.
I saw them under a green mantling vine,
Plucking ripe clusters from the tender shoot.
Milton, Comus, 295.
Prime of superfluous branches and shoots of this second spring, but expose not the fruit without leaves sufficient. Keight.
The back she bare instead of Cynthia's spear,
To bow the growth of the luxuriant year,
To decent form the low less shoots to bring,
And teach the obedient branches where to spring.
Pope, Festivum and Pomona.
Now, should my passion own her truth
To beauty, dress, or paint, or y. n. h.,
I were grafting on an annual stock
That might one year expect to shoot;
And making one luxuriant shoot
In the next year for want of root.
Fido push'd forth limbs at every branching shoot;
And virtue shrunk almost beneath the root. Harle.
4. Young swine; grice; shout.
- Shooter. s. One who, that which, shoots; archer; gunner.

- Some shooters take in hand stronger bows than they are able to maintain. Jacham, Topographia.
Used adjectively.
Descending on the plain, ashore they leave;
The boatmen to please the shoot & king.
Dryden, Translation of the First Book of the Iliad, 100.
- Shooting. s. [A.S. scœttung, scœttung.]
1. Act of emitting as from a gun or bow.
Wrestling, shooting, and other such active sports, will keep men in health. Hakop Sprad, History of the Royal Society, p. 18.
2. Sensation of quick pain.
I fancy we shall have some rain by the shooting of my eyes. Shakespeare, First of Walsfield.
Shooting. part. adj. Moving rapidly, as if shot from a bow.
A shooting star in autumn thwarts the night.
Milton, Paradise Lost, vi. 178.
- Shoety. adj. Corresponding in size or growth; of an equal size: (as, 'The wheat comes up shoety').
- Shop. s. [A.S. scœppa; L. Lat. scabinus.]
1. Place where anything is sold.
Our windows are broke down,
And we far fear compell'd to shut our shops.
Shakespeare, Henry VI. Part I, iii. 1.
In his needy shop a tortoise hung,
An alligator stuff, and other skins
Of ill-shaped fishes; and about his shelves
A beggarly account of empty boxes.
Id., Roma and Juliet, v. 1.
His shop is his element, and he raised with any equipment of himself live out of it. South, Sermons.
What a strange thing is it, that a little health, or the poor business of a shop, should keep us so senseless of these great things, that are coming so fast upon us? Love.
2. Room in which manufactures are carried on.
Your most grave belly thus answer'd;
True is it, my incorporate friends,
That I receive the general food at first,
Which you do live upon; and fit it is,
Because I am the storehouse and the shop
Of the whole body. Shakespeare, Coriolanus, i. 1.
We have de . . . al arts and stuffs made by them; and shops for such as are not brought into vulgar use. Bacon.
- Shop. v. n. Frequent shops: (as, 'They are shopping.' Told calls it 'a cant phrase of modern times').
- Shopboard. s. Bench on which any work is done.
That leastly riddle, that came down
From all the garrets in the town,
And stals, and shopboards, in vast swarms,
With new-clink'd bells, and rusty arms.
Bacon, Haberdashery, iii. 2, 1565.
It dwells not in shops or work-houses; nor till the last age was it ever known that any one served seven years to a smith or a taylor, that he should come to a doctor or divine from the shopboard or the mill, or from whistling to a town come to preach to a congregation. South, Sermons.
- Shopbook. s. Book in which a tradesman
—
They that have wholly neglected the exercise of their understandings, will be as unfit for it as one unpractised in figures to cast up a shopbook. Locke.
- Shopkeeper. s. Trader who sells in a shop;
not a merchant, who deals by wholesale.
Nothing is more common than to hear a shopkeeper desiring his neighbour to have the goodness to tell him what is a clock. Addison.
- Shoplifter. s. [for lift, see Wedgwood under L. off.] One who under pretence of buying takes occasion to steal goods out of a shop.
These women they call shoplifters, when they are challenged for their thefts, appear to be mighty nearly and affronted, for fear of being searched. Swift, Examiner, no. 28.
He looked like a discovered shoplifter, left to the mercy of the Exchange-women. Id., Tale of a Tub, sect. vi.
- Shoplifting. s. Crime of a shoplifter.
- Shoplike. adj. Low; vulgar
Be she never so shoplike or mercifulous. B. Jonson, Discourse.
- Shopman. s.
1. Petty trader.
Garth, as a man as his muse, prescribes and gives;
The shopman sells, and by destruction lives.
Dryden, Epistles, To his kinsman John Dryden, 107.
2. One who serves in a shop.
For my part, I have enough to mind in weighing my goods out, and waiting on my customers; but my wife, though she could be of as much use as a shopman to me, if she would put her hand to it, is now only in my way.—Anonymous in Johnson's Idler, no. 15.

Shore. s. [A.S. scora.]

1. Coast of the sea.

Sea cover'd was;
Sea without shore. Milton, Paradise Lost, xl. 749.

2. Bank of a river.

Beside the fruitful shore of muddy Nile,
Upon a sunny bank outstretch'd lay,
In monstrous length, a mighty crocodile. Spenser.

Shore. s. Sewer (as in Shoreditch).Shore. s. [Provincial German, schuore.] Support of a building; buttress.

When I use the word shore, I may intend thereby a coast of land near the sea, or a drain to carry off water, or a prop to support a building.—Watts, Logic.

Shore. v. a.

1. Prop; support.

They undermined the wall, and, as they wrought, shored it up with timber.—Kneller, History of the Turks.

He did not much strengthen his own subsistence in court, but stood there on his own feet; for the truth is, the most of his allies rather leaned upon him than shored him up.—Sir H. Wotton, Life of the Duke of Buckingham.

There was also made a shoring or under-propping set for the benevolence; to make the anus which any person had agreed to pay leviable by course of law.—Bacon, History of the Reign of Henry VII.

2. Set on shore.

I will bring these two moles, these blind ones aboard him; if he think it fit to shore them again, ... let him call me rogue.—Shakespeare, Winter's Tale, iv. 3.

Shored. adj. Having a bank or shore.

A ground lying low is moore overflowen,
And shored cannot long continue.
Mirror for Magistrates, p. 353.

Shoreless. adj. Having no coast; boundless.

He shall be scoffed at, and called puritan, if he will not revel it with them in a shoreless excess.—Junius, Six Stigmata, p. 283: 1633.

This ocean of felicity is so shoreless and bottomless, that all the saluts and angels cannot exhaust it.—Boyle.

The short channels of expiring time,
Or shoreless ocean of eternity.

Young, Night Thoughts, night ix.

Shorting. s. See extract.

Shorting and mording, or mortling, are words to distinguish fells of sheep; shorting being the fells after the shears are shorn off the sheep's back; and mording the fells flayed off after they die or are killed.—Toulmin, Law Dictionary. (Grainger.)

Short. adj. [A.S. scort.]

1. Not long; commonly not long enough.

Weak though I am of limb, and short of sight,
Far from a lion, and not a gentle creature,
I'll do what Mend and Chesholm advise,
To keep these limbs, and to preserve these eyes.
Pope, Imitations of Horace, b. i. ep. i.

2. Not long in space or extent.

This less volatile earth,
By shorter flight to the east, had left him there.
Milton, Paradise Lost, iv. 585.
Though short my stature, yet my name extends
To heaven itself, and earth's remotest ends. Pope.

3. Not long in time or duration.

They change the night into day: the light is short,
because of darkness.—Job, xvii. 12.
Nor love thy life, nor hate, but what thou liv'st,
Live well, how long or short permit to Heaven.
Milton, Paradise Lost, xi. 553.
Short were her marriage joys: for in the prime
Of youth her lord expired before his time.
Dryden, Sigismunda and Guiscardo, 25.

4. Repeated by quick iterations.

Her breath then short, seem'd lost from hence to pass,
Which more it moved, the more it sweeter was.
Sir P. Sidney.

Thy breath comes short, thy darted eyes are fast
On me for aid, as if thou wert pursued. Dryden.
My breath grew short, my beating heart sprung upward,
And leap'd and bounded in my heaving bosom.
Smith, Phœdra and Hippolytus.

5. Not adequate; not equal: (generally with of before the thing with which the comparison is made).

Immoderate praises the foolish lover thinks short of his mistress, though they reach far beyond the heavens.—Sir P. Sidney.

Some ootons here grow, but short in worth unto those of Bayru.—Savidge.

920

The Turks give you a quantity rather exceeding than short of your expectation.—Savidge.
I know them not; not therefore am I short Of knowing what I ought.

Milton, Paradise Regained, iv. 287.

To attain
The height and depth of thy eternal ways,
All human thoughts come short, Supreme of things.
Id., Paradise Lost, viii. 412.

O glorious trial of exceeding love,
Ensnaring me to emulate! but short
Of thy perfection how shall I attain! Id., ix. 63.

To place her in Olympus' top a guest,
Among th' immortals, who with nectar feast;
That poor would seem, that entertain'd short
Of the true splendor of her present court. Waller.

We err, and come short of science, because we are so frequently misled by the evil conduct of our imaginations. Gascoigne.

As in many things the knowledge of philosophers was short of truth, so almost in all things their practice fell short of their knowledge: the principles by which they walked were as much below those by which they judged, as their feet were below their head.—South, Sermons.

He will not death himself terminate their strife;
And wounds, if wounds ensue, be short of life.
Dryden, Palamon and Arcite, li. 504.

Virgil exceeds Theocritus in regularity and brevity, and falls short of him in nothing but simplicity and propriety of style.—Pope.

Defect in our language, coming short of the utmost grandeur, often escapes our observation.
—Locke.

If speculative maxims have not an actual universal assent from all mankind, practical principles come short of an universal reception.—Id.

The people fall short of those who border upon them, in strength of understanding.—Adams.

A neutral intelligence talks short of that obligation
they lie under, who have taken such oaths. Id.
When I made these, an artist undertook to imitate it; but, using another way of polishing them, he fell much short of what I had attained to, as I afterwards understood.—Sir I. Newton.

It is not credible that the Phœnicians, who had established colonies in the Persian gulph, stop'd short, without pushing their trade to the Indies.—Arbuthnot.

Daring is expressly commanded, and no happiness allotted to any thing short of it.—South, Sermons.

6. Defective; imperfect; not attaining the end; not reaching the intended point.

Since higher I fall short, at him who next Provokes my envy. Milton, Paradise Lost, ix. 174.

That great wit has fallen short in his account.—Dr. H. More.

Where reason came short, revelation discovered on which side the truth lay.—Locke.

Men express their universal ideas by signs; a faculty which begets come short in.—Id.

7. Not far distant in time.

He commanded those, who were appointed to attend him, to be ready by a short day.—Lord Clarendon, History of the Grand Rebellion.

8. Scanty; wanting.

The English were inferior in number, and grew short in their provisions.—Sir J. Hayward.

[They] short of succours, and in deep despair,
Shook at the dismal prospect of the war.

Dryden, Translation of the Æneid, viii. 630.

9. Not fetching a compass.

So soon as ever they were gotten out of the hearing of the cock, the lion turned short upon him, and tore him to pieces.—Sir R. L'Estrange.

He seized the helm, his fellows cheer'd,
Turn'd short upon the shells, and maddly steer'd.

Dryden, Translation of the Æneid, v. 220.

Far, turning short, he struck with all his might
Full on the helmet of the unwary knight.

Id., Palamon and Arcite, lii. 642.

10. Not going so far as intended.

As one condemn'd to leap a precipice,
Who sees before his eyes the depth below,
Stops short. Dryden, Spanish Friar, ii. 2.

11. Defective as to quantity.

When the fleece is shorn . . .
When their defenceless limbs the brainless tear, Short of their wool, and eeked from the sheer.

Dryden, Translation of the Georgics, ii. 676.

12. Narrow; contracted.

Men of wit and parts, but of short thoughts and little meditation, are apt to distrust everything for a fancy.—Burnet.

They, since their own short understandings reach
No farther than the present, think ev'n the wise
Like them disclose the secrets of their breasts.

Rowe.

13. Brittle; friable.

His flesh is not firm, but short and tasteless.—J. Walton, Complete Angler.

Mari from Derbyshire was very fat, though it had so great a quantity of sand, that it was so short, that, when wet, you could not work it into a ball, or make it hold together.—Mortimer, Husbandry.

14. Not bending.

The lance broke short, the beast then bellow'd loud,

And his strong neck to a new onset bow'd.

Dryden, Conquest of Granada, Part I. l. 1.

15. Laconic; brief: (as, 'a short answer').

Short. s. Summary account.

In short, she makes a man of him at sixteen, and a lay all himself after. Sir R. L'Estrange.

Repentance, is, in short, nothing but a turning from sin to God, the casting off all our former evils, and, instead thereof, constantly practising all those Christian duties which God requireth of us.—Dr. H. More, Whole Duty of Man.

The proprieties and delicacies of the English are known to few: 'tis impossible even for a good wit to understand and practise them, without the help of a liberal education and long reading in short, without wearing off the rust which he contracted while he was lying in a stock of learning.—Dryden.

If he meet with no reply, you may either conclude that I trust to the goodness of my cause, or fear my adversary, or disdain him, or what you please: this short can't be, 'tis indifferent to your humble servant
whenever your party may.—Id., Epistle to the Whigs.

From Medway's pleading stream
To Severn's war be thine:

In short, restore my love, and share my kingdom.

Id., King Arthur, li. 2.

The short is, to speak all in a word, the possibility of being found in a salvable state cannot be sufficiently secured, without a possibility of always persevering in it.—Norris.

To see whole bodies of men breaking a constitution; in short, to be encompassed with the greatest difficulties from without, to be torn by many virulent factions within, then to be secure and unscathed, are the most likely symptoms, in a state, of sickness unto death.—Swift.

The long and short of anything. The whole of anything; the exposition of anything, both in the way of exhaustive detail and condensations generalisation.

The short and long is, our play is prefer'd.—
Shakespeare, Midsummer-Night's Dream, iv. 2.

Short. v. a. Not long.

Beauty and youth,
And sprightly hope and short enduring joy.

Dryden.

One strange draught prescribed by Hippocrates for a short-breathed man, is half a gallon of hydro-mel, with a little vinegar.—Arbuthnot.

Short. v. n. Fail; be deficient; decrease.

His sight wasteth, his wytte mynyneth, his lyf shorteth.—The Book of Good Maners, sign. c. viii. : 1546.

Short. v. a. Abbreviate; shorten.

Shorte our end, and mynyn our payne:
Let us go, and never come againe.

Every Man (Old Moral Play so called).

Shortdated. adj. Having little time to run.

The course of thy short-dated life.

Savidge, Paraphrase of Ecclesiastes, p. 12.

Shorten. v. a.

1. Make short, either in time or space.

Because they see it is not fit or possible that clauses should frame themselves answerable to each petition, they shorten somewhat the reins:
their course.—Hooker, Ecclesiastical Polity.

Would you have been so brief with him, he would have been so brief with you, to shorten a year,
For taking so the head, the whole head's length.

Shakespeare, Richard II., iii. 3.

To shorten its ways to knowledge, and make each perception more comprehensive, it binds them into bundles.—Locke.

War, and luxury's more dreadful rage,
Thy crimes have brought, to shorten mortal breath,
With all the numerous family of death.

Dryden.

None shall dare
With shorten'd sword to stab in closer war,
But in fair combat.

Id., Palamon and Arcite, lii. 606.

Whatever shorten the fibres, by insinuating themselves into their parts, as water in a rope, contracts.
—Arbuthnot.

2. Contract; abbreviate.

We shorten'd days to moments by love's art,
Whilst our two souls
Perceiv'd no passing time, as if a part
Our love had been of still eternity.

Sir J. Suckling.

3. Confine; hinder from progression.

The Irish dwell altogether by their septa, so as they may compare what they will; whereas if there were English placed among them, they should not be able to stir but that it should be known, and they shortened according to their demerits.—
Spenser.

To be known, shortens my laid intent;
My boon I make it that you know me not.

Shakespeare, King Lear, iv. 7.

Here, where the subject is so fruitful, I am shortened by my chain, and can only say what is for-bidden me to reach.—Dryden.

4. Lop.

Dishonest with lop arms the youth appears,
Spill'd of his nose, and shorten'd of his ears.
Dryden, Translation of the Æneid, vi. 669.

shorthand. s. Method of writing in compendious characters; Stenography.

Your follies and delusions change
With such a whirl, the poets of your age
Are tired, and cannot score them on the stage,
Unless each vice in shorthand they indite,
E'en as noteth printers' whole sermons write.

Dryden, Spanish Friar, prologue.
Boys have but little use of shorthand, and should by no means practise it, till they can write perfectly well.—Locke.

In shorthand skill'd, where little marks conjoin
Whole words, a sentence in a letter lies.
Whole words, as the language of the face is universal, so 'tis very comprehensive; no lectionism can reach it: 'tis the shorthand of the mind, and crowds a great deal in a little room.—Cadell.

shortlived. adj. Not living or lasting long.

Unhappy parent of a shortlived son!
Why loads he this embitter'd life with shame?
Dryden, Translation of the First Book of the Iliad, vii.

The joyful shortlived news soon spread around,
Took the same train. Id., Theroelia Augustia, iii.
Some view promises a great deal of pleasure in the commission; but then, at last, it is but shortlived, and transient, a sudden flash presently extinguished.
—Cadell, Sermons.

A piercing torment that shortlived pleasure of yours must bring upon me, from whom you never received offence.—Addison.

All those graces
The common fate of mortal charms may find;
Content our shortlived praises to engage,
The joy and wonder of a single race.

Id.
Admiration is a shortlived passion, that immediately decays upon growing familiar with its object, unless it be still fed with fresh discoveries.—Id.
The frequent alterations in publick proceedings, the variety of shortlived favourites that provided in their several turns under the government of her successors, have broken us into these unhappy distinctions.—Id., Freethinker.

Then palace shall rise; the joyful son Shall finish what his shortlived sire began. Pope.

shortly. adv. In a short manner.

1. Quickly; soon; in a little time. (It is commonly used relatively of future time, but Clarendon seems to use it absolutely.)

I must leave thee, love, and shortly too.
Shakespeare, Hamlet, iii. 2.
Thou art no friend to God, or to the king:
Open the gates, or I'll shut thee out shortly.

Id., Henry VI., Part I. i. 3.
The armies came shortly in view of each other.—
Lord Clarendon, History of the Grand Rebellion.

The time will shortly come, wherein you shall more rejoice for that little you have expended for the benefit of others, than that which by so long toll you shall have saved.—Cadell.

He celebrates the anniversary of his father's funeral, and shortly after arrives at Cambr.—
Dryden.

E'en he, whose soul now melts in mournful lays,
Shall shortly want the generous tear he pays.
Pope, Epistle to the Memory of an Unfortunate Lady.

2. In a few words; briefly.

Shortly, the truth is [this].—Bishop Hall, Balm of Gilead.

I could express them more shortly this way than in prose, and much of the force, as well as force of arguments, depends on their conciseness.—Pope.

shortness. s. Attribute suggested by Short.

1. Quality of being short, either in time or space.

I'll make a journey twice as far, & enjoy
A second night of such sweet shortness, which Was mine in Britain. Shakespeare, Cymbeline, ii. 4.

They move strongest in a right line, which is caused by the shortness of the distance.—Bacon, Natural and Experimental History.

I will not trouble my readers with the shortness of the time in which I write it.—Dryden.
May they not justly to our crimes upbraid
Shortness of night, and penury of sleep?

Prior, Solomon, l. 283.
Think upon the vanity and shortness of human life, and let death and eternity be often in your minds.—Law.

2. Fewness of words; brevity; conciseness.

The necessity of shortness causeth men to cut off impertinent discourses, and to compress much matter in few words.—Hooker, Ecclesiastical Polity.

Sir, pardon me in what I have to say,
Your plainness and your shortness please me well.

Shakespeare, Twelfth Night, iv. 4.
The prayers of the church will be very fit, as being most easy for their memories, by reason of their shortness, and yet containing a great deal of matter.
Jr. H. More, Whole Duty of Man.

3. Want of reach; want of capacity.

Whatever is above these proveth of short ness of memory, or of want of a stayed attention.—
Bacon.

4. Deficiency; imperfection.

Another account of the shortness of our reason, and easiness of deception, is the forwardness of our understanding's ascent to slightly examined conclusions.—Gilbert, Sermon Scientific.

From the instance I had given of human ignorance, to our shortness in most things else, 'tis an easy inference.—Hobbes.

It may be easily conceived, by any that can allow for the looseness and shortness of translations, out of languages and manners of writing differing from ours.—Sir W. Temple.

shortribs. s. pl. Bastard ribs; ribs below the sternum.

A gentleman was wounded in a duel: the rapier entered into his right side, slanting by his shortribs under the muscles.—Wise, Surgery.

shortsighted. adj.

1. Unable by the convexity of the eye to see far.

Shortsighted men see remote objects best in old age, therefore they are accounted to have the most lasting eyes.—Mir J. Nealon.

2. Unable by intellectual sight to see far.

The foolish and shortsighted die with fear
That they go now here, or they know not where.
Sir J. Nealon, Of Old Age, pt. iv.

Other propositions were designed for answers to the shortsighted and credulous.—Sir R. L. Edrington.

shortsightedness. s. Attribute suggested by Shortsighted.

1. Defect of sight, proceeding from the convexity of the eye.

The ordinary remedy for shortsightedness is a convex lens, held before the eye; which, making the rays diverge, or at least diminishing much of their convergence, makes amends for the too great convexity of the crystalline.—Chapman.

By often looking at remote objects the degree of shortsightedness may be much lessened.—Adams, On Vision.

2. Defect of intellectual sight.

Cunning is a kind of shortsightedness, that discovers the minutest objects which are near at hand, but is not able to discern things at a distance.—Addison, Spectator.

shortwaisted. adj. Having a short body.

Unkempt, shortwaisted; such a dwarf she is,
That she must rise on tip-toe for a kiss.
Dryden, Translation of Juvenal, vi. 150.

shortwinded. adj. Shortbreathed; asthmatic; palsy; breathing by quick and faint respiration.

Sure he means brevity in breath; shortwinded.
Shakespeare, Henry VI., Part I. ii. 2.

No shaken as we are, no won with care,
Find we a time for frightened peace to pant,
And breathe shortwinded accents of new broils,
To be commenced in strands and

Id., Henry VI., Part I. i. 1.
With this the Mede shortwinded old men came,
And curst the hungers unsavoury disease.

May, Translation of Virgil.

shortwinged. adj. Having short wings: (hawks are divided into long and short-winged).

Shortwing'd, swift himself to fly,
His fear foretold foul weather from the sky.

Dryden, Hind and Panther, iii. 63.

shortwitted. adj. Simple; not wise; wanting, want of wit.

Pretty dish and require at our hands that we should be either shortwitted or beggarly, but both his part in all the decisions of this world, whether it be of soul or body, or of goods.—Sir M. Hale, Remains, p. 280.

shory. adj. Lying near the coast.

There is commonly a declivity from the shore to the middle part of the channel, and these shoals are generally not some fathoms deep.—F. Burnet, Theory of the Earth.

shot. s.

1. Act of shooting.

A shot indeed gave me a wound unseen.
Sir P. Sidney.

Proud death!
What feast is tow'rd in this infernal cell,
That thou so many princes at a shot

So bloodily hast smuck? Shakespeare, Hamlet, v. 2.
He caused twenty shot of his greatest cannon to be made at the king's army.—Lord Clarendon, History of the Grand Rebellion.

2. Missile emitted by any instrument.

I shall here abide the hourly shot
Of angry eyes. Shakespeare, Cymbeline, i. 2.

That's a perilous shot out of an elder gun.—Shake-spe, Henry V. iv. 1.

At this body they were joyful, for that they were supplied thereby with good store of powder and shot.—Sir J. Hayward.

More one thousand great shot were spent upon the walls, without any danger to thearrison.—
Lord Clarendon, History of the Grand Rebellion.

One dire shot, the last they could supply.
Close by the board the prince's mainmast bore.
Dryden, Annus Mirabilis, xxv.

3. Flight of a missile weapon.

She went and sat over against him, a good way off,
as it were a bow shot.—Genius, xxi. 10.

4. Anything emitted, or cast forth.

Violent and tempestuous storm and shots of rain.
—Kay, Physico-Theological Discourses, p. 283.

Shot. s. [from A.S. scott, scutt; the vowel short.]

Sum charged; reckoning.

A man is never welcome to a place till some certain shot be paid, and the hostess say welcome.—
Shakespeare, Two Gentlemen of Verona, ii. 3.

As the fund of our pleasure, let each pay his shot;
Far hence be the soul, the lewd boy, and the wit.
R. Jonson, Lysidas, Conventions.

Shepherd, leave deceiving,
Pipes are sweet a summer's day;
But a little after laying,
Women have the shot to pay.

Dryden, King Arthur, ii. 2.
He touch'd the peace when others touch'd the pot;
The hand that sign'd the mortgage paid the shot.
Swift.

Shote. s. [A.S. scotta.] Young trout or salmon. Local.

The shote, peculiar to Devonshire and Cornwall, in shape and colour resembling the trout; howbeit, in business and goodness much far behind him.—
Carew, Survey of Cornwall.

shotfree. adj.

1. Clear of the reckoning.

Though I could scrape shotfree at London, I fear the shot here: here's no scoring but up to the post.
—Shakespeare, Henry IV., Part I. v. 3.

2. Not to be hurt by shot; not to be injured.

He is as mad that thinks himself an animal, and will not stir at all for fear of cracking, as he that believes himself to be shotfree, and so will run among the hail of a battle.—Elitham, Redden, i. 67.

They that use charms, spells, &c. to be shotfree.—
Jersey Taylor, Holy Dying, sect. viii. ch. iv.

3. Unpunished.

Shotten. adj.

1. Having ejected the spawn.

Go thy ways, old Jack; die when thou wilt, if good husband be not based upon the earth, then am I a shotten herring.—Shakespeare, Henry IV., Part I. ii. 4.

Ask for what price thy venal tongue was sold!
A rusty annuity of some seven years old;
Tough withered bristles, ragy wine, a dish
Of shotten brimstones, or stinking fish.

C. Dryden, Translation of Juvenal, vii. 153.

2. Curdled by keeping too long.

Shooting out into angles: (in the extract, used as the second element in a compound).

I will sell my dukedom,
To lay a slobery and a dirty farm
In that weak-shotten isle of Albion.

Shakespeare, Henry V. iii. 3.

Shough. s. Shaggy dog; shock.

In the catalogue ye be for men,
As bound and greyhounds, manure, sports, curs,
Shoughs, water-rugs, and demer-wolves are set out
All by the name of dogs.—Shakespeare, Macbeth, ii. 1.

Shough. interj. Exclamation used in driving away fowls: (pronounced shoo).

Shough, shough! up to your crop, peeween.
Beaumont and Fletcher, Maid in the Mill.

Should. Although a past tense of shall, this word is entered separately in the previous editions; and it is left to stand so in the present. It may be compared with ought, the preterit of owe, with a present sense; and more particularly with would. What follows is the notice of the previous editions. A fuller one, by the present editor, will be found under Would.

I should go. It is my business or duty to go.

If I should go. If it happens that I go.

Thou shouldst go. Thou oughtest to go.

If thou shouldst go. If it happens that thou goest.

The same significations are found in all the others singular and plural.

Let not a desperate action more engage you Than safety should.

H. Jonson, Catiline's Conspiracy.
Some praise come of good wishes and respects,
When by telling men what they are, they represent
To them what they should be. — Bacon.

To do thee honour I will shed thy blood,
Which the just laws, if I were faultless, should.

Waller.
So subjects love just kings, or so they should.

Dryden.
Used for would, formerly; and in later times for could, may, might, must. It has been well observed that this sign respects time variously: the present, the past, and the future. When it respects the present, it generally implies duty or obligation, fitness, propriety, decency, or reasonableness; is often used in the way of supposition, and of comparison upon supposition; often also marks conduct or event as involuntary or accidental; often carries doubt in it; and seems frequently to mark the power, energy, influence, or force of things upon the speaker, or otherwise; and it follows interjections of grief. In denoting time past, it either implies doubt, or marks the event as involuntary or accidental. But of all the other periods of time, the future seems to be that in which should most frequently makes its appearance. It marks the hypothetical, and denotes the common future; in both cases it is still conditional, never absolute. It refers to the hypothetical future; and, in doing so, marks the event either as doubtful and precarious, or as conditional and preparatory to somewhat else, or as highly probable but fit to be prevented, or as predetermined. Whilst it respects the common future, it either puts the event in the way of supposition, or marks it as precarious, or as certain in the highest degree, or as conditionally certain, or as certain but improper, or as certain but involuntary, or threatens, or follows verbs of desire or wishing, or denotes the event to be fit or proper.

Should is sometimes omitted, as when it marks the event as precarious.

I pray you, sir, receive the money now,
For fear you will see claim for money more.

Shakespeare, Comedy of Errors, iii. 2.

Should be. Proverbial phrase of slight contempt or irony.

I conclude that things are not as they should be.

Swift.
The girls look upon their father as a clown, and the boys think their mother no better than she should be. — Addison.

Should have. This sign barely points at the supposed existence of an event, or circumstance of conduct, in former time; or places that supposed behaviour as the result of something that preceded or might have preceded it; and, in doing this, either puts the event in the way of supposition, or marks it as accidental, or as involuntary, or as certain, or as morally or naturally fit and becoming; and is also found in the hypothetical future, or marking an imaginary event or behaviour as proceeding from or succeeding in course of time to some other action, or incident, imaginary or otherwise; and thus marks the event, or action, either as precarious, or as accidental, or in a comparative view, or as certain; and carries in it frequently an intimation of natural or civil right and title to a thing, and gives the highest assurance.

There is another signification now little in use, in which should has scarcely any distinct or explicable meaning. It should be differs in this sense very little from it is.

There is a fabulous narration, that in the northern countries there should be an herb that groweth in the likeness of a lamb, and fethleth upon the grass. — Bacon, Natural and Experimental History.

Shoulder. s. [A.S. sculder.]

1. Joint which connects the arm to the body.
I have seen better men in my time,
Than stand on any shoulder that I see.

Shakespeare, King Lear, ii. 2.
Before me.

It is a fine thing to be carried on men's shoulders; but give God thanks that thou art not forced to carry a rich fool upon thy shoulders, as those poor men do. — Jeremy Taylor.

2. Upper joint of the foreleg of edible animals.

He took occasion, from a shoulder of mutton, to cry up the plenty of England. — Addison, Freeholder.

3. Upper part of the back.

Smile ere day

Arose and dress'd himself in rich array;
Fresh as the month, and as the morning fair,
Adown her shoulders fell her length of hair.

Dryden, Entimom and Arrite, l. 180.

4. Shoulders are used as emblems of strength, or the act of supporting.

Ev'n as thou wilt, sweet Warwick, let it be;
For on thy shoulder do I build my seat.

Shakespeare, Henry VI. Part III. ii. 4.

The king has cur'd me; and from these shoulders,
These ruin'd pillars, out of pity taken
A load would sink a navy.

Id., Henry VIII. iii. 2.

5. Rising part; prominence.

When you rivet a pin into a hole, your pin must have a shoulder to fit thicker than the hole is wide, that the shoulder slip not through the hole as well as the shank. — Mason, Mechanical Exercises.

Shoulder. v. a.

1. Push with insolence and violence.

The rolling billows beat the ragged shore,
As they the earth would shoulder from her seat.

Spenser, Faerie Queen.

Dradman, a well-known forehand to most sailors, here shoulders out the ocean, to shape the same a large bosom between itself. — Curew, Survey of Cornwall.

You delude yourself,

To think of mixing with th' ignoble herd;
What, shall the people know their gullible prince Headed a rabble, and profaned his person, Shoulder'd with ill?

Dryden, Don Sebastian, iv. 1.

So vast the navy now at anchor rides,
That underneath it the press'd waters fall,
And with its weight, it shoulders off the tides.

Id., Anna Mirabilis, cxxxvii.

Around her numberless the rabble flow'd,
Shoulder'd each other, crowding for a view.

Rice, Jane Shore, v. 1.

When Hopkins dies, a thousand lights attend
The wretch, who living saved a candle's end;
Shoulder'd God's altar a vile image stands,
Belies his features, may extend his hands.

Pope, Moral Essays, iii. 201.

2. Put upon the shoulder.

Archimedes's lifting up Marcellus's ships finds Little more credit than that of the giants shouldering mountains. — Glasseville.

Shoulderbelt. s. Belt that comes across the shoulder.

Thou hast an ulcer which no leech can heal,
Though thy broad shoulderbelt the wound conceal.

Dryden, Translation of Persius, iv. 183.

Shoulderblade. s. Scapula; bladebone.

If I have lifted up my hand against the fatherless,
When I saw my help in the gate, then let mine arm fall from my shoulderblade, and mine arm be broken from the bone. — Job, xxxi. 21.

Shoulderbone. s. Scapula.

The head of the shoulder-bone being round, is inserted into so shallow a cavity in the scapula, that, were there no other guards for it, it would be thrust out upon every occasion. — Wierman, Surgery.

Shoulderclapper. s. Bailiff.

A back friend, a shoulderclapper, one that commands

The passages of alleys.

Shakespeare, Comedy of Errors, iv. 2.
Fear none but these same shoulderclappers. —
Decker, Saliramadric, 1002.

Shoulderknot. s. Epaulet; knot of lace or ribbon worn on the shoulder.

Before they were a month in town, great shoulder-knots came up; straight, all the world was shoulder-knots! — Swift, Tale of a Tub.

Shoulderhotton. adj. Strained in the shoulder.

His horse hipp'd with an old moth's saddle . . .
awayed in the back and shoulder-shut. — Shakespeare, Taming of the Shrew, iii. 2.

Shoulderslip. s. Dislocation of the shoulder.

The horse will take so much care of himself as to come off with only a strain or a shoulderslip. — Swift.

Shout. s. [connected by Wedgwood with hoot.] Loud and vehement cry of triumph or exhortation.

Thanks, gentle citizens:
This general applause and cheerful shout,
Argues your wisdom and your love to Richard.

Shakespeare, Richard III. iii. 7.

The Rhodians, seeing the enemy turn their backs, gave a great shout in derision. — Knolles, History of the Turks.

Then he might have died of all admired,
And his triumphant soul with shouts expired.

Dryden.
Shout. v. a. Cry in triumph or exhortation.

Shout unto God with the voice of triumph. — Psalm, xlvii. 1.

It is not the voice of them that shout for mastery. — Ecclesiastes, xxxii. 18.

They shouted thrice: what was the last cry for? — Shakespeare, Julius Caesar, i. 2.

No storms and shouts; but flying bullets now
To execute his rage appear too slow:

They miss, or sweep but common souls away;
For such a loss Optamus his life must pay.

Waller.
What hinders you to take the man you love?
The people will be glad, the soldiers shout;
And Bertram, though repining, will be awed.

Dryden, Spanish Friar, iii. 3.

Shout. v. a. Treat with noise and shouts:

(with ut).

As common, so old, fashions are in disgrace: that man would be shouted at that should come forth in his great-grandfather's suit, though not rent, not discoloured! — Bishop Hall, Fashion of the World.

Shouter. s. One who shouts.

A peal of loud applause rang out,
And thund'ring the air, till even the birds fell down
Upon the shouters' heads. — Dryden, Cleomenes, l. 1.

Shouting. verbal abs. Act of shouting;
loud cry.

He shall bring forth the head-stone thereof with shoutings, crying, Grace, grace unto it. — Zechariah, iv. 7.

There are noises, huntings, shoutings.

H. Jonson, Mucius Scaevola.

Nothing but howlings and shoutings of your naked men. — Dr. H. More.

Noises and shoutings rend the suffering air.

Dryden.

Shove. v. a. [A.S. scufan, sceofan.]

1. Push by main strength.

The hand could pluck her back, that shov'd her on. — Shakespeare, Antony and Cleopatra, i. 1.

In the corrupted currents of this world,
Offence's golden hand may shove by justice;
And oft 'tis seen the wicked prize itself
Buys out the law.

Id., Hamlet, iii. 3.

I sent your grace

The parcels and particulars of our grief,
The which hath been with sorrow shov'd from the court.

Id., Henry IV. Part II. iv. 2.

Of other care they little reckoning make,
Than how to scramble at the shepherds' feast,
And shove away the worthy bidden guest.

Milton, Lycidas, 116.

It seem'd as there the British Neptune stood,
With all his hosts of waters at command,
Beneath them to submit th' obnoxious flood,
And with his trident shov'd them off the sand.

Dryden, Anna Mirabilis, cxxxiv.

Shoving back this earth on which I sit,
I'll mount.

Id., Tyrannick Love, v. 3.
A strong man was going to shove down St. Paul's cupola. — Arbutnot.

2. Drive by a pole that reaches to the bottom of the water: (as, 'He shov'd his boat').

3. Push; rush against.

He used to shove and elbow his fellow-servants to get near his mistress, when money was a-paying or receiving. — Arbutnot.

Behold a reverend sire whom want of grace
Has made the father of a numerous race,
Shov'd from the wall, perhaps, or rudely press'd
By his own son.

Pope, Moral Essays, i. 232.
You've play'd and loved, and eat and drank your fill;

Walk sober off, before a sprightly age
Come tit't'ring on, and shove you from the stage.

Id., Imitations of Horace, b. ii. ep. ii.
Make nature still incoerce upon his plan,
And shove him off as far as o'er you can.

Id., Dunciad, iv. 473.
Rager to express your love,
You never consider whom you shove,
But rudely press before a duke.

Swift, Imitation of Horace, b. ii. sat. vi.

Shove. v. a.

1. Push forward before one.

The women towed, and I showed till we arrived within forty yards of the shore.—Swift, Gulliver's Travels.

2. Move in a boat, not by oars, but a pole.

He grapp'd the oar,
Received his guests aboard, and shoved from shore.
Garth.

Shove. s. Act of shoving; push.

I was forced to swim behind, and push the boat forward with one of my hands; and the tide favouring me, I could feel the ground; I rested two minutes, and then gave the boat another shove.—Swift, Gulliver's Travels.

Shovel. s. [A.S. sceofl.] Instrument consisting of a long handle and broad blade with raised edges.

A handbarrow, wheelbarrow, shovel and spade.
Tupper, Five Hundred Points of good Husbandry.

The brig of the Ottoman, that he would throw Malta into the sea, might be performed at an easier rate than by the shovels of his janissaries.—Glaucille, Scipio Scientifloa.

Shovel. v. a.

1. Throw or heap with a shovel.

I thought
To lie upon the bed my father died,
To lie close by his honest bones; but now
Some hangman must put on my shroud, and lay me
Where no priest shovels in dust.
Shakespeare, Winter's Tale, iv. 3.

2. Gather in great quantities.

Ducks shovel them up as they swim along the waters; but divers insects also devour them.—Berham, Physico-Theology.

Shovelboard. s. Long board on which they play by sliding metal pieces at a mark.

So have I seen, in hall of knight or lord,
A weak arm throw on a long shovelboard;
He barely lays his piece.
Dryden, King Arthur, prologue.

Shoveller, or Shovelard. s. See extract from Yarrell.

Shoveller, or spoonbill; the former name the more proper, the end of the bill being broad like a shovel, but not rimmed like a spoon, but perfectly flat.—Gress, Museum.

Pewees, gulls, and shovelers feed upon fish, and yet are good meat.—Bacon.

This formation of the wizzard is not peculiar to the swan, but common unto the platina, or shovelard, a bird of no musical throat.—Sir T. Browne, Vulgar Errors.

The first division, or genus, of the true ducks, as here arranged, will contain the shoveller, gadwall, pintail, wild duck, garganey, teal, and the widgeon, all of which will be found to have the following characters in common. Externally they exhibit considerable length of neck; the wings are also long, reaching nearly to the end of the tail; the tarsus somewhat round; the hind toe free, or having no pendant lobe. In habits they may be stated generally as frequenting fresh water, but passing much of their time on land, feeding in ditches and about the shallow margins of pools, on aquatic plants, insects, worms, and occasionally on small fish, taking their food at or near the surface; possessing great powers of flight, but seldom diving unless pursued. . . . The shoveller is to be considered generally as a winter visitor to this country, but some remain every year to breed.—Yarrell, History of British Birds.

Show. v. a. [A.S. scewan.]

1. Exhibit to view, as an agent.

Will thou show wonders to the dead? Shall the dead arise and praise thee?—Pauline, lxxviii. 10.

If I do feign,
O let me in my present wildness die,
And never live to show the incredulous world
The noble change that I have purposed.
Shakespeare, Henry IV. Part II. iv. 4.

I through the ample air, in triumph high,
Shall lead fell captive, manure hell, and show
The powers of darkness bound.
Milton, Paradise Lost, iii. 254.

2. Afford to the eye or notice, as a thing containing or exhibiting.

Nor want we kill or art, from whence to raise Magnificence; and what can Heaven show more?
Milton, Paradise Lost, ii. 272.

A mirror in one hand collecteth shows,
Varied and multiplied, the group of woes. Savage.

3. Make to see.

Not higher that hill, nor wider, looking round,
Whereon for different cause the temple set
Our second Adam in the wilderness,
To show him all earth's kingdoms and their glory.
Milton, Paradise Lost, xl. 381.

Yet him God the most high vouchsafes
To call by vision from his father's house,
His kindred and false gods, into a land
Which he will show him. Ibid. xii. 120.

4. Make to perceive.

The inclement seasons, rain, ice, hail, and snow,
Which now the sky with various face becoms
To show us in this mountain, while the winds Blow moist and keen.
Milton, Paradise Lost, x. 1063.

5. Make to know.

High the most High
Rapt in a balmy cloud with winged steeds
Did, as thou saw'st, receive, to walk with God
High in salvation and the church of bliss,
Exempt from death; to show thee what reward Awaits the good.
Milton, Paradise Lost, xl. 705.

A shooting star
In Autumn thwarts the night, when vapours fired Impress the air, and shows the mariner
From what point of his compass to beware
Impetuous winds. Ibid. iv. 556.

Know, I am sent
To show thee what shall come in future days
To thee and to thy offspring; good with bad
Expect to learn. Ibid. xl. 556.

6. Give proof of; prove.

This I urge, to show
Invalid that which they to doubt it moved.
Milton, Paradise Lost, viii. 115.

I'll to my charge, the citadel, repair,
And show my duty by my timely care.
Dryden, Aurengzebe, l. 1.

Achates' diligence his duty shows.
Id., Translation of the Æneid, i. 183.

7. Publish; make public; proclaim.

Ye are a chosen generation, a royal priesthood, an holy nation, a peculiar people; that ye should show forth the praises of him who hath called you out of darkness into his marvellous light.—1 Peter, ii. 9.

8. Inform; teach: (with off.)

I shall no more speak unto you in proverbs, but I shall show you plainly of the Father.—John, xvi. 25.

9. Make known.

I raised thee up far to show in thee my power.—Ezekiel, ix. 16.

Nothing wants, but that thy shape,
Like his, and colour serpentine, may show
Thy inward fraud, to warn all creatures from thee.
Milton, Paradise Lost, x. 868.

10. Conduct: (to show, in this sense, is to show the way.)

She taking him for some cautious city-patent,
That came for privacy, shows him into the dining room.—Swift.

11. Offer; afford.

Thou shalt smite them and utterly destroy them:
thou shalt make no covenant with them, nor show mercy unto them.—Isaiah, lxxviii. 2.

To him that is afflicted, pity should be showed from his friend.—Joh. vi. 14.

Polix, willing to show the Jews a pleasure, left Paul banish.—Acts, xxiv. 27.

12. Explain; expound.

Showing of hard sentences, and disavowing of doubts, were found in the same Daniel.—Dan. vi. 12.

13. Discover; point out.

Why stand we longer shivering under fears,
That show no end but death?
Milton, Paradise Lost, x. 1063.

14. Set off: (with off.)

I like your silence; it the more shows off
Your woe. Shakespeare, Winter's Tale, v. 3.

Show. v. n.

1. Appear; look; be in appearance.

She shows a body rather than a life,
A statue than a breather.
Shakespeare, Antony and Cleopatra, iii. 3.

Just such she shows before a rising storm.
Dryden.

Still on we press; and here renew the carriage,
So great, that, in the stream, the moon shows purple.
A. Phillips.

2. Have appearance; become well or ill.

My lord of York, it better shows off with you,
When that your look, assembled by the bell,
Enriched you to hear with reverence
Your exposition on the holy text,
Than now to see you here no iron man,
Cheering a rout of rebels with your drum.
Shakespeare, Henry IV. Part II. iv. 2.

Show. s.

1. Spectacle; something publicly exposed to view for money.

I do not know what she may produce me; but, provided it be a show, I shall be very well satisfied.—Addison.

2. Superficial appearance; not reality.

Mild Heaven
Disapproves that care, though wise in show,
That with superfluous burden loads the day.
Milton, Sonnets, xli. 12.

3. Ostentatious display.

Nor doth his grandeur and majestic show
Of luxury, though call'd unmanliness,
Allure mine eye. Milton, Paradise Regained, iv. 110.

Stand before her in a golden dream;
Set all the pleasures of the world to show,
And in vain joys let her loose spirits flow.
Dryden, Paradise Lost, iv. 1.

The radiant sun,
Sends from above ten thousand blessings down,
Nor is he set so high for show alone. Graville, Never was a charge, unattended with such a show of gravity, which had a slighter foundation.—Bishop Atterbury.

I envy none their parentry and show,
I envy none the gilding of their woe. Young.

4. Object attracting notice.

The city itself makes the noblest show of any in the world: the houses are most of them painted on the outside, so that they look extremely gay and lively.—Addison.

5. Public appearance: (contrary to concealment).

Jesus, rising from his grave,
Spill'd principalities and powers, triumph'd
In open show, and with ascension bright Captivity led captive. Milton, Paradise Lost, x. 143.

6. Semblance; likeness.

When devils will their blackest sins put on,
They do suggest at first with heavenly shows.
Shakespeare, Othello, ii. 3.

He through pass'd the midst unmark'd,
In show plebeian angel mistak'n.
Milton, Paradise Lost, x. 411.

7. Speciousness; plausibility.

The places of Ezechiel have some show in them; for there the Lord commanded of the Levites, which had committed idolatry, to be put from their dignity, and serve in inferior ministrations.—Archbishop Whigitt.

The kindred of the slain forgive the deed
But a short exile must for show precede.
Dryden, Cymon and Iphigenia, 687.

8. External appearance.

Shall I say O Zelmoue? Alas, your words be against it. Shall I say Prince Pyrochus? Wretch that I am, your show is manifest against it.—Sir P. Sidney.

Pierce was the fight on the proud Behaim's side,
For honour, which they seldom sought before;
But now they by their own vain boasts were led,
And forced, at least in show, to prize it more.
Dryden, Annus Mirabilis, classic.

9. Exhibition in view.

I have a letter from her;
The worth whereof's so laden with my matter,
That not her study can be manifested,
Without the show of both.
Shakespeare, Merry Wives of Windsor, iv. 6.

10. Pomp; magnificent spectacle.

As for triumphs, masks, feasts, and shows,
men need not be put in mind of them.—Bacon.

11. Phantoms; not reality.

What you saw was all a fairy show;
And all those airy shapes you now behold,
Were human bodies once.
Dryden, The Flower and the Leaf, 481.

12. Representative action.

Florio was so overpowered with happiness, that he could not make a reply, but expressed in dumb show those sentiments of gratitude that were too big for utterance.—Addison.

Showbread, or Showbread. s. Bread that the priest of the week put every Sabbath-day upon the golden table, which was in the sanctuary before the Lord. They were covered with leaves of gold, and were twelve in number, representing the twelve tribes of Israel. They served them up hot, and at the same time took away the stale ones, which could not be eaten but by the priest alone. This offering was accompanied with frankincense and salt.

Thou shalt set upon the table showbread before me.—Ezekiel, xxv. 36.

Showers. s. [A.S. scúr.]

1. Rain either moderate or violent.

If the lay have not a woman's gift,
To rain a shower of commanded tears,
An action will do for such a shift.
Shakespeare, Taming of the Shrew, induction, w. 1.

The ancient clummiest was, while it grew, the driest; and in showers it prospered worst.—Bacon.

2. Storm of anything falling thick.

I'll set thee in a shower of gold, and hail Rich pearls upon them.
Shakespeare, Antony and Cleopatra, iii. 3.

With showers of stones he drives them far away:
The scattering thus around at distance lay.
Pope, Translation of the Odyssey, xiv. 38.

3. Any very liberal distribution.

He and myself
Have travell'd in the great shower of your gifts,
And sweetly felt it.

Shakespear, Timon of Athens, v. 1.

Shower. v. a.

1. Wet or drenched with rain.

Serve them as a flowery voice to bind
The fluid skirts of that same watery cloud,
Lost it again dissolve, and shower the earth?
Milton, Paradise Lost, xl. 5-1.

2. Pour down.

These, hudd' by nightmasks, embracing sleep;
And on their naked limbs the flowery roof
Shower'd rimes.
Milton, Paradise Lost, iv. 771.

3. Distribute or scatter with great liberality.

After this fair discharge, all civil honours having showered on him before, there now fell out occasion to action.—Sir H. Wotton.

Cæsar's favour,
That shower'd down greatness on his friends, will raise me
To Rome's first honours. Addison, Cato.

Shower. v. n. Be rainy.

Showerbath. s. Bath in which the water is let down upon the bather from a pierced reservoir.

Showerless. adj. Wanting showers.

Scarcely in a showerless day the heavens imbue
Our melting clime. Armstrong.

Showery. adj. Rainy.

A hilly field, where the stubble is standing, set on fire in the showery season, will put forth mushrooms.
—Bacon.

Murranus came from Auzur's showery height.
Addison, Travels in Italy.

Showily. adv. In a showy manner.

Showiness. s. Attribute suggested by Showy; state of being showy.

Showing. s. Demonstration; exhibition: (as, 'This is proved even by your own showing').

Men should not take charge upon them that they are not fit for, as if shewing, darning, and showing of tricks, were qualifications for a governor.—Sir R.
L'Estrange.

Showish. adj.

1. Splendid; gaudy.

The scintillations of the company are showish, and will look unbecoming.—Swift.

2. Ostentatious.

Showroom. s. Room where a show is exhibited; room where goods are set forth for sale.

The dwarf kept the gates of the show-room.—
Arbuthnot.

Showy. adj.

1. Splendid; gaudy.

The men would make a present of every thing that was rich and showy to the women when they most admired.—Addison, Spectator, no. 434.

2. Ostentatious.

Men of warm imaginations neglect solid and substantial happiness for what is showy and superficial.
—Addison.

Shrap, or Shrape. s. [?] Piece baited with cluff to entice birds.

You fell, like another dove, by the most chaffy shrap that ever was set before the eyes of winged fool.—Bishop Beilch, Letters, p. 339: 1620.

Shrapnel. s. See extract.

Shrapnel shell in artillery (is) a shell invented by General Shrapnel of the Royal Artillery. The projectile originally consisted of a thin iron shell filled with balls, sufficient powder being inserted with the balls to cause, when ignited by the fuse, the bursting of the shell; it was designed to act as case or grape at longer range than was attainable by those projectiles. Hence it was also called spherical case-shot. The essence of the shell's construction is that the bursting charge should be so small as merely to open the shell, allowing the bullets to continue in flight with unimpeded velocity. Improved shrapnel shells have the bursting charge separated from the balls by being placed in a cylinder in the middle of the shell. In the diaphragm shrapnel shell the powder is separated by an iron diaphragm from the balls, all space between which is filled up with coal-dust. Shrapnel shells should burst about fifty yards short of the object, and should not be fired at very low ranges, or the bullets will not have sufficient velocity.—Hicks-Schuy, in Brande and Cox, Dictionary of Science, Literature, and Art.

Shred. v. n. pret. shred. [A.S. screatlian.]

Cut into small pieces.

Well shredded and shred.—Anderson, Exposition of Beauchamp, fol. 61: 1573.

One went out into a field to gather herbs, and found a wild vine, and gathered thereof wild gourds his lap full, and shred them into the pot of pottage.
—2 Kings, iv. 39.

Where did you whet your knife to-night, he cries,
And shred the locks that in your stomach rise?
Dryden, Translation of Juvenal, iii. 430.

Shred. s. [A.S. scread.]

1. Small piece cut off.

cold, grown somewhat churlish by recovering, is made more pliant by throwing in shreds of tanned leather.—Bacon.

The mighty Tyrann queen, that gain'd
With subtle shreds a tract of land,
Did leave it with a castle fair
To his great ancestor. Butler, Hudibras, l. 1, 407.
A beggar might patch up a garment with such shreds as the world throws away.—Pope.

2. Fragment.

They said, they were an hungry; sigh'd forth
proverbs,
That hunger broke stone walls; that dogs must eat;
And with these shreds they vented their complain-ings. Shakespear, Coriolanus, l. 1.
His pennyrick is made up of half-a-down shreds,
Like a schoolboy's theme, beaten general couplets.—
Swift.

Shredding. s. [A.S. screadung.] What is cut off.

It hath a number of short cuts or shreddings, which may be better called wishes than prayers.—
Hooker, Ecclesiastical Polity.

Shrew. v. a. [See Beshrew.] Deceive.

Shrew. s. Peevish, malignant, clamorous, spiteful, vexatious, turbulent woman: (formerly applied also to a worthless or wicked man).

Be merry, be merry, my wife has all;
For women are shrews both short and tall.
Shakespear, Henry IV. Part II., v. 3, song.
By this reckoning he is more shrew than she.
Id., Taming of the Shrew, iv. 1.

A man had got a shrew to his wife, and there could be no quiet in the house for her.—Sir R.
L'Estrange.
Her sallow cheeks her envious mind did shew,
And every feature spoke aloud the shrew.
Dryden, Incapitulating Lover, 10.

Shrew. s. [A.S. srenna; Lat. sorex.] In Zoology. Native insectivorous animal of the genus Sorex (English species, araneus, fodiens, and remifer).

I have ventured, after some consideration, to retain the name Sorex for the common shrew of England, notwithstanding the doubts which have existed in the minds of many zoologists, and in which I had till lately participated. . . . The snout of the water shrew is less attenuated than that of the common shrew. . . . The named shrew, the largest of our indigenous species, was first published as British by Mr. Sowerby, under the name of Sorex ellipticus, from an individual taken by Dr. Huxley in Norfolk.—Bell, History of British Quadrupeds, including the Cetacea.

Shrew-ash. s. [two words.] See extract.

A shrew-ash is an ash which twigs or branches,
when applied to the limbs of a rat, will immediately relieve the pains which a beast suffers from the running of a shrew-mouse over the part affected; for it is supposed that a shrew-mouse is of so mischievous and deleterious a nature, that whenever it creeps over a beast, be it horse, cow, or sheep, the suffering animal is afflicted with cruel anguish, and threatened with the loss of the use of the limb. Against this accident, to which they were continually liable, our provident forefathers always kept a shrew-ash at hand, which when once indicated, would preserve its virtue for ever. A shrew-ash was made thus:— into the body of the tree a deep hole was bored with an auger, and a poor devoted shrew-mouse was thrust in alive, and plugged in, no doubt with several incantations long since forgotten.—White, Natural History of Selborne, pt. ii. ch. xvii.

Shrewd. adj. [from Shrew.]

1. Having the qualities of a shrew; malicious; troublesome; mischievous.

Her eldest sister is so rumb and shrewd,
That till the father ride his hands of her,
Your love must live a maid.
Shakespear, Taming of the Shrew, l. 1.

2. Maliciously sly; cunning; more artful than good.

It was a shrewd saying of the old monk, that two kind of persons would serve for all offenders, an inquisition and a bedlam; if any man should defy the being of a God, and the immortality of the soul, such a one should be put into the first, as being a desperate heretic; but if any man should profess to believe these things, and yet show himself in any known wickedness, such a one should be put into bedlam.—A. Archbishop Tillotson.

A spiteful saying crattles so many little passions, that it needs with a good reception; and the man who utters it is looked upon as a shrewd satirist.—
Addison.

Corruption proceeds from employing those who have the character of shrewd worldly men, instead of such as have had a liberal education, and trained up in virtue.—Id.

3. Bad; ill betokening.

Scarcely any man passes to a liking of sin in others, but by first practising it himself; and consequently we may take it for a shrewd indication and sign, whereby to judge of those who have sinned with too much caution, to suffer the world to charge sins directly upon their conversation.—South, Sermons.

4. Painful; pinching; dangerous; mischievous.

Every of this number,
That have endured shrewd nights and days with us,
Shall share the good of our returned fortune.
Shakespear, As you like it, v. 4.

When a man thinks he has a servant, he looks a traitor that was his friend, and is ready to do him a mischief, and a shrewd turn, than an open adversary.—South, Sermons.
No enemy is so deplorable but he may do a body
a shrewd turn.—Sir R. L'Estrange.

Shrewdly. adv. In a shrewd manner.

1. Mischievously; destructively.

This practice hath most shrewdly just upon thee.
Shakespear, Twelfth Night, v. i.
At Oxford, his youth and want of experience in maritime service, had somewhat less shrewdly tumbled, even before the shivers of popular liberty were set open.—Sir H. Wotton.

2. Vexatiously; (used commonly of slight mischief, or in ironical expression).

The obstinate and schismatical are like to think themselves shrewdly hurt, forsooth, by being cut off from that body which they reckon not to be of.—
South, Sermons.
Thus last allusion . . . would not upon the score;
Yet would'st also not to which, thou shrewdly join'd.
Dryden, Head and Panther, iii. 131.

3. With good guess.

Four per cent. increases and the number of lenders; as any man at first hearing will shrewdly suspect it.—Locke.

Shrewdness. s. Attribute suggested by Shrewd.

1. Mischievousness; petulance.

Her petulances, which not wanted shrewdness of policy too, did you too much disgust.—Shakespear, Antony and Cleopatra, ii. 2.
The neighbours round admire his shrewdness.
For songs of loyalty and lewdness. Swift.

Shrewish. adj. Having the qualities of a shrew; forward; petulantly clamorous.

Anglo, you must excuse us;
My wife is shrewish when I keep out hours.
Shakespear, Comedy of Errors, iii. 1.

Shrewishly. adv. In a shrewish manner; petulantly; peevishly; clamorously; forwardly.

He speaks very shrewishly; one would think his mother's milk were scarce out of him.—Shakespear, Twelfth Night, i. 3.

Shrewishness. s. Attribute suggested by Shrewish; qualities of a shrew; forwardness; petulance; clamorousness.

I have no gift in shrewishness;
I am a right maid for my cowardice;
Let her not strike me.
Shakespear, Midsummer-Night's Dream, iii. 2.

Shrewmouse. s. Shrew: (the animal is no true mouse).

(For example, see extract under Shrew-ash.)

Shriek. v. n. [Norw. shriku.] Cry out immoderately with anguish or horror; scream.

On top whereof age dwelt the ghastly owl, Shrieking his baleful note. Spenser, Fairie Queen.

Hark! hark!—
It was the owl that shriek'd, the fatal bellman
Which gives the sternest good-night.

Shakespear, Macbeth, iii. 2.

Were I the ghost that walk'd,
I'd shriek, that even your ears should rift to hear me. Id., Winter's Tale, v. 1.

Their conscience shrieks out or murmurs in a sad molestation.—Jeremy Taylor, Sermons, p. 100: 1651.

In a dreadful dream
I saw my lord so near destruction,
Then shriek'd myself awake.

Sir J. Denham, The Sophy.

At this she shriek'd aloud; the mournful train
Echo'd her grief.

Dryden, Palamon and Arcite, l. 89.

Why did you shriek out, gentlewoman?—Twas for joy at your return.—Dryden, Spanish Friar, iv. 1.
Shriek. s. Inarticulate cry of anguish or horror.

Una hearing evermore
His rueful shrieks and groanings, often tore
Her guiltless garments, and her golden hair,
For pity of his pain. Spenser, Faerie Queen.
Thine has been, my senses would have said,
To hear a night shriek. Shakespeare, Macbeth, v. 8.
The corpse of Almou, and the rest are shown,
Shrieks, clamours, murmurs, all the frighted town.
Dryden, Translation of the Æneid, vii. 703.

Shrietal. adj. Belonging to the sheriff.
Clasde were his cellars; and his shrietal board
The grossness of a city-fest alshord.
Dryden, Abolition and Achitophel, i. 108.

Shrievity. s. Duration of the office of a sheriff.

Shrift. s. [A.S. scrift.] Confession made to a priest.

Off with Bernardine's head; I will give a prevent shrift,
And will advise him for a better place.
Shakespeare, Measure for Measure, iv. 2.
My lord shall never rest;
I'll watch him tame, and talk him out;
His bed shall seem a school, his board a shrift.
Id., Othello, iii. 3.
The duke's commands were absolute.
Therefore, my lord, address you to your shrift,
And be yourself; for you must die this instant.
Romeo, Jane Shore, iv. 2.

Shrike. s. [Danish, skrika = jay.] Butcherbird.

The great grey shrike ... is only an occasional visitor to this country. ... The red-backed shrike ... is much more common, and visits this country only in the summer. ... Whatever doubts may have existed formerly of the propriety of including the woodchat among the shrikes that visit England, there can be no question on this subject now, several instances having occurred in which this bird has been obtained. —Farrall, History of British Birds.

Shrill. adj. [Scotch, shirl; Norse, shrila; Provincial German, schrell = harsh to the taste.] Sounding with a piercing, tremulous, or vibratory sound.

Thy hounds shall make the welkin answer them,
And fetch shrill echoes from the hollow earth.
Shakespeare, Twelfth Night, induction, sc. 2.

As the first element in a compound.

The rock that is the trumpet to the men
Doth with his kuffy and shrill-sounding throat
Awake the god of day.
Id., Hamlet, i. 1.
Look up a height, the shrill-gorged lark so far
Cannot be seen or heard.
Id., King Lear, iv. 6.

Shrill. v. n. Pierce the ear with sharp and quick vibrations of sound.

The sun of all the world is dim and dark;
O heavy horse,
Break we our pipes that shrill'd as loud as lark,
O careful verses. Spenser, Spenser.

Shrill. v. a. Express in a shrill manner; cause to make a shrill sound.

Hark, how the industrials sin to shrill about Their merry music. Spenser, Epithalamium.
How heeulicries out!
How poor Andromache shrills her doleful forth!
Shakespeare, Troilus and Cressida, v. 3.

Shrilling. part. adj. Sounding shrill.

Here, no elation's shrilling note,
The mouse's green retreat can pierce;
The grove, from noisy camps remote,
Is only vocal with my verse.
Ponton, Ode to Lord Gower.

Maids, wives, and matrons, mix a shrilling sound.
Pope.

Shrillness. s. Attribute suggested by shrill; quality of being shrill.

These parts first dispose the voice to hoarseness or shrillness. —Smith, Portrait of Old Age, p. 137.

Shrilly. adv. In a shrill manner.

Mount up aloft, my muses; and now more shrilly sing.
Dr. H. More, Immortality of the Soul, ii. 2, 40.

Shrimp. s. [from the verb.]

1. Small crustacean animal of the genus Crangon, species vulgaris: (the Gammarus aquaticus is often called 'the freshwater shrimp').

Of shell-fish there are winkles, shrimps, crabs.—Cresset, Survey of Cornwall.
Hawks and gulls cap at a great height see men on the earth, and shrimps in the waters.—Dorham, Physico-Theology.

This is one of the most abundant of the coast species of the Crustacea. It is taken by nets ... which are pushed forward by the shrimp. ... At the ... the smaller Palæmonidae are ... called shrimps; and when of small size and sold by measure, they are termed cup shrimps. The present species is called the sand shrimp, and the smaller prawns the rock shrimp.—Holt, History of the British Stalk-eyed Crustacea.

2. Little wrinkled man; dwarf.
It cannot be, this weak and writhed shrimp
Should strike such terror in his enemies.
Shakespeare, Henry VI. Part I, ii. 3.

He hath found,
Within the ground,
At last, no shrimp,
Wherein to hup
His jolly club.
B. Jonson.

Shrimp. v. a. Contract.

Shrimped. part. adj. Contracted.

Such things as these go for wit, so long as they continue in Latin; but when usually shrimped things would they appear, if turned into English! —Richard, Granda and Reasons of the Contempt of the Clergy inquired into, p. 44: 1033.

Shrimper. s. One employed in catching shrimps.

(For example see Shrimper, p. 2.)

Shrine. s. [Lat. scrinium = desk; A.S. scrin.] Case in which something sacred is deposited.

You living powers, enclosed in stately shrine
Of growing trees; you rural gods that wield
Your scepters here, if to your ears divine
A voice may come, which troubled soil doth yield.
Sir P. Sidney.

All the world come
To kiss this shrine, this mortal breathing saint.
Shakespeare, Merchant of Venice, ii. 7.
Come offer at my shrine, and I will help thee.
Id., Henry VI. Part II, ii. 1.

They often placed Within his sanctuary itself their shrines, Abominations! Milton, Paradise Lost, i. 387.
Falling on his knees before her shrine,
He thus implored with prayers her power divine.
Dryden, Palamon and Arcite, iii. 127.
Lovers are in rapture at the name of their fair
And; they lavish out all their incense upon that shrine.—Watts.

Shrink. v. n. pret. shrank, or shrunken; part. shrunken. [A.S. scrincan, forserincan.]

1. Contract itself into less room; shrivel; be drawn together by some internal power.
But to be still hot summer's tawlings, and
The shrinking slaves of winter.

Shakespeare, Cymbeline, iv. 4.
I am a scribbled form, drawn with a pen
Upon a parchment, and against this fire
Do I shrink up. Id., King John, v. 7.
Ill weaved ambition how much art thou shrunk!
When that this body did contain a spirit,
A kingdom for it was too small a bound;
But now two pieces of the yliest earth
Is room enough. Id., Henry IV. Part I, v. 4.
I have not found that water, by mixture of saltness,
Will shrink or draw into less room.—Bacon, Natural and Experimental History.

2. Withdraw as from danger.

The noise increases, as the billows roar
When rolling from afar they threat the shore;
She comes, and feeble nature now I find Shrinks back in danger, and forsakes my mind.
Dryden, Aurengzebe, v. 1.
Am I become so monstrous, so dishevelled,
That Nature cannot suffer my approach,
Or look me in the face?—but stands aghast,
And the fair light which gilds this new-made orb,
Shorn of his beams, shrinks in.
Id., State of Innocence, ii. 2.

Love is a plant of the most tender kind,
That shrinks and shudders with every ruffling wind.
Graunt.

All shrews have a contractile power, whereby they shorten; as appears if a shrew be cut transversely, the ends shrink, and make the wound gape. —A. L. Latham.

Philosophy, that had on heaven before,
Shrinks to her second cause, and is no more.
Pope, Dunciad, iv. 613.

3. Express fear, horror, or pain, by shrugging, or contracting the body.

There is no particular object so good, but it may have the show of some difficulty or unpleasant quality annexed to it, in respect whereof the will may shrink and decline it.—Hooker, Ecclesiastical Polity.

The morning cock crew loud,
And at the sound it shrunk in haste away,
And vanish'd from our sight.
Shakespeare, Hamlet, i. 2.

I'll embrace him with a soldier's arm,
That he shall shrink under my courtesy.
Id., Henry IV. Part I, v. 2.

When he wakes, he moves like an eagle.
And the ground shrinks before his treading.
Shakespeare, Coriolanus, v. 4.

4. Fall back as from danger.

Many shrink, which at the first would dare,
And be the foremost men to execute.
Daniel, Civil Wars of York and Lancaster.
I laugh, when those who at the spear are bold
And venturous, if that I find them shrink and fear
What yet they know must follow, to endure
Exile or ignominy, or bonds, or pain.

Milton, Paradise Lost, ii. 204.
The sky shrunk upward with unusual doad,
And trembling Tyber dived beneath his bed.
Dryden, Translation of the Æneid, i. viii. 312.
Fall out: behold the noble beast at bay,
And the vile huntsmen shrink.

Id., Cenci, iv. 1.
What iniquid natures shrink at with affright,
The hard indignant combats is right.
Pope, Essay on Man, ii. 224.

Shrink. v. a. Make to shrink.

O mighty Caesar! dost thou lie so low?
Are all thy conquests, glories, triumphs, spoils,
Shrunk to this little measure?

Shakespeare, Julius Caesar, iii. 1.
The sower servant that causes the lord to shrink his descending favours. Of the two, prices more toward in a master. The sower is a proper personage, which Solomon saw the earth did grow for.—Editham, Rensselaer, i. 7.

Return, Alphonse: the dread voice is past,
That shrunk thy streams. Milton, Lycidas, 132.
If he bosoms the revenue, he will also shrink the necessity.—Jeremy Taylor.
Keep it from coming too long lest it should shrink the corn in measure.—Mortimer, Husbandry.

Shrink. s.

1. Corrugation; contraction into less compass.

There is in this a crack, which seems a shrink, or contraction in the body since it was first formed.
—Woodward.

2. Contraction of the body from fear or horror.

This publick death, received with such a cheer,
As not a such, a look, a shrink betrays
The least felt touch of a degenerate fear.
Daniel, Civil Wars of York and Lancaster.

Shrinker. s. One who, that which, shrinks.

We are no cowardly shrinkers,
But true Englishmen bred;
We'll play our parts, like valiant hearts,
And never fly for dread;
We'll ply our business unblush,
Where'er we come or go,
With our mates to the Straights,
When the stormy winds do blow.
Old Sea-Song, Neptune's Ragging Farp.

Shrinking. verbal abs. Act of one who shrinks; falling back as from danger, or drawing back through fear.

If a man accustoms himself to sight or pass over these first motions to good, or shrinkings of his conscience from evil, ... conscience will by degrees grow dull and unconcerned.—South, Sermons, ii. 412.

Shrive. v. a. [A.S. scrifan.] Hear at confession.

What, talking with a priest, lord chamberlain?
Your honour hath no shivering work in hand.
Shakespeare, Richard III, iii. 2.
He shrives this woman.
Else ne'er could he so long protect his speech.
Id., Henry IV. Part I, i. 2.

If he had the condition of a saint, not the complexion of a devil, I had rather he should shrink me than wipe me. Id., Merchant of Venice, i. 2.
Sovereign but their title, and their names false,
A bird and twenty-jew e pronounced with twice,
When constrained for a plain woman's use,
And a good soldier twice-purged, and well so.
Shakespeare, The Rebel Lord.

Shrive. v. n. Administer confession.

Where holy fathers went to shrive,
Spenser, Shepherd's Calendar, August.

Shriving. verbal abs. Shriving.

Butter a short tale, than a bad long shriving.
Spenser, Mother Hubbert's Tale.

Shrivel. v. n. Contract itself into wrinkles.

Leaves, if they shrink and fold up, give them drink.—Eclogues.
If she needed to the freshest nosegay, it would shrink and wither as it had been blighted.—Arbuthnot.

Shrivel. v. a. Contract into wrinkles.

Unshriven sorrow contract and shrivel up the soul.—Hammond, Works, iv. 577.
He burns the leaves, the scorching blast invades
The tenderearn, and shrivels up the blades.
Dryden.

Shrivelled. part. adj. Contracted with wrinkles.

When the fiery suns too flurried play,
And shrivell'd herbs on with'ring stems decay,
The wary phlegmatic on the mountain's brow,
Undraws his watery store.

Dryden, Translation of the Georgics, l. 157.

Shriver. s. One who shrives; confessor.

Obsolete.

The ghostly father now hath done his shrift,
When he was made a shriver 'twas for shift.
Shakespeare, Henry VI. Part III. iii. 2.

Shroud. s. [A.S. scrod = garment.]

1. Shelter; cover.

A cedar in Lebanon with fair branches, and with a shadowing shroud, — Ezekiel, xxxi. 3.
It would warm his spirits,
To hear from me you had left Antony,
And put yourself under his shroud,
The universal landlord.

Shakespeare, Antony and Cleopatra, iii. 11.

By me invested with a veil of clouds,
And awaddled, as new-born, in sable shrouds,
For these a receptacle I devised.

The winds

Blow moist and keen, shattering the graceful locks
Of these fair spreading trees; which bind us weak
Some better shroud, some better warmth, to cherish
Our limbs benighted. Milton, Paradise Lost, x. 1065.

2. Dress of the dead; winding-sheet.

Now the wasted lands do glow:
Whilst the scorch'd-owl, screeching loud,
Puts the wretch that lies in woe
In remembrance of a shroud.

Shakespeare, Midsummer-Night's Dream, v. 2.

They drop aspear; by culture some decay,
And some the blasts of fortune sweep away;
Till naked quite of linqueness, alone
We call for death, and shelter in a shroud. Young.

3. Sail-ropes: (sometimes applied to sails.)

I turned back to the mast of the ship; there I found my sword among some of the shrouds. — Sir P. Sidney.

The tackle of my heart is crack'd and burnt;
And all the shrouds wherewith my life should sail,
Are turned to one little hair.

Shakespeare, King John, v. 7.

A weather-beaten vessel holds Gladly the part, though his shrouds and tackle torn.

Milton, Paradise Lost, ii. 1013.

The flaming shroud no dreadful did appear,
All judged a wreath could no proportion bear.

Pope, Translation of Juvenal, xii. 3.

The summons straight his denizens of air;
The loud squadrons round the sails repair:
Soft 'er the squalid wail whisp'ers breathe,
That seem'd but zephyrs to the crowd beneath.

Pope, Rape of the Lock, canto ii.

4. Branch of a tree.

We are led to suspect, that our author in some of these instances has an equivocal reference to shrouds in the sense of the branches of a tree, now often used. — Hartson, On Milton's Spenser Poems.

Shroud. v. a.

1. Shelter; cover from danger as an agent.

Under your leaves I will not safely shroud,
Spenser, Faerie Queene.
He got himself to Meve, in hope to surround himself, until such time as the rage of the people was appeased. — Kneller, History of the Turks.

The governors of Corin caused the suburbs to be plucked down, for fear that the Turks, shrouding themselves in them, should with more ease besiege
the town. — Hub.

Besides the faint men commit, with this immediate avowed aspect upon their relatives, there are others which slyly shroud themselves under the skirt of its mantle. — Dr. H. More, Devy of Christian Piety.

2. Shelter as the thing covering.

One of these trees, with all his young ones, may shroud four hundred horsemen. — Sir W. Raleigh.

3. Dress for the grave.

If I die before thee, shroud me
In one of these same sheets.

Shakespeare, Othello, iv. 3.

The ancient Egyptian mummies were shrouded in a number of folds of linen, besmeared with gum, like seraphs. — Flavien.

Whosoever comes to shroud me, do not harm
That subtle wealth of hair about mine arm. Donne.

4. Cover or conceal.

That same evening, when all shrouded were
In careless sleep, all, without care or fear,
They fell upon the flock.

Spenser.

For through this land anon the deer will come,
And in this covert will we make our stand,
Calling the principal.

Shakespeare, Henry VI. Part III. iii. 1.

Moon, slip behind some cloud; some tempest rise;
And blow out all the stars that light the skies,
To shroud my shame.

Dryden, Indian Emperor, iii. 2.

Thither the loud tumultuous winds resort,
And on the mountain keep their boisterous court,

That in thick show'rs her rocky summit shrouds,
And darkens all the broken view with clouds.

Addison.

5. Defend; protect.

No Venus from prevailing Greeks did shroud
The hope of Rome, and saved him in a cloud.

Haller.

Shroud. v. n. Harbour; take shelter.

If your stray attendance be yet lodged,
Or shroud within these limits, I shall know Kre narrow wake. Milton, Comus, 315.

Shroddy. adj. Affording shelter.

If your stray attendance be yet lodged
Within these shroddy limits. Milton,
MS. of Comus, in Trinity College, Cambridge.

Shrovetide. s. Time of confession; day before Ash-Wednesday or Lent, on which anciently they went to confession.

At shrovetide to shroving.
Tusser, Five Hundred Points of Good Housewifery.

'Tis merry in hall, when leards wag all,
And welcome merry shrovetide.

Shakespeare, Henry IV. Part II. v. 3, song.

Shroving. s. Festivity of shrovetide.

'Twill be rarely shroving
To see him stated thus, as though he went
A shroving through the city, or intended
To set up some new wake.

Beaumont and Fletcher, Noble Gentleman.

Eating, drinking, merry-making, . . . what else, I beseech you, was the whole life of this miserable man here, but in a manner a perpetual shroving! — Hales, Sermon on St. Luke, xvi. 25, p. 3: 1663.

Shrub. s. [see Syrup.] Variety of rum.

Shrub is a compound liquor made of spirit, acid, fruit, and sugar. — Waterston, Cyclopædia of Com- merce.

Shrub. s. [A.S. scrob.]

1. Bush; small tree.

He came into a gloomy glade,
Covered with boughs and shrubs from heaven's light.

Spenser, Faerie Queene.

The humble shrub and bush with frizzled hair,
Milton, Paradise Lost, vii. 322.

It might have been as well bruskwood and shrubs. — Dr. H. More.

Comedy is a representation of common life, in low subjects, and is a kind of journey, a shrub belonging to the species of cedar. — Dryden.

I've lived

Amidst these woods, gleaning from thorns and shrubs
A wretched sustenance.

Addison, Milton's Style imitated.

Trees generally shoot up in one great stem or body; and then at a good distance from the earth spread into branches; thus gooseberries and currants are shrubs; oaks and cherries are trees.

Locke.

Shrub. v. a. Rid from bushes or trees.

Though they be well shrubbed and shred, yet they begin even now before the spring to bud, and hope again in time to flourish as the green bay-tree. — Ashmole, Repository of Beneficence, fol. 31: 1573.

Shrubby. s. Plantation of shrubs.

He placed a cast of the Medicæan Venus in his shrubby; and one of the pipier Fama in a small circle of firs, haws, and other elegant shrubs. — Græcia, Recollections of Sheraton, p. 69.

Shrubby. adj.

1. Resembling a shrub.

Plants appearing weathered, shrubby, and curled, are the effects of immoderate wet. — Mortimer, Dis- taurary.

2. Full of shrubs; bushy.

Gentle villager,
What roadst thou would bring me to that place? —
Dus west it rises from this shrubby joint.

Milton, Comus, 304.

3. Consisting of shrubs.

On that cloud-piercing hill
Philinmon, from afar the traveller kins
Antonid's, how the goats their shrubby brows Grazed pendulous. J. Phillips, Cyder, i. 106.

Shrug. s. [?] Dress; refuse of metal tried by the fire.

Shrug. v. n. [Dutch, schricken.] Express horror or dissatisfaction by motion of the shoulders or whole body.

He quick, thou wert best
To answer other business; shrug'st thou, malice?

Shakespeare, Tempest, i. 2.

He grins, smacks, shrugs, and such an itch enters,
As 'jerreties or school-buys which do know
Of some gay sport abroad, yet dare not go. Donne.

They grin, they shrug, they scratch, they hug. Swift.

Shrug. v. a. Contract or draw up.

Let me shroud and shrug myself into my shell as a tortoise. — Florio, Translation of Montaigne, p. 634:
1613.

He shrugs his shoulders when you talk of securities. — Addison.
He shrugged his sturdy back,
As if he felt his shoulders ache.

Butler, Hudibras, iii. 1. 173.

Shrug. s. Motion of the shoulders, usually expressing dislike or aversion.

And yet they could not to learn the mode,
How to be dressed, or how to lip shroud,
To return knowing in the Spanish shrug.

Cleveland.

As Spaniards talk in dialogues,
Of heads and shoulders, necks and shrugs.

Butler, Hudibras, iii. 2. 1401.

But on the critic's brow, and sit
At Will's, the piny judge of wit.
A nod, a shrug, a scornful smile,
With caution used may serve awhile.

Swift, On Poetry.

Shrugging. part. adj.

Like a fearful deer that looks most about when he comes to the best feed, with a shrugging kind of tremor through all her principal joints, she gave these words. — Sir P. Sidney.

Shrugging. verbal abs. In the extract, shivering.

The touch of the cold water made a pretty kind of shrugging come over her body, like the twinkling of the fairest among the fixed stars. — Sir P. Sidney.

Shrunk. part. adj. Contracted; shrivelled.

She weighing the decaying plight,
And shrankens sinews of her chosen knight,
Would not awake her forward course pursue.

Spenser, Faerie Queene.

If there were taken out of men's minds vain opinions, it would leave the minds of a number of men, poor shrunken things, full of melancholy. —
Bacon.

Shudder. v. n. [German, schuttern.] Quake with fear or with aversion.

The fright was general; but the female band
(A leopards' train) in more confusion stand;
With horror shuddering on a leap they run.

Drayton, The Shepherd's Week, 310.

Cæsar will shrink to hear the words that utter'st,
And shudder in the midst of all his conquests.

Addison, Cato, ii. 1.

Shudder. s. Tremor; state of trembling.

Into strong shudders, and to heavenly agues,
Shakespeare, Titus of Athens, iv. 3.

Shuddering. part. adj. Quaking with terror or aversion.

All the other passions fleet to air,
As doubtful thoughts, and rash embraced despair,
And shuddering fear.

Shakespeare, Merchant of Venice, iii. 2.

Shuffle. v. a. [Provincial German, schuffeln.]

1. Throw into disorder; agitate tumultuously, so as that one thing takes the place of another; confuse; thrown together tu-multuously.

A previous cunning in the late protector,
To shuffle a new justice into the state.

Beaumont and Fletcher, Coronation.

When the heavens shuffle all in awe,
The torrid with the frozen zone,
Then, say, thou and I will greet.

Churchyard.

In most things good and evil be shuffled, and thrust up together in a confused heap, and it is study which must draw them forth and range them.

South, Sermons.

When lots are shuffled together in a lap or pitcher, what reason can a man have to presume, that he shall draw a white stone rather than a black? — Phil.

We shall in vain, shuffling the little money we have from one another's hands, endeavour to prevent our wants; decay of trade will quickly waste all the remainder. Locke.

He has shuffled the two ends of the sentence together, and by taking out the middle, makes it speak just as he would have it. — Bishop Atterbury.

2. Change the position of cards with respect to each other.

We sure in vain the cards condemn,
Ourselves both cut and shuffled them.

Prior, Alma, ii. 234.

3. Remove or introduce with some artificial or fraudulent tumult.

Her mother,
Now firm for Dr. Calus, had appointed
That he should likewise shuffle her away.

Shakespeare, Merry Wives of Windsor, iv. 6.

It was contrived by your enemies, and shuffled into the papers that were seized. — Dryden.

Shuffle off. Get rid of.

In that sleep of death, what dreams may come,
When we have shuffled off this mortal coil,
Must give us pause. Shakespeare, Hamlet, iii. 1.

I can no other answer make, but thanks;
And off good turns
Are shuffled off with such uncurrent jay.

Id., Twelfth Night, iii. 3.

If any thing hits, we take it to ourselves; if it mis-carries, we shuffle it off to our neighbours.—Sir R. L'Estrange.

If, when a child is questioned for any thing, he persists to shuffle it off with a falsehood, he must be chastised.—Locke.

Shuffle up. Form tumultuously, or fraudulently.

They sent forth their precepts to convert them before a court of arbitration, and there used to shuffle up a summary proceeding by examination, without trial of jury.—Baron.

He shuffled up a peace with the redar, in which the Bu nelians were excluded.—Howell, Fatal Forest.

Shuffle. v. n. Throw the cards into a new order.

A sharper both shuffles and cuts.—Sir R. L'Estrange.

Cards we play
A round or two; when used, we throw away,
Take a fresh pack; nor is it worth our grieving
Who cuts or shuffles with our dirty leaving.

2. Play mean tricks; practise fraud; evade fair questions.

I myself, leaving the fear of heaven on the left hand, and hiding mine honour in my necessity, am fain to shuffle.—Shakespeare, Merry Wives of Windsor, ii. 2.

If a steward be suffered to run on, without bringing him to a reckoning, such a sottish forbearance will teach him to shuffle, and strongly tempt him to be a cheat.—Bentley, Sermons.

3. Struggle; shift.

Your life, good master,
Must shuffle for itself.—Shakespeare, Cymbeline, v. 5.

4. Move with an irregular gait.

Shuffle. s.

1. Act of disordering things, or making them take confusedly the place of each other.

Is it not a firmer foundation for contentment, to believe that all things were at first created, and are finally disposed for the best, than that the whole universe is mere laughing, nothing effected for any purpose, but all ill-favourably cobbled and jumbled together, by the unmediated agitation and rule of the will?—Bentley, Sermons.

2. Trick; artifice.

The gifts of nature are beyond all shams and shuffles.—Sir R. L'Estrange.

Shufflecap. s. Play at which money is shaken in a hat.

He lost his money at chuckfarthing, shufflecap, and all fours.—Arbuthnot, History of John Bull.

Shuffler. s. One who plays tricks or shuffles.

Shuffling. part. adj.

1. Moving with irregular gait.

'Tis like the forced salt of a shuffling nag.
Shakespeare, Henry IV. Part I. iii. 1.

2. Prevaricating; evasive.

I have naught to do with that shuffling sect, that doubt eternally, and question all things.—Gilleville, Idem.

To these arguments concerning the novelty of the earth there are some shuffling excuses made.—T. Burnet, Theory of the Earth.

Though he durst not directly break his appointment, he made many a shuffling excuse.—Arbuthnot, History of John Bull.

Shuffling. s. [A.S. scyflung.]

1. Act of throwing into disorder; confusion.

Children should not lose the consideration of human nature in the shufflings of outward countenance; the more they have, the better humoured they should be taught to be.—Locke.

The emul advised his companion to give over shuffling and doubling, and practise good faith.—Sir R. L'Estrange.

2. Trick; artifice.

The motions of shuffling of cards, or ransing of dice, are very light.—Bacon.
His own book is a perpetual detail of his own shufflings or mistakes.—Bentley, Philodemonus Lipsianus, § 35.

3. Irregular gait.

Shufflingly. adv. In a shuffling manner.

I may go shufflingly, for I was never before walked in trammels; yet I shall struggle and moid at constancy, till I have worn off the hitching in my pace.—Dryden.

Shun. v. a. [A.S. scunian.] Avoid; decline; endeavour to escape; eschew.

Consider death in itself, and nature teacheth Christ to shun it.—Hooker, Ecclesiastical Polity.

Birds and beasts, inform'd by nature, know
Kinds opposite to theirs, and fly their foe;
So chameleon, who never saw a fox,
Yet shuns'd him as a snail shuns the rocks.

Dryden, The Cuck and the Fox, 585.

Cato will train thee up to great
And virtuous deeds; do but observe him well, Thou'lt shun misfortunes, or thou'lt learn to bear them.—Addison, Cato.

Shun. v. n. Decline; avoid to do a thing.

I have not shunned to declare unto you all the counsel of God.—Acts, xx. 27.

The lark still shuns on lofty boughs to build,
Her humble nest lies silent in the field.—Waller.

Shunless. adj. Inevitable; unavoidable.

Alone he enter'd
The mortal gate of the city, which he painted
With shunless destiny.—Shakespeare, Coriolanus, ii. 2.

Shunt. v. a. [?] In Railways. Turn a train into a siding, that the main line may be left clear.

Shunting. verbal abs. Act of diverting a train from the main line.

Time and calculation of time, is utterly at fault in this wild chaos. The speed of the convey can never be calculated, nor its weight, its arrival, or its departure reckoned upon. But then, the signals, the breaka, the shunting—if these things are perfect no danger can occur.—The Aberystwyth Disaster, Saturday Review, Sept. 5, 1865.

Shut. part. adj. Rid; clear; free.

We must not pray in one breath to find a thief, and in the next to get shut of him.—Sir R. L'Estrange.

This word has, probably, no connection with shut = close, but rather with the German geschehen = done, and the -sh = be done, become, come to pass, in the Danish kunne = can be, and Swedish måge = may be, perhaps.

Shut. v. a. pret. shut; past part. shut.

1. Close so as to prohibit ingress or regress.

There was a strong tower within the city, and thither fled all the men and women, and all they of the city, and shut it to them, and gat them up to the top of the tower.—Judges, ix. 51.

2. Inclose; confine.

They went in male and female of all flesh . . . and the Lord shut him in.—Genesis, vii. 16.

Before faith came, we were kept under the law, shut up unto the faith, which should afterwards be revealed.—Galatians, iii. 23.

3. Prohibit; bar.

Shut that be shut to man, which to the beast is open?—Milton, Paradise Lost, ix. 691.

4. Exclude.

Our hope of Italy not only lost,
On various seas, by various tempests toss'd,
But shut from every shore, and barr'd from every coast.
Dryden, Translation of the Æneid, i. 319.

5. Contract; not to keep expanded.

Thou shalt not harden thy heart, nor shut thine hand from thy poor brother.—Deuteronomy, xv. 7.

Shut out. Exclude; deny admission to.

In such a night
To shut me out! Pour on, I will endure.
Shakespeare, King Lear, iii. 4.

Widow at one entrance quite shut out.
Milton, Paradise Lost, iii. 50.

He in his walls content,
Shut out the woes which he too well divin'd.
Dryden, Translation of the Æneid, vii. 829.

Shut up.

a. Close; make impervious; make impassable, or impossible to be entered or quitted: (up is sometimes little more than emphatical).

Woe unto you, scribes and Pharisees! for ye shut up the kingdom of heaven against men.—Matthew, xxiii. 13.

Dangerous rocks shut up the passage.—Sir W. Raleigh.

What laws, what barbarous customs of a place,
Shut up a desert shore to drowning men,
And drive us to the cruel was again?

Dryden, Translation of the Æneid, l. 701.

His mother shut up half the rooms in the house, in which her husband or son had died.—Addison.

b. Confine; inclose; imprison.

Thou hast known my son in adventures, and hast not shut me up into the hand of the enemy.—Psalms, xxi. 7.

A low at sea, a fit of sickness, are trifles, when we consider whole families put to the sword, wretches shut up in dungeons.—Addison, Spectator.

c. Conclude.

The king's a-bed,
He is shut up in measureless content.
Shakespeare, Macbeth, ii. 1.

To leave you blest, I would be more accurst
Than death can make me; for death ends our woes.
And the kind grave shuts up the mournful scene.

Dryden, Spanish Friar, v. 2.

Shut. v. n. Be closed; close itself; (as, 'Flowers open in the day, and shut at night').

Shut. s.

1. Close; act of shutting.

I sought him round his palace, made enquiry
Of all the slaves . . . but had for answer,
That since the shut of evening none had seen him.
Dryden, Don Sebastian, iii. 1.

2. Small door or cover.

The wind-gun is charged by the forcible compression of air, the imprisoned air serving, by the help of little falls or shutts within, to stop the vents by which it was admitted.—Bishop Wilkins.

In a very dark chamber, at a round hole, about one third part of an inch broad, made in the shut of a window, I placed a glass prism.—Sir I. Newton, Opticks.

Shutter. s. [Norse, skutl.]

1. One who, that which, shuts.

2. Cover; door.

In lofty litter borne, [they] read, or write
Or sleep at ease; the shutters unke it night.
Dryden, Translation of Juvenal.

Close the door, the shutters shall see
Or thro' the windows we shall see
The nakedness and vanity
Of the dark deserted house.

Trappan, The Dearest House.

Shutting-up. s. Closing.

It was, however, getting late, and Frau Vander-slooth had received the intimation of the people of the police who superintend these resorts, that it was the time for shutting-up.—Maryat, Starlegger, ch. ix.

Shuttle. s. Instrument with which the weaver shoots the cross threads.

I know life is a shuttle.—Shakespeare, Merry Wives of Windsor, v. 1.

Like shuttles through the loom, so swiftly glide
My feather'd hours.—Saunders.

Shuttlecock. s. Cork stuck with feathers, and beaten backward and forward.

With dice, with cards, with billiards far unfit,
With shuttlecocks miscreanting manly wit.

Spenser, Morte d'Arthur a Tale.

'No,' said Willy, 'I know what it is to set up for a gentleman in the capital of a beggar. It is to be a shuttlecock between dissonant and temptations.'—Lord Lytton, What will he do with it? ch. vii.

Shy. v. n. Start; take fright.

'Not the slightest fear, sir,' interposed the brother.
'Warrant him quiet, sir.' . . . 'He don't shy, does he?' inquired Mr. Pickwick. 'Shy, sir? He wouldn't shy if he was to meet a vacuum-load of monkeys with their tails burnt off.'—Dickens, Pickwick Papers, ch. iv.

Shy. adj. [German, schau.]

1. Reserved; not familiar; not free of behaviour.

I know you shy to be obliged.
And still more loth to be obliged by me.—Southey.

What makes you so shy, good friend? There's nobody loves you better than I.—Arbuthnot, History of John Bull.

2. Continous; wary; chary.

I am very shy of employing corrosive liquors in the preparation of medicines.—Hugle.

We are not shy of assent to celestial informations, because they were hid from ages.—Glanville, Scapula Scientifica.

We grant, although he had much wit,
It was very shy of using it,
As being loth to wear it out,
And therefore bore it not about.

Bulwer, Hudibras, i. 1, 45.

3. Keeping at a distance; unwilling to approach.

A shy fellow was the duke; and I believe I know the cause of his withdrawing.—Shakespeare, Measure for Measure, iii. 2.

She is represented in such a shy retiring posture, and covers her bosom with one of her hands.—Addison, Guardian.

But when we come to seize th' inviting prey,
Like a shy ghost, it vanishes away.

Norris.

4. Suspicious; jealous; unwilling to suffer near acquaintance.

The bruisè impudenciated, and turned to a stinking ulcer, which made every body shy to come near her.—Arbuthnot.

Princes are, by wisdom of state, somewhat shy of their successors; and there may be supposed in queens a want a little proportion of tenderness that way more than in kings.—Sir H. Wotton.

The horses of the army having been daily led before me, were no longer shy, but would come up to my very feet, without starting.—Saunders.

Shyness. s. Attribute suggested by Shy; unwillingness to be familiar; unsociableness; reservedness.

Practised to leap, and hang the head aside,
Faints into air, and languishes with pride.
Pope, Rape of the Lock, canto iv.
When on my sickly couch I lay,
Impatient both of night and day,
Then Stella ran to my relief.
Your bodies are but only poor and perishing like your clothes, but, like infected clothes, fill you with all diseases and dilemmas, which oppress the soul with sickly appetites, and vain cravings.—Lavo.

2. Faint; weak; languid.
The moon grows sickly at the sight of day.
And early cocks have summoned me away.
Dryden.

To animate the doubtful fight,
Namur in vain expects that ray;
In vain France hopes the sickly light
Should shine near William's fallow day.
Prior, An English Ballad on the Taking of Namur.

- sickly. v. a. Make diseased; taint with the hue of disease. Rare.

The native hue of resolution
Is sicklied o'er with the pale cast of thought.
Shakespeare, Hamlet, iii. 1.

- sickness. s. Attribute suggested by Sick.

1. State of being diseased.
I do lament the sickness of the king,
As loth to lose him.
Shakespeare, Richard III. ii. 2.

2. Disease; malady.
Himself took our infirmities, and bare our sickness.—Matthew, viii. 17.
My people are sick with sickness much enfolded,
My numbers lessen'd.—Shakespeare, Henry V. iii. a.
Trust not too much your now resistless charms;
Those age or sickness soon or late discern.
Pope, Epistle to Miss Blount.

3. Disorder in the organs of digestion.

- side. s. [A.S.]
1. Parts of animals fortified by the ribs.
When two bears with ranking malice meet,
Their gory sides froth bleeding freely fret.
Spenser, Faerie Queen.
Ere the soft fearful people to the flood Commit their woolly sides.
Thomson, Seasons, Summer, 378.

2. Any part of any body opposed to any other part.
The tables were written on both their sides, on the one side and on the other.—Erasmus, xxii. 16.
The force of these outward streams might well enough serve for the turning of the screw, if it were so that both its sides would equiponderate.—Bishop Wilkins.

3. Right or left.
The lovely Thais by his side
Sat like a blooming eastern bride
In flow'rs of youth, and beauty's prime.
Dryden, Alexander's Feast.

4. Margin; edge; verge.
Or where Hyllus' wealthy side
Pays tribute to the Persian pride.
Lord Rancannon.

Poor wretch! on stormy seas to lose thy life;
Unhappy thou! but more thy widow wife.
At this she panted, for now the flowing tide
Had brought the body nearer to the side.
Dryden, Translation from Ovid, House of Sleep.
The temple of Diana elate, Aylvan scene with various greens was drawn,
Shades on the sides, and in the midst a lawn.
Id., Putnam and Arcite, ii. 618.
I could see persons dressed in glorious habits, with garlands upon their heads 'ying down by the sides of fountains.—Adrian.

5. Any kind of local respect.
They looking back, all the eastern side beheld
Of Paradise.—Milton, Paradise Lost, xii. 641.
If our substance be indeed divine,
And cannot cease to be, we are at worst
On this side nothing.—Ibid. ii. 1.

6. Party; interest; faction; sect.
Their weapons only
Seem'd on our side; but for their spirits and souls,
This word rebellion, it had froze them up,
As hah are in a paul.
Shakespeare, Henry IV. Part I. i. 1.
Favour, custom, and at last number, will be on the side of grave.—Bishop Sprat.
Men be always took to be
His friends, and dogs his enemy;
Who never so much hurt him had done him,
As his own side did falling on him.
Batter, Hudibras, l. 2, 840.

In the serious part of poetry the advantage is wholly on Chimere's side.—Dryden.
That person, who fills their chair, has justly earned the esteem of all sides by the impartiality of his behaviour.—Adrian.

Let not our darts, though foil'd in arms, despair,
Whilst on his side he reckons half the fair.
Tackell, Epistle from a Lady to a Gentleman at Aigynon.

Some valuing those of their own side, or mind,
Still make themselves the measure of mankind:
Fondly we think we honour merit then,
When we but praise ourselves in other men.
Pope, Essay on Criticism, ii. 451.

He from the taste obscure reclaims our youth,
And sets the passions on the side of truth;
Forms the soft bosom with the gentlest art,
And pours each human virtue in the heart.
Id., Imitations of Horace, b. ii. ep. 1.

7. Any part placed in contradistinction or opposition to another: (used of persons, or propositions, respecting each other).

There began a sharp and cruel fight, many being slain and wounded on both sides. Koelia, History of the Turks.

The plague is not easily received by such as continually are about them that have it: on the other side, the plague taketh easiest hold of those that come out of a fresh air.—Johnson.

I am too well satisfied of my own weakness to be pleased with any thing I have written; but, on the other side, my reason tells me that what I have long considered may be as just as what an ordinary judge will condemn.—Hepburn.

My secret wishes would my choice decide;
But open justice binds to neither side;
Id., Indian Emperor, iii. 1.

It is granted on both sides, that the fear of a Dearly doth universally possess the minds of men.—
Archbishop Tillotson.

Two nations still pursued Peculiar ends, on each side a route
To fly conjunction. A. Phillips.

8. It is used to note consanguinity: (as,
'He's cousin by his mother's or father's side').

Yet here and there we grant a gentle bride,
Whose temper betters by the father's side,
Unlike the rest that double human care,
Fond to relieve, or resolute to share. Parnell.

- Used adjectively, or as the first element in a compound.

- a. Lateral.
They shall take of the blood, and strike it on th two side posts, and on the upper door post of the house. Exodus, xii. 7.

- b. Oblique; indirect.
They presume that the law doth speak with all indifference, that the law hath no side respect to their persons. Hooker, Ecclesiastical Polity.
People are sooner reclaimed by the side wind of a surprise, than by downright admonition.—*Sir R.
L'Estrange.*
One mighty squadron with a side wind sped.
Dryden.

The parts of water, being easily separable from each other, will, by a side motion, be easily removed, and give way to the approach of two pieces of marble.—Locke.

What natural agent could turn them aside, could impel them so strongly with a transverse side blow against that tremendous weight and rapidity, when whole worlds are a falling?—Bentley, Sermon.

He not only gives us the full prospects, but several unexpected peculiarities, and side views, unobserved by any painter but Homer.—Pope, Preface to the Translation of the Iliad.

My secret enemies could not forbear some expressions, which by side wind reflected on me.—Swift.

- side. v. n.

1. Lean on one side. Rare.
All rising to great place is by a winding stair;
if there be factions it is good to side a man's self whilst rising, and balance himself when placed.
—Johnson.

2. Take a party; engage in a faction.
Vex'd are the maddes who have sided
In his behalf. Shakespeare, Coriolanus, iv. 2.
Not yet so fully desperate
To side against ourselves with fate;
As criminals, condemn'd to suffer,
Are divided first, and then turn'd over.

The princes differ and divide;
Some follow law, and some with beauty side.
Granville.

It is pleasant to see a verse of an old poet revolute from its original sense, and siding with a modern subject.—Adrian.

All side in parties, and begin the attack.
Pope, Rape of the Lock, canto v.

Those who pretended to be in with the principles upon which her amity proceeded, either absented themselves where the whole cause depended, or sided with the enemy.—Swift.

The equitable part of those who now side against the court, will probably be more temperate.—Id.

- side. v. a.

1. Be at the side of; stand at the side of.
Rare.

But his blind eye, that sided Paridell,
All his demerits from his sight did hide.
Spenser, Faerie Queen, iii. 9, 27.

The pair, which do each other side,
Though yet some space doth them divide,
This happy night must both make one.

H. Jonson, Mankind at Court.
If Clara side him, and will call him friend,
I would the difference of our bloods were such
As might with any shift be wiped away.

Beaumont and Fletcher, Love's Cure.

2. Match. Rare.
He [Mr. John Hales] had sure read more, and carried more about him in his excellent memory, than any man I ever knew, my lord Falkland only excepted, who I think sided him.—Lord Clarendon Life, i. 53.

Side-dish. s. [the d, double in sound as well as spelling.] Dish at the side, as opposed to the top and bottom, of a dining-table.

How we dining-out snobs sneer at your cookery, and push-pouch your old luck, . . . and know that the side-dishes of to-day are rechauffés from the dinner of yesterday, and mark how certain dishes are whisk'd off the table untasted, so that they may flavour at the banquet to-morrow.—Thackeray, Book of Nooks, ch. xii.

Sideboard. s. Sidetable on which conveniences are placed for those that eat at the other table. See Sidetable.

At a stately sideboard by the wine
That fragrant smell diffus'd.

Milton, Paradise Regain'd, ii. 330.
No sideboards then with gilded plate were dress'd,
No sweating slaves with massive dishes press'd.

Congreve, Translations of Juvenal, xl. 180.
The snow white damask curtains are display'd
And glittering silvers on the sideboard laid. King.

The shining sideboard, and the burnish'd plate,
Let other ministers, great Anna, require.

Prior, Epistle to the Queen, desiring to see Picture.
African brought from Carthage to Rome,
In silver vessels, to the value of 11,000 l. 15s. 3d.; a quantity exceeded afterwards by the sideboards of many private families.—Arbuthnot.

Sidebox. s. Enclosed seat on the side of the theatre.

Why mid our coaches crowd the white-gloved ladies?

Why bows the sidebox from its inmost rows?
Pope, Rape of the Lock, canto v.

Sidely. s. Fly so called from its attaching its egg to the hair on the side and other parts of the horse which are within reach of that animal's tongue; which eggs, when licked off, are hatched in the intestinal canal, and voided as bots.

From a rough whitish mucus, in the intestinal system of horses, the sidely proceeds.—Whitman, Physico-Theology.

Sideling. adv. This is another form of Side-long; the verb Side being a catachrestic derivation from it.

A fellow milled up maps in a gentleman's chest, some sideling, and others upside down, the better to adjust them to the pannels.—Swift.

Sidelong. adv. [the -long is the A.S. lung, not lung, the adjective of length. See Grovel; also Sideling.]

1. Laterally; obliquely; not in pursuit; not in opposition.

As if on earth
Winds underground, or waters, forcing way,
Sidelong had push'd a mountain from his seat,
Half sunk with all his pins.

Milton, Paradise Lost, vi. 105.
As a lion, bounding in his way,
With force augmented bears against his prey,
Sidelong to seize. Dryden, Translation from Ovid.

2. On the side.

If it prove too wet, by your juds sidelong; but shade those which blow from the afternoon sun.—
Keble, Calendar.

Sidelong. adj. Lateral; oblique; not in front; not direct.

She darted from her eyes a sidelong glance,
Just as she spoke, and, like her words, it flew;
Seem'd not to beg what she then bid him do.

Dryden, Aurengzebe, iii. 1.
When thou . . . a temptation lurk'd dost behold,
And when she smals on thee a sideling glance,
Then try thy heart, and tell me if it dares.

Id., Translation of Persius, iii. 218.
The reason of the planets' motions in curve lines
Is the attraction of the sun, and an oblique or side-long impulse.—Locke.

Sidapocket. s. Pocket at the side (chiefly applied to those of the waistcoat).

With this dilemma, Mr. Weller buttoned up his change in a side pocket, and with many contradictory node and gestures by the way proceeded in search of the subject of discourse. — Dickens, Pickwick Papers, ch. xiv.

Sider. s. One who sides with a party, engages in a faction, or takes a side; sidesman.

Such converts . . . are sure to be beset with diverse sorts of adversaries: as the papists, and their sidera. — Sheldon, Miracles of A stickler, preface: 1610.
A sider at all times. — A. Wood, Athena Oceanica, vol. ii. col. 27.

Sideral. adj. Starry; astral.

These changes in the heavens, though slow, produced
Like chance on sea, and land; sideral blast,
Vapour and mist, and exhalation hot,
Corrupt and pestilent!

Milton, Paradise Lost, l. 602.
The monk . . . that earliest gives Sure hopes of very wine, and in its youth,
Its tender nectar, lends the spreading laughs
With larva and juicy offspring, that dubs
The vernal nippings and cold sideral blasts.

J. Philips, Cyder, l. 508.

Siderated. adj. Blasted; planet-struck.

Parts cauterized, gangrenated, siderated, and mortified, become black; the radical moisture, or vital sulphur, suffering an extinction. — Sir T. Browne, Vulgar Errors.

Sideration. s. Sudden mortification, or, as the common people call it, a blast; sudden deprivation of sense.

The contagious vapour of the very earth produces a mortification or sideration in the parts of plants on which they are laid. — Ray, Wisdom of God manifested in the Works of the Creation.

Sideral. adj. [Lat. sidus, sideris = star.]

Astral; starry; relating to the stars.
This was a permanent symbol of the sideral splendours. — Cervinus, Philomela to Hyde, conv. iii.
The Egyptians called their houses by the names of their sideral and elementary deities. — Shuckford, On the Creation and Fall of Man, preface, p. xxi.

Siderous. adj. Sidereal.

The mystical conjunction of hawk and lion implies either the genial or the siderous sun, the great deity thereof, and the strength and vigour in its operations. — Sir T. Browne, Vulgar Errors, (Ord. 18.)

Siderite. s. [Lat. sideritis.] Limestone.

Upon which he hangs in a cord a siderite of Herculean stone. — Broder, Lingua.

Siderolite. s. [Gr. σιδηρος = steel, iron + λιθος = stone.] Meteoric stone, mainly consisting of iron.

Aerolites [are] meteorites, consisting for the most part of various silicates, interspersed with isolated particles of nickeliferous iron, meteoric pyrites, &c. . . . Siderolites; meteorites, consisting of nickeliferous native iron in a more or less continuous or sponge-like state. . . . Aerolites are masses of native iron, generally nickeliferous, and containing phosphides of nickel and iron, carbon, troilite, &c. — N. Sharp-Makelyst, Catalogue of the Collection of Meteorites in the British Museum.

Sidesaddle. s. Woman's seat on horseback.

Amidst with a cradle,
And with a sidesaddle.

Shelton, Taming of Elton Emmyng.

The use of riding in coaches, and of sidesaddles, [is] since the time of Richard II. here with us. — Hakewell, Apology, p. 273.

Sidesman. s. Assistant to the churchwarden.

A gift of such goods, made by them with the consent of the sidesmen or vestry, is void. — Aphiff, Paragon Juris Canonici.

How little leisure would they find to be the most pragmatical sidesmen of every popular tumult and sedition. — Milton, Tenure of Kings and Magistrates, (Ord. 18.)

Sidetable. s. Table placed against the wall rather than in the middle of the room; used for eating at; (the sideboard being more especially used as a stand for the meat, plates, &c., connected with the meal).

The duke . . . went to the side-table, and began cutting himself some cold roast beef. — B. Disraeli, The Young Duke, b. iv. ch. viii.

The entrance of the tea-board, and a request from Mrs. Jones that she would make tea at a side-table for the party that had unexpectedly assembled, restored her to herself. — Dickens, Martin Chuzzlewit, ch. xvi.

Sidetaking. s. Engagement in a faction or party.

What furious sidetaking, what plots, what blood-sheds! — Bishop Hall, Remains, p. 72.

Sideways. adv. Laterally; on one side

The fair blossom hangs the head
Sideways, as on a dying bed;
And those pearls of dew she wears,
Prove to be pre-emptive tears.

Milton,

Epitaph on the Marchioness of Winchester.
If the image of the sun should be drawn out into an oblong form, either by a dilatation of every ray, or by any other casual humbug of the refraction, the same oblong image would, by a second refraction made sideways, be drawn out as much in breadth by the like dilatation of the rays, or other casual inequality of the refraction sideways. — Sir I. Newton, On Opticks.

'What makes him go sideways?' said Mr. Snodgrass in the bin, to Mr. Winkle in the middle. 'I can't imagine,' replied Mr. Winkle. His horse was drifting up the street in the most mysterious manner — side first, with his head towards one side of the way, and his tail towards the other. — Dickens, Pickwick Papers, ch. v.

Siding. verbal abs.

1. Engagement in a faction.

As soon as discontents drove men into siding, as all humours fall to the disaffected part, which causes inflammation, so did all, who affected novelties, adhere to that side. — Eikon Basilike.

2. In Railways. Short line of rails on which trains are shunted from the main line.

Sidle. v. n. [see Sideling.] Go with the body the narrowest way, or sideways. A word of doubtful propriety.

The chaffering with dissenters is but like opening a few wickets, and leaving them ajar, by which no more than one can get in at a time, and that not without stooping and siding, and squeezing his body. — Swift.

Dick heard, and twaddling, ogling, bridling, turning short round, strutting, and siding, Attended glad his approbation
Of an immediate conjugation.

Cooper, Pairing Time anticipated.

Siege. s. [Fr.]

1. Act of besetting a fortified place; leaguer.

Our castle's strength
Will laugh a siege to scorn; here let them lie,
Till famine and the sword eat them up.

Shakespeare, Macbeth, v. 5.

It seemed, by the manner of their proceeding, that the Turks purposed rather by long siege than by assault to take the town. — Knutler, History of the Turks.

The more I see pleasures about me, so much more I feel Torment within me, as from the hateful siege
Of contraries.

Milton, Paradise Lost, ix. 120.

2. Any continued endeavour to gain possession.

Heat away the busy meddling fiend,
That lays strong siege unto this wretch's soul,
And from his bosom purge this black despair.

Shakespeare, Henry VI. Part II. iii. 3.

Give me so much of your time, in exchange of it, as to lay an amiable siege to the honesty of Ford's wife. — Id., Merry Wives of Windsor, ii. 2.

Love stood the siege, and would not yield his breast. — Dryden, Theodora and Ilmorio, 33.

3. Sent; throne. Obsolete.

Drawing to him the eyes of all around,
From lofty siege began these words about to sound.

Spenser, Faerie Queen.

4. Place; class; rank. Obsolete.

I fetch my life and being
From men of royal siege. — Shakespeare, Othello, i. 2.

Your aim of party
Did not together pluck such envy from him,
As did that one, and that in my regard
Of the unworthiest siege. — Id., Hamlet, iv. 7.

Stool.

It entereth not the veins, but taketh leave of the permanent parts, as the mouths of the newsmen, and accompanieth the inconvertible portion unto the siege. — Sir T. Browne, Vulgar Errors.

Siege. v. a. Besiege; (the latter the commoner word).

Him he had long oppress with tort,
And fast imprisoned in sieged fort.

Spenser, Faerie Queen.

Siesta. s. [Spanish.] Midday nap.

It is recorded of Galen, that when he slept his siesta (as the Spaniards call it), or afternoon sleep, to avoid excess that way, he used to sit in such a posture, that having a gold ball in his hand, and a copper vessel underneath, as soon as his senses were shut, the ball would fall down, and the noise thereof would awake him. — Horell.

Now pillow'd cheek to cheek, in loving sleep, Hiddest and Juvon their siesta took,
A gentle slumber, but it was not deep,
For ever and anon a something shook
Juan, and shuddering o'er his frame would creep;
And Haidée's sweet lips murmur'd like a brook

A wordless music, and her face so fair Stirred with her dream, as rose-leaves with the air.
— Byron, Don Juan, lv. 29.

Sieve. s. [A.S. sife, siffe.]

1. Hair or lawn strained upon a hoop, by which flour is separated from bran, or fine powder from coarse; boulder; searce.

Ty comes!

Falls now into my ears as profitless
As water in a sieve.

Shakespeare, Much Ado about Nothing, v. 1.

In a sieve I'll thither sail,
And like a rat without a tail,
I'll do—I'll do—I'll do.

Id., Macbeth, l. 3.

An innocent found a sieve, and presently fell to stopping the holes. — Sir B. L. Estrange.

If life sink through you, like a leaky sieve, Accuse yourself, you lived not while you might.

Dryden.

2. Basket; measure of vegetables or fruit.

Apple-wives

That wrangle for a sieve.

Sir W. Davenant, The Wits.

It is well known that sieves and half-sieves are baskets to be met with in every quarter of Covent-garden market. . . . Dr. Farmer adds, that, in several counties of England, the baskets used for carrying out dirt, &c., are called sieves. — Steevens, Notes on Shakespeare.

Sift. v. a. [A.S. siftn.]

1. Separate by a sieve.

2. Separate; part.

When yellow sands are sifted from below,
The glittering billows give a golden show.

Dryden.

3. Examine; try.

All which the wit of Calvin could from thence draw, by sifting the very utmost sentences and syllables, is no more than that certain species seem to intimate, that all Christian churches ought to have their eldership. — Hunter, Ecclesiastical Polity.

I fear me, if thy thoughts were sifted,
The king thy sovereign is not quite exempt
From evasive malice of thy swelling heart.

Shakespeare, Henry VI. Part I. iii. 1.

Opportunity I here have had
To try thee, sift thee, and confess have found thee
Proof against all temptation as a rock
Of adamant.

Milton, Paradise Regained, iv. 531.

One would think that every number who embraces with voluntery the principles of either of these parties, had thoroughly sifted and examined them, and was severely convinced of their preference to those he rejects. — Adison.

Sifting. verbal abs. Act of one who sifts or uses a sieve; critical examination.

In the sifting of such favour, all that came out could not be expected to be pure metal, but must have a mixture of padar and brass. — Sir H. Wotton.

Sigh. v. n. [A.S. srygan.] Emit the breath

audibly, as in grief.

He sighed deeply in his spirit, and said, Why doth this generation seek after a sign? — Mark, viii. 12.

I'll not be made a soft and dull-eyed fool,
To shake the head, relent, and sigh, and yield
To Christian intercessors.

Shakespeare, Merchant of Venice, iii. 3.

Who seeks not pleasure through necessity,
Than such as once on slippery thrones were placed,
And, chasing, sigh to think themselves are chased.

Dryden.

The nymph too loathes to be alone;
Leaves all the swains, and sighs for one.

Prior, Alma, l. 325.

Sigh. v. a. Lament; mourn.

Agas to come, and men unborn,
Shall bless her name, and sigh her fate.

Prior, Ode on the Death of Queen Mary.

Sigh. s. Violent and audible emission of the breath which has been long retained, as in sadness.

Full often has my heart sworn with keeping my sighs imprisoned; full often have the tears I drove back from mine eyes turned back to drown my heart. — Sir P. Sidney.

Love is a smoke raised with the fume of sighs;
Being purged, a fire sparkling in lovers' eyes.

Shakespeare, Romeo and Juliet, l. 1.

What a sigh is there! The heart is sorely charged. — Id., Macbeth, v. 1.

Prayers that e'en spoke, and pity seem'd to call,
And issuing sighs, that smoked along the wall.

Dryden, Palamon and Arcite, ii. 473.

Sigher. s. One who sighs.

I could wish myself a sigh to be so child,
Or at least a sigher to be comforted.

Beaumont and Fletcher, Two Noble Kinsmen.

The passion of love is the most general concern among men; and I am glad to hear by my last advices from Oxford, that there are a set of sighers in that university, who have erected themselves into a society in honour of that tender passion. — Spektator, no. 30.

Sighting. verbal abs. Act of emitting the breath audibly, as in grief.

For the oppression of the poor, for the sighting of the needy now will I arise.—Psalms, xii. 5.
The poor bird was beaten back with the loud sightings of an eastern wind.—Jessie Taylor, Sermons.

It thrilled in sweet and lamented beatings there, (catching now life from transitory death)
Like the vague sightings of a wind at even,
That wakes the wavelets of the slumbering sea,
And dies on the evanescence of its breath,
And sinks and rises, falls and swells by fits.
Shelley, Queen Mab, viii.

Sign. s. [A.S. gesiht.]

1. Perception by the eye; sense of seeing.

If been cast forth to a right place, they must needs have sign.—Becon.
(Loss of sign, of three I must complain)
Blind among enemies, O worse than chains,
Lingering, or beggary, or decrepitude!
Milton, Sonnet on Adam's Fall, 67.
'Tis still the more, although their airy shapes
All but a quick postlock sign escape.
Sir J. Denham.

My eyes are somewhat dimmish grown;
For nature, always in the right,
To your clews adapts my sign.—Swift.

2. Open view; situation in which nothing obstructs the eye.

Undaunted Hotspur
Brings on his army, eager unto fight,
And placed the same before the king in sign.
Daniel, Civil Wars of York and Lancaster.
Roses cast his wondering eyes around,
And all the Tyrreine army laid in sign.
Stretch'd on the spacious plain from left to right.
Dryden, Translation of the Eccl., viii. 502.
I met Brutus in a mortal sign;
He's dipt for certain, and plays least in sign.
Id., Translation of Juvenal, x. 134.

3. Act of seeing or beholding; view.

Three things to sign required are:
The power to see, the light, the visible thing,
Being not too small, too thin, too high, too far,
Clear space and time the form distinct to bring.
Sir J. Davies, On the Immortality of the Soul.
Mun eye pursued him still, but under shade
Lost sign of him. Milton, Paradise Lost, iv. 572.
What form of death him could affright,
Who, unmeasured, with steadfast sign,
Could view the surges mounting steep,
And mounds rolling in the deep!
Dryden, Translation from Horace, h. i. ode iii.
Having little knowledge of the circumstances of those St. Paul wrote to, it is not strange that many things lie unheeded to us, which they who were concerned in the letter, understood at first sign.—Locke.

4. Notice; knowledge.

It was writ as a private letter to a person of piety, upon an assurance that it should never come to any one's sign but her own.—Archbishop Wake.

5. Eye; instrument of seeing.

From the depth of hell they lift their sign,
And at a distance are superior light. Dryden.

6. Aperture pervious to the eye, or other point fixed to guide the eye: (as, 'The sign of a quadrant').

Their armed staves in charge, their heavens down,
Their eyes of fire, sparkling through signs of steel.
Shakespeare, Henry IV. Part II., iv. 1.

7. Spectacle; show; thing to be seen.

Thus are my eyes still captive to one sign;
Thus all my thoughts are slaves to one thought still.
Sir P. Sidney.
Then seem'd they never saw a sign so fair
Of fowls so lovely, that they sure did dream
Them heavenly born. Spenser.
Not an eye,
But is a weary of thy common sign,
Have mine, which hath desired to see thee more.
Shakespeare, Henry IV. Part I., iii. 2.

Moses said, I will now turn aside and see this great sign, why the land is not burnt.—Exodus, iii. 5.
I took a feline at Naples to carry me to Rome, that I might not run over the same signs a second time.—Addison.
Not proud Olympus yields a nobler sign,
Though gods assembled grave his lowering height,
That what more humble mountains offer here,
Where, in their bowings, all those gods appear.
Pope, Windsor Forest.

Before you pass the lunary signs,
Of lords, and earls, and dukes, and barons' knights,
While the spread fan o'ershadow your closing eyes;
Then give one stir, and all the vision fly.
Ed., Epistle to Miss Blount.

Sighted. adj. Seeing in a particular manner: (used in composition, as quicksighted, shortsighted).

As they might, to avoid the weather, pull the joints of the coach up close, so they might put each end down, and remain as discovered and open sighted as on horseback.—Sir P. Sidney.

The king was very quick sighted in discerning dissentions, and raising objections, and very slow in mastering them.—Lord Clarendon, History of the Grand Rebellion.

Sightfulness. s. Attribute suggested by Sightful; perspicuity; clearness of sight.
Obsolete.

But still, although we fail of perfect rightfulness,
Seek we to tune these childish superfluities;
Let us not wink, though void of purest sightfulness.
Sir P. Sidney.

Sightless. adj.

1. Wanting sight; blind.

Your groans are sightless night.
Shakespeare, Rape of Lucrece.
The latent tracts, the gently brights explore,
Of all who blindly creep, or sightless soar.
Pope, Essay on Man, l. 11.

2. Not slightly; offensive to the eye; unpleasing to look at.

Full of unpleasant blot, and sightless stains, . . .
Patch'd with foul moles, and eye-offending marks.
Shakespeare, King John, iii. 1.

3. Invisible.

You murdering ministers,
Wherever in your sightless substances
You wait on nature's mischief!
Shakespeare, Macbeth, i. 5.
The sightless carriers of the air. Id., i. 7.
Winds that sightless in the sounding air do fly.
Warner, Albion's England.

Sightliness. s. Attribute suggested by Sightly; appearance pleasing or agreeable to the eye.

(Clear-eyes may be used, though not for seeing, for sightliness.—Editor, Holy State, p. 290: 1019).

Sightly. adj. Pleasing to the eye; striking to the view.

It lies as sightly on the back of him,
As great Alcides shows upon an ass.
Shakespeare, King John, ii. 1.
Their loving two eyes and two ears, so placed, is more sightly and useful.—Mure, Antichrist against Atheism.

A great many brave sightly horses were brought out, and only one plain nag that made sport.—*Sir
R. L. Estlin*.
We have this her majesty's subjects; we elected a president by his height.—Addison, Spectator.

Sign. s. [Lat. signum.] Seal; signature.

Severals to raise the infernal pow'rs,
And signs framed in planetary hours.
Dryden, Palamon and Arcite, ii. 382.

Sigmoidal. adj. [from the Greek letter called sigma, and sigma = figure, form.] Curved, like the Greek letter already named.

It must necessarily thrust the blood through the open junction of the vein arteriosa, where the sig-moidal portion hindering its return, it must pass through the strainer of the lungs.—Smith, Portrait of Old Age, p. 233: 1000.

Sign. s. [Lat. signum.]

1. Token of anything; that by which anything is shown.

Signs must resemble the things they signify.—
Hooker, Ecclesiastical Polity.
To express the passions which are seated in the heart by outward signs, is one great precept of the painters, and very difficult to perform.—Dryden, Translation of the French Art of Painting.
When any one uses any term, he may have in his mind a determined idea which he makes it the sign of,
and to which he should keep it steadily annexed.
—Locke.

2. Wonder; miracle; prodigy.

It shall come to pass if they will not believe thee, neither hearken to the voice of the first sign, that they will not believe the voice of the latter sign.—
Exodus, iv. 8.
Compell'd by signs and judgements dire.
Milton, Paradise Lost, xii. 173.

3. Picture or token hung at a door, to give notice what is sold within.

I found my nose, struck hands, and pray'd him tell,
To lull acquaintance still, where he did dwell;
He barely named the street, promised the wine;
But his kind wife gave me the very sign. Deane.
Underneath an alabaster paltry sign.
Shakespeare, Henry VI. Part II., v. 2.
True sorrow's like to wine,
That which is good does never need a sign.
Sir J. Knollys.

Wit and fancy are not employed in any one article so much as that of contriving signs to hang over houses.—Swift.

4. Monument; memorial.

An outward and visible sign of an inward and spiritual grace.—Book of Common Prayer, Catechism.

The fire devoured two hundred and fifty men, and they became a sign.—Numbers, xxi. 10.

5. Constellation in the zodiac.

There stay until the twelve celestial signs
Have brought about their annual reckoning.
Shakespeare, Love's Labour's Lost, v. 2.
Now did the sign reign, and the constellation was come, under which Perkin should appear.—Bacon,
History of the Reign of Henry VII.
After every for midnight, the sun
Thrice through the signs his annual race shall run.
Dryden.

6. Note or token given without words.

They made signs to his father.—Luke, i. 62.

7. Mark of distinction; cognizance.

The garden of Meodah blazed,
Aldi by angels borne, his sign in heaven.
Milton, Paradise Lost, vi. 773.

8. Typical representation; symbol.

The holy symbols or signs are not barely signifi-cative; but what they represent is as certainly delivered to us as the symbols themselves.—Brerewood.

9. Subscription of one's name: (as, 'a sign manual').

10. In Medicine. See Symptom.

Sign. v. a. [Lat. signo; Fr. signer; A.S. segnian.]

1. Mark.

We receive this child into the congregation of Christ's flock, and do sign him with the sign of the cross, in token that hereafter he shall not be ashamed to confess the faith of Christ crucified, and manfully to fight under his banner against sin, the world, and the devil, and to continue Christ's faithful soldier and servant unto his life's end.—Book of Common Prayer, Office of Baptism.

2. Devote; show.

You sign your place and calling in full seeming
With meekness and humility; but your heart
Is cramm'd with arrogancy.
Shakespeare, Henry VIII., ii. 4.

3. Ratify by hand or seal.

Be pleased to sign these papers: they are all
Of great concern! Dryden, Cleomenes, ii. 1. betoken; signify; represent typically.

The sacraments and symbols are just such as they are; but because they are made to be signs of a secret mystery, they receive the names of what themselves do sign.—Jessie Taylor.

Sign. v. n. Be a sign or omen.

Musick! P the air?—Under the earth.—
It signs well, doesn't it?—No.
Shakespeare, Antony and Cleopatra, iv. 3.

Signal. s. Notice given by a sign; sign that gives notice.

The weary sun hath made a golden set,
And, by the bright track of his fiery car,
Gives signal of a goodly day to-morrow.
Shakespeare, Richard III., v. 3.

Scarcely the dawning day began to spring,
As, at a signal given, the streets with clamours ring.
Dryden, Palamon and Arcite, iii. 353.

Signal. adj. Eminent; memorable; remarkable.

He was esteemed more by the parliament for the signal acts of cruelty committed upon the Irish.—
Lord Clarendon, History of the Grand Rebellion.
The Thames frozen twice in one year, so as men to walk on it, is a very signal accident.—Swift.

Signality. s. Quality of something remarkable or memorable.

Of the ways whereby they enquired and determined its signality, the first was natural, arising from physical causes.—Sir T. Browne.

It seems a signality in providence, in erecting your society in such a juncture of dangerous humans.—Glavin.

Signalize. v. n. Make eminent; make remarkable.

Many, who have endeavoured to signalize themselves by works of this nature, plainly discover that they are not acquainted with arts and sciences.—
Addison.

Some eminent spirit, having signalized his valour and future in defence of his country, or by popular arts at home, becomes to have great influence on the people.—Swift.

Signally. adv. In a signal manner; remarkably; memorably.

Persons signally and eminently obliged, yet mistaking of the utmost of their greedy designs in swallowing both gifts and never too, instead of thanks for received kindnesses, have betook themselves to harshness threatening.—South, Sermons.

Signation. s. Sign given; act of betoken-

A horowhon Raptista Porta hath thought too low a signature, to be raised unto a lunar representation.
—Sir T. Browne.

Signature. s. [Fr.; Lat. signatura.]

1. Sign or mark impressed upon anything; stamp; mark.

The brain being well furnished with various traces, signatures, and images, will have a rich treasure always ready to be offered to the soul.—Watts.

That natural and indelible signature of God, which human souls, in their first origin, are supposed to be stamped with, we have no need of in disputes against atheism.—Hentley.

With these exceptions, all political officers, committed before the day on which the royal signature was affixed to the Act, were covered with a general oblivion.—Maccuslay, History of England, ch. xv.

The general herd of the Della Crusians may be safely set down as having been mere blatant blockheads. Of some of the tedious signatures quoted by Gifford we find no interpretation; such as Arno, Casaria, Julia, &c. Others of the names he mentions are real names.—Craik, History of English Literature, vol. ii. p. 398.

2. Mark upon any matter, particularly upon plants, by which their nature or medicinal use is pointed out; hence, the doctrine of, or the cure by means of, signatures, in old medicine.

All bodies work by the communication of their nature, or by the impression and signatures of their motions: the diffusion of species visible beneath to participate more of the former, and the species visible of the latter.—Baron, Natural and Experimental History.

Some plants bear a very evident signature of their nature and use.—Dr. H. More, Antidote against Atheism.

Seek out for plants, and signatures, To quack of universal cures.
Bulwer, Indubitas, lib. i. 320.

3. Proof drawn from marks.

The most desirable piece of decayed nature are curiously wrought with evident signatures of divine wisdom.—Glaucille.

Some rely on certain marks and signatures of their election, and others on their belonging to some particular church or sect.—Ergers.

4. In Printing. Some letter or figure to distinguish different sheets.

Signature. v. n. Mark out.

Those who by the order of Providence and situation of life, have been signatured to intellectual professions.—Chayne, Essay on Regimen, p. 30. (Ord MS.)

Signaturist. s. One who holds the doctrine of signatures.

Signaturists seldom omit what the ancients delivered, drawing into inference received distinctions.
—Sir T. Browne.

Signer. s. One who signs.

Signet. s. [Fr.] Seal commonly used for the seal-mannid of a king.

He said, What pledge shall I give thee? And she said, Thy signet, and thy bracelets, and thy staff that is in thine hand.—Genesis, xxviii. 18.

I've been bold To them to use your signet and your name.

Shakespeare, Titus of Athens, ii. 2.

Here is the hand and seal of the duke: you know the character, I doubt not, and the signet is not strange to you.—Id., Measure for Measure, iv. 2.

He delivered him his private signet.—Kueller, History of the Turks.

Pred of my life my royal signet made.
Dryden, Aurengzebe, i. 1.

Used adjectively.

The impress of a signet ring.—Ayliffe, Paragon Juris Canonici.

Significance. s. Meaning; import.

If he declares he intends it for the honour of another, he takes away by his words the significance of his action.—Bishop Stillingfleet.

Significancy. s.

1. Power of signifying; meaning.

Speaking is a sensible expression of the notions of the mind by discriminations of utterances of voice, used as signs, having by consent several determinate significancies.—Hobbes.

2. Force; energy; power of impressing the mind.

The clearness of conception and expression, the boldness maintained to majesty, the significancy and sound of words, not strained into bombast, must escape our transient view upon the theatre.—Dryden.

I have been admiring the wonderful significancy

of that word persecution, and what various interpretations it hath acquired.—Swift.

3. Importance; moment; consequence.

How fatal would such a distinction have proved in former reigns, when many a circumstance of less significancy has been construed into an overt act of high treason?—Addison.

Significant. adj.

1. Expressive of something beyond the external mark.

2. Betokening; standing as a sign of something.

It was well said of Plotinus, that the stars were significant, but not efficient.—Sir W. Raleigh.

3. Expressive or representative in an eminent degree; forcible to impress the intended meaning.

Whereas it may be objected, that to add to religious duties such rites and ceremonies as are significant, is to institute new mercuries.—Hobbes, Ecclesiastical Polity.

Common life is full of this kind of significant expressions, by knocking, beckoning, frowning, and pointing; and dumb persons are sagacious in the use of them.—Hobbes, Elements of Speech.

The Romans joined both devices, to make the emblem the more significant; as, indeed, they could not too much extend the learning and military virtues of this emperor.—Addison.

'Political religion.'—In Professor Donald Stewart's first Dissertation on the Progress of Philosophy, I find this singular and significant term.—I. Horatio, Characteristics of English Literature.

4. Important; momentous.

Significant. s.

1. That which expresses something beyond the external mark.

Since you are tongue-tied, and so loth to speak, In dumb significants proclaim your thoughts.
Shakespeare, Henry VI. Part I. li. 4.

My books command me to lay bare

The secret that art bent on keeping:

Here, must a high attest be given;

What bridegroom was for her ordained by heaven:

And in my glass significants there are

Of things that may to gladness turn this weeping.
Wordsworth, Egyptian Maid.

2. Token; that which stands as a sign of something.

An erect and forward stature, a large breast, neat and pliant joints, and the like, may be good significants of health, of strength, or vigour; but are very barren arguments of wit.—W. Wotton, On the Education of Children.

Significantly. adv. In a significant manner; with force of expression.

Christianity is known in Scripture by no name so significantly as by the simplicity of the Gospel.—South, Sermons.

Signification. s.

1. Act of making known by signs.

A lie is properly a species of injunctive, and a violation of the right of that person to whom the false speech is directed; for all speaking, or signification of one's mind, implies an act or address of one man to another.—South, Sermons.

Another circumstance worthy of note in this session is a signification, through the speaker, of her majesty's pleasure that no bills concerning religion should be received, unless they should be first considered and approved by the clergy, and requiring to see certain bills touching rites and ceremonies that had been read in the house.—Hallam, Constitutional History of England, ch. x.

2. Meaning expressed by a sign or word.

Brute animals make divers notions to have several significations, to call, warn, cherish, and threaten.—Hobbes.

Significative. adj.

1. Betokening by an early sign.

The holy symbols or signs are not barely significative, but what by divine institution they represent and testify unto our souls, in truly and certainly delivered unto us.—Breuerand.

2. Forcible; strongly expressive.

Neither in the degrees of kindred they were destitute of significative words; for whom we call grandfather, they called calidfather; whom we call grand-grandfather, they called thirdfather.—Cassius, Remains.

Significatively. adv. In a significative manner; so as to betoken by an external sign.

This sentence must either be taken tragically, that bread may be the body of Christ significatively; or else it is plainly absurd and impossible.—Archbishop Usher, Answer to the Jesuit Malone, p. 38.

Significator. s. Significatory.

They are principal significators of manners.—Barley, Anatomy of Melancholy, p. 100.

See whether the significators in her horoscope agree with him.—Ibid., p. 684.

Significatory. s. That which signifies or betokens.

There is a double significatory of the spirit, a word and a sign.—Jeremy Taylor.

Signify. v. n. [Fr. signifier; Lat. significo.]

1. Declare by some token or sign; sometimes simply to declare.

Stephens, signify. I pray you,

Within the house your mistress is at hand.

Shakespeare, Merchant of Venice, v. 1.

The maid from that ill omen turn'd her eyes . . .

Nor knew what signified the boding sign.

But found the powers displeased, and fear'd the wrath divine.

Dryden, Palamon and Arcite, iii. 261.

Those parts of nature, into which the chaos was divided, they signified by dark and obscure images;

as the night, tartarus, and oceanus.—T. Burnet, Theory of the Earth.

2. Mean; express.

Life's but a walking shadow; a poor player,

That struts and frets his hour upon the stage,

And then is heard no more! It is a tale

Told by an idiot, full of sound and fury,

Signifying nothing! Shakespeare, Macbeth, v. 5.

By Scripture, authority, and all ecclesiastical writers, it is constantly appropriated to Saturday, the day of the Jews' Sabbath, and but of late years used to signify the Lord's day.—Nelson.

3. Import; weigh: (seldom used except interrogatively, 'What signifies?') or with much, little, or nothing.

Though he that sins frequently, and repeats frequently, gives reason to believe his repentance before God signify nothing, yet that is nothing to us.

—Jeremy Taylor.

What signifies the splendour of courts, considering the slavish attendances that go along with it?

—Sir R. L. Knollys.

If the first of these fail, the power of Adam, were it never so great, will signify nothing to the present societies in the world.—Locke.

What signifies the people's consent in making and repealing laws, if the person who administers

both be the same?—Swift.

4. Make known; declare.

He sent and signified it by his angel unto John.—

Revelation, i. 1.

I'll to the king, and signify to him,

That thus I have resign'd to you my charge.

Shakespeare, Richard III. i. 4.

The government should signify to the prebends of Ireland, that want of silver is not to be remedied.

—Swift.

Signify. v. n. Express meaning with force.

If the words be but comely and signifying,

and the sense gentle, there is juice; but where that wanteth, the language is thin.—B. Jonson.

Signing. verbal abs. Act of one who signs or affixes a signature.

[He] cancell'd an old will and forged a new;

Made wretched at the small expense of signing

With a wet seal and a fresh interlining.

Dryden, Translation of Juvenal, i. 101.

Signior. s. [Italian, signore.] Title of respect, among the Italians: (with the Turks the grand signior is the sultan).

Who is he comes here?—This is signior Antonio.

—Shakespeare, Merchant of Venice, i. 3.

Most potent, grave, and reverend signiors,

My very noble and approved good masters.

Id., Othello, i. 3.

Signiorize. v. a. Exercise dominion over;

subject.

[If] love held me not so enthralled and subject to his laws as he doth, and to the eyes of the ungrateful fair whose name I secretly mutter, then should the eyes of this beautiful dancer, presently signiorize my liberty.—Shelton, Translation of Don Quixote, pt. iii. ch. ii.

Signiorize. v. n. Have dominion.

At the time that He was to come, Judah must lose the scepter, not then to rule or signiorize in Judah.—Lewy, Sermons, p. 171: 1868.

Signiory. s.

1. Lordship; dominion.

At that time

Through all the signiories it was the first,

And Prospero the prime duke.

Shakespeare, Tempest, i. 2.

The earls, their titles, and their signiories,

They must restore again.

Daniel, Civil Wars of York and Lancaster.

My brave progenitors, by valour, seal

Gain'd those high honours, princely signiories,

And proud prerogatives.

Webb.

2. Used by Shakespear for seniority.

If ancient sorrow be most reverend,
Give mine the benefit of signiory.
And let my griefs brow on the upper hand.

Shakespear, Richard III. iv. 4.
Signpost. s. That upon which a sign hangs.
He should stare with them in the presencing
A sign or signpost.

E. Johnson, Chitlins's Conspiracy, iv. 3.
This noble invention of our author's hath been copied by so many signpost dawblers, that now 'tis grown sublime, rather by their want of skill than by the commonness.—Dryden.
Vermon, the butcher Chamberland, Wolfe, Hawke, Prince Ferdinand, Granby, Burgoyne, Keppell, Howe,
Kell and good, have had their time of talk,
And filled their signposts then, like Weller's now.

Byron, Don Juan, l. 2.

Sike. adj. Such. Provincial.

Sike milder bene all missons,
They hearken hills of wrath;
Sike syrie shepherds han we none,
They keepen all the fath.

Spenser, Shepherds' Calendar, July.

Sile. v. a. [Swedish, sila.] Strain, as fresh milk from the cow: a sile-dish = a strainer.
Siled milk is also sometimes another term for skimmed milk. To sile is likewise used for subside, or sink down, from the primary meaning).

Silence. s. [Fr.; Lat. silentium.]

1. State of holding peace; forbearance of speech.

Unto me men gave ear, and waited and kept silence at my counsel.—Job, xlii. 21.
I suffer not a woman to teach, nor to usurp authority over the man, but to be in silence.—
1 Timothy, ii. 12.
First to himself he inward silence broke.

Milton, Paradise Lost, ix. 693.
Speech submissively withdrawn
From rights of subjects, and the poor man's cause,
Then pompous silence reigns, and kills the noisy
Pope.

How all their rage, and even their murmurs cease;
And sacred silence reigns, and universal peace. Id.

2. Habitual taciturnity; not loquacity.

I think the best grace of wit will shortly turn into silence,
And discourse grow commendable in none but parrots. Shakespear, Merchant of Venice, iii. 2.

3. Secrecy.

4. Stillness; not noise.

Hail happy groves, calm and secure retreat
Of sacred silence, rest's eternal seat.
Lord Bacon.

5. Oblivion; obscurity.

Nameless in dark oblivion let them dwell;
Far strength from truth divided, and from just,
Humble, brought merits but dispraise
And ignominy; yet to glory aspire,
Vain-glory, and through ignominy seeks fame;
Therefore eternal silence be their doom.

Milton, Paradise Lost, vi. 380.

Silence. interj. Authoritative restraint of speech.

Sir, have pity;
I'll be his surety.—Silence! one word more Shall make me chide thee, if not hate thee.
Shakespear, Tempest, l. 2.

Silence. v. a.

1. Oblige to hold peace; forbid to speak.

We must suggest the people, that to 'a power'
He would have made them mules, silenced their pleaders, and Disproportioned their freedoms.

Shakespear, Coriolanus, ii. 1.
Silence that dreadful bell; it frights the idle
From her propriety.

Id., Othello, ii. 3.
This passed as an oracle, and silenced those that moved the question.—Bacon, History of the Reign of Henry VII.

This would silence all further opposition.—Lord Clarendon, History of the Grand Rebellion.
Since in dark sorrow I my days did spend,
I could not silence my complaints. Sir J. Denham.
Had they duly considered the extent of infinite knowledge and power, these would have silenced their scruples, and they had adored the amazing mystery.—Bopere.

If it please him altogether to silence me, so that I shall not only speak with difficulty, but wholly be disabled to open my mouth to any articulate utterance; yet I hope he will give me grace, even in my thoughts, to praise him.—A Archbishop Wake.

2. Still.

These dying lovers, and their floating sons,
Suspend the light and silence all our griefs. Waller.
The thunderer spoke, nor durst the queen reply;
A reverend horror silenced all the sky.
Pope, Translation of the Iliad, l. 736.

Silent. adj. [Lat. silens, -entis; silo = I am silent.]

1. Not speaking; mute.

O my God, I cry in the day-time, but thou hearest not; and in the night season, and am not silent.—
Psalms, xlii. 2.

Silent, and in thee.

Confounded, long they sat as stricken mute.
Milton, Paradise Lost, ix. 1063.

2. Not talkative; not loquacious.

Ulysses, adds he, was the most eloquent and most silent of men; he knew that a word spoken never wrought so much good as a word concealed.— Broom.

3. Still; having no noise.

Like starry light,
Which, sparkling on the silent waves, does seem more bright.
Spenser, Faerie Queene.

Now is the pleasant time,
The cool, the silent, save where silence yields
To the night-warbling bird.
Milton, Paradise Lost, v. 38.

4. Wanting efficacy.

Second and instrumental causes, together with nature itself, without that operative faculty which God gave them, would become silent, virtuous, and dead.—Sir W. Raleigh, History of the World.

The sun to me is dark,
And silent as the moon,
When she descends the night,
Hid in her vacant interlunar cave.
Milton, Samson Agonistes, 80.

5. Not mentioning.

This new created world, whereof in hell
Fame is not silent. Milton, Paradise Lost, iv. 937.

6. Not making noise or rumour.

The phlegm youth, more studious how to save
His aged sire, now sinking to the grave,
Preferred the power of plants, and silent praise
Of healing arts, before Phlegon's bays.
Dryden, Translation of the Kæcid, xli. 281.

Silentary. s. [Lat. silentarius.]

1. One who is appointed to take care that silence and proper order be kept in court.

2. One who is sworn not to divulge secrets of state.

The emperor afterwards sent his rescript by Eus-tathius, the silentary, again confirming it. Barrow, On the Pope's Supremacy.

Silently. adv. In a silent manner.

1. Without speech.

For me they box, each silently
Demands thy grace, and seems to watch thy eye.
Dryden, State of Innocence, ii. 3.

When with one three nations join to fight,
They silently confess that one more brave.
Id., Anna Mirabilis, xlii.

2. Without noise.

You to a certain victory are led;
Your men all arms' d stand silently within.
Dryden, Indian Emperor, iv. 4.

3. Without mention.

The difficulties remain still, till he can show who is meant by right heir; in all those cases the present possessor hath no son: this he silently passes over.
—Lodge.

Silix. s. [Lat.] Flint.

Silhouette. s. For origin and meaning see extract.

Silhouette is well understood as a black profile.
... Silhouette was minister of state in Fr.
1789: that period was a critical one. ... Silhouette could contrive no other expedient to prevent a national bankruptcy than excessive economy. ...
Portraits were now only profiles of a face, traced by a black pencil on the shadow cast by a candle on white paper. ... Silhouette was driven into retirement, ... but has left his name to describe the most economical sort of portrait, and one as unbecomingly as his own face.—J. Barrow, Curiosities of Literature, Pictorial Nicknames.

Silica. s. See extract.

Silica and Silicon. Silica was till lately ranked among the earths proper; but since the researches of Davy and Berzelius it has been transferred to the chemical class of acids. It constitutes the principal portion of most of the hard stones and minerals which compose the crust of the globe; occurring nearly pure in rock-crystal, quartz, agate, calcedony, flint, &c. Silica or silicic acid may be obtained perfectly pure, and also in the finest state of commutation, by taking the precipitate formed by passing silicated fluoric gas through water, filtering, washing, and igniting it, to expel the last traces of the fluoride of silicon. The powder thus obtained is so light as to be blown away with the least breath of air. ... Silica is composed of 48% silicon, and 52% oxygen.—Ure, Dictionary of Arts, Manufactures, and Mines.

Silicate. s. See extract under Silicon.

Silicious. adj. Consisting of, constituted by, flint or silica.

Silicious earth is often found in a stony form, such as flint or quartz; and still more frequently in that of a very fine sand, such as that whereof glass is made.—Kirwan, On Minerals, p. 11.

Many monosilicates are united with a silicious pellicle, and afford useful materials for stoneware, as the common red. Hawes, Principles of Descriptive and Physiological Geology, pt. ii. ch. vii. § 393.

Silicium. s. See next entry.

Silicon. s. See extract.

Silicates are compounds of silicic acid (silica), with the bases alumina, lime, magnesia, potassa, soda. They constitute the greater part by far of the hard minerals which compose the terrestrial globe.
... Silicon, called also silicium, may be obtained by burning potassium in silicated fluorine gas. The product of the combustion is a brown mass, which on being thrown into water disengages hydrogen with violence, and lets fall a dark liver-brown powder, upon which water exercises no action. This matter is silicon mixed with a salt of difficult solution, which is composed of fluorine, potassium, and silicon. This salt may, however, be removed by a great deal of washing. Ure, Dictionary of Arts, Manufactures, and Mines.

Silk. s. [A.S. sceol; Lat. sericum = belonging to the Seres or Chinese.] Secretion of the Silkworm; thread or tissue thereof.

The worms were hatched that did breed the silk;
And it was dyed in infancy, which the skilful Conserved of maidens' hearts.

Shakespear, Othello, iii. 1.
Let not the creaking of shoes, or rustling of silks, betray thy poor heart to woman.—Id., King Lear, iii. 2.

He caused the shore to be covered with Persian silk for him to tread upon.—Kneller, History of the Turks.

Without the worm, in Persian silks we shine.
Waller.

Silken. adj.

1. Made of silk.

Petter strong madness in a silken thread;
Charmes arise with air, and agency with words.
Shakespear, Much Ado about Nothing, v. 1.

Now will we revel it
With silken coats, and caps, and golden rings.
Id., Twelfth Night, iv. 3.

She weeps, and words addressed seem tears dissolved,
Wetting the borders of her silken veil.
Milton, Samson Agonistes, 729.

2. Soft; tender.

Full many a lady fair, in court full oft Beholding them, him secretly envied,
And wished that two such fans, so silken soft,
And golden fair, her love would her provide.
Spenser.

All the youth of England are on fire,
And silken dalliance in the warslike lies.
Shakespear, Henry V. ii. chorus.

For then the hills with pleasing shades are crowd'd,
And sleep are sweeter on the silken ground.
Dryden.

Dress up virtue in all the beauties of oratory, and you will find the wild passions of men too violent to be restrained by such mild and silken language.
Watts, On the Improvement of the Mind.

Those iron bars (for so I may call them when compared with the silken bars of modern days) were the guardians of the people, and three words of their barbarous Latin, "unless liber homo," were worth all the clauses. Yet their virtues were never tried in a question so important as this. Lord Chatham.

3. Dressed in silk.

Shall a beardless boy,
A rookery, silken wanton, brave our fields,
And flesh his spirit in a warlike idly sword,
Mocking the air with colours idly spread,
And find no check? Shakespear, King John, v. 1.
Every silken cockatrice that has but a page at his heels.—Chalmers, Translation of Ferrand as Love Mischance, p. 51.

Silken. v. a. Make soft or smooth, as silk.

If your sheep are of Silurian breed,
Nightly to house them dry, on fern, or straw, Silkening their fleeces. Dyer, The Fleece.

Silkeness. s. Attribute suggested by Silk y: (silkeness less proper).

1. Softness; effeminacy; pusillanimity.

Sir your silkeness
Clearly mistakes Mercurius and his house,
To think there breathes a spirit bellowing his roof
Subject unto these poor affections
Of undermining envy and distraction,
Bloods only proper to base grovelling minds.
E. Johnson, Postscript.

2. Smoothness.

The claret had no silkeness.—Lord Chesterfield.

Silkman. s. Dealer in silk.

He's indicted to dinner . . . to Master Snoddy's the silkman. — Shakspeare, Henry IV. Part II. ii. 1.

Silkmere. s. Dealer in silk.

Being born without prospect of hereditary riches, he was sent to London in his youth, and placed apprentice to a silk-mercer. — Johnson, Lives of the Poets, Gray.

Silkwearer. s. One whose trade is to weave silken manufactures.

True English late your monstrous paltry arts;
For you are all silk weavers in your hearts.

Dryden, Aurengzebe, epilogue.

Silkworm. s. Caterpillar of the Phalena mori, that spins silk. See extracts.

Grasshoppers eat up the green of whole countries, and silkworms devour leaves swiftly. — Bacon, Natural and Experimental History.

Bread were the banners, and of many hues,
A purple web the silkworms never drew.

Dryden, The Flower and the Leaf, 234.

Animated by a zeal truly patriotic, he serves in France, 1793, engaged in a work of the sort of silk-worms, and dedicated it to the municipal body of Paris, to excite the inhabitants to cultivate mulberry-trees. The work at first produced a strong sensation, and many planted mulberry-trees in the vicinity of Paris; but as they were not yet used to raise and manage the silk-worms, they reaped nothing but their trouble for their pains. — L. Herold, Capabilities of Literature, Introduction of Exotic Plants and Fruits.

The silkworm . . . is subject to four metamorphoses. The egg sends forth a caterpillar . . . which having acquired its full size . . . begins to discharge . . . old secretion, in the form of pulpy thin filaments, . . . which harden in the air. These threads are instinctively coiled in an oval nest round itself, called a cocoon, which serves as a defence against living enemies and changes of temperature. — Ure, Dictionary of Arts, Manufactures, and Mines.

Silky. adj.

1. Like silk.

In silky folds each nervous limb disguise, Shenstone, Elegies, xviii.

2. Soft; tender.

The several graces and elegancies of music, the soft and silky touches, the nimble transitions and delicate closes. — Smith, Portrait of Old Age, p. 134; 1650.

Silky soft

Favonius breathes the still softer.

Young, Night Thoughts, night ii.

Sill. s. [A.S. syl.]

1. Timber or stone at the foot of the door.

He can scarce lift his leg over a sill. — Burton, Anatomy of Melancholy, p. 350.

The farmer's goose, who in the stable
Has fed without restraint or trouble, Grown fat with corn and sitting still,
Can scarce get off her bare-door sill.

Swift, Progress of Poetry.

2. Bottom piece in a window frame.

3. Shafts of a waggon, thills.

Sillabub. s. [slubber; slubber up a sillabub (Halliwell's Provincial Dictionary).] Milk beaten with sugar.

She takes her meal rubbed pill, and now
She trips to milk the sand-reel cow;
Where, for some staid foot-tall swain,
John strokes a sillabub or twain.

Wotton.

By some rich farmer's wife and sister dressed,
Might be resembled to a sick man's dream,
Where all ideas huddling run so fast,
That sillabubs come first, and says the last.

King

Silly. adj. In a silly manner; simply; foolishly.

I wonder much, what thou and I Did till we loved? were we and wean'd till then,
But suck'd on childish pleasures silly?
Or slumber'd we in the seven sleepers' den? — Donne.

We are caught as silly as the bird in the net. — Sir R. L. Estrange.

Do, do, look silly, great redoubt! 'tis a decent melancholy after an absolute defeat. — Dryden, Spanish Friar.

Silliness. s. Attribute suggested by Silly; simplicity; weakness; harmless folly.

The silliness of the person does not derogate from the dignity of his character. — Sir R. L. Estrange.

'Tis very easy to sift and toss this blue thought which would afford good diversion; for, besides its own silliness, it contradicts all the rest, and spoils the whole crumple of the book. — Bentley, Philodilectus Lipiensis, § 22.

Silly. adj. [A.S. selig.]

1. Harmless; innocent; inoffensive; plain; artless: (in German, the current sense is happy).

A silly man, in simple words forsworn.

Spenser, Faerie Queen.

There was a fourth man in a silly habit.

Shakspeare, Cymbeline, v. 3.

2. Weak; helpless.

After long storms,
In dread of death and dangerous slumey,
With which my silly bark was tossed more,
I do at length desecrate the happy shores.

Spenser.

3. Foolish; witless.

Perhaps their loves, or else the sheep,
Woe all that did their silly thoughts so busy keep.

Milton, Tale on the Nabobs, vi.

The meanest subjects ensure the actions of the greatest prince; the silliest servants, of the wisest master. — Sir W. Temple.

I have no dissent at living here; besides what arises from a silly spirit of liberty, which I resolve to throw off. — Swift.

Sillyhow. s. [silly in the sense of sealy, and head.] Cmil; membrane that covers the head of the fish considered, especially by sailors, as a sign of luck.

Great . . . its raised of the membranous covering called the sillyhow, sometimes found about the heads of children upon their birth. — Sir T. Browne, Vulgar Errors.

Silt. s. [sile = noise.] Fine mixture of clay and sand common in alluvial districts.

Several trees of oak and fir stand in firm earth below the moor, near Thorney, in all probability covered by inundation, and the silt and morish earth exaggerated upon them. — Sir M. Hale.
In long process of time, the silt and sands shall so choke and shallow the sea in and about it. — Sir T. Browne, Miscellanies, p. 190.

Used adjectively, as in 'A silt road.'

Silt. r. a. Clog with silt: (generally with up).

Both [canoes] would become silted up on the floor of the estuary. — Geddie, Geological Quarterly Journal, vol. xviii, p. 22.

Sitting. verbal abn. Process by which anything, as a harbour, an estuary, or some singular piece of water, is clogged with silt: (with up).

In this case, . . . the conversion of the sea into land has . . . been referred to the sitting up of the estuaries, and not to the upheaval. — Sir C. Lyell, Geological Evidence of the Antiquity of Man, ch. iii.

Silvan. adj. [Lat. silva = wood.] Woody; full of woods.

Between two rows of rocks, a silvan scene
Appears above, and groves for ever green.

Dryden, Translation of the Æneid, l. 233.

Silver. s. [A.S. seolfer.]

1. White and hard metal, next in weight to platinum and gold.

A murmur on't! I took this for silver. — Shakspeare, Coriolanus, l. 2.

2. Anything of soft splendour.

Phyllis, piteous of her plight
In slumber closed her silly, streaming eyes.

Pope, Translation of the Odyssey.

3. Money made of silver.

Not a holiday had there but would give a piece of silver. — Shakspeare, Tempest, ii. 2.

Silver. adj.

1. Made of silver.

Put my cap, the silver cap, into the sack's mouth of the youngster. — Geoffrey, Chaucer, liv. 2.

As the first element in a compound.

Hence had the mistress Dian her dread bow, Fair silver-shuffled queen. — Milton, Comus, 441.
Of all the race of silver-winged then
Was none more favourable, nor more fair,
Than Charion. — Spenser, Faerie Queen.

2. White like silver.

Old Silphidry, shame to thy silver hair,
Thou mad misleader of thy brain-sick son.
Shakspeare, Henry VI. Part II. v. 1.
Others on silver lakes and rivers bathed
Their downy breast. — Milton, Paradise Lost, vii. 437.

3. Having a pale lustre.

So sweet a kiss the golden sun gives not
To these fresh morning drops upon the rose,
As thy eye beams, when their fresh rays have smote.
The night of dew that on my cheeks down flows;
Nor shines the silver moon one half so bright,
Through the transparent bosom of the dew
As doth thy face through tears of mine give light.

Shakspeare, Love's Labour's lost, iv. 3.

4. Soft of voice; soft in sound: (this phrase is Italian, voce argentina).

From all their groves, which with the heavenly
Of their sweet instruments were wont to sound,

And the hollow hills, from which their silver voices
Were wont redoubled echoes to rebound,
Did now rebound with tumult but useful cries,
And yelling shrieks thrown up into the skies.

Spenser.

It is my love that calls upon my name,
How silver sweet sound lovers' tongues by night
Like softest music to attending ears.

Shakspeare, Romeo and Juliet, ii. 2.

The shilling reared itself upon its edge, and turning the face towards me, opened its mouth; and in a soft silver sound gave me the following account of his life and adventures. — Tatler, no. 210.

5. Soft; gentle; quiet.

The whyles his lord in silver slumber lay,
Like as the evening star adorn'd with dewy ray.

Spenser, Faerie Queen.

Me no such cares nor combrous thoughts offend,
No eases my mind a unmoved quiet grieve;
But all the night in silver sleep I spend.

Ibid.

Be born with a silver spoon in one's mouth.
Be born under favourable circumstances;
be born to good fortune: (as, 'Some are born with a silver spoon and some with a wooden ladle').

I must have been born with a silver spoon in my mouth, I am sure, to have ever come across Peck-mill. And here have I fallen again into my usual good-luck with the new pupil! — Dickens, Martin Chuzzlewit, ch. vi.

Silver. r. a.

1. Cover superficially with silver; plate with silver.

There be fools alive, I wis,
Silver'd o'er, and so was this.

Shakspeare, Merchant of Venice, ii. 2.

The splendour of silver is more pleasing to some eyes than that of gold; as in cloth of silver, and silver'd rapiers. — Bacon.
Silvering will enlure and canker more than gilding.

Id.

A gilder shewed me a ring silver'd over with mercurial fumes, which he was then to restore to its native yellow. — Boyle.

2. Adorn with mild lustre.

Here retired the sinking billows sleep,
And smiling calmness silver'd o'er the deep.

Pope.

Silver Fir. [two words.] Species of the fir; Abies pectinata.

The fir Theophrastus distinguisheth into male and female; the latter is softer timber than the male; it is also a taller and fairer tree; and this is probably the silver fir. — Bishop Berkeley, Siris, § 27.

Strassburg turpentine is obtained from Abies pectinata (Pinus picea of Linnaeus), our silver fir. — Linnaeus, Vegetable Kingdom.

Silverbeater. s. One who foliates silver.

Silverbeaters elude the finest calx, as that which is most extensive under the hammer. — Boyle.

Silverling. s. Silver coin

Where there were a thousand vines at a thousand silverlings, it shall be for briars and thorns. — Lucish, vii. 23.

Silverly. adv. With the appearance of silver.

Let me wipe off this honourable dew,
That silverly doth progress on thy cheeks.

Shakspeare, King John, v. 2.

Silversmith. s. One who works in silver.

Inventing a silversmith, which made shirres for Diana, brought me small pain to the craftsman. — Idem, xxix. 24.

Silvery. adj. Besprinkled with silver.

A critty stone, with small sparks of a white silvery tale in it. — Warton, On Fossils.

Of all the emerald's race whose silvery wing
Waves to the rapid scyphs of the spring,
Once brightest shined this child of heat and air.

Pope, Dunciad, iv. 421.

Simagré. s. [Fr. simagré.] Grinace: (used by Dryden, but not adopted).

The Cyclops . . . felt the force of love, . . .
Assumed the softness of a lover's air;
Now with a crooked side his beard he sneaks,
And now the staid stern scowl of his cheeks
Now in the crystal stream he looks, to try
His simagres, and rolls his glaring eye.

Dryden, Translation from Ovid, Story of Asia, Polydorus and Galatea.

Simagres [is] a very mouth, or filthy face, the countenance of a jester or clown in a play, made to provoke laughter; also, an hypocritical look. — Colgrice.

Simar. s. [L. Lat. sumarra.] Sacklike robe in which the victims of the Inquisition were burned; robe like it.

The ladies dress'd in rich simars were seen,
Of Eridonius slain, flower'd with white and green.

Dryden, The Flower and the Leaf, 341.
Vests, perukes, tunicks, simarra. — Bishop Parker, Reproof of the Hebraical Transgression, p. 100.

In the Spanish form.

The habits, wherever these miserable persons were vested, were no less capable of striking horror and pity into the beholders; as well the living persons, as statues, born a simarra of grey stuff, all painted over with devils, flames, &c.—Harrison, Translation of the History of the Inquisition of Goa, ch. xvi.

simian, adj. [Lat. simius = ape.] Having the character of an ape.

It is now admitted that the difference between the brain of the highest races of man and that of the lowest, though less in degree, are of the same order as those which separate the human from the simian brain; and the same rule holds good in respect to the shape of the skull. . . . The brain in somewhat less voluminous on the average in the lower races of mankind, its convolutions rather less complicated, and those of the two hemispheres more asymmetrical, in all which points an approach is made to the simian type.—Sir C. Lyell, Geological Evidences of the Antiquity of Man.

simious, adj. Apelike.

similar, adj. [Fr. similaire; Lat. similis]

1. Homogeneous; having one part like another; uniform.

Minerals appear to the eye to be perfectly similar, as metals; or at least to consist but of two or three distinct ingredients, as elements. Boyle.

2. Resembling; having resemblance.

The laws of Euclid, relative to those matters, were the original and exemplar from whence those similar or parallel laws of Scotland were derived.—Sir M. Hale, History of the Common Law of England.

Similar honours had been paid, more than six centuries earlier, by Urban the Second to Godfrey of Hamilton, Maccarty, Critical and Historical Essays, Frederic the Great.

similarity, s. Likeness; uniformity.

The blood and chyle are mixed, and by attrition attenuated; by which the mixture acquires a greater degree of fluidity and similarity, or homogeneity of parts.—Arbuthnot.

similarly, adv. With resemblance; without difference; in the same manner.

The two pictures of the same object are formed upon points of the retina which are not similarly situated.—Reid, Inquiry into the human Mind.

This human substance is gradually lost at one end in a very thin cuticle; and, at the other end, is also similarly lost in the membranous bag or true stomach.—Hunter.

simile, s. [Lat.; neuter, meaning like thing, or object, of similis = like.] Comparison by which anything is illustrated or aggrandized.

Their rhimes,
Full of protest, of oath, and big compare,
Want similes.

Shakespeare, Troilus and Cressida, iii. 1.
Laurence skip'd me, like his greyhound,
Which runs himself, and catches for his master.—
A good swift simile, but something curish.

Id., Twelfth of the Shrew, v. 2.

In argument,
Similes are like songs in love;
They much describe, they nothing prove.

Prior, Alma, iii. 311.
Poets, to give a loose to a warm fancy, not only expatiate in their similes, but introduce them too frequently.—Garth.

Similitudo, s. [Fr.; Lat. similitudo.]

1. Likeness; resemblance.

Similitudo of substance would cause attraction, where the body is wholly free from the motion of gravity; for then lead would draw lead.—Newton, Natural and Experimental History.

Our immortal souls, while righteous, are by God himself beautified with the title of his own image and similitudo.—Sir W. Raleigh.

Let us make man in our image, man
In our similitudo. Milton, Paradise Lost, vii. 519.
Similitudo to the Deity was not regarded in the things they gave divine worship to, and looked on as symbols of the god they worshipped.—Bishop Stillingfleet.

If we compare the picture of a man, drawn at the years of seventeen, with that of the same person at the years of three score, hardly the least trace or similitudo of one face can be found in the other.—Smith, Sermons.

Fate some future hard shall join
In and similitudo of grief to mine,
Condemn'd whole years in silence to depreca,
And huge charms he must behold no more.

Pope, Rapes to Abolard.

2. Comparison; simile.

Plainness, in the first of his tractates, by arduous similitudo, shows us the force of education.—Watson.

Tasso, in his similitudo, never departed from the woods; that is, all his comparisons were taken from the country.—Dryden.

Similitudinary, adj. Denoting resemblance or comparison.

It is similitudinary.—Coke upon Littleton.

Our Saviour chose this similitudinary way to express our union with himself.—Dr. Potter, Christianity, p. 44: 1693.

Simmer, v. n. [from the sound.] Boil gently; boil with a gentle hissing: (in the first extract spelt with b).

Their vital heat and moisture may always not only simmer in our sluggish temper, but sometimes boil up higher, and seeth over; the fire of life being more than ordinarily kindled upon some emergent occasion.—Dr. H. More, Antidote against Atheism.

Place a vessel in warm sand, increasing the heat by degrees, till the spirit simmer or boil a little.—Boyle.

Simnel, s. [N. Fr. simenel; L. Lat. simnel-lus.] Kind of sweet bread or cake; cracknel.

Sodden bread, which he called simnel or cracknel, he verily in wholesome.—Bulwer, Government of Health: 1693.

Simónias, s. One who buys or sells in the church.

So many simoniacs and intruders have ruled, as about fifty of your popes top her.—Bishop Fleetwood, Letters, p. 482.

If the bishop alleges that the person presented in a simoniacal, or unlearned, they are to be referred to trial.—Aplice, Patergon Jarvis Canonist.

Simoniacal, adj. Guilty of buying or selling ecclesiastical preferment.

St. Ambrose found fault with simoniacal representations in his days.—Sir M. Scapula, Poesy, p. 215.

Add to your criminals the simoniacal ladies, who seduce the sacred order into the difficulty of breaking their truth.—Spectator.

Simoniacally, adv. In a simoniacal manner; with the guilt of simony.

Benefices . . . disposed of, if not simoniacally, yet at least unworthily.—Bishop Burnet, History of his Own Time.

Simónias, adj. Simoniacal: (this latter being the commoner term).

Deliver us from the oppression of a simoniacal degrading clergy.—Milton, Canonicall rudiments touching the Radical Means to remove Heretics out of the Church.

Simony, s. [Fr. simonie; Lat. simonia, from Simon Magnus.] Buying or selling church preferment.

One that by suggestion
Tied all the kingdom; simony was fair play,
His own opinion was his law.

Shakespeare, Henry VIII, iv. 2.
Many papers remain in private hands, of which one is of simony; and I wish the world might see it, that it might undervalue some patrons, who think they have discovered that great trust to God and man, if they take no money for a living, though it may be parted with for other ends less justifiable.—Wotton, Life of Bishop Sanderson.

No simony nor simoniac is known in
There works the bee, no honey for the drone.

Garth.

In the plural, meaning a simoniacal act.

The king's council, if not the king, returned the ungracious answer, 'We have already suffered too much from the simonies and simonies of Rome; we do not want the Pope to pillage us.'—Milman, History of Latin Christianity, b. x. ch. v.

Simons, adj. [Lat. simus = sunbaked.] Depressed.

In the convex or simons part of the liver, I discover a hollow, long, and membranous substance, of a yellow colour without, and lined with choler and gall within.—Sir P. Broun, Vulgar Errors, p. 108.

Simper, v. n. [from simper.] Smile; generally to smile foolishly.

'My dear Mr. Chuzzlewit,' simpered Merry, 'as to light-headedness, there never was such a feather as a head as mine. It's a perfect balloon, I declare! You never did, you know!'

Dickens, Martin Chuzzlewit, ch. xxi.

[To simper, or begin to smile, is probably from a comparison of the movement, creeping over the features to that which shows itself on the surface of water beginning to boil.—Wedgwood, Dictionary of English Etymology.]

Simper, s. Smile; generally a foolish smile.

The wit at his elbow stared him in the face, with no bewitching grin, that the whistler relaxed his fibres into a kind of simper, and at length burst out into an open laugh.—Johnson, Spectator.

High on a gorgeous seat that for outshine
Henley's gilt tub, or Fleckno's Irish throne . . .
Great Olber sat; the proud Parmasian sweet,
The comelious simper, and the jealous leer,
Mix on his look.

Pope, Dunciad, ii. 1.

Simperer, s. One who simpers.

A simperer, that a court affords.

Strife, Imitation of Juvenal, p. 11.

Simpering, part. adj. Smiling in a simper.

Let then the fair one beautifully cry,
In Masque's loose hair and lifted eye,
Or dress in series of sweet Cecilia's shine,
With simpering angels, pulchre, and leaps divine.

Pope, Moral Essays, ii. 11.

Simpering, verbal abs. Act of one who simpers.

A made countenance about her mouth between simpering and smiling, her head bowed somewhat down, seemed to languish with over much idleness.—Sir P. Sidney.

I charge you, O men, for the love you bear to women, as I perceive by your simpering none of you hate them, to like as much as pleases them.—Shakespeare, As you like it, epilogue.

Simperingly, adv. In a simpering manner; with a foolish smile.

Why looks neat Charis all so simperingly?
Marton, Scourge of Villany, iii. 9.

Simple, adj. [Fr.; Lat. simplex.]

1. Plain; artless; unskilled; undesigning; sincere; harmless.

Were it not to satisfy the minds of the simple sort of men, these nice curiosities are not worthy the labour which we bestow to answer them.—Hooker, Ecclesiastical Polity.

They meet upon the way
A simple husbandman in earnest array.

Spenser, Mother Hubbard's Tale.

I am a simple woman, much too weak
To oppose your cunning.

Shakespeare, Henry VIII, ii. 4.

O Ethelinda,
My heart was made to fit and pair with thine,
Simple and plain, and fraught with artless tenderness.

Rice.

In simple manners all the secret lies;
Be kind and virtuous, you'll be best and wise.

Young, Love of Fame, v. 501.

2. Uncompounded; unmingled; single; only one; plain; not complicated.

To make the compound pass for the rich metal simple, is an adulteration or counterfeiting.—Bacon, Novum philosophia signifies single, but vulgarly foolish.—Halle.

Among substances some are called simple, some compound, whether taken in a philosophical or vulgar sense. If we take simple and compound in a vulgar sense, then all these are simple substances which are generally esteemed uniform in their nature; so every herb is called a simple, and every metal a mineral; though the chymist perhaps may find in his several elements in each of them.—Lee, Logic.

Let Newton, pure intelligence, whom God
To mortals lent, to trace his laudable works,
From laws, sublimely simple, speak thy fame
In all philosophy.

Thomson, Seasons, Summer.

3. Silly; not wise; not cunning.

The simple believeth every word; but the prudent man looketh well to his going.—Proverbs, xiv. 15.

Simple tales too many show you
My sevil, complaisance to Clod.

Prior, Alma, iii. 406.

Simple, s. [Fr.; Lat. simplex.] Single ingredient in a medicine; drug; (popularly used for an herb).

Of simples in these groves that grow,
We'll learn the perfect skill;
The nature of each herb to know,
Which cures, and which can kill.

Drayton, Cynthia.

Our foster nurse of nature is reason,
Too which he lacks; that to provoke in him,
Are many simples operative, whose power
Will close the eye of anguish.

Shakespeare, King Lear, iv. 4.

He would see his brethren scrip,
And show us simples of a thousand names,
Telling their strange and vigorous faculties.

Milton, Comus, 624.

What virtue is in this remedy lies in the simple itself, as it comes over from the Indies.—Sir H. Taylor.

Around its entries nodding poppies grow,
And all ead simples that sweet rest bestow;
Night from the plants their sleep virtue drains,
And passing, sheds it on the silent plains.

Dryden, Translation from Ovid, House of Sleep.

Medicine is mine: what herbs and simples grow
In fields and forests, all their power I know.

Id., Story of Daphne.

(See, also, under Simpleton.)

Simple, v. n. Gather simples.

As once the flaming bear he chased,
Lascivious Circe well the youth surveyed,
As simples on the flowery hills he strays.

Garth, Translation from Ovid, Pleas and Canons.

Simple-minded, adj. Having a simple, unskilled, and artless mind.

[They.] bending off their sanctimonious eyes,
Take homage of the simple-minded throng.
Athena, Pleasures of Imagination, v. iii.
The weak and simple-minded part of mankind (which is by far the most numerous) could never be secure of their possessions.—Sir W. Blackstone.

Simpleness, s. Attribute suggested by Simple; quality of being simple.

I will hear that play:
For never anything can be amies,
When simpleness and duty tender it.
Shakespeare, Midsummer-Night's Dream, v. 1.
Such perfect elements may be found in these four known bodies that we call pure ones; for they are least compounded, and approach most to the simpleness of the elements.—Sir K. Digby.

Simpler, s. Simplist; barbarist. Rare.
An English botanist will not have such satisfaction in shewing it to a simpler.—Barrington, Knap.

Simpless, s. [Fr. simplex.] Simplicity;
silliness; folly. Obsolete.
Their words were not so muchy were,
Such simpleness might them shend,
They been yoked in purple and pall,
They reign and rule over all.
Spenser, Shepherd's Calendar.

Simpleton, s. Silly mortal; trifter; foolish fellow: (condemned by Johnson as a low word).

A country farmer sent his man to look after an ox: the simpleton went hunting up and down.—*Sir
R. L'Estrange*.

Those letters may prove a discredit, as having as mercenary scribbles, or curious simpletons, can make it.—Pope.

'I trust that he may receive aid from that woman who has certainly strange skill in simpletons.' And over simpletons, captain, said his friend, 'in which class I must even put you down, if you think more on this subject.'—Sir W. Scott, The Pirate, ch. xxii.
'So it is,' cried Tiger, kissing his hand in honour of the sex. 'You're quite right. Sweet, silly, fluttering little simpletons.'—Dickens, Martin Chuzzlewit,
ch. xvii.

Simplifician, s. Undesigning, unskilled person: (opposed to politician, one of deep contrivance).

Sometimes the varied simplificians are most lucky,
the wisest politicians least, especially where orders are unobserved.—4 children's Account, The Thicket, or Moharion of Charles I., p. 41: 1661.

Simplicity, s. [Lat. simplicitas; Fr. simplicité.]

1. Plainness; artlessness; not subtlety; not cunning; not deceit.

The sweet-minded Philodæa was in their degree of well-doing, to whom the not knowing of evil serveth for a ground of virtue, and hold their inward powers in better form, with an unspotted simplicity, than many who rather cunningly seek to know what goodness is, then willingly take unto themselves the following devil. Sir P. Sidney.
They keep the evenness simplicity of ancient times.—Hooker, Ecclesiastical Polity.

In low simplicity,
He lends out money gratis, and brings down
The rule of usance.

Shakespeare, Merchant of Venice, i. 3.
Marquis Dorset, a man for his harmless simplicity, neither disliked nor much regarded, was created duke.—Sir J. Heywood.

Susanna sleeps
At wisdom's feast, and in simplicity
Resigns her charge. Milton, Paradise Lost, iii. 680.
Of manners gentle, of affections mild;
In wit a man, simplicity a child.
Pope, Epitaph on Gay.

2. Plainness; not subtlety; not abstruseness.

Those enter into farther speculations herein, which is the itch of curiosity, and content not themselves with the simplicity of that doctrine, within which this church hath contained herself.—
Hammond, On Fundamentals.

3. Plainness; not finery.

They represent our poet, when he left Mantua for Rome, dressed in his best habit, too fine for the place whence he came, and yet retaining part of its simplicity.—Dryden.

4. Singleness; not composition; state of being uncompounded.

Mandrakes afford a purgative unpleasant odour in the hot or cold, discoverable in their simplicity and mixture. Sir T. Browne, Vulgar Errours.

We are led to conceive that great machine of the world to have been once in a state of greater simplicity than it now is, as to conceive a watch once in its first and simple materials.—Burnet.

5. Weakness; silliness.
Many that know what they should do, would nevertheless dissemble it, and to excuse themselves, pretend ignorance and simplicity, which now they cannot.—Hooker, Ecclesiastical Polity.

How long, ye simple ones, will ye love simplicity, and the scornful delight in their scornful, and fools hate knowledge?—Proverbs, i. 23.

Simplification, s. Act of reducing to simplicity, or uncompounded state.

This simplification of the principles of language renders them less agreeable to the ear.—A. Smith, On the Formation of Language.

Simplify, v. a. [Fr. simplifier.] Render plain; bring back to simplicity.

Philosophers have generally advised men to shun needless occupations, as the certain impediments of a good and happy life; they bid us endeavour to simplify ourselves, or to get into a condition requiring of us the least that can be to do.—Barrow, Sermons, vol. ii. serm. xxiv.

It is necessary that the music be such as will not perplex or bewilder the general congregation;
but so simplified, that the supplications and thankgivings, then expressed vocally and in musical strains, may both be distinctly heard, and clearly understood.—Mason, Three Essays on Church Music, p. 22.

Simplist, s. One skilled in simples. Rare.
A plant so unlike a rose, it hath been mistaken
by some good simplists for anemone.—*Sir T.
Browne, Vulgar Errours*.

Simply, adv. In a simple manner.

1. Without art; without subtlety; plainly;
artlessly.

Accomplishing great things by things seem'd weak;
Subverting worldly strong and worldly wise,
By simply weak. Milton, Paradise Lost, xii. 567.

2. Of itself; without addition.
This question about the changing of laws, con-cerneth only such laws as are positive, and do make that now good or evil, by being commanded or for-bidden, which otherwise of itself were not simply the one or the other.—Hooker, Ecclesiastical Polity.

3. Merely; solely.

Under man, no creature in the world is capable of felicity and bliss; because their chiefest perfection consisteth in that which is best for them, but not in that which is simply best, no ours doth.—Hooker, Ecclesiastical Polity.

I will eat and drink, and sleep as soft
As captain shall; simply the thing I am
Shall make me live.

Shakespeare, All's well that ends well, iv. 3.
To say, or to do ought with memory and imitation,
no purpose or respect should sooner move us, than simply the love of God and of mankind.—
Milton.

4. Foolishly; sillily.

Simulacra, s. [Lat. simulacrum.] Image,
Rare.

Phidias made of ivory the simulacra or image of Jupiter. Sir T. Elyot, Governour, fo. 22. b.

Simular, s. One who counterfeiteth.

Hide thee, thou bloody hand,
Thou perjured, and that simular of virtue,
Thou art incestuous. Shakespeare, King Lear, iii. 2.

Simulate, part. adj. Feigned; pretended.

They had covered a simulate clergy.—Bale, Acts of English Voluntas, pt. ii. L. 2. v. 150.

Simulate, v. a. [Lat. simulatus, pass. part. of simulo; simulatio, -onis.] Feign; counterfeit; pretend; put on the guise of anything as opposed to disguise: (opposed, also, more especially to dissimulate).

The first smooth Caesar's arts caress'd
Merit and virtue, simulating me.

Thomson, Liberty, pt. iii.
I have known many young fellows, who, at the first setting out into the world, have simulated a passion which they did not feel.—Lord Chesterfield.

Simulation, s. That part of hypocrisy which pretends that to be that which is not; the concealment of what is being dissimulation.

'Quod non est simul, dissimulatio quod est.'
Simulation is a vice rising of a natural falseness, or fearfulness; or of a mind that hath some main faults; which becomes a man must needs disguise, it maketh him practice simulation.—Bacon.

For the unquestionable virtues of her person and mind, he well expressed his love in an act and thus of no simulation towards his end, bequeathing her all his mansion-house, and a power to dispose of his whole personal estate.—Sir H. Wotton.

For distinction sake, a deceiving by word is commonly called a lie; and deceiving by actions, gestures, or behaviour, is called simulation or hypocrisy.

—South, Sermons.
His simulation had... placed him in the unlucky predicament of being ridiculed as a brigand amongst the dissipated youth, with whom the reality of the amour would have given him credit; whilst, on the other hand, he was branded as an inimicable seducer by the injured husband, who was obstinately persuaded of his guilt.—*Sir W.

Scott, The Fortunes of Nigel*.

Simulatory, adj. Consisting in, having the character of, simulation.

We cannot be too jealous of the intentions of an enemy; Jehoram wholly suspects this flight of the Syrians to be but simulatory, and politicks only to draw Israel out of their citie.—Bishop Hall, Famine of Samaria. (Oral MS.)

Simultaneous, adj. [Lat. simultaneus.]
Acting together; existing at the same time.

All that we have need of, in the performing of these, is only God's concurrence, whether previous or simultaneous.—Hammond, Works, iv. 570.

Let not the distinct touches be so simultaneous, but that it may appear where the word begins, and where it ends.—Dalgarno, Deaf and Dumb Man's Tutor, p. 80.

If the parts may all change places at the same time, without any respect of priority or posteriority to each other's motion, why may not bullets, closely crowded in a box, move by a like mutual and simultaneous exchange?—Glanville.

Simultaneously, adv. In a simultaneous manner; at the same time; together; in conjunction.

He introduces the deities of both acting simultaneously.—Shenstone.

Simultry, s. [Lat. simultras = secret hatred.]
Private quarrel.

In things unknown to a man, not to give his opinion... nor seek to get his patron's favour by insinuating himself in the factions of the family; to require after domestic simultras, their sports, or affections.—H. Johnson, Harcourts.

Sin, s. [A.S. sin, syn.]

1. Act against the laws of God; violation of the laws of religion.

Thou knowest, Lord, that I am pure from all sin with man.—Psalm, iii. 14.
It is great sin to swear unto a sin,
But greater sin to keep a sinful oath.

Shakespeare, Henry VI. Part II., v. 1.
But those that sleep, and think not on their sin,
Pinch them. Id., Merry Wives of Windsor, v. 5.

As the first element in a compound.

How hast thou the heart,
Being a divine, a chaste confessor,
A sin-shedder, and my friend professed,
To mangle me with that word bluntness?
Shakespeare, Romeo and Juliet, iii. 3.

Dissonant shame
Of nature's works; honour dishonourable!
Sin-bred! how have ye troubled all mankind!
Milton, Paradise Lost, iv. 313.

I would not sell these pure unblemish'd weeds,
With the rank vapours of the sin-born mould.
Id., Comus, 16.
Is there no means but that a sin-sick land
Should be let blood with such a blistering hand?
Daniel.

2. Habitual negligence of religion.

Sin, death, and hell, have set their marks upon him,
And all their ministers attend on him.
Shakespeare, Richard III., i. 3.

View or virtue chiefly imply the relation of our actions to men in this world; sin and business rather imply their relation to God and the other world.—
H. Ainslie, Logic.

3. Used by Shakespeare emphatically for a man enormously wicked.

Thy ambition,
Thou sinful sin, rob'd this howling land
Of noble Buckingham.
Shakespeare, Henry VIII., iii. 2.

Sin, n. n.

1. Neglect the laws of religion; violate the laws of religion.

Stand in awe, and sin not.—Psalm, iv. 4.
Many also have perished, have erred, and sinned
for women. 1 Kings, ix. 27.

He shall ask, and he shall give him life for them that sin not unto death.—1 John, v. 16.

2. Offend against right.

I am a man,
More sinful against than sinning.
Shakespeare, King Lear, iii. 2.
And who but wishes to invert the laws
Of order, sin against th' eternal curse.
Pope, Essay on Man, l. 128.

Sin, adv. Since.

But whereas Calidore was come in
And you stood for Pastorell to call,
Knowing his voice, although not heard long sin,
She sudden was revived therewithal.
Spenser, Faerie Queene, vi. 11, 44.

Sinapism. s. [Gr. sinapi = mustard.] In Medicine. Mustard poultice.

Derivatives, especially sinapisms, the terribilitates of cathartics, or irritants, may be placed on those or other parts of the surface.—Cyprien, Dictionary of Practical Medicine, Hemorrhoids.

Sine. conj.

1. Because that.

Since the clearest discovery we have of other spirits, besides God and our own souls, are imparted by revelation, the information of them should be taken from thence. Locke.

Since truth and constancy are vain,
Since neither love, nor sense of pain,
Nor force of reason can persuade,
Then let example be obey'd. Granville.

2. From the time that.

Am not I thine ass, upon which thou hast ridden ever since I was thine unto this day?—Numbers, xxi. 30.

He is the most improved mind since you saw him that ever was.—Pope.

Sine. adv. Ago; before this.

About two years since, it so fell out, that he was brought to a great lady's house.—Sir P. Sidney.

Since of the Volvers
Held me in chase, that I was forced to wheel
Three or four miles about, else had I, sir,
Half an hour since, brought my report.

Shakespeare, Coriolanus, i. 6.
A law was made no longer since than the twenty-eighth of Henry the eighth.—Sir J. Davies, Discourse on the State of Ireland.

How many ages since has Virgil writ.
Lord Roscommon.

Sine. prep. After; reckoning from some time past to the time present.

[He] since the morning hour set out from heaven.
Milton, Paradise Lost, vii. 111.

If such a man arise, I have a model by which he may build a nobler poem than any extant since the ancients.—Dryden.

Sine. adj. [Fr.; Lat. sincerus.]

1. Unhurt; unimpaired.

He tried a third, a tough well-chosen spear;
The inviolable body stood sine.
Dryden, Translation from Ovid, Story of Cygnus.

2. Pure; unmingled.

Pardon my tears, 'tis joy which bids them flow;
A joy which never was sine till now;
That which my conquest gave, I could not prize,
Or 'twas imperfect till I saw your eyes. Dryden.

The pleasures of sense best taste sine and pure always, without mixture or alloy, without being distracted in the pursuit, or disquieted in the use of them.—Bishop Atterbury.

Animal substances differ from vegetable, in that being reduced to ashes, they are perfectly insipid, and in that there is no sine acid in any animal juice.—Arbuthnot, On the Nature and Choice of Aliments.

3. Honest; undissembling; uncorrupt.

This top-proud fellow,
Whom from the flow of gall I made not, but
From sine notions by intelligence,
I do know to be corrupt.

Shakespeare, Henry VIII. i. 1.
Nor troubled at these fictions from the earth,
Which your sine care could not prevent;
Forwold so lately what would come to pass,
When first this tempter cross'd the gulf from hell.

Milton, Paradise Lost, iii. 341.
The more sine you are, the better it will fare
With you at the great day of account. In the mean while, give us leave to be sine too, in condemning heartily what we heartily disapprove.—Bishop Waterland.

Through the want of a sine intention of pleasing God, in all our actions, we fall into such irregularities of life as, by the ordinary means of grace, we should have power to avoid.—Law.

Sincerely. adv. In a sincere manner.

1. Perfectly; without alloy.

Joy shall overtake us as a flood,
When everything that is sincerely good
And perfectly divine,
With truth, and peace, and love shall ever shine.
Milton, On the Time, 13.

2. Honestly; without hypocrisy; with purity of heart.

The purer and perfecter our religion is, the worthier effects it hath in them who steadfastly and sincerely embrace it.—Hooker, Ecclesiastical Polity.

That you may, fair lady,
Perceive I speak sincerely, the king's majesty
Does honour to you. Shakespeare, Henry VIII. ii. 3.

In your whole reasoning, keep your mind sincerely intent in the pursuit of truth.—Watts, Logic.

Sincere. s. Attribute suggested by Sincere.

Vol. II.

I rest as far from wrong of sincerity,
As he flies from the practice.

Buttontail and Fletcher, Bloody Brother.
This sincerity and confidence of the king had not the return they deserved.—Sir W. Temple, Introduction to the History of England, p. 250.

Sinciput. s. [Lat.] Fore part of the head, from the forehead to the coronal suture; (opposed to, and not so common as, occiput).

Sincerity. s. Sincereness.

Jesus Christ has purchased for us terms of reconciliation, who will accept of sincerity instead of perfection; but then this sincerity implies our honest endeavours to do our utmost.—Rogers.

Sindon. s. [Lat. sinus.] Fold; wrapper.

Rare.
There were found a book and a letter, both written in fine parchment, and wrapped in sindons of linen.—Beacon.

Sine. s. [Lat. sinus.] In Geometry. See extract.

A right sine, in geometry, is a right line drawn from one end of an arch perpendicularly upon the diameter drawn from the other end of that arch; or it is half the chord of twice the arch. Harris.
Whichever inclination the rays have to the plane of incidence, the sine of the angle of incidence of every ray, considered apart, shall have to the sine of the angle of refraction a constant ratio.—Cheyne, Philosophical Principles.

Sinecure. s. [Lat. sine = without + cura = cure.] Office which has revenue without any employment.

A sinecure is a benefice without cure of souls.—Ayliffe, Parergon Juris Canonici.
No sinecure nor sinecure is known;
There works the bee, no honey for the drone. Garth.

Sinew. s. [A.S. sinu.]

1. Tendon; ligament by which the joints are moved.

The current ro'nd, and we did buffet it
With lusty sinews. Shakespeare, Julius Caesar, i. 2.
Mute and amazed, my hair with terror stood;
Fear shrank my sinews, and congeal'd my blood.
Dryden, Translation of the Æneid, iii. 40.

A sinew crack'd seldom recovers its former strength.—Locke.

2. Applied to whatever gives strength or compactness: (as, 'Money is the sinews of war'; a Latinism. Fuller is often stated to have been the writer who first used it; but it is found in Massinger).

Some other sinews there are, from which that overplus of strength in persuasion doth arise.—Hooker, Ecclesiastical Polity.

In the principal figures of a picture the painter is to employ the sinews of his art, for in them consist the principal beauties of his work.—Dryden, Translation of Deffence's Art of Painting.

3. Muscle or nerve.

The feeling power, which is life's root,
Through every living part itself doth shed
By sinews, which extend from head to foot;
And, like a net, o'er all the body spread.
Sir J. Davies, Immortality of the Soul.

Sinew. v. a. Knit as by sinews. Obsolete.

Ask the lady Bona for thy queen;
No slutt than sinew both these ladies together.
Shakespeare, Henry VI. Part III. ii. 6.

Sinewed. adj.

1. Furnished with sinews.

Strong sinewed was the youth, and big of bone.
Dryden.

2. Strong; firm; vigorous.

He will the rather do it when he sees Ourselves well sinewed to our defence.
Shakespeare, King John, v. 7.

Sinewless. adj. Having no sinews; without power or strength.

All that ever was said against these helps to beauty, seems to many wise women weak and sinewless.—Jeremy Taylor, Artificial Handsomeness, p. 194.

The arm of the church is now short and sinewless.
—Bishop Hall, Remains, p. 424.

Sinewshank. s. In Furriery. See extract.

A horse is said to be sinewshank when he has been overriden, and so fatigued that he becomes emaciated by a stiffness and contraction of the two sinews which are under his belly.—Farrier's Dictionary.

Sinewy. adj.

1. Consisting of sinews.

The sinew thread my brain lets fall
Through every part,
Can tie those parts, and make me one of all. Donne.

2. Strong; nervous; vigorous; forcible.

And for thy vigour,
Bull-bearing Milo his addition yields
To sinewy Ajax.

Shakespeare, Troilus and Cressida, ii. 3.
Worthy fellows, and like to prove
Most sinewy swarriors.

Id., All's well that ends well, ii. 1.
The northern people are braver, fair-complexion'd, Strong, sinewy, and courageous.—Sir M. Hale, Origin of Mankind.

Sinful. adj.

1. Alien from God; not holy; unsanctified.

Drive out the sinful pair,
From hallow'd ground the unholy.
Milton, Paradise Lost, xi. 106.

2. Wicked; not observant of religion; contrary to religion: (used both of persons and things).

Thrice happy man, said then the father grave,
Whose staggering steps thy steady hand doth lead,
And shows the way his sinful soul to save,
Who better can the way to heaven arae? Spenser, Faerie Queen.

The stocks looked upon all passions as sinful defects and irregularities, as so many deviations from right reason, making passion to be only another word for perturbation.—South, Sermons.

Sinfully. adv. In a sinful manner; wickedly; not piously; not according to the ordinance of God.

All this from my remembrance brutish wrath
Sinfully pluck'd, and not a man of you
Had so much grace to put it in my mind.

Shakespeare, Richard III. ii. 1.
The humble and contented man pleases himself Innocently and easily, while the ambitious man attempts to please others sinfully and difficultly and perhaps unsuccessfully too. South, Sermons.

Sinfulness. s. Attribute suggested by Sinful; alienation from God; neglect or violation of the duties of religion; contrariety to religious goodness.

I am sent
To shew thee what shall come in future days
To thee and to thy offspring: good with bad
Expect to hear: superior grace contending
With sinfulness of men.

Milton, Paradise Lost, xi. 354.

Sing. v. n. pret. I sang, or sung; past part. sung. [A.S. singian.]

1. Form the voice to melody; articulate musically.

The morning stars sang together, and all the sons of God shouted for joy.—Job, xxxviii. 7.

Then shall the trees of the wood sing out at the presence of the Lord.—1 Chronicles, xvi. 33.

Orpheus with his lute made trees,
And the mountain tops that freeze,
Bow themselves when he did sing:
To his music plants and flowers
Ever spring, as sun and showers
There had made a lasting spring.

Shakespeare, Henry VIII. iii. 1, song.

Then they for sudden joy did weep,
And I for sorrow sung
That such a king should play beg-jump
And go the fools among.

Id., King Lear, i. 4, song.

They rather had beheld
Discontented numbers, pester'd street,
Than see
Our tradesmen singing in their shops, and going
About their functions friendly.

Id., Coriolanus, iv. 6.
As she danced a roundelay she sung
In honour of the laurel ever young.

Dryden, The Flower and the Leaf, 102.

2. Utter sweet sounds inarticulately.

You will sooner find a bird from singing than from flying. Bozon.

Join voices, all ye birds,
That singing up to heaven gate ascend.

Milton, Paradise Lost, v. 107.
Oh! were I made, by some transcending power,
The captive bird that sings within thy bowers,
Then might my voice thy list'ning ears employ,
And I those kisses he receives enjoy.

Pope, Pastoral, Summer.

3. Make any small or shrill noise.

A man may hear this shower sing in the wind.
Shakespeare, Merry Wives of Windsor, iii. 2.
You louder newsmongers,
Fly with false aim; pierce the still moving air,
That sings with piercing, do not touch my lord.

Id., All's well that ends well, iii. 2.

O'er his head the flying spear
Sung innocent, and spent its force in air. Pope.

4. Tell in poetry.

Mid her east her melancholy wing,
And raised from earth, and saved from passion,
Of human hope by cross event destroy'd,
Of useless wealth and greatness men enjoy'd.
Prior, Solomon, ii. 920.

Sing. v. a.

1. Re-lute or mention in poetry.

All the prophets in their age the thine
Of great Messiah shall sing.
Milton, Paradise Lost, xii. 213.
I sing the man who Judah's sceptre bore,
In that right hand which bore the cross before.
Cowley, Davidicis.

Arms and the man I sing.
Dryden, Translation of the Æneid l. 1.

2. Celebrate; give praises to in verse.

The last, the happiest British king,
Whom thou wilt paint or I shall sing.
Addison, Epistle to Sir Godfrey Kneller.

3. Utter harmoniously.

They that wended us required of us mirth, saying,
Sing us one of the songs of Zion.—Psalm, lxxxvii. 3.
Incess, cabbages, cambricks, lawns, why he sings them over as they were gods and goddesses.—Shakespeare, Winter's Tale, iv. 3.

With what eyes could we Stand in his presence humble, and receive Strict laws imposed to celebrate his throne
With warbled hymns, and to his poetical sing Forced halcyons?—Milton, Paradise Lost, ii. 230.

Sing. v. a. [A. S. sengjan.] Scorch; burn slightly or superficially.

They burnt the doctor, Whose beard they have singed off with brands of fire.
Shakespeare, Comedy of Errors, v. 1.
I singed the toes of an ape through a burning-glass, and he never would endure it after.—Sir E. R. Kesteven.

He seem'd to pass
A rolling fire along, and singe the grass. Dryden.

Sing. s. Slight burn.

Singing. verbal abs. Act of one who sings; superficial burning.

Drake, in the vanishing stile of a soldier, would call this enterprise the singing of the King of Spain's beard.—Bacon.

Singer. s. One who sings: one whose profession or business is to sing.

I eat me men singers and women singers, and the delights of the sons of men.—Archbishop of Salisbury, ii. 8.
To the chief singer on my stringed instruments.—
Habakkuk, iii. 18.

His singing was like an unskilful singer, he kept not time.—Shakespeare, Merry Wives of Windsor,
i. 32.

Thy heart no ruler than the rugged stone,
I might, like Orpheus, with my music rouse men
Melt to compassion: now my trait'rous song
With thee conjures to do the singer wrong.
Waller.

The birds know how to choose their fire;
To peck this fruit they all forebear;
Those cheerful singers know not why
They should make any leader to die.
The Grecian tragedy was at first nothing but a chorus of singers.—Dryden.

Singing. verbal abs. Act of one who sings; modulation of the voice to melody; musical articulation; utterance of sweet sounds.

The time of the singing of birds is come.—Song of Solomon, ii. 12.

My soul is an enchanted boat,
Which like a sleeping swan doth float,
Upon the silver waves of thy sweet singing. Shelley.

Singing-bird. s. Bird having a musical note, as the thrush, the nightingale, the warblers, &c.

Cockbirds amongst singing birds are ever the better singers, because they are more lively.—Bacon, Natural and Experimental History.

Singing-book. s. Book of tunes.

When shall we hear a new set of singing-books, or the viols?—Beaumont and Fletcher, Locrine.

Singingly. adv. In a singing manner, with a kind of tune.

Counterfeit courtiers which slumber it in outward show, making pretty mouths, and marching with a strolling pace like cranes, spotting over their own shoulder, speaking flatteringly, and answering singingly with perfumed gloves under their girdles!—
North, Translation of Philosopher at Court, p. 16.

Singingman. s. One who is employed to sing.

The prince broke thy head for liking [likening] his father to a singing-man of Windsor.—Shakespear, Henry IV. Part II. l. 1.

Singingmaster. s. One who teaches to sing.

He employed an itinerant singingmaster to instruct them rightly in the tunes of the Psalm.—
Addison, Spectator.

Single. adj. [Lat. singulus.]

1. One; not double; not more than one.

The words are clear and easy, and their originals are of single signification without any ambiguity.—
South, Sermons.
Then single John'd with bold Pirithous came,
A single conceived in a double name.
Dryden, Translation from Ovid, Meleager and Alalanta.

High Alps,
A lonely desert, and an empty land,
Shall scarce afford, for useful hours of rest,
A single house to their benighted guest.
Addison, Travels in Italy.

2. Particular; individual.

No single man is born with a right of controuling
the opinions of all the rest.—Pope.
I have not invited the prince over; and I do not believe that a single one of my brethren has done so.—Macaulay, History of England, ch. ix.

3. Not compounded.

As simple ideas are opposed to complex, and single ideas to compound, so propositions are distinguished:
the English language has some advantage above the learned languages, which have no usual word to distinguish single from simple.—Watts.

4. Alone; having no companion; having no assistant.

Servant of God, well hast thou fought
The better fight, who single hast maintain'd Against reviled multitudes the cause
Of truth. Milton, Paradise Lost, vi. 23.
His wisdom such, at once it did appear
Three kingdoms wonder, and three kingdoms fear, Whilst single he stood forth. Sir J. Denham.
On the Earl of Stafford's Trial and Death.
In sweet possession of the fairy place,
Single and conscious to myself alone,
Of pleasures to the excluded world unknown.
Dryden, The Flower and the Leaf, 141.

5. Unmarried.

Is the single man therefore himself no: as a walled town is more worthy than a village, so is the forehead of a married man more honorable than the bare brow of a bachelor.—Shakespeare, As you like it, iii. 3.

Pygmalion . . .
Abhor'd all woman-kind, but most a wife;
So single chose to live, and shunn'd to wed,
Well pleas'd to want a consort of his bed.
Dryden, Translation from Ovid, Story of Pygmalion and the Statue.

Things have opened to me now, so that I might marry almost where I liked, but I wouldn't; I'd keep single. I ought to be single, among the friends
I know.—Dickens, Martin Chuzzlewit, ch. xxviii.

6. Not complicated: not duplicated.

To make flowers double is effected by often removing them into new earth; as, on the contrary, double flowers, by neglecting and not removing, prove single.—Bacon, Natural and Experimental History.

7. Pure; uncorrupt; not double minded; simple.

The light of the body is the eye: if therefore thine eye be single, thy whole body shall be full of light.—
Matthew, vi. 22.

8. That in which one is opposed to one.

He, when his country, threaten'd with alarms,
Shall more than once the Pyriæ temples fright,
Shall kill the Gaulish king in single fight.
Dryden, Translation of the Æneid, vi. 1182.

9. Singular; particular.

He that so considers the praise of men, that he must at no hand part with it, whenever the greatest sine come to be in fashion and credit, (as God knows, many are now-a-days,) he will be sure to commit them, rather than run the danger of being too single and precise.—Whole Duty of Man, Sunday vi.
§ 13.

10. Small: (as applied to beer).

They will scarce
Serve to box single beer.
Beaumont and Fletcher, The Captain.

11. Weak; silly.

Is not your voice broken? your wind short?
your chin double? your wit single!—Shakespeare,
Henry IV. Part II. l. 2.
He utters such single matter in so infantly a voice.—Beaumont and Fletcher, Queen of Corinth.

Commonly used in compounds: (as, 'Single-headed', 'Single-minded').

Single. v. a.

1. Choose out from among others.

I saw him in the battle range about,
And how he single Clifford forth.
Shakespeare, Henry VI. Part III. l. 2.

Every man may have a peculiar favour, which although not perceptible into an is yet secured unto dogs, who hereby can single out their master in the dark.—Bacon.

Thy weapons overtook his words,
And shows they bravely change,
When like a lion, thirsting blood,
Did moody Richard raven,
And made large slaughters where he went,
Till his hand he requir'd,
Whom single, after doubtful sword,
The valorous tyrant died.

Warner, Albion's England.

Doest thou already single me? I thought Gives and the mill had turned thee,
Milton, Samson Agonistes, 1002.

Begin, mischievous boy, to cast about Thy infant eyes, and with a smile thy mother single out.

Dryden, Translation of Virgil, Æneid, iv. 72.
Single the lowliest of the mountains youth,
Ask for his vows, but hope not for his truth.

Prior, Henry and Emma, 361.
'Tis only a salpêtre in Burdell and Foxwick on behalf of the phibitit, replied Jackson, single out one of the slips of paper, and producing a shilling from his waistcoat pocket.—Dickens, Pickwick Papers, ch. xxx.

2. Sequester; withdraw.

Yes, single, with itself, and universally, whether it be in works of nature, or of voluntary choice, I see and any thing done as it should be, if it be wrought by an agent single itself from consort.
—Hooker, Ecclesiastical Polity.

3. Take alone.

Many men there are, than whom nothing is more commendable when they are single; and yet, in society with others, none less fit to answer the duties which are looked for at their hands.—Hooker, Ecclesiastical Polity.

4. Separate.

Hardly they herd, which by good hunters *single*d are.
Sir F. Sidney.

Singleness. s. Attribute suggested by Single.

1. Not duplicity or multiplicity; state of being only one.

Simplicity; sincerity; honest plainness.
It is not the deepness of their knowledge, but the singleness of their belief, which God accepteth.—
Hooker, Ecclesiastical Polity.

Men must be obliged to go through their business with singleness of heart.—Law.

3. State of being alone.

Hear next, that Atholwald's sad widow swears
Never to violate the holy vow
She to his truth first plighted; swears to bear
The sober singleness of widowhood
To her sad grave. Mama, Elfrida.

Singletick. s. Backward.

In all unmanly exercises he excelled every competitor; and as to his feats at singletick, they were famous in several adjoining parishes.—Warren, Nov and Theo.

Singly. adv.

1. Individually; particularly.

If the injured person be not righted, every one of them is wholly guilty of the injustice, and therefore bound to restitution singly and entirely.—Jeremy Taylor, Rule and Exercise of Holy Living.
They tend to the perfection of human nature, and to make men singly and personally good, or tend to the happiness of society.—Archbishop Tillotson Sermons.

2. Only; by himself.

Look thee, 'tis so; thou singly honest man,
Here take: the gods out of my misery
Have sent thee treasure.
Shakespeare, Timon of Athens, iv. 3.

3. Without partners or associates.

Belinda now, whom thirst of fame invites,
Burns to encounter two adventurous knights,
At ombro singly to decide their dream.
Pope, Rape of the Lock, canto iii.

4. Honestly; simply; sincerely.

Singsong. s. Contemptuous expression for bad singing or poetry.

Campanella tells us, that the German and Gallian heresy began with singsong, and is carried on by comedy and tragedy.—Rymer, On Tragedy, p. 34.

It was all indeed mere singsong, or rather (if the expression be not too quaint) sing without song.—
Mason, Three Songs on Church Music, p. 163.

The 'Purple Island' is nothing else than the human body, and the poem is, in fact, for the greater part, a system of anatomy, nearly as minute in its details as if it were a scientific treatise, but wrapping up everything in a fantastic guise of double meaning, so as to produce a laudible singsong of latent ridicules, which are mostly unattainable without the very knowledge they make a pretence of conveying.
—Cruik, History of English Literature, vol. ii. p. 17.

singular. adj. [Fr. singulier; Lat. singularis.]

1. Single; not complex; not compound.

The idea which represents one particular determinate thing is called a singular idea, whether simple, complex, or compound.—Watts.

2. In grammar.

a. In the way of number. Expressing only one; not plural.

If St. Paul's speaking of himself in the first person singular has no various meanings, his use of the first person plural has a greater latitude.—Locke.

b. As applied to terms. Proper, individual, as opposed to general, or common: (a proper name is a singular term).

3. Particular; unexampled.

No singular a salmons
Must have a cause as strange as the effect.
—Sir J. Denham, The Sophy.

4. Having something not common to others: (commonly used in a sense of disapprobation, whether applied to persons or things).

His soul
None seconded, as out of season judged,
Or singular and rash.
—Milton, Paradise Lost, v. 820.

It is very commendable to be singular in any excellency, and religion is the greatest excellency: to be singular in anything that is wise and worthy, is not a dispraise, but a praise.—Archbishop Tillotson.

5. Alone; that of which there is but one.

These busts of the emperors and empresses are all very scarce, and some of them almost singular in their kind.—Addison.

singular. s. Particular; single instance.

We cannot ever run through all singulars.—Dr. H. More, Song of the Soul, iii. 2, 30.

singularist. s. One who affects singularity.

Rare.
To be termed a foppish singleton, doing on speculations, and enslaved to rules; a fastidious lover; a precise lover; a rigid stoker; a domineering saint; a childish singularist, or nonconformist to ordinary rules; a stiff opinionate; an opinionate names, which divert many persons from their duty.
—Burrow, Sermons, vol. iii. serm. xxiv.

singularity. s.

1. Some characters or quality by which one is distinguished from all, or from most others.

Pliny addeth this singularity to that soil, that the second year the very falling down of the weeds yieldeth corn.—Sir W. Raleigh.

2. Anything remarkable; curiosity; uncommon character or form.

Your gallery
Have we pass'd through, and without much content
In many singularities; but we saw not
That which my daughter came to look upon,
The statue of her mother.
—Shakespeare, Winter's Tale, v. 3.

I took notice of this little figure for the singularity of the instrument: it is not unlike a violin.—Addison, Triclinus in Italy.

3. Particular privilege or prerogative.

St. Gregory, being himself a bishop of Rome, and writing against the title of universal bishop, saith thus: None of all my predecessors ever consented to use this ungodly title; no bishop of Rome ever took upon him this name of singularity.—Hooker, Ecclesiastical Polity.

Catholism, which is here attributed unto the church, must be understood in opposition to the legal singularity of the Jewish nation.—Bishop Pearson, Exposition of the Creed.

4. Character or manners different from those of others.

The spirit of singularity in a few ought to give place to public judgment.—Hooker, Ecclesiastical Polity.

Though, according to the practice of the world, it be singular for men thoroughly to live up to the principles of their religion, yet singularity in this matter is a singular commutation of it.—Archbishop Tillotson, Sermons.

Singularity in sin puts it out of fashion, since to be alone in any practice seems to make the judgment of the world against it; but if a course of others is a tacit approbation of that in which they are.—South, Sermons.

5. Celibacy.

Celibate, like the fly in the heart of an apple, dwells in a perpetual sweetness, but sits alone, and is confined and dies in singularity.—Jeremy Taylor, Sermons, v. vii. xvi. (Ord MS.)

singula:ize. v. a. Pick out; select.

singularly. adv. In a singular manner.

1. Particularly; in a manner not common to others.

Solitude and singularity can neither damn nor disgrace him, unless we could suppose it a disgrace to be singularly good.—South, Sermons.

To Gilbert Becket's house came persons both disposed and qualified to cultivate in various ways the extraordinary talents displayed by the youth, who was singularly handsome, and of engaging manners.—Milman, History of Latin Christianity, b. viii. ch. viii.

This system, however, had almost exclusively a military object. Though carried, for a long time, into effect by the singularly rigid spirit of that little commonwealth, it was too extensive an interference with parental authority and natural affection for imitation, even by the most military republics of antiquity, such as the Romans.—Sir G. C. Lewis, On the Influence of Authority in Matters of Opinion, ch. ix.

He was induced, at this crisis, to adopt a policy singularly judicious.—Macaulay, History of England, ch. ii.

2. So as to express the singular number.

Tertullian spoke of bishops by succession, which were singularly run by one.—Bishop Morton, Episcopacy Asserted, p. 121.

singult. s. [Lat. singultus.] Sigh.

So when her tears were stopt from either eye,
Her singults, labibunda, would to make them fly
Out at her oyster-mouth, and issue-thrills wide.
—W. Browne, Britannia's Pastorals, ii. ii. song i.

sinister. adj. [Lat.]

1. Being on the left hand; left; not right; not dexter. (It seems to be used with the accent on the second syllable, at least in the primitive, and on the first in the figurative sense; in this sense the word is chiefly used in heraldry, and, so used, often postpositive; as, 'a bar sinister,' denoting illegitimacy).

My mother's blood
Runs on the dexter cheek, and this sinister
Bonds in my sin's.
—Shakespeare, Troilus and Cressida, iv. 3.

A rib... cranked by nature, bent, as now appears,
More to the part sinister from our breast.
—Milton, Paradise Lost, x. 884.

The spleen is unjustly imputed to sinister the sinister side, which, being dilated, would rather inflame and debilitate it.—Sir T. Browne, Vulgar Errors.

In his sinister hand, instead of ball,
He placed a mighty mug of potent ale.
—Dryden, Macbeth, 120.

2. Bad; perverse; corrupt; deviating from honesty; unfair.

Is it so strange a matter to find a good thing furthered by ill men of a sinister intent and purpose, whose forwardness is not therefore a handle to such as favour the same cause with a better and sincere meaning?—Hooker, Ecclesiastical Polity.

The linked of Chaucer was soon after by sinister means made clean away.—Symonds, The State of Ireland.

When are there more unworthy men chosen to offices, when is there more strife and contention about elections, or when do partial and sinister affections more inter themselves, than when an election is committed to many?—Archbishop Whitgift.

He professes to have received no sinister measure from his judge, but most willingly humbles himself to the determination of justice.—Shakespeare, Measure for Measure, act 2.

Those may be accounted the left hands of courts; persons that are full of middle and sinister tricks and shifts, whereby they pervert the plain courses of courts, and bring justice into oblique lines and labyrinth.—Bacon, Essays.

The just person has given the world an assurance, by the constant tenor of his practices, that he makes a conscience of his ways, and that he seems to condemn and deride the perversity of any sinister or inferior arts.—South, Sermons.

Tript-demons had time to study the appearance, countenance, and dress of those into whose hands he had been thus delivered, and began to think that he had in their looks, and only the general expression of a desperate character, but some sinister intentions directed particularly toward himself.—Sir W. Scott, The Pirate, etc. xxv.

These were advantages; and then he thought—— was his folly, but by it...
That few or none more than himself had caught Court myste... having been himself a minister.
—Green, Don Juan, xlii. 21.

3. Unlucky; inauspicious: (with the accent on the second syllable).

Found it uncin: that is thy net, or none;
What all the several dks that root earth,
Brought forth by night, with a sinister birth,
6 D 2

Pisques, famine, fire, could not reach unto,
The sword, nor sorbets, let thy fury do.
—B. Jonson, Collins's Conspiracy, t. i.

sinister-handed. adj. Left-handed; unlucky.

That which still makes her nirth to thee,
Is our sinister-handed foe.
—Lawrence, Lucinda Posthuma, p. 2.

sinisterly. adv. In a sinister manner; perversely; corruptly; unfairly.

Persons which most sinisterly and maliciously labour.—Injunctions of Queen Elizabeth, sign. D. ii. b. 1530.

It might have been discerned that the scholars' arms and furniture were not borrowed of them, as some had sinisterly suggested.—A. Wood, Annals of the University of Oxford in 1632.

sinistrous. adj.

1. Absurd; perverse; wrongheaded.

Might not your maid have some sinistrous respect to devils?—Sheldon, Miracles of Antichrist, p. 332: 1010.

Many, who are sinistrous unto good actions, are subdexterous unto bad.—Sir T. Browne, Christian Morals, iii. 20.

A knave or fool can do no harm, even by the most sinistrous and absurd choice.—Bentley.

2. Left hand.

The head doth seem to incline unto the left, which happeneth not from its proper side, but because its sinistrous gravity is drawn that way by the great artery.—Sir T. Browne, Vulgar Errors, p. 179. (Ord MS.)

sinistrously. adv. In a sinistrous manner.

1. With a tendency to the left.
Many in their infancy are sinistrously disposed, and divers continue all their life left-handed, and have but weak and imperfect use of the right.—Sir T. Browne, Vulgar Errors.

2. Perversely; absurdly.
Fall not... to accuse, calumniate, backbite, of sinistrously interpret others.—Sir T. Browne, Christian Morals, i. 10.

sink. v. n. [A.S. sincan.] pret. I sunk, uncin:ly sunk; past part. sunk or sunken.

1. Fall down through any medium; not swim; go to the bottom.

As rich with joze,
As is the easy bottom of the sea
With sunk a wreck and sunless treasures.
—Shakespeare, Henry V. i. 2.

In with the river sunk, and with it rose Satan, involved in rising mist; then sunk
Where to he hid.
—Milton, Paradise Lost, ix. 74.

He swims or sinks, or wades, or creeps, or flies.
—Ibid. ii. 936.

The pirate sinks with his ill-gotten gains,
And yielding to another's use remains.
—Dryden.

Supposing severed in a trumpet will rather perish than work, would it not be unwise in the rest to chase to sink together, rather than do more that their share?—Addison, The art of State of the War.

2. Fall gradually.

The arrow went out of his heart, and he sunk down on his chariot.—2 Kings, ix. 24.

Why, how now, cousin? Wherefore sink you down?
—Shakespeare, Much Ado about Nothing, iv. 1.

3. Enter or penetrate into any body.

David put his hand into his knee and took a stone thence and slung it, and smote the Philistine in the forehead, that the stone sunk into his forehead.—1 Samuel, xvii. 49.

4. Lose height; fall to a level.

In vain has nature form'd
Mountains and oceans to oppose his passage;
He bounds o'er all, victorious in his march;
The Alps and Pyreneans sunk before him.
—Addison, Cato.

5. Lose or want prominence.

What were his marks?—A lean cheek, a lank eye and sunken.—Shakespeare, A good like it, iii. 2.

Deep sunk wrinkles on his cheeks she draws;
Sunk are her eyes, and toothless are her jaws.
—Dryden, Translation of the Æneid, vii. 685.

6. Be overwhelmed or depressed.

Our country sinks beneath the yoke;
It weeps, it bleeds:—each new day a sunk
Is added to her wounds.
—Shakespeare, Macbeth, iv. 3.

They errand'd sunk sunk
Beneath thy sentence.
—Milton, Paradise Lost, iii. 931.

But if you this audacious prayer deny,
(A wish, I grant, beyond mortality.)
Then let me sink beneath proud Ære's arms;
And, I once dead, let him possess her charms.
—Dryden, Palamon and Arcite, iii. 175.

7. Be received; be impressed.

Let these sayings sink down into your ears.—Locke, ix. 4.
Truth never sinks into these men's minds, nor gives any tincture to them.—Locke.

8. Decline; decrease; decay.

Then down the precipitous... of time it goes,
And sinks in minutes which in years rose. Dryden.
This republic has been much more powerful than it is at present, as it is still likelier to sink than increase in its dominions.—Addison, Tracels
in Italy.
Let not the fire sink or slacken, but increase—Mortimer, Husbandry.

9. Fall into rest or indolence.

Wouldst thou have me sink away
In pleasing dreams, and lose myself in love,
When every moment Cato's life's at stake?
Addison, Cato.

10. Fall into any state worse than the former;
tend to ruin.

Nor urged the labours of my lord in vain
A sinking empire longer to sustain.
Dryden, Translation of the Æneid, viii. 490.

Sink. v. a. [A.S. sencan.]

1. Put under water; disable from swimming or floating.

A small fleet of English made an hostile invasion, or incursion, upon their havens and roads, and sunk, and carried away ten thousand ton of their great shipping.—Bacon.

2. Delve; make by delving.

At Ram in Germany they dig up iron in the fields by sinking ditches two feet deep, and in the space of ten years the ditches are dug again for iron since produced.—Boyle.
Near Geneva are quarries of freestone, that run under the lake: when the water is at lowest, they make within the borders of it a little square, inclosed within four walls: in this square they sink a pit, and dig for freestone.—Addison.

3. Depress; degrade.

A mighty king I am, an earthly god;
Nations obey my word and wait my nod;
I raise or sink, imprison or set free;
And life or death depends on my decree.
Prior, Solomon, ii. 643.

Trifling painters or sculptors bestow infinite pains upon the most insignificant parts of a figure, till they sink the grandeur of the whole.—Pope, Essay on Homer.

4. Plunge into destruction.

Heaven bear witness,
And if I have a conscience, let it sink me,
Ev'n as the axe falls, if I be not faithful.
Shakespeare, Henry VIII., ii. 1.

Upon my soul, I meant, sink me—I meant to say —so you are going to marry me—sink me.—J. Mor- ton, Sec'ds worth Knowing, iii. 2.

5. Make to fall.

There are no far from raising mountains, that they overturn and fling down some before standing, and undermine others, sinking them into the abyss.—
Woodward.

6. Bring low; diminish in quantity.

When on the banks of an unlook'd-for stream,
You sank the river with repeated draughts,
Who was the last in all your host that thirsted?
Addison, Cato.

7. Crush; overbear; depress.

That Hector was in certainty of death, and depressed with the consciousness of an ill cause: if you will not grant the first of these will sink the spirit of a hero, you'll at least allow the second may.—
Pope.

8. Diminish; degrade.

I mean not that we should sink our stature out of civility, and deny ourselves the proper conveniences of our station, only that we may lay up a superfluous treasure.—Rogers.

9. Make to decline.

Thy cruel and unnatural lust of power
Has sunk thy father more than all his years,
And made him wither in a green old age. Reno.

10. Suppress; conceal; intercept.

If sent with ready money to buy any thing, and you happen to be out of pocket, sink the money, and take up the goods on account.—Swift, Advice to Serena.

sink. n. [A.S. sinc = heap.]

1. Drain; jakes.

Should by the cornorant belly be restrain'd,
Who is the sink o' the body.
Shakespeare, Coriolanus, i. 1.

Bad humours gather to a bile, or as divers kennels flow to one sink, so in short time their numbers increase.—Sir J. Heyward.
Gather more filth than any sink in town.
Granville.

Returning home at night, you'll find the sink
Strike your offended nose with double stink.
Swift, Description of a City Shower.

2. Any place where corruption is gathered.

What sink of monsters, wretches of lost minds,
Mad after change, and desperate in their states,
Wearied and galled with their necessities,
Durst have thought it!

B. Jonson, Catiline's Conspiracy.

Our soul, whose country's heav'n, and God her father,
Into this world, corruption's sink, is sent;
Yet so much in her travail she doth gather,
That she returns home wiser than she went.
Donne.

Sinker. s. In Composition. See Jack Sinker.

Sinless. adj. Exempt from sin.

Led on, yet sinless, with desire to know
What nearer might concern him.
Milton, Paradise Lost, vii. 61.

At that tasted fruit
The sun, as from Thyrsian banquet, turn'd
His course intended: else how had the world
Inhabited, though sinless, more than now
Avoided pinching cold, and scorching heat?
Thid. x. 687.

Infernal ghosts and hellish furies round Environ'd these; some howl'd, some yell'd, some shriek'd,
Some bent at three their fiery darts, while thou Sat'st unappall'd in calm and sinless peace.
Id., Paradise Regain'd, v. 422.

Did God, indeed, insist on a sinless and unerring observance of all this multiplicity of duties; had the Christian dispensation provided no remedy for our lapses, we might cry out with Halseam, Alas, who should live, if God did this?—Rogers.

Sinlessness. s. Attribute suggested by Sinless; exemption from sin.

We may the less admire at his gracious condescensions to those, the sinlessness of whose condition will keep them from turning his vouchsafements into anything but occasions of joy and gratitude.—Boyle, Seraphick Love.

Sinner. s.

1. One at enmity with God; one not truly or religiously good.

I would forget it fast;
But, O! it presses to my memory
Like damned guilty deeds to sinners' minds.
Shakespeare, Romeo and Juliet, iii. 2.

Let the boldest sinner take this one consideration along with him, when he is going to sin, that whether the sin he is about to act ever comes to be pardoned or not, yet, as soon as it is acted, it quite turns the balance, puts his salvation upon the venture, and makes it ten to one odds against him.—South, Ser- mons.

Never consider yourselves as persons that are to be seen, admired, and courted by men; but as poor sinners, that are to save yourselves from the vanities and follies of a miserable world, by humility, devotion, and self-denial.—Law.

2. Offender; criminal.

Here's that which is too weak to be a sinner, homest water, which m'err left man I th' mire.—
Shakespeare, Timon of Athens, i. 2.

Straight o'er the guilty ghost the fury shakes
The sounding whip, and brandishes her snakes,
And the pale sinner with her sisters takes.
Dryden, Translation of the Æneid, vi. 771.

Thither, where sinners may have rest, I go,
Where flames refined in breasts seraphick glow.
Pope, Eloisa to Abelard.

Sinner. v. n. Act the part of a sinner.

Whether the charmer sinner it or saint it,
If wholly grown romantick, I must paint it.
Pope, Moral Essays, ii. 15.

Sinöfening. s. Expiation or sacrifice for sin.

The flesh of the bullock... shalt thou burn without the camp: it is a sinöfening.—Exodus, xxix. 14.

Sinuate. v. a. [Lat. sinuatus, pass. part. of sinuo.] Bend in and out.

Another was very perfect, somewhat less with the margin, and more sinuated. Woodward, On Fossils.

Sinuation. s. Bending in and out.

The human brain is, in proportion to the body, much larger than the brains of brutes, in proportion to their bodies, and fuller of anfractuous or sinuations.
—Sir M. Hale, Originatum of Mankind.

Sinuosity. s. Quality of being sinuous.

There was no need... of any sinuosity or protuberance whatsoever.—Bibliotheca Biblica, i. 255.

Sinuous. adj. [Fr. sinueux, from Lat. sinus.]
Bending in and out.

Try with what disadvantage the voice will be carried in an horn, which is a line arched; or in a trumpet, which is a line retorted; or in some pipe that were sinuous.—Bacon.

At once came forth whatever creeps the ground,
Insect or worm; those waved their limber fans...
These, as a line, their long dimensions drew,
Striking the ground with sinuous trace.
Milton, Paradise Lost, vii. 475.

In the dissections of livers, in the concave or sinuous part of the liver, whereas the gall is usually seated in quadruplets, I discover an hollow, long, membranous substance.—Sir T. Brown.

At the sound he turned,
And saw by the warm light of their own life
Her glowing thubs beneath the sinuous veil
Of woven wind, her outspread arms now bare,
Her dark locks floating in the breath of night,
Her beaming bending eyes, her parted lips
Outstretched, and pale, and quivering feebly.
Shelley, Alastor.

Sinus. s. [Lat.]

1. Bay of the sea; opening of the land.

Plato supposeth his Atlantis to have sunk all into the sea: whether that be true or no, I do not think it impossible that some arms of the sea, or sinuses, might have had such an original.—T. Burnet, Theory of the Earth.

2. Any fold or opening.

There was no sinus or inequality, or perhaps as much as one pure left open, according to this hypothesis of the figure of the ark.—Bibliotheca
Biblica, i. 235.

Sip. v. a. [see Sop.]

1. Drink by small draughts; take at one ap-position of the cup to the mouth no more than the mouth will contain.

Soft yielding minds to water glide away,
And sip with nymphs their elemental tea.
Pope, Rape of the Lock, canto 1.

2. Drink in small quantities.

And may at last my weary age
Find out the peaceful hermitage;
The hairy gown and mossy cell,
Where I may sit and rightly spell
Of every star that heaven doth show,
And every herb that sips the dew.
Milton, 21 Penseroso, 167.

3. Drink out of.

The winged nation wanders through the skies,
And o'er the plains and o'er the forest flies;
Then slooping on the meads and leafy bowers,
They skin the floods and sip the purple flowers.
Dryden, Translation of the Georgics, iv. 73.

Sip. v. n. Drink a small quantity.

[She] raised it to her mouth with sober grace;
Then sipping, offered to the next in place.
Dryden, Translation of the Æneid, i. 1032.

Sip. n. Small draught; as much as the mouth will hold.

Her face o' fire
With labour, and the thing she took to quench it
She would to each one sip.
Shakespeare, Winter's Tale, iv. 3.

One sip of this
Will bathe the drooping spirits in delight,
Beyond the bliss of dreams.
Milton, Comus, 811.

Sipe. v. n. [Provincial German, sippen.]
Ooze or drain out slowly.

Siphon. s. [Lat. siphon, from Gr. σίφων.] Pipe through which liquors are conveyed.

Beneath the incessant weeping of these drains
I see the rocky siphons stretch'd immense,
The mighty reservoirs of harden'd chalk,
Of stiff compacted clay.

We know, ... that Galileo made wrong suppositions respecting the laws of falling bodies, and Mariotte, concerning the motion of water in a siphon, before they hit upon the correct view of these cases.
—Whewell, Novum Organum renovatum.

Sipping. s. Act of oozing.

The sluggishness of the rainy day, the dropping of the caves, the sipping through of the waters into the house, put us in mind of the irksomeness and annoyance of old age.—Granger, On Ecclesiastes,
p. 310: 1821.

Sippet. s. [sup, sip.] Small sop.

Your sweet sippets in widows' houses.—Milton, Reconvalescence, § 24.

On an extremely hot plate put two or three sippets of bread and pour over them some gravy of beef, mutton, or veal, with which no butter has been mixed. Sprinkle a little salt over them.—Mrs Gordon, New Domestic Cookery.

Siquis. s. [Lat. = if any one.] "Advertisement or notification; formerly a bill pasted on a wall, door, or post. (The word is still used, when he who has not been educated at our universities, or having been there educated has been a certain time absent from them, intends to be a candidate for holy orders. He causes notice to be given by the minister to the congregation of the parish where he resides, on some Sunday, of his intention, to enquire if there be any impediment that may be alleged against him; and a certificate is then given accordingly.)

Saw'st thou ever siquis patch'd on Paul's church-door?
Bishop Hall, Satires, ii. 5.

A merry Greek set up a signa late,
To signify a stranger come to town.
Wright, Epigrams, 1620.

Sir. s. [Fr. sire.]

1. Word of respect in addressing persons.

Speak on, sir,
I dare your worst objections: If I blush,
It is to see a nobleman want manners.
Shakespeare, Henry VIII, iii. 2.
But, sir, be sudden in the execution;
Withal obdurate; do not let him plead.
Id., Richard III, i. 3.

Sir king,
This man is better than the man he slew.
Id., Cymbeline, v. 5.

At a banquet the ambassador desired the wise men to deliver every one of them some sentence or paraphrase that he might report to his king, which they did: only one was silent, which the ambassador perceiving, said to him, Sir, let it not displease you;
why do not you say somewhat that I may report?
He answered, Report to your lord, that there are men that can hold their peace.—Shakespeare, Apophthegms.

2. Title of a knight or baronet. (This word was anciently so much held essential, that the Jews in their addresses expressed it in Hebrew characters.)

Sir Horace Vere, his brother, was the principal in the active part.—Bacon, Considerations on War with Spain.

The house impeach him, Coningsby harangued;
The court forsake him, and sir, Balaam haings.
Pope, Moral Essays, iii. 397.

3. Formerly the title of a priest.

Are there not women that would tell as good a tale as the best Sir John? (i. e. Parson).—Harbottle for Faithful Subjects, sign. II. 2.: 1559.
Let me thy tale borrow
For our Sir John to say to-morrow.
Spenser, Shepherd's Calendar, May.

But this good Sir did follow the plain word,
No meddled with their controversy vain:
All his care was, his service well to gain.
Id., Mother Hubbard's Tale.

4. It is sometimes used for man.

I have adventured
To try your taking of a false report which hath Honour'd with confirmation your great judgement,
In the election of a sir so rare.
Shakespeare, Cymbeline, i. 7.

Sire. s. [Fr.; Lat. senior.]

1. Word of respect in addressing the king.

2. Father. Poetical.

He, but a duke, would have his son a king,
And raise his issue like a living sire.
Shakespeare, Henry VI. Part III, ii. 2.
A virgin is his mother, but his sire
The power of the Most High.

And now I leave the true and just supports
Of lord and prince and of honest courts,
Baronial and three thousand's heirs,
Whose sires, great partners in my father's care,
Saluted their young king at Hebron crown'd.
Prior, Solomon, ii. 601.

3. Used in common speech of beasts: (as,
'The horse had a good sire, but a bad dam').

4. Used in composition: (as, 'grand-sire, great-grand-sire').

Sire. v. a. Beget; produce. Rare.

Cowards father cowards, and base things sire the base.
Shakespeare, Cymbeline, iv. 2.

Siren. s. [Lat.: Gr. Sapph.] Goddess who enticed men by singing, and devoured them;
mischievous alluring woman.

O train me not, sweet mermaid, with thy note,
To drown me in thy sister's flood of tear:
Sire, sire, for thyself, and I will do;
Sirens of the silver waves thy golden hairs,
And as a bed lye take thee, and there lie.
Shakespeare, Comedy of Errors, iii. 2.

The duke's servants . . . were hastily directed to search for this tantalizing siren in every direction.
—Sir W. Scott, Percy of the Peak, ch. xxxix.

'Go on, pal' cried Mercy. 'Why, the truth is, my dear,' said Mr. Pecksniff, smiling upon his assembled kindred, 'that I am at a loss for a word. The name of those fabulous animals (pagan, I repeat to say) who used to sing in the water, has quite escaped me'.
Mr. George (Hunalew) suggested 'Swans'. 'No', said Mr. Pecksniff. 'Not swans. Very like swans, too. Thank you.' The nephew with the outline of a countenance, speaking for the first and last time on that occasion, propounded 'Oysters'. 'No', said
Mr. Pecksniff, with his usual urbanity, 'nor oysters.
But by no means unlike oysters; a very excellent idea; thank you; my dear sir, very much. Walti Sirens. Dear me! sirens, of course. I think, I say, that means might be devised of disposing our respected relative to listen to the promptings of nature, and not to the siren-like delusions of art.'—Dickens, Martin Chuzzlewit, ch. iv.

Siren. adj. Alluring; bewitching like a siren.

By the fair insinuating carriage, by the help of the winning address, the siren male or alien, he can inspire poison, whisper in destruction to the soul.—
Hammond, Works, iv. 470.

Sirenian. s. In Zoology Class containing the animals akin to the Manatee (or sea-cow) and Dugong. From their aquatic habits and the formation of their hinder extremities, they have been compared with the Sirens.

Sirenian. adj. Relating to, constituted by,
the order Sirenian.

In . . . [the Sirenian] the hind limbs are absent, as in Cetacea, and the pelvic bones, where best developed, retain the size and shape of the small conditional costal arches. The texture of the bones is denser, the neck, though short, is longer than in the Cetacea, and the vertebrae are distinct; but the chief differences are found in the relative size and structure of the skull, and in the better development of the bones of the pectoral limb, the digits of which are not composed of more than the normal un-mammalian number of phalanges. The known existing representatives of the Sirenian order are the Dugong and the Manatee: the latest extinct form is the edentulous Sirenian, called 'Steller's sea-cow,' last observed in the arctic seas off the shores of Bering's Island: the unknown extinct genus has left its remains in southern Europe.—Owen, Anatomy of Vertebrates, vol. iii. p. 423.

Sirius. s. [Lat.] Dogstar.

Sirius, flashing forth sinister lights
Pale human kind with plague and with dry famine fright.
Dryden, Translation of the Ecceid, x. 362.

Sirloin. s. Loin of beef.

He lost his roast-beef stomach, not being able to touch a sirloin which was served up.—Addison.
It would be ridiculous, indeed, if a spit which is strong enough to turn a sirloin of beef, should not be able to turn a lark.—Swift.

Sirocco. s. [Italian.] South-east wind.

North rush the Levant and the potent winds,
Eurus and Zephyr, with their lateral nois, Sirocco and Libeccio.
Milton, Paradise Lost, x. 704.

Sirrah. s. Word used in addressing persons, generally involving reproach and insult; sometimes with a sort of playfulness, as to children, and formerly to women also, and among friends; and with a kind of hushness to servants.

A syr, there said you well!—Confutation of Nicholas Shaxton, sign. G. l. h.: 1516.
Our virtues we will change after we leave them;
and, sirrah, I have cases of buckram for the nonces.
—Shakespeare, Henry IV. l. 2.
(O, sirrah, to my cell!
Take with you your companions; as you look
To have my pardon, trim it handsomely.

Id., Tempest, v. 1.
Sirrah, I was, go! (Cleopatra to her female servant).—Id., Antony and Cleopatra, v. 2.

Sirrah, why dost not thou marry? [one gentlewoman to another].—De Witt and Fletcher, Knight of Malta.
It runs in the blood of your whole race, sirrah, to hate our family.—Sir R. L. Estlin.

Sir-réverence. s. From Lat. salutis reverentia = saving your reverence, or, saving your presence; and serving us an excuse for the use of an indelicate word; sometimes for the word itself.

Siskin. s. [Provincial German, stischen.]
Bird of the genus Carduelis (siskin).

The siskin, or alder-avine, as it is also called, is a visitor to this country, arriving in flocks from the north in autumn, and comes generally in company with the lesser rumpal, to be hereafter described, many of which also join the summer in high northern latitudes. The siskin appears to be much more plentiful in the north than with us in the south; and there seems to be no doubt that some, perhaps many pairs remain and breed annually in or about the firs and plantations of the northern counties of England and Scotland.—Tarrell, History of British Birds.

Sister. s. [A.S. sweoster.]

1. Woman born of the same parents; correlative to brother.

Her sister began to scold.—Shakespeare, Taming of the Shrew, i. 1.
I have said to corruption, Thou art my father:
to the worm, Thou art my mother and my sister.—
Job, xvii. 14.

2. Woman of the same faith; christian; one of the same nature; human being.

If a brother or a sister be naked, and destitute of food, and one of you say unto them, Depart in peace, be you warmed and filled: notwithstanding you give them not those things which are needful to the body, what doth it profit?—James, ii. 15.

3. Female of the same kind: (see under Weird).

He child the sisters,
When first they put the name of king upon me,
And bade them speak to him.

Shakespeare, Macbeth, iii. 1.
4. In Composition, or adjectival. One of the same kind; one of the same condition.

The women who would rather wrest the laws,
Than let a sister plaintiff lose the cause,
As judges on the bench more gracious are,
And more attentive to brothers of the bar,
Cried one and all, the suppliant should have right:
And to the grandinoe hag adjured the knight.

Dequien, Wife of Bath's Tale, 397.

There grew two olive, closest of the grove,
With roots entwined, and branches interwove:
Alike their leaves, but not alike their smiles
With sister-fents; one fertile, one was wild.

Pope, Translation of the Odyssey, v. 616.

Sister. v. n. Resemble closely.

She . . . with her neck compass
Nature's own shape, of bud, bird, branch or berry.
That even her art sister the natural rose.

Shakespeare, Pericles, v. Gower.

Sister-in-law. s. Husband's or wife's sister.
The sister in law is gone back unto her people:
return thou after thy sister in law.—Ruth, i. 15.

Sisterhood. s.

1. Office or duty of a sister.

She abhor'd
Her proper blood, and left to do the part
Of sisterhood, to do that of a wife.
Daniel, Civil Wars of York and Lancaster, r.

2. Set of sisters.

There is a kind of natural equality in sisterhood.
—Bishop Hall, Remains, p. 497.

3. Number of women of the same order.

I speak
Widow a more strict restraint
Upon the sisterhood, the votaries of Saint Clare.

Shakespeare, Measure for Measure, i. 5.

A woman who flourishes in her innocence, amidst that spite and rancour which prevails among her conspicuous sisterhood, appears more amiable.— Addison, Frecholder.

Sistering. part. adj. Allied; contiguous.
Rare.

A hill whose concave womb reworded
A painful story from a sistering vale.
Shakespeare, Love's Complaint.

Sisterly. adj. Like a sister; becoming u sister.

After much debatement,
My sisterly remembrance ruins honour,
And I did yield to him.

Shakespeare, Measure for Measure, v. 1.

Sit. v. n. pret. sat or sate. [A.S. sittan.]

1. Rest upon the buttocks.

Their wives do sit beside them caroling wail.
Mary, Translation of Virgil.

Aloft, in awful state,
The gull-like hero sate
On his imperial throne. Dryden, Alexander's Feast.

2. Perch.

All new fashions be pleasant to me,
I will have them whether I thrive or I lose,
Now I am frisker, all men on me look,
What should I do but set [sit] cock on the hoop?

Marlowe.
A white thorn in an orchard, that every bird sat
teth upon.—Harnock, vi. 71.

3. Be in a state of rest, or illeness.

Still your brethren go to war, and shall ye sit here?—Numbers, xxxii. 8.
Why sit we here each other viewing idly?

Milton, Paradise Lost, x. 238.

4. Be in any local position.

Plucking the grass to know where sits the wind:
Peering in maps for ports.

Shakespeare, Merchant of Venice, i. 1.

Appointed to sit there had left their charge.

Milton, Paradise Lost, x. 421.

The ships are ready and the wind sits fair.

A. Philp.

5. Rest as a weight or burthen.

Your brother's death, I know, sits at your heart.
Shakespeare, Measure for Measure, v. 1.

When God lets loose upon us a sickness, if we fear to die, then the calamity sits heavy on us.—
Jeremy Taylor.

To lose and fling and to be restless, only calls our sore, and makes the burthen that is upon us sit more uneasy.—Archbishop Tillotson.

Fear, the last of ills, remain'd behind,
And horror heavy sate on every mind.
Dryden, Theodora and Hecuba, 329.

Our whole endeavour is intent to get rid of the present evil, as the first necessary condition to our happiness. Nothing, as we passionately think, can equal the unwhimsiness that sits so heavy upon us.—Locke.

6. Settle; abide.

That this new comer, shame,
There sit not and reproach us.

When Thetis blush'd, in purple not her own,
And leav'd her face the breathing winds were blown;
A sudden silence sat upon the sea,
And sweeping oars, with struggling, urg'd their way.—Dryden.

He . . . to the cold advanced his pace;
Pale honour sat on such Arcadian face.
Id., Translation of the Æneid, l. 634.

7. Brood; incubate.

As the partridge sitteth on eggs, and hatcheth them not, so he that setteth riches, and not by right, shall leave them in the midst of his days.—Jeremiah, xvii. 11.

The egg laid and severed from the body of the hen, hath no more nourishment from the hen; but only a quickening heat when she sitteth.—Bacon, Natural and Experimental History.

She mistakes a piece of chalk for an egg, and sits upon it in the same manner.—Addison, Spectator.

8. Be adjusted, with respect to fitness or unfitness, decorum or indecorum.

How ill it sits with that same silver head
In vain to mock!

By what by-paths and indirect crook'd ways
I met this crown; and I myself know well,
How troublesome it sits upon my head;
To thee it shall descend with better quiet.—Shakespeare, Henry IV. Part II. iv. 1.

Your preferring that to all other considerations does, in the eyes of all men, sit well upon you.—Locke.

9. Be placed in order to be painted.

One is under no more obligation to extol every thing he finds in the author he translates, than a painter is to make every face that sits to him handsome.—Gaith.

10. Be in any situation or condition.

As a farmer cannot husband his ground so well, if he sit at a great rent; so the merchant cannot drive his trade so well, if he sit at great usury.—Bacon.

Suppose all the church-lands were thrown up to the laity; would the tenants sit easier in their rents than now?—Swift.

11. Be convened, as an assembly of a public or authoritative kind; hold a session: (as, 'The parliament sits'; 'The last general council sat at Trent').

It was not, the haughty cavalier (Sir Edward Seymour) said, his wish that the Parliament should withhold from the Crown the means of carrying on the government. But was there indeed a Parliament? Were there not on the benches many men who had, as all the world knew, no right to sit there, many men whose elections were tainted by corruption, many men forced by intimidation or reluctant voters, and many men returned by corporations which had no real existence?—Marsden, History of England, ch. vi.

12. Be placed at the table.

Who there is greater, he that sitteth at meat or he that serveth?—Luke, xvi. 27.

13. Exercise authority.

The judgement shall sit, and they shall take away his dominion.—Isaiah, vii. 23.
Born to the golden Chersonese, or where The Persian in Erebus sits.

One council sits upon life and death, the other is for taxes, and a third for the distributions of justice.—Addison.

Assert, ye fair ones, who in judgement sit,
Your ancient empire over love and wit.—Renee.

14. Be in any solemn assembly as a member.

They had made for themselves a senate-house, wherein three hundred and twenty men sat in council daily.—1 Maccabees, viii. 15.

Sit down.

a. Down is little more than emphatical.

at sit down to meat. Luke, xvi. 7.
When we sit down to our meal, we need not suspect the intrusion of armed unwelcome guests.—Dr. H. More, Essay of Christian Piety.

b. Begin a siege.

Nor would the enemy have sat down before it, till they had done their business in all other places.—Lord Clarendon, History of the Grand Rebellion.

c. Rest; cease as satisfied.

Here we cannot sit down, but still proceed in our search, and look higher for a support.—Rogers.

d. Settle; fix abide.

From besides Timus, the Goths, Huns, and Getae sat down.—Spenser.

Sit out. Be without engagement or employment.

They are glad, rather than sit out, to play very small game, and to make use of arguments such as will not prove a bare impoliteness.—Bishop Sanderson, Judgement.

Sit up.

a. Rise from lying to sitting.

He that was dead, sat up, and began to speak.—Luke, vii. 15.

b. Watch; not go to bed.

Be courtly,
And entertain, and feast, sit up, and revel;
Call all the great, the fair and spirited dames
Of Rome about thee, and begin a fashion
Of freedom. B. Jonson, Catiline's Conspiracy, l. 3.
Summ sit up into at winter fires, and sit
Their sharp-edged tools.
May, Translation of Virgil, Georgics.
Most children shorten that time by sitting up with the company at night.—Locke.

Most children shorten that time by sitting up with the company at night.—Locke.

Sit. v. a.

1. Keep the seat upon.

Hardly the muse can sit the head-strong horse,
Nor would she, if she could, check his impetuous force.
Prior, Carmen Seculare for the Year 1700.

2. With self, me, thee, &c. Place on a seat.

The happiest youth, viewing his progress through,
What perils past, what crosses to ensue,
Would shut the book, and sit him down and die.
Shakespeare, Henry IV. Part II. iii. 1.

He came to visit us, and calling for a chair, sat down, and we sat down with him.—Bacon.

Thus fenc'd,
But not at rest or ease of mind,
They sat them down to weep.
Milton, Paradise Lost, ix. 1110.

Be settled to do business: (this is rather neuter).

The court was sat before Sir Isaac came, but the justice made room for the old knight at the head of them.—Addison, Spectator.

Sits. s. [Lat. situs.] Situation; local position.

The city's self he strongly fortifies,
Three sides by sits it well defended has.

Manifold streams of goodly navigable rivers, as so many chains, environed the same site and temple.—Bacon.

If we consider the heart in its constituent parts, we shall find nothing singular, but what is in any muscle. 'Tis only the site and posture of their several parts that give it the form and functions of a heart.—Boyle.

Before my view appeared a structure fair,
Its site uncertain if on earth or air.
Pope, Temple of Fame.

Sited. ulf. Placed; situated.

It satd was in fruitful joys of old,
And girt in with two walls on either side.
S. Chaucer, Fourie Queen.

Above were sited the manquers, over whose heads he devised two eminent figures.—B. Jonson, Masques at Court.

Sitfast. s. In Farriery. Hard knob growing under the saddle.

Sith. conj. Since; seeing that. Obsolete.

What ceremony of adours used about the bodies of the dead! after which custom, notwithstanding, sith it was their custom, our Lord was contented that his own most precious blood should be imbued.—Hooker, Ecclesiastical Polity.

I thank you for this profit, and from hence
I'll love no friend, sith love breeds such offence.
Shakespeare, Othello, iii. 3.

Sithe. s. [A.S. sið = time.] Time. Obsolete.

A thousand sithes I curse that careful houre.
Spenser, Shepheard's Calendar, January.
The English man thereat was wondrous blith,
And humbly thanked him a thousand sith.
Id., Fourie Queen.

Sithe. s. [A.S. siðe.] Mowing implement.

Let fame, that all hunt after in their lives,
Live register'd upon our brazen tombs;
And then grace us in the discourse of death;
When, spite of envious envious time,
The endeavour of this present breath may buy
That honour, which shall late his scythe's keen edge,
And make us heirs of all eternity.
Shakespeare, Love's Labour's Lost, l. 1.

Time is commonly drawn upon tombs, in pagans, and other places, an old man, bald, winged, with a sithe and an hour-glass.—Peckham, the Dracoe.
There ride impetuous race both storm and frost;
And there, as master of this murtherous brood,
Swinging a huge sithe, stands impartial death,
With endless business almost out of breath.
Crahaue.

While the milk-maid singeth blithe,
And the mower whets his sithe.

Milton, L'Allegro, 63.

The brassen trumpets kindle rage no more
But useless lancers into sithes shall bend,
And the broad fashien in a plough-share end.

Pope, Messiah, iii.

Graved o'er their seats the form of Time was found,
His sithe reversed, and both his pinions bound.

Id., Temple of Fame.

But, Stella, say, what evil tongue
Repeats you are no longer young?
That Time sits with his sithe to mow
Where erst sat Cupid with his bow.

Swift.

Sithe. v. a. Cut down with a sithe.

Time had not sithed all that youth begun.
Shakespeare, Lover's Complaint.

Sithed. part. ulf. Armed with sithes.

(sithen) scythed iron car,
That, swiftly whirling through the walks of war, Dash'd Roman blood, and crush'd the forlorn thruves.

T. Warton, Verses at Montauban: 1750.

Sitheman. s. One who uses a sithe; mower.

Reapers cutting down corn in every field;
sithemen labouring hard.—Peckham, Garden of Elohu, sig. F. ii. b. 157.

The sleeping sitheman, that doth barb the field,
Thou mak'st with sickle; in night all creature sleep.
Marsden, Malcontent.

Sithence. adv. Since; in latter times.

This over-running and wasting of the realm was the beginning of all the other evils which sithence have afflicted that land.—Spenser, View of the State of Ireland.

Sitter. s.

1. One who sits.

The Turks are great sitters, and seldom walk;
whereby they sweat less, and need bathing more.—Bacon.

2. One who watches, or goes not to bed: (with up).

Not a-bed, ladies? you're good sitters up.
Beaumont and Fletcher, Philaster.

About that time I fell in with some companions of a different order. They were men of hasty spirits, sitters up a-nights, disputants, drunken;
yet seemed to have something noble about them.
—L. Lush, Essays of Elia, Confessions of a Drunkard.

3. Bird that broods.

The oldest hens are reckoned the best sitters; and the youngest the best layers.—Mortimer, Husbandry.

4. One who has his portrait taken; i.e. sits for it.

Sitting. verbal abs.

1. Posture of sitting on a seat.

He cursed him in sitting, in standing, and lying.
Bartholomew, Legend of the Golden Legend.

2. Act of resting on a seat.

Behold their sitting down and their rising up.—Lucan, Pharsalia, iii. 63.

3. Time at which one exhibits himself to a painter.

Few good pictures have been finished at one sitting;
neither can a good play be produced at a heat.
Dryden.

4. Meeting of an assembly.

I'll write you down;
The which shall point you forth at every sitting,
What you must say.

Shakespeare, Winter's Tale, iv. 3.

I wish it may be at that sitting concluded, unless the necessity of the time press it.—Bacon.

He [Lord Mansfield] gave us many hours to the business both of Bane and of sittings as was required for despatching it without unnecessary delay.

—Lord Brougham, Historical Sketches of Sir John during the Reign of George III.

Palace Yard . . . was soon reached; who desired
the cabman to drive her to a street in the Strand, in which was a coffee-house, where during the last weeks of their stay in London, the weary remnants of the National Convention had held their sittings.
—B. Disraeli, Sybil.

5. Course of study uninterrupted.

For the understanding of any one of St. Paul's epistles, I read it all through at one sitting.—Locke.

6. Time for which one sits, as at play, or work, or a visit.

What more than madness reigns,
When one short sitting many hundreds drains!
And not enough is left him to supply
Board-wages, or a footman's levy.
Dryden, Translation of Juvenal, l. 130.

7. Incubation.

Whilst the hen is covering her eggs, the male bird takes his stand upon a neighbouring bough, and answers her with his songs, during the whole time of her sitting.—Addison.

SITUATE. part. adj.

1. Placed with respect to anything else.

He was resolved to choose a war, rather than to have Britain carried by France, being so great and eminent a duchy, and situate so opportunely to annoy England.—Bacon.

Within a trading town they long abide,
Full fairly situate on a haven's side. Dryden.

The eye is a part so artificially composed, and commodiously situate, as nothing can be contrived better for use, ornament, or security.—Ray, On the Wisdom of God manifested in the Works of the Creation.

2. Placed; consisting.

Earth hath this variety from heaven,
Of pleasure situate in hill or dale.
Milton, Paradise Lost, vi. 641.

SITUATION. s.

1. Local respect; position.

Princes Courtial have a palace in a pleasant situation, set off with many beautiful walks.—Addison, Travels in Italy.

2. Condition; state.

Though this is a situation of the greatest ease and tranquillity in human life, yet this is by no means fit to be the subject of all men's petitions to God.—Rogers, Sermons.

3. Temporary state; circumstances: (used of persons in a dramatic scene).

There's a situation for you! there's an heroic group! You see the bullies can't slay Whiskers: he darts, not strike them for fear of their meekness: the meekness darts not kill him because of their meekness: I have them all at a dead lock.—R. B. Sheridan, The Critic, li. 1.

SIX. pr. [A.S.]

1. Numeral name for twice three; one more than five. Notation 6.

2. As a collective name for so many units; in which we may say 'a six,' or 'two sixes;' the number six.

That of six hath many respects in it, not only for the days of the creation, but its natural consideration, as being a perfect number.—Sir T. Browne, Vulgar Errours.

To be at six or seven, or sixes and sevens,
Be in a state of disorder or confusion.

All is uneven,
And everything is left at six and seven.

In 1588, there sat in the town of Rouen a fierce thundering friar, that would set all at six and seven, or at six and five, if you allude to his name.—Bacon.
What hinderer bargain ever was driven,
Or wenger laid at six and seven!

Butler, Hudibras, iii. 1, 517.
John never turned his mother out of doors, in his great sorrow; for his affairs went on at sixes and sevens.—Archbishop.

The goddess would no longer wait;
But, rising from her chair of state,
Left all below at six and seven.
Harnessed her doves, and flew to heaven.
Swift, Cadenus and Vanessa.

SIXFOLD. adj. Six times told.

SIXFOOT. adj. Having a length of six feet.

Nor wilt thou be allowed of all thy land, to have
But the small pittance of a six-foot grave.
Goldsmith, Poems, Paraphrase upon Ecclesiastes.

SIXPENNY. s. Coin, equally six pennies; half

Where have you left the money that I gave you?
Oh! sixpence that I had.

Shakespeare, Comedy of Errors, i. 2.
None scruple now—but this he eased his thought:
I'll now give sixpence where I gave a groat.

Pope, Moral Essays, iii. 345.
I should be glad to drink your honour's health,
Sir,

In gin or beer, if you would give me a sixpence.
Cassius, Tragedy of the Anti-Jacobin, The Noddy Knifgrinder.

SIXPENNY. adj. Worth sixpence.

Slave, dost thou think I am a sixpenny jug?
Frederick, King Cambyses: 1501.

Your sinful, sixpenny mechanics.
R. Johnson, Magnificent Lady, induction.

SIXSCORE. adj. Six times twenty.

Sixscore and five miles it containeth in circuit.—Scudgery.
The crown of Spain hath enlarged the boundaries thereof within this last sixscore years, much more than the Ottomans.—Bacon.

SIXTEEN. pr. Six and ten. Notation 16.

SIXTEENTH. adj. Ordinal of sixteen.

SIXTH. adj. Ordinal of six.

SIXTH. s. Sixth part.

Only the other half would have been a tolerable seat for rational creatures, and five sixths of the whole globe would have been rendered useless.—Chapman, Philosophical Principles.

SIXTHLY. adv. In the sixth place.

Sixthly, living creatures have more diversity of organs than plants.—Bacon.

SIXTIETH. adj. Ordinal of sixty.

Let the appearing circle of the fire be three foot diameter, and the time of one entire circulation of it the sixtieth part of a minute, in a whole day there will be but 86,400 such parties.—Sir K. Digby, Treatise on the Nature of India.

SIXTY. pr. Six times ten. Notation 60.

When the boats were come within sixty yards of the pillar, they found themselves all bound, and could go no farther.—Bacon.

SIZABLE. adj. Of considerable bulk.

The whole was drawn out, and directed into a sizable volume.—Bishop Hurd, Life of Bishop Warburton.

SIXAR. s. Subsidized student at Cambridge, corresponding in grade to the servitors at Oxford: (in extract, second element of a compound).

They make a scramble for degrees:
Masters of all sorts and all ages,
Keepers, sub-sixars, lackys, jacks. Bishop Corbet.

SIXE. s. Number six on a die.

SIXE. s. [Italian, assisa, sisa = anything laid on as plaster.] Glutinous or gelatinous matter used for giving stiffness or consistency to certain textile fabrics, paper, &c.

SIXE. v. a. Cover, besmear, thicken with size.

When we treat of sizing and stiffening.—Sir W. Petty, in Bishop Sprat, History of the Royal Society, p. 201.

SIXE. s. [from assise, from the valuation put upon anything by sitting in judgment over it.]

1. Bulk; quantity of superficies; comparative magnitude.

I have ever cherished my friends,
(Of whom he's chief), with all the size that verily
Would without basing suffer.

Shakespeare, Coriolanus, v. 2.
If any decayed ship be new made, it is more fit to make her a size less than bigger.—Sir W. Raleigh.

The distance judged for shot of every size,
The hunter's touch the pond's round ball expels.

Dryden, Annus Mirabilis, clxxxviii.
Objects near our view are thought greater than those of a larger size, that are more remote.—Locke.

2. Settled quantity: (in the following passage it seems to signify the allowance of the table; whence they say a sizar at Cambridge).

'Tis not in thee
To grudge my pleasures, to cut off my train,
To bandy lucky words, to want my sizes,
And, in conclusion, to oppose the bolt Against my coming in. Shakespeare, King Lear, ii. 4.

3. Figurative bulk; condition.

This agrees too in the contempt of men of a less size and quality.—Sir R. L. Estlin.
They do not consider the difference between elaborate discourses, delivered to princes or parliaments, and a plain sermon, for the middling or lower size of people.—Swift.

SIZE. v. a.

1. Swell; increase the bulk of.

Can you confound to your peevish uncle,
In his full face of love, to be so strict
A niggard to your commons, that you're fain
To size your belly out with shoulder five?
Bosworth and Fletcher, Wit at Six and Seven Weapons.

2. Adjust; arrange according to size.

The forces weigh the grove they carry,
And ere they venture on a stream,
Know how to size themselves and them.

Butler, Hudibras, iii. 1, 672.
Two troops so match'd were never to be found,
Such bodies built for strength, of equal age,
In stature sized.

Dryden, Palamon and Arcite, iii. 567.

There was a statute for dispersing the standard of the exchequer throughout England; thereby to size weights and measures.—Bacon, History of the Reign of Henry VII.

SIZED. adj. Having a particular magnitude.

What my love is, proof hath made you know,
And as my love is sized, my fear is so.
Shakespeare, Hamlet, iii. 2.

In Composition.

That will be a great horse to a Welshman, which is but a small one to a Flemish; leaving from the different breed of their countries, taken several sized ideas, to which they compare their great and their little.—Locke.

SIZEABLE. adj. Reasonably bulky; of just proportion to others.

He should be purged, sweated, vomited, and starved, till he come to a sizeable bulk.—Arbuthnot.

SIZINESS. s. Attribute suggested by SIZY, glutinousness; viscosity.

In rheumatism, the siziness jesses off thick contents in the urine, or glutinous sweats.—Sir J. P. P. P., Præternatural State of the animal Humours.
Cold is capable of producing a siziness and viscosity in the blood. Arbuthnot.

SIZY. adj. Viscous; glutinous.

The blood is sizy, the alkaline salts in the serum producing corrosive concretions.—Arbuthnot, On the Nature and Choice of Aliments.

SKAINSMATE. s. [?] Messmate; companion.

Senry kuave, I am mate of his first-gills;
I am mate of his skainmate.

Shakespeare, Romeo and Juliet, ii. 1.

SKATE. s. Kind of shoe armed with iron for sliding on the ice. See Skate.

I'll buckle my skate, and I'll leap my gate,
And I'll throw, and write, my line
And the woman I worshipp'd in twenty-eight,
I'll worship in twenty-nine. W. M. Praed.

SKATER. s. One who skates.

Nor was it ever known that a lake was covered with ice strong enough to bear a skater.—Johnson, Letter to Mrs. Thrale, Sep. 30: 1773. (Ord MS.).

SKEAN. s. [Gaelic, sgian.] Short sword; knife.

Any man that is disposed to mischief, . . . goes under his mantle privily carry his head-piece, skian, or pistol, to be always in readiness. Spencer, Vicar of the Wakefield.

The Irish did not fail in courage or fierceness, but being only armed with darts or skians, it was rather an execution than a fight upon them.—Bacon, History of the Reign of Henry VII.

A cubit at least the length of their skians.
Swift, Description of an Irish Frost.

SKÉGGER. s. [?] See extract.

Little salmon, called skéggers, are bred of such k salmon that might not go to the sea, and though they abound, yet never thrive to any bigness.—L. Walton, Complete Angler.

SKEIN. s. [N.Fr. es. agne.] Knot of thread or silk wound and doubled.

Why art thou then then exasperate, thou idle humatorial skin of sly'd silk, thou insect of a prudential purse. Shakespeare, Twelfth and Cressida, v. 1.

Our stile should be like a skein of silk, to be found by the right thread, not ravell'd or perplexed. Then all is a knot, a lump.—R. Johnson.

Besides, so lazy a brain as mine is, grown soon weary when it has so entangled a skein as this to unwind.—Sir K. Digby.

SKÉLETON. s. [Gr. σκήλετον.]

1. In Anatomy. Bones of the body preserved together as much as can be in their natural situation; bony framework of the body.

When rattling bones together fly,
From the four corners of the sky;
When sinews o'er the skeletons are spread,
Those clothed with flesh, and life inspires the dead.
Dequén.

Though the patient may from other causes be exceedingly emaciated, and appear as a ghastly skeleton, covered only with a dry skin, yet nothing but the ruin and destruction of the lungs denominates a consumption.—Sir R. Blackmore.

I thought to meet, as late as Heaven might grant, A skeleton, ferocious, tall, and gaunt, Whose loose teeth in their naked sockets shook,
And grinn'd terrible, a Sarbanian look. Harte.

The skeletons of nations were Around that lonely man.

Campbell, The Last Man.

2. Compages of the principal parts.

The great structure itself, and its great integrals, the heavenly and elementary bodies, are framed in such a position and situation, the great skeleton of the world.—Sir M. Hale.

The schemes of any of the arts or sciences may be analyzed in a sort of skeleton, and represented upon tables, with the various dependences of their several parts.—Wallis.

SKÉLETON-KEY. s. Thin light key, filed down, to avoid too great obstruction from the wards of the lock.

This door was usually kept locked; but the lock was of the rule and simple description common to such entrances, and easily opened by a skeleton-key.—Lord Lytton, My Novel, b. 1, ch. vii.

Skelton. s. [German, schelm.] Villain; scoundrel.

Sir Richard Greenvil (in 1648) having deserted to the king at Oxford, they declared him traitor, rascal, villain, and skelton.—Biographia Britannica, 2806.

Skep. s. [A.S. scēp.]

1. Sort of basket, narrow at the bottom, and wide at the top, to fetch corn in.

A pitchfork, a doongfork, were, skep, and a bin. Tusser, Five Hundred Points of good Husbandry.

2. In Scotland, the repositories where the bees lay their honey is called skep.

Skeptical. s. [Gr. σkeptικός.] One who doubts, or pretends to doubt, of everything. (Such is the explanation in the previous editions. At present, the term is less offensive in its application, and often suggests little more than hesitation and caution in the adoption of received opinion; as such it nearly coincides with critical.)

He is a scptick, and darra hardly give credit to his senses. — Bishop Hall, Characters, p. 151; 1604.
Bring the cause into the bar; whose authority none must disdain, and least of all those scpticks in religion. — Dr. H. More, Devoy of Christian Piety.

Nature's extended face, then, scpticks, say, In this wide field of wonders can you find No art? — Sir R. Blackmore.
With too much knowledge for the scpticks's side, With too much weakness for the stoick's pride, He hangs between. — Pope, Essay on Man, ii. 8.
The deontist is sure of every thing, and the scptick believes nothing. — Watts, Logic.

In this word the use and wont, according to which the second consonant is sounded, have been sufficiently influential to retain in the spelling the k, as the equivalent to the Greek κ. In ascetic, the doctrine that that letter must be represented by the Latin c, has exerted an opposite influence, and ascetic is pronounced ascetic. Should uniformity on this point ever be insisted on, it is the precedent of the word under notice which should be adopted.

Skeptical. adj. Doubtful; pretending to universal doubt.

May the Father of mercies confirm the skeptical and wavering minds, and so prevent us, that stand fast, in all our doings, and further us with his continual help. — Bentley.

Skeptically. adv. In a sceptical manner.

There are those who do not abandon themselves to desperate atheism, nor skeptically cast off all care of religion. — Goodman, Winter Evening Conference, pt. iii.

Skepticalness. v. n. Doubt of everything.

You can afford to scepticize, where no one else will so much as hesitate. — Lord Shaftesbury, Morals, pt. iii. § 1.

Skepticism. s. Universal doubt; profession of doubt.

I will, by my natural diffidence and scepticism for a while, to take up that dogmatick way. — Dryden.

Sketch. s. [Fr. esquisse; German, skizze.] Outline; rough draught; first plan.

I intend only what the Dutch painters call a sketch, and not a perfect delineation or draught. — Pelt, Preface to Bishop Barlow's Romances, p. ult.; 1683.

The first sketch of a comedy, called 'The Paradox,' — Dr. Pope, Life of Bishop Word, p. 149; 1687.
I shall not attempt a character of his present majesty, having already given an imperfect sketch of it. — Addison.

As the lightest sketch, if justly traced, Is by ill colouring but the more discoloured, So by false learning is good sense defaced. — Pope, Essay on Criticism, l. 23.

Sketch. v. a.

1. Draw, by tracing the outline.

If a picture is dashed with many glaring colours, the vulgar eye admires it; whereas he judges very judiciously of some admirable design sketched out only with a black pencil, though by the hand of Raphael. — Watts, Logic.

2. Plan, by giving the first or principal notion.

The reader I'll leave in the midst of silence, to contemplate those ideas which I have only sketched, and which every man must finish for himself. — Dryden, Translation of Despreaux's Art of Painting.

Skew. s. In Architecture. See extract.

The term skew is still used in the north for a stone built into the bottom of a gable, or other similar situation, to support the coping above. It appears formerly to have been applied to the stones forming the slopes of the set-offs of battlements, and other projections. Skew-table was probably the course of stone weathered, or sloped, on the top, placed as a coping to the wall. It may perhaps have been applied in the sloping falling commonly used in mediæval architecture over the gable-ends of roofs, where they abut against higher buildings, of which examples are to be seen on the towers of many churches which have had the main roads lowered; or it may be a racking coping formed of solid blocks, with horizontal joints, and built into the walling; a mode of construction which is common in the churches of Normandy. — Glossary of Architecture.

Skew. adj. Oblique; distorted.

Here's a gallantry of speech indeed. . . I remember about the year 1662 many used this skew kind of language. — Brewer, Lingua, D. 7: ed. 1687.

Skew. adv. [Danish, skjævt.] Askew.

Skew. v. a.

1. Look obliquely upon; notice slightly.

Our service Neglected, and look'd lamely on, and skew'd at With a few honourable words. — Beaumont and Fletcher, Loyal Subject.

2. Shape or form in an oblique way.

Windows broad within and narrow without, or skewed and closed. — 1 Kings, vi. 4, margin.

Skew. v. n.

1. Walk obliquely: (still used in some parts of the north).

(Child, you must walk straight, without skewing and shuffling to every step you set. — Sir E. L'Estrange.

2. Look obliquely; squint.

3. Look suspiciously or uncharitably.

Whenever we find ourselves ready to fret at every cross occurrence. . . to slug in our own performances, to skew, at the humilities of others; take we due first of the impatience of our own spirits, and leave it. — Bishop Sanderson, Sermons, serm. xxi, p. 171; 1681.

Skewer. s. [Danish, skjære.] Wooden or iron pin, used to keep meat in form.

Sweetmeats and collars were with skewers prick'd About the sides. — Dryden, Translation of the First Book of the Iliad.

I once may overlook A skewer sent to table by my cook. — King.

From his rug the skewer he takes, And on the stick ten equal notches makes. — Swift.
Send up meat well stuck with skewers, to make it look round; and an iron skewer, when rightly employed, will make it look handsome. — Id., Advice to Servants, Directions to the Cook.

Skewer. v. a. Fasten with skewers.

Skid, or Skidpan. s. [connected with shade, shier, and other words, like Gr. σκιω = I split.] Clog in which a locked wheel fits; slipper.

Skiz. s. [N.Fr. esquis; Lat. scapha.] Small light boat.

If in two skiffs of cork a loadstone and steel be placed within the orb of their activities, the one doth not move, the other stimulating still; but both steer into each other. — Sir T. Browne.

On Garry's cliffs A savage race, by shipwreck fed, Lie waiting for the founder'd skiff, And strip the bodies of the dead. — Swift.

Skiff. v. a. Pass over in a skiff. Rare.

They two have cabin'd In many a dangerous as your a corner, And will want contending; they have skiff Torments, whose roaring tyranny and power 'T' the least of these was dreadful.

— Beaumont and Fletcher, Two Noble Kinsmen.

Skilful. adj. Knowing; qualified with skill; possessing any art; dexterous; able: (in the following examples, used with of, at, and in, before the subject of skill: of seems poetical, at ludicrous, in popular and proper).

His father was a man of Tyre, skilful to work in gold and in silver. — 2 Chronicles, ii. 14.

They shall call the husbandman to mourning, and such as are skilful of lamentation, to wailing. — Amos, v. 16.

Will Valer be skilful at finding out the ridiculous side of a thing, and placing it in a new light? — Tulce.

May, Stella, find you no content, Reflecting on a life well spent? Your skilful hand employ'd to save Despairing wretches from the grave: — Swift.

And then supporting with your store

Those whom you drag'd from death before. — Swift.
Skilfully. adv. In a skilful manner; with skill; with art; with uncommon ability; dexterously.

As soon as he came near me, in its distance, with much fury, but with fury skilfully guided, he ran upon me. — Sir P. Sidney.

Skilfulness. s. Art; ability; dexterousness.

He fed them according to the integrity of his heart, and guided them by the skilfulness of his hands. — Paulus, lxxviii. 72.

Skill. s.

1. Knowledge of any practice or art; readiness in any practice; knowledge; dexterity; artfulness.

Skill in the weapon is nothing without sack. — Shakespeare, Henry VI. Part II. iv. 2.

Oh! nothing profits more Than self-esteem grounded on just and right, Well managed; of that skill the more thou know'st, The more she will acknowledge thou her head.

— Milton, Paradise Lost, viii. 671.
A race unlike the first, and try my skill again. — Dryden, Translation from Ovid, Metamorphoses, b. i.

Phocion the Athenian general, then ambassador from the state, by his great wisdom and skill at negotiations, diverted Alexander from the conquest of Athens, and restored the Athenians to his favour. — Swift.

2. Particular art.

Learned in one skill, and in another kind of learning unskilful. — Hooker, Ecclesiastical Polity.

3. Reason; cause: (this is the very ancient meaning of the word).

You have As little skill to fear, as I have purpose To put you to. — Shakespeare, Winter's Tale, iv. 3.

Skill. v. n. [Norw., skilja = divide, distinguish.]

1. Differ; make difference; interest; matter. Obsolete.

Whether the commandments of God in Scripture be general or special, it skilleth not. — Hooker, Ecclesiastical Polity.
What skills it if a bag of stones or gold? About thy neck do drown thee? raise thy head, Take stars for money; stars not to be told By any art, yet to be purchased. None is so wasteful as the scraping dame; She huseth three for one; her soil, rest, fame. — G. Herbert.

He intending not to make a manner business of it, but a resolute war, without term prebided, until he had recovered France, it skilled not much when he began the war, especially having Calais at his back where he might winter. — Baron.

2. He knowing in; be dexterous at; know how. Obsolete.

They that skill not of so heavenly matter, All that they know not, envy or admire. — Spenser.
There is not any among us that can skill to hew timber like into the Sidonians. — 1 Kings, v. 4.
The overseers of these were such that could skill of instruments of music. — 2 Chronicles, xxxiv. 12.
One man of wisdom, experience, learning, and direction, may judge better in those things that he can skill of, than ten thousand others that be ignorant. — Archbishop Whitgift.

Skill. v. a. Know; understand. Obsolete.

Skill not what it is. — Beaumont and Fletcher, Love's Cure.
That age was so far from skilling down or the fumes, that they were not come up to counterpoint. — Gregory, Posthuma, p. 116.

Skilled. adj. Knowing; dexterous; acquainted with one's subject: (as, 'a skilled workman').

Of these nor skill'd nor students.

— Milton, Paradise Lost, ix. 42.
Moses, in all the Egyptian arts was skilful. When heavenly power that chosen vessel fill'd.

— Sir J. Denham, Progress of Learning.
He must be very little skilled in the world, who thinks that a valiant tongue shall accompany only a good understanding. — Locke.

Skilless. adj. Wanting skill; artless.

Wisdom, farewell, the skilless man's direction.

— Sir P. Sidney, Arcadia, b. iv.
These rude youths, and skilless mimics of the court. — North, Translation of The Philosopher at Court, p. 16; 1675.

Nor have I seen More that I may call men than you: How features are abroad I'm skilless of. — Shakespeare, Tempest, iii. 1.
Jealousy what might befall your travel, Being skilless in these parts; which to a stranger, Unaided and untried, often prove Rough and unpropitious. — Id., Twelfth Night, iii. 3.

skillet. s. [Fr. escuellette.] Small kettle or boiler.

When light-wing'd toys
Of feather'd Cupid foil with wanton dulness
My speculative and offred instruments
Let house-wives make a skillet of my loins.

Shakespeare, Othello, i. 3.

Break all the wax, and in a kettle or skillet set it over a soft fire.—Mortimer, Husbandry.

Skim. v. a.

1. Clear off from the upper part, by passing a vessel a little below the surface.

My son Tom, or his son Mary,
Who hold the plough or skim the dairy
My favorite books and pictures sell.

Prior, Alma, iii. 364.

2. Take by skimming.

She shoots the flying shuttle through the loom,
Or boils in kettles must of wine, and skims
With leaves the drops that overflow the brims.

Dryden, Translation of the Georgics, i. 392.

His principal studies were after the works of Titian whose cream he has skimmed.—Id., Translation of Unfrequent's Art of Painting.

The surface of the sea is covered with its bubbles, while it rises, which they skim off into their boats, and afterwards separate in jugs.—Addison.

Whilome I've seen her skim the cloated cream,
And press from spongy curds the milky stream.

Gay, Shepherd's Week, Friday, v.

3. Brush the surface slightly; pass very near the surface.

Nor seeks in air her humble flight to raise,
Content to skim the surface of the seas.

Dryden, Translation from Ovid, House of Sleep.

The swallow skims the river's watery face.

Id., Translation of the Georgics, i. 520.

A winged eastern blast just skimming over
The ocean's brow, and sinking on the shore.

Prior.

4. Cover superficially. (Improper; perhaps originally skin).

Full in the prince's passage, heaps of sand
And dangerous flats in secret ambush lay,
Where the false tides skim o'er the covert land,
And seamen with undiscerned depths betray.

Dryden, Anna Mirabilis, exil.

Skim. v. n. Pass lightly; glide along.

Thin airy shapes o'er the furrows rise,
A dreadful scene! and skim before his eyes.

Addison.

When Ajax strives some rock's vast weight to throw,
The line too labours, and the words move slow:

Not so when swift Camilla scours the plain,
Flies o'er the unbending corn, and skims along the main.

Pope, Essay on Criticism, ii. 270.

They skim over a science in a very superficial survey, and never lead their disciples into the depths of it.—Watts.

Such as have active spirits, who are ever skimming over the surface of things with a volatile spirit, will fix nothing in their memory.—Id., On the Improvement of the Mind.

Skim. s. [N. Fr. escume; Modern Fr. écume.]

Scum; refuse.

Although Philip took delight in this skim of morn, [from flatt'ers,] yet could they never draw him by their charming to incur those evils which his son ran into.—Bryskett, Discourse of Civil Life, p. 108; 1604.

Skimblekamble. adj. Wandering; wild.

A conching lion and a ramping cat,
And such a deal of skimblekamble stuff,
As puts me from my faith.

Shakespeare, Henry IV. Part I. iii. 1.

Skimmer. s.

1. Shallow vessel with which the scum is taken off.

Wash your wheat in three or four waters, stirring it round; and with a skimmer, each time, take off the light.—Mortimer, Husbandry.

2. One who skims over a book or subject: (a ludicrous word).

There are different degrees of skimmers: first, he who goes no farther than the title-page; secondly, he who proceeds to the contents and index, &c.—Skelton, Divine Revelations, dialogue viii.

Skim milk. s. [the m doubled in sound as well as in spelling.] Milk from which the cream has been taken.

This cheese was brought, says Slouch, This skim shall roll;

This is skim milk, and therefore it shall go.

King.

Skimmington. s. See second extract.

When the young people ride the skimmington,
There is a general trembling in a town:
Not only he for whom the person rides,
Suffers, but they sweep other woe's loads;

And by that hieroglyphick does appear,
That the good woman is the master there!

King, Miscellaneous, p. 383.

To ride skimmington is a vulgar phrase, which means a kind of burlesque procession in ridicule of a man who suffers himself to be led by his wife. In the north, 'riding the stang' has a similar meaning.

Randan, or Rantan, and Runding mean the same.

Skin. s. [A.S. scin.]

1. Natural covering of the flesh, consisting of the cuticle, outward skin, or scarf skin, which is thin and insensible, and the cutis, or inner skin, extremely sensible.

Their visage is blarker than a coal; they are not known in the streets: their skin cleaveth to their bones, it is withered.—Lamentations, iv. 8.

The body is consumed to nothing, the skin feeling rough and dry like leather.—Hare, Discourse of Consumption.

2. Hide; pelt; that which is taken from animals to make parchment or leather.

On whose top he strow'd

A wilde goat's skinny skin; and then bestow'd

His own couch on it.

The priest on skins of all crimes takes his ease,
And nightly visions in his slumber sees.

Dryden, Translation of the Æneid, vii. 127.

3. Body; person.

We meet with many of these dangerous civilities, wherein the hard for a man to save both his skin and his credit.—Sir E. L. Strange.

4. Husk.

Skin. v. n.

1. Flay; strip or divest of the skin.

The leavers run to the door to make their escape, are there entangled in the nets, seized by the Indians, and immediately skinned.—Ellis, Voyages.

'I won her through a rash vow. Thus, I saw her; I loved her; I proposed; she refused me.'

'You love another?'—'Spare my blushes.'—'I know him.'—'You do.'—'Very good; if he remains here, I'll skin him.'—'Lord bless me! exclaimed Mr. Pickwick, indignantly. Did you skin the gentleman, sir?'

'Inquired Mr. Winkle, with a very pale face. 'I wrote him a note. I said it was a painful thing. And so it was.'—'Certainly,' interposed Mr. Winkle. 'I said I had phlegm in my word as a gentleman to skin him. My character was at stake. I had no alternative. As an officer in His Majesty's service, I was bound to skin him. I regretted the necessity, but it must be done. He was open to conviction, but saw that the rules of the service were imperative. He fled. I married her. Here's the coach. That's her head!'—Dickens, Pickwick Papers, ch. 33.

2. Cover with the skin.

It will but skin and flim the ulcerous place,
Whilst rank corruption, milking all within,
Infects unseen.

Shakespeare, Hamlet, iii. 4.

Authority, though it err like others,
Has yet a kind of medicine in itself,
That skins the vice of the tongue.

Id., Measure for Measure, ii. 2.

The wound was skinned; but the strength of his thigh was not restored.—Dryden.

It only patches up and skins it over, but reaches not to the bottom of the sore.—Locke.

3. Cover superficially.

What I took for solid earth, was only heaps of rubbish, skinned over with a covering of vegetables.

—Addison.

Is there no middle way of adjusting this fine embarrassment? I think I have hit upon a medium to skin the sore places over, if not quite to heal it.

—C. Lamb, Letters.

Skin deep. adj. Slight; superficial.

There is a power in virtue to attract our adherence to her before all the transient and skin-deep pleasures that we fondly search after.—Felltham, Reflections, ii. 57.

That 'beauty is only skin-deep,' is itself but a skin-deep observation.—Id., Speeches.

Skin mint. s. Niggardly person.

Skink. s. [A.S. scene.]

1. Drink; anything potable.

2. Potage.

Ich skink, which is a potage of strong nourishment, is made with the knees and sinews of beef, but long boiled.—Bacon, Natural and Experimental History.

Skin. v. a. [German, schinken.] Serve drink. Obsolete.

Fetch your cans well in the filling, at length, rogue, and jog your bottles o' the buttock, sirrah; then skin out the first glass ever, and drink with all companies, though you be sure to be drunk.—B. Jonson, Bartholomew Fair, ii. 3.

Skinker. s. One who serves drink.

I give thee this pennyworth of snuff, clapt even now into my hand by an under skinker; one that never spake other English in his life, than eight shillings and sixpence, and you are welcome, sir.—Shakespeare, Henry IV. Part I. ii. 4.

Haie up all the poor hip-drinkers,

Cries old Sin, the King of skinkers.

This been Bartholomew skinker, did I make legs to.

—Sherry one, who a thou wert drunk!—Mansinger, The Virgin Martyr, i. 1.

At Vulture's homely mirth his mother smiled,

And smiling took the cup the crown had fill'd:

The recollecter had I met round the board,

Which emptied, the rule skinks still restored.

Dryden, Translation of the First Book of the Iliad, son.

Skinned. adj. Having skin; hard; callous.

When the ulcer becomes foul, and discharges a nasty ichor, the elbow in process of time tuck in, and growing skinned and hard, give it the name of callous.—Sharp, Surgery.

Skinner. s. One who skins; dealer in skins, or pelts; fellmonger.

Skinny. adj. Consisting only of skin; wanting flesh.

Her clumpy finger laying

Upon her skinny lips.

Shakespeare, Macbeth, i. 3.

Lost the severity of these carlines of the wind-pipe should hurt the skillet, which is tender, and of a skinny substance; these annular grates are not made round, but where the skillet touches the windpipe, there, to fill up the circle, is only a soft membrane, which may easily give way.

—Key, On the Wisdom of God manifested in the Works of the Creation.

I fear thee, ancient mariner,

I fear thy skinny hand;

For it is long and lank and brown,

As is the ribbed sea-sand.

Coleridge, Ancient Mariner.

His flowers meet

In skinny films, and shape his oary feet.

Addison, Translation from Ovid, Story of Cygnus.

'I say,' he whispered, stopping in out of his journey to and fro, 'young ladies, there's soap to-morrow. She's a making it now. An't she a putting in the water? Oh! not at all neither! In the course of answering another knock, he thrust in his head again. I say! There's towels to-morrow. Not skinning more. Oh no!—Presently he called through the key-hole: 'There's a fish to-morrow. Just come. Don't eat none of him! And with this special warning, vanished again.

Dickens, Martin Chuzzlewit, ch. 12.

Skip. v. n. [?] Fetch quick bounds; pass by quick leaps; bound lightly and joyfully.

Was not Iarned a deivision unto thee? Was he found among thieves? For since thou spakest of him, thou skippedst for joy.—Jeremiah, xlviii. 27.

The queen, bound with her own powerful's charm,
Sat with Pigwidgeon arm in arm;

Her merry words that thought no harm,
About the room were skipping.

Dryden, Nymphidia.

At spur or switch no more he skipt,

Or mended pace, than Spaniard whipt.

Batter, Hudibras, i. 1, 422.

The earth-born race

O'er every hill and verdant pasture stray,

Skip o'er the lawns, and by the rivers play.

Sir E. Blackmore.

John skipped from room to room, ran up stairs and down stairs, peeping into every cranny.—Arbuthnot, History of John Bull.

Thus each hand promotes the pleasing pain,
And quick sensations skip from vein to vein.

Pope.

The lumb they rid domes to bleed to-day,
Had he thy reason, would he skip and play?

Id., Essay on Man, i. 81.

Skip over. Pass without notice; omit, or pass lightly over, in reading.

Page Pius II. was wont to say, that the former pages did wisely to set the lawyers a work to debate whether the donation of Constantine the Great to Sylvester of St. Peter's patrimony were good or valid in law or no; the latter to skip over the matter in fact, whether there was ever any such thing at all or no.

Bacon, Apophthegms.

A gentleman made it a rule, in reading, to skip over all sentences where he spied a note of admiration at the end.—Swift.

Our reader, we trust, has formed some faint apprehension to a distinct idea of the principal characters who have appeared before him during our narrative; but in case our good opinion of his memory has been exaggerated, and in order to satisfy such as are addicted to the laudable practice of skipping, (with whom we have at times a strong fellow-feeling,) the following particulars may not be superfluous.—Sir W. Scott, Rielgautlet, vol. ii. ch. 1.

Finally, we have read in these three thick volumes of letters, till, in the second thick volume, the reading finally unhappily broke down, and had to skip largely henceforth, only diving here and there at a reader with considerable intervals. Such is the melancholy fact.—Carlyle, Critical and Miscellaneous Essays, Farnham von Esau's Memoirs.

943

Skip. v. a.

1. Miss; pass.

Let not thy sword skip one:
Pity not honour'd age for his white beard;
He is an usurer.

Shakespeare, Timon of Athens, iv. 3.

2. In the following example skip is active or neuter, as over is thought an adverb or preposition.

Although to engage very far in such a metaphysical speculation were unfit, when I only endeavour to explicate fluidity, yet we dare not quite skip it over, lest we be accused of overrunning it.—Boyle.

Skip. s. Light leap or bound.

He looked very curiously upon himself, sometimes fetching a little skip, as if he had said his strength had not yet forsaken him.—Sir P. Sidney.

You will make no large skip as to cast yourself from the land into the water.—Dr. H. More, Antidote against Atheism.

Skipjack. s. Upstart.

A way was opened to every skipjack.—Martin, Marriage of Fridesca, l. ii. b. 1584.

The want of shame or brains does not presently entitle every little skipjack to the board's end in the cabinet.—Sir R. L. Estrange.

Skipknel. s. Luckey; footboy.Skipper. s.

1. One who skips.

2. Youngling; thoughtless person.

Youngling, thou canst not love so dear as I;
Skipper, stand back; 'tis age that nourisheth.

Shakespeare, Twelfth Night, ii. 1.

Skipper. s. [connected with ship.] Master of a merchant vessel.

Are you not afraid of being drowned too? No, not I, says the skipper.—Sir R. L. Estrange.
No doubt you will return very much improved.—Yes, refined like a Dutch skipper from a whale-fishing.—Congreve.

The only object within doors upon which she bestows any marks of affection, in the usual style, is her dog Clowiller; a filthy cur from Newfoundland, which she had in a present from the wife of a skipper in Swansea.—Smollett, Expedition of Humphrey Clinker.

Skipnet. s. Small boat. Rare.

Upon the bank they sat, and saw
A dainty launch, dressing of her hair,
By whom a little skipnet floating did appear.

Spenser, Faerie Queen.

Skippingly. adv. In a skipping manner;

by skips and leaps.
If one read skippingly and by matches, and not take the thread of the story along, it must needs puzzle and distract the memory.—Howell, Instructions for Foreign Travel, p. 35.

Skirmish. s. [N.Fr. escarmouche.]

1. Slight fight; less than a set battle.

When we shall waste with death, if we winne that skirmish we have enough.—Poller, Sermon at Sir R. Seymour's Funeral, p. 16.
One battle, yes, a skirmish more there was
With adverse fortune fought by Christians;
Her subjects most revolt.—A. Phillips, Briton.

2. Contest; contention.

There is a kind of merry war betwixt signior Benedick and her: they never meet but there's a skirmish of wit.—Shakespeare, Much Ado about Nothing, l. i.

These skirmishes expire not with the first propinquity of the opulency: they perhaps began as single duellers; but then they soon have their passions and abstractions, who not only enhance but intail the feud to posterity.—Dr. H. More, Decay of Christian Piety.

There were but two exceptions to this keen Skirmish of wits over the departed; one, Aurora, with her pure and placid mien;
And Juan too, in general behind none
In any remark on what he had heard or seen,
Sate silent now, his usual spirits gone;
In vain he heard the others rally or rally,
He would not join them in a single rally.

Byron, Don Juan, xvi. 108.

Skirmish. v. n. [N.Fr. escarmoucher.] Fight loosely; fight in parties before or after the shock of the main battle.

Ready to charge and to retire at will;
Though broken, scatter'd, fled, they skirmish still.

Fairfax.

Ere the war begin,
He lightly skirmishes on every string
Charged with a flying touch.

Cranshaw, Musick's Duel.

A gentleman volunteer skirmishing with the enemy before Worcester, was run through his arm in the middle of the deeps with a sword, and shot with a musket-bullet in the same shoulder.—Wise-man, Yargery.

Skirmishing. verbal abs. Act of fighting loosely.

Alarm; skirmishings, Talbot pursueth the Dauphin.—Shakespeare, Henry VI, Part I, l. 2.

Rhetorical flowers . . . are but light skirmishings, and not serious contentions, in matters of religion.
Jerome Taylor, Artificiall Humaneures, p. 42.
I'll pass by the little skirmishings on either side.
—Bishop Atterbury.

Skirr. v. a. Scour; ramble over in order to clear.

Send out more horses, skirr the country round.

Shakespeare, Macbeth, v. 3.

Skirr the plain,
That the fugitive may flee in vain.

Byron, Siege of Corinth.

Skirr. v. n. Scour; scud; run in haste.

We'll make them skirr away as swift as stones

Enforced from the old Assyrian allures.

Shakespeare, Henry V, iv. 7.

Light shadows,
That, in a thought, skur over the fields of corn.

Beaumont and Fletcher, Bonduca.

Skirt. s. [Danish, skiorte; in Norwegian pronounced as if it began with sh. It is the same word as shirt.]

1. Loose edge of a garment; that part which hangs loose below the waist.

An Samuel turned about to go away, [Sam] laid hold upon the skirt of his mantle, and it rent.—1 Samuel, xv. 27.

It's but a night-gown in respect of yours; cloth of gold and ermine, side sleeves and skirts, round underburne with a bluish tinsel.—Shakespeare, Much Ado about Nothing, iii. 4.

2. Edge of any part of the dress.

A narrow lace, or a small skirt of ruffled linen, which runs about the upper part of the stays before, and crosses the breast, being a part of the tucker, is called the modesty-piece.—Addison.

3. Edge; margin; border; extreme part.

He should seat himself at Athir, upon the skirt of that juncted country.—Spenser, View of the State of Ireland.

Ye mista, that rise

From hill or stonewall lake, dusky or grey,
Till the sun paint your dewy skirts with gold,
In honour to the world's great Author rise.

Milton, Paradise Lost, v. 183.

Though I fled him angry, yet recall'd
To life prodig'd, and promised more, I now Gladly beheld, though but his utmost skirts
Of glory, and far off his steps adore.

Ibid, xi. 330.

The northern skirts that join to Syria have entered into the conquests or commerce of the four great empires; but that which seems to have secured the other is the stony and sandy deserts, through which no army can pass.—Sir W. Temple.

Upon the skirts

Of Arragon our wonder'd troops he rallies.

Dryden, Spanish Friar, l. 1.

Skirt. v. a. Border; run along the edge.

Temple skirteth this hundred on the waste side.—Carew, Survey of Cornwall.

Of all these bounds,

With shadowy forests and with champions rich'd,
With plentiful rivers and wide skirted meads,
We make thee lady.

Shakespeare, King Lear, i. 1.

The middle pair

Skirted his loins and thighs with downy gold.

Milton, Paradise Lost, v. 232.

A spacious circuit on the hill there stood,
Level and wide, and skirted round with wood.

Addison.

Skit. s. [see Squirt.] Light, wanton wench.

[Herod] at the request of a dancing skit stroke off the head of St. John the Baptist.—Howard (Earl of Northampton): 1583.

Skittish. adj.

1. Shy; easily frightened.

A skittish filly . . . fair enough for such a pack-saddle.—Beaumont and Fletcher, Scornful Lady.

A restful skittish jade had gotten a trick of rising, starting, and flying out at his own shadow.—Sir R. L. Estrange.

'Over the hills and far away,' indeed. Yoho! The skittish mare is all alive to-night. Yoho! Yoho!—Dickens, Martin Chuzzlewit, ch. xxxii.

2. Wanton; volatile; hasty; precipitate.

Now expectation, tickling skittish spirits,
Sets all on hazard.

Shakespeare, Troilus and Cressida, prologue.

He still resolved, to mend the matter,
T' adhere and cleave the obstinater;
And, still the skittisher and lower
Her freaks, appear'd to sit the closer.

Butler, Hudibras, iii. 2, 477.

I have knocked up poor Skip; shall lose my match; and, as to Harriet, why the odds are that I lose my match there too—a skittish young tit! If I once get her tight in hand, I'll make her wince for it.—G. Colman the elder, The Jealous IVy, l. 1.

3. Changeable; fickle.

Some men sleep in skittish fortune's hall,
While others play the idiots in her eyes.

Shakespeare, Troilus and Cressida, iii. 2.

Such as I am, all true lovers are;
Constant and skittish in all notions else,
Save in the constant image of the creature
That is beloved.

Ibid, Twelfth Night, ii. 4.

What skittish things popular benevolence and popular applause have been always found to be, experience hath taught others.—Hammond, Works, iv. 517.

Skittishly. adv. In a skittish manner; wantonly; uncertainly; fickly.

The bands were very plump, and skittishly played as they passed by; not knowing whither they were driven.—Situation of Paradise, p. 93: 1683.

Skittishness. s. Attribute suggested by Skittish; wantonness; fickleness.Skittleground. s. Ground for playing skittles.

Having arrived at this conclusion, he betook himself to the tap. Having purchased the beer, and obtained, moreover, the day-but-one-before-yesterday's paper, he repaired to the skittleground, and seating himself on a bench, proceeded to enjoy himself in a very sedate and methodical manner.—Dickens, Pickwick Papers, ch. xiv.

Skittles. s. Ninepins.

No more the wherry feels my stroke so true;

At skittles, in a grizzle, can I play?

T. Warton, Ode to a Grizzle Wig.

Now it was Martin's turn to work, and sit bebo the bed and watch, and listen through the long, long nights, to every sound in the gloomy wilderness; and hear poor Mr. Tapley, in his wandering fancy, playing at skittles in the Dragon, . . . travelling with old Tom Pinch on English roads, and burning stumps of trees in Eden, all at once.—Dickens, Martin Chuzzlewit, ch. xxxiii.

Skreed. s. Border of cloth.Skreen. s.

1. Riddle or coarse sieve.

A skittle or skreen to rid soil fro' the corn.

Tanner, Five Hundred Points of good Husbandry.

2. Anything by which the sun or weather is kept off.

[She] in a morning, without bodice,
Slept sometimes out to Mrs. Thody's,
To cheapen tea, to buy a screen.

Prior, Hans Carrel.

3. Shelter; concealment.

Fenced from day by night's eternal skreen;
Unknown to heaven, and to myself unseen.

Dryden.

Skreen. v. a.

1. Riddle; sift.

2. Shade from sun or light, or weather.

3. Keep off light or weather.

The curtains closely drawn, the light to skreen,
As if he had contrived to lie unseen;
Thus cover'd with an artificial night,
Sleep did his old man, and would his sight.

Dryden, Sigismunda and Tinscardo, 211.

4. Shelter; protect.

He that travels with them is to skreen them, and get them out when they have run themselves into the briars.—Locke.

His majesty encouraged his subjects to make mouths at their betters, and afterwards skreened them from punishment.—Spectator.

Skua, or Skua-gull. s. [Icelandic.] Gull of the genus Lestris.

The various species of the genus Lestris have long been separated by naturalists from the true gulls, from a just appreciation of the difference in their external characters, and also in their habits. The skuas may be considered as forming a conspicuous portion of the predaceous division among the swimming birds, as indicated by their powerful and hooked beak and claws. Their food is fish, but they devour also the smaller water birds and their eggs, the flesh of whales, as well as other carrion, and are observed to tear their prey to pieces, while holding it under their crooked talons. Many of the true gulls are fearless and timid; the common skua and its generic companions are, on the contrary, courageous and daring, harassing the smaller gulls perpetually.—Tarrell, History of British Birds.

Skue. adj. [askew.] Oblique; sidelong.

Several have imagined that this skue posture of the ash is a most unfortunate thing; and that, if the pole had been erect to the plane of the ecliptick, all mankind would have enjoyed a very paradise.—Bentley.

Skulk. v. n. Lurk in fear or malice.

Discover'd, and defeated of your prey,
You skulk'd behind the fence, and sneak'd away.

Dryden, Translation of Virgil, Æneidos, iii. 27.

While publick good slept in pomp they wold,
And private interest skulked behind the shield.

Young, Love of Fame.

Skull. s. [German, schale = shell.] Bony part of the head containing the brain; cranium.

Some lay in dead men's skulls; and in those holes, Where eyes did once inhabit, there were crept, As 'twere in scorn of eyes, reflecting gems.

Shakespeare, Richard III. l. 4.
The learning lever not divides his palm,
But drives the batter'd skull within the brain.

Dryden, Translation from Ovid, Metamorphoses, l. xii.

The skull, or bone that incloses the head, is made up of several pieces, which, being joined together, form a considerable cavity, which contains the brain as in a box, and it is proportionate to the bigness of the brain.—Quincy.

Skull. s. Shoul.

Repair to the river where you have seen them swim in skulls or shouls.—J. Walton, Complete Angler.

Skullcap. s.

1. Headpiece.

2. In Botany. Native plant of the genus Scutellaria (galericulate, minor).

Skute. s. [Dutch, schuyt.] Bont or small vessel. Rare.

They carried with them all the skuttes and bonts that might be found.—Sir R. Williams, Actions of the Loose (Sandrick, p. 114: 1618).

Sky. s. [A.S. souca = shude; Danish, sky = cloud.]

1. Region which surrounds this earth beyond the atmosphere; whole region without the earth.

The mountains their broad backs upheave
Into the clouds, their tops ascend the sky.

Milton, Paradise Lost, vii. 296.

The maids of Argos, who with frankish cries,
And imitated lowings, fill'd the sky.

Lord Rowenham.

Raise all thy winds, with night involve the sky.
Dryden, Translation of the Æneid, i. 105.

2. Heavens.

Wide is the fronting gate, and raised on high,
With adamantine columns threats the sky.

Dryden, Translation of the Æneid, vi. 114.

Used as the first element in a compound.

The thunderer's ball, you know,
Sky-planted, batters all rebellious coasts.

Shakespeare, Cymbeline, v. 4.

What is this knowledge but the sky-and-a-fire,
For which the thief still climb'd in ice-dust sit.

Sir J. Davies, Immortality of the Soul.

3. Weather; climate.

Thou wert better in thy grave, than to answer with thy uncovered body this extremity of the sky.—
Shakespeare, King Lear, iii. 4.

We envy not the warmer climate that lies
In ten degrees of more indulgent skies;
Nor at the compass of our heavy's reins,
Though o'er our heads the frozen Pleiads shiver.

Addison, Letter from Italy to Lord Halifax.

Skyborn. adj. Having a heavenly birth.

Here is a something, not a nothing. If my sky-born messenger, heaven looking through his eyes;
then neither is he a chimera with his system, crystals, comets, and mathematics, . . . but a substantial, penetrate, terrestrial man.—Carlyle, Critical and Miscellaneous Essays, Sir Walter Scott.

Sky-colour. s. Colour of the sky.

A solution as clear as water, with only a light touch of sky-colour, but nothing near so high as the cerulean tincture of silver.—Boyle.

Sky-coloured. adj. Like the sky.

This year Ovid himself has hinted, when he tells us that the blue water-nymphs are dressed in sky-coloured garments.—Addison.

Sky-eyed. adj. Coloured like the sky.

There lies, sky-eyed, a purple hue disclose. Pope.

Skyey. adj. Ethereal.

A breath thou art,
Servile to all the skyey influences,
That do this habitation, where thou keep'st, Honour'st.

Shakespeare, Measure for Measure, iii. 1.

Skyish. adj. Coloured by the ether; up proaching the sky.

O this flat a mountain you have made,
T' o'ertop old Pelion, or the skyish head
Of blue Olympus. Shakespeare, Hamlet, v. 1.

Sky-lark. s. Lark that mounts and sings.

He next proceeded to the sky-lark, mounting up by a proper scale of notes, and afterwards falling to the ground with a very easy descent.—Spectator.

The chirping sparrows, bred in Temple chimneys and crannies, might have held their peace to listen to imaginary sky-larks, as so fresh a little creature pamper.—Dickens, Martin Chuzzlewit, ch. xlv.

The skylark is universally distributed over the British Islands, but in severe weather in winter, accompanied with snow, a large portion leave Scotland in flocks to come southward. In Orkney and Shetland, it is only a summer visitor, according to Mr. Dunn, retreating to a more southern latitude on the approach of winter. It is a common bird in Denmark, Sweden, and Norway during summer, and a few remain in winter; but the greater part migrate southwards. The skylark does not appear to visit the Faroe Islands, Iceland, or Greenland.— Yarrell, History of British Birds.

Skylight. s. Window placed in a room, not laterally, but in the ceiling.

A moonroom floor dropt through the skylight, near his wife's apartment.—Arbuthnot and Pope.

Skyrocket. s. Firework which flies high,
and burns as it flies.

I considered a comet, or, in the language of the vulgar, a blazing star, as a skyrocket discharged by an hand that is almighty.—Addison.

Sky-sail. s. In Navigation. See next entry.

Sky-scraper. s. In Navigation. See extract.

Sky-sail [is] a light sail, in a square-rigged vessel next above the royal. It is set either on the pole of the royal mast, or (when this mast has no pole) on a spar, called a sliding-guntermast, which rises upon the top-sail-masthead, and extends upwards, forming a pole above the royal mast. Either of these poles gets the name of the sky-sail pole. Sky-scraper (French, 'mât de piece') is a name sometimes given to a sky-sail when it is triangular.—Boat, Nautical Dictionary.

Slab. adj. Thick; viscous; glutinous.

Nose of Turk, and Tartar's lips;
Finger of birch-stranded babe,
Ditch-delivered by a drab;
Make the gravel thick and slab.

Shakespeare, Macbeth, iv. 1.

Slab. s.

1. Puddle.

They must be diligently cleansed from moss, slab, and cause.—Frelyn.

2. Plane of stone: (as, 'A marble slab').

3. Outside plank of a piece of timber when sawn into boards.

Slabber. v. a.

1. Sup up hastily.

To slabber potage up half hot and cold.—Barret, Alvarius: 1590.

2. Smear with spittle.

He slabbered me all over, from cheek to cheek, with his great tongue.—Arbuthnot, History of John Bull.

3. Shed; spill.

The milk-pan and cream-pot so slabber'd and lost,
That butter is wanting, and cheese is half low.

Tusser, Five Hundred Points of good Husbandry.

Slabber. v. n. Slobber.

Slabby. adj.

1. Thick; viscous.

In the cure of an ulcer, with a moist temperies, slabby and greasy medicaments are to be forbore, and drying to be used.—Wicelius, Surgery.

2. Wet; floody: (in low language).

When washish boys the stunted besom jdy,
To rid the slabby pavements, pass not by.

Gay, Trivia, ii. 91.

Slack. adj. [A.S. slac.]

1. Not tense; not hard drawn; loose.

The vein in the arm is that which Arcturus commonly opens; and he gives a particular caution in this case to make a slack compression, for fear of exciting a contusion.—Arbuthnot.

2. Relaxed; weak; not holding fast.

In that day, it shall be said to Jerusalem, Fear thou not; and to Zion, Let not thine hands be slack.
—Ze phaniah, iii. 16.

All his joints relax'd;

From his slack hand the radiant wreath fell for Eve
Down dropp'd, and all the faded roses shed.
Milton, Paradise Lost, ix. 801.

3. Remiss; not diligent; not eager; not fervent.

Thus much help and furtherance is more yielded in that, if so be our zeal and devotion to Godward be slack, the alacrity and fervour of others worth as a present spur. Hucker, Ecclesiastical History.

Seeing his soldiers slack and timorous, he reproved them of cowardice and treason.—Knodler, History of the Turks.

Nor were it just, would he resume that shape,
That slack devotion should his thunder 'scape.

Waller.

Rebellion now began, for lack
Of zeal and plunder, to grow slack.

Butler, Hudibras, iii. 2, 31.

1. Not violent; not rapid.

Their pace was formal, grave, and slack;
His nimble wit outran the heavy jack.

Dryden, The Medal, 46.

As the first element in a compound.

A handful of slack-dried hops and many pounds, by taking away their pleasant smell.—Mortimer, Husbandry.

Slack. v. n.

1. Be remiss; neglect.

When thou shalt vow a vow unto the Lord thy God, thou shalt not slack to pay it.—Deuteronomy, xxiii. 21.

2. Lose the power of cohesion.

The fire, in time burnt, lies hid, so that it appears to be cold, but water excites it again, whereby it slacks and crumbles into fine powder.—Mason, Mechanical Exercises.

Slack. v. a.

1. Loosen; make less tight.

Ah! generous youth, that wish forbear;
The winds too soon will waft thee here;
Slack all thy sails, and fear to come.

Dryden, Ode to the Memory of Mrs. Anna Killgrew.

2. Relax; remit.

This makes the pulses beat, and limes respire;
This holds the sinews like a bride's reins,
And makes the body to advance, retire,
To turn or stop, as she them slacks or strains.

Sir J. Davies, Immortality of the Soul.
Taught power's due use to people and to kings,
Taught not to slack nor strain its tender strings.

Pope.

3. Ease; mitigate.

Men having been brought up at home under a strict rule of duty, always restrained by sharp penalties from lewd behaviour, so soon as they came thither, where they see laws more slackly tenured, and the hard restraint which they were used unto now slacked, they grow more loose.—Spenser.

If there be cure or charm
To respite or derive, or slack the pain
Of this ill mansion. Milton, Paradise Lost, ii. 480.

On our account has Jove
Indulgent, to all various some succulent plant
Adapted, that poor helpless man might slack
His present thirst, and matter find for toil.

J. Philips, Cyder, ii. 197.

4. Remit for want of energy.

My guards
Are you, great powers! and the unabated strength
Of a firm conscience; which shall arm each step Taken for the state, and teach me slack no pace.

R. Johnson, Catiline's Conspiracy.
With such delay, well pleased, they slack their course.

Milton, Paradise Lost, iv. 164.

5. Cause to be remitted; make to abate.

You may sooner by imagination quicken or slack a motion, than raise or ease it; as it is easier to make a dog go slower than make him stand still.—
Bacon.

Balls of this metal slack'd Atlanta's pace,
And on the amorous youth bestow'd the race.

Waller.

6. Relieve; unbend.

7. Withhold; use less liberally.

He that so generally is good, must of necessity hold his virtue to you, whose worthiness would stir it up where it wanted, rather than slack it where there is such abundance.—Shakespeare, All's well that ends well, i. 1.

8. Crumble; deprive of the power of cohesion.

Some unslacked lime cover with ashes, and let it stand till rain comes to slack the lime; then spread them together.—Mortimer, Husbandry.

9. Neglect.

Why might not you, my lord, receive attendance
From those that she calls servants, or from mine? . . .

If then they chosen to slack you,
We could control them. Shakespeare, King Lear, ii. 4.

This good chance, that thou must favour'st,
He slacks not.

Shelley, Civil Wars of York and Lancaster.

10. Repress; make less quick or forcible.

Slacken. v. a. Loosen; relax.

This doctrine must supersede and slacken all industry and endeavour, which is the lowest degree of that which hath been promised to be accepted by Christ; and leave nothing to us to be attained or attempted, but only to obey our fate.—Hellmound.

Extol not riches then, the toil of fools,
The wise man's confidence, if not more; more apt
To slacken virtue, and abate her edge.

Than prompt her to do night may merit praise.
Milton, Paradise Regain'd, ii. 157.

One readiness to the pact's aim, which he is driving on in every line: the other slackens his pace, and diverts him from his way.—Dryden.

Here have I seen the king, when great affairs
Gave leave to slacken and unbend his cares,

Attended to the chase by all the flower
Of youth, whose hopes a nobler prey devour.
Sir J. Denham, Cooper's Hill.
I should be grieved, young prima, to think my presence
Unbest your thoughts, and slacken'd 'em to arms.
Addison, Cato.

Slacken. v. n. Abate.

When those raging fires
Will slacken, if his breath stir not their flames.
Milton, Paradise Lost, ll. 213.

Slackly. adv. In a slack manner.

1. Loosely; not tightly; not closely.

2. Negligently; remissly.

That a king's children should be so convey'd,
So slackly guarded, and the search so slow
That could not trace them.
Shakespeare, Cymbeline, l. 1.

3. Tardily.

Slackness. s. Attribute suggested by Slack.

1. Looseness; not tightness.

2. Negligence; inattention; remissness.

It concerneth the duty of the church by law to provide, that the looseness and slackness of men may not cause the commandments of God to be un-executed.—Hooker, Ecclesiastical Polity.

Then thy offlow,
So rarely kind, are so interpreters
Of my behind-hand slackness.
Shakespeare, Winter's Tale, v. 1.

From man's effeminate slackness it begins,
Who should better hold his place
By wisdom, and superior gifts received.
Milton, Paradise Lost, xl. 634.

3. Tardiness.

When they have no disposition to shoot out above their lips, there is a slackness to heal, and a cure is very difficultly effected.—Sharp, Surgery.

4. Weakness; not force; not intenseness.

Through the slackness of motion, or long banishment from the air, it might gather some aphisms to putrefy.—Irrerwood.

Slade. s. [A.S. slæd.] Flat piece of ground lying low and moist; little den or valley.
The thick and well grown fox doth make my smoother slades;
And on the lower less, as on the higher heads,
The daintie clover grows.
Drayton, Polyolbion, song xiii.

Slag. s. [Swedish, slagg.] Dross or recre-ment of metal.

Not only the calves but the glasses of metal may be of differing colours from the natural colour of the metal, as I have observed about the glass or slag of copper.—Boyle.

Slake. v. a. [sluck - nbatc.]

1. Quench; extinguish.

He did always strive Himself with salve to health for to restore,
And slake the heavenly fire that rag'd evermore.
Spenser.

If I slak'd up thy forefathers' graves,
And hung their rotten coffins up in chains,
It could not slake mine ire, nor ease my heart.
Shakespeare, Henry VI. Part III. l. 3.

A lambent flame arose, which gently spread
Around his brows, and on his temples fed;
Amaz'd, with running water we prepare
To quench the sacred fire, and slake his hair.
Dryden, Translation of the Kneid, ll. 930.

Coarse are his morals, the fortune of the chase;
Amidst the running stream he slakes his thirst.
Addison, Cato.

The murderer
Who slaked his thirsting soul as from a well
Of blood and tears with ruin! he is here!
Sink 'n a gulph of scorn from which none may him
rear!
Shelley, Revolt of Islam, v. 29.

2. Used also of lime; so that it is uncertain whether the original notion of to slack or slake lime be to powder or quench it.

That which he saw happened to be fresh lime,
and gathered before any rain had fallen to slake it.
—Woodcock.

Slake. v. n. Slacken.

1. Grow less tense; be relaxed.

If she the body's nature did partake,
Her strength would with the body's strength
decay;
But when the body's strongest sinews slake,
Then is the soul most active, quick, and gay.
Sir J. Denham, Immortality of the Soul.

2. Abate; go out; be extinguished.

The fever slaketh.—Barret, Alvarado: 1580.

Slam. s. Defeat; (applied, at cards, to the adversary who has not reckoned a single point.) Condemned by Todd as a low term.

Thus all the while a slush was tramp.
There's none could ever beat the tramp;
Until a noble general came,
And save the chambers a clear slam.
Loyal Songs.

Slam. v. a. [see Slush.] Close with violence. Colloquial.

The powdered-headed footman slammed the door very hard, and howled very loudly; but both the slam and the howl were lost upon Sam, who was reverting a mahogany umbrella-stand with every outward token of critical approval.—Dickens, Pickwick Papers, ch. xxv.

'I know it ain't rightous, but it must be done.'
Then he disappeared, slamming the door behind him, and Samuel Cawworthy was left alone.—Sala, Dutch Pictures, The Ship-Chandler.

Slander. v. a. [N.Fr. esclandre, from Lat.
scandalum; Gr. skandalon.] Belie.

He hath slandered thy servant unto my lord the king.—2 Samuel, xix. 27.

Slander Valentino
With falsehood, cowardice, and poor descent.
Shakespeare, Two Gentlemen of Verona, ill. 2.
Give me leave to speak as earnestly in truly commending it, as you have done in vitriously and unkindly defacing and slandering it.—Archbishop Whitgift.

Of all her dears she never slander'd one,
But cares not if a thousand are unkind.
Pope, Moral Essays, ll. 175.

Slander. s.

1. False invective.

When slanders do not live in tongues;
When cut-purses come not to throats.
Shakespeare, King Lear, ill. 2.
So in our censure of the state
We still do wander
And make the careful magistrate
The mark of slander.
R. Johnson, Cutiline's Conspiracy.

We are not to be deceived by the slanders and calumnies of bad men, because our integrity shall then be cleared by him who cannot err in judgement.
—Nelson.

2. Disgrace; reproach.

Thou slander'st of thy mother's heavy womb!
Thou loathed issue of thy father's loins!
Shakespeare, Richard III. l. 3.

3. Disreputation; ill name.

You shall not find me, daughter,
After the slander of most stepmothers,
Ill-eyed unto you.
Shakespeare, Cymbeline, l. 2.

Slanderer. s. One who belies another; one who lays false imputations on another.

In your servants suffer any offence against yourself, rather than against God: endure it that they should be rather or slanderers, tell-tales, or sowers of dissension.—Jeremy Taylor.

Thou shalt answer for this, thou slanderer.—
Dryden, Spanish Friar, ill. 2.

Slandering. part. adj. Defaming; belying.

Thou dost with lies the throne invade,
By practice harden'd in thy slandering trade;
Obtending heaven for whilest 'er his behalf,
And spitting under specious names thy gall.
*Dryden, Translation of the First Book of
the Iliad, 150.*

Slanderingous. adj.

1. Uttering reproachful falsehoods.

What king so struck
Can tie the gall up in the slanderingous tongue?
Shakespeare, Measure for Measure, ill. 2.
To me belongs
The care to shun the blast of slanderingous tongues:
Let malice, prone the virtuous to defame,
Thus with vile censure talut my spotless name.
Pope.

2. Containing reproachful falsehoods; calumnious.

I was never able till now to choke the mouth of such detractors, with the certain knowledge of their slanderingous untruths.—Spenser, View of the State of Ireland.

We lay these honours on this man,
To ease ourselves of divers slanderingous heads.
Shakespeare, Julius Caesar, iv. 1.

As by flattery a man opens his bowels to his mortal enemy, so by detraction and a slanderingous mis-report he shuts the same to his best friends.—South, Sermons.

3. Scandalous.

This vile and slanderingous death of the cross.—Book of Homilies.

Slanderingously. adv. In a slanderous manner; calumniously; with false reproach.

I may the better satisfy them who object these doubts, and slanderingously bark at the course which are held against that traitorous earl and his adho-rents.—Spenser, View of the State of Ireland.

They did slanderingously object,
How that they durst not hazard to present
In person their defences.
Daniel, Civil Wars of York and Lancaster.

Slang. s. [sling, as words slung at a person; Norwegian, slenge-ord = sling-words.]
Low vulgar language; language peculiar to a class.

I can imagine nothing more likely to destroy natural feeling... than to feel difficulties gathering round one, and moulder in fashionable slang. 'But it will be all well if the governor would but die.'
Lord Lytton, My Novel, h. xl. ch. xii.

I have seen snobs in pink coats and hunting boots scouring over the Campagna of Rome, and have heard their oaths and their well-known slang in the galleries of the Vatican and under the shadowy arches of the Colosseum.—Thackeray, Book of Snobs,
ch. xxi.

Used adjectively.

I will go you halves in my slang match on Friday.
—P. Keefe, Poutinuedras.

Slant. adj. Oblique; not direct; not perpendicular.

Late the clouds
Justling, or push'd with winds, rode in their shock, Tine the slant lightning; whose thwart flame driven down,
Kindles the gummy bark of fir and pine.
Milton, Paradise Lost, x. 1073.

Slant. v. a. [Italian, schiancio = oblique.]

Turn askant or aside.
Nimbleness was very advantageous to break and slant the downright rushings of a stronger vessel.—
Feller, Holy War, p. 210.

Slanting. s. Oblique remark. Rare.

Belshazzre... wanted nothing but a good cause to defend; generally writing ingeniously, using sometimes slanting, seldom downright railing.—
Feller, Holy State, p. 60.

Slantingly. adv. In a slanting manner;
with oblique remark.

Their first attempt was to prefer bills against the archbishop's chaplains and preachers, and slant-ingly through their sides striking at the archbishop himself.—Styrie, Life of Archbishop Cranmer, h. l.
ch. xvi.

Slantwise. adv. Obliquely; not perpendicularly; slope.

Some maketh a hollowness half a foot deep,
With flower sets in it, set slantwise askew.
Tusser, Five Hundred Points of good Husbandry.

Slap. s. [see Slush.] Blow; (properly with the hand open, or with something rather broad than sharp).

What defence can be used in such a despicable encounter as this, but either the slap or the spurn?
—Milton, Colasterion.

Slap. adv. With a sudden and violent blow.

Peg's servants complained; and if they offered to come into the warehouse, then straight went the yard slap over their noddies.—Arbuthnot, History of John Bull.

Slap. v. a. Strike with a slap.

Dick, who thus long had posset out,
Here struck his chin, and cock'd his hat;
Then slap'd his hand upon the board,
And thus the youth put in his word.
Prior, Alma, i. 315.

Leave me alone for that! Well, I have got five pounds left, I shall go and slap it down.—Lord Lytton, Pelham, ch. iv.

Slapdash. interj. All at once; (as anything broad falls with a slap into the water, and dashes it about).

And yet, slapdash, is all again
In every sinew, nerve, and vein. Prior, Alma, l. 15.

Slapping. part. adj. Rapid. Colloquial.

While we were waiting for the coming steed, a travelling carriage and four drove up to the inn-gate at a slapping pace.—Thodore Houk, Gilbert Gurney.

Slash. v. a. [imitative formation; slam and slip belonging to the same class.]

1. Cut; cut with long cuts.

Slashing and pinching their skin and face.—Sir T. Herbert, Relation of some Years' Travels into Africa and the Great Asia, p. 10.

The long pocket, slashed sleeve.—Guardian,
no. 140.

One poor invalid has his right hand slashed off him; his maimed body dragged to the Place de Grève, and hanged there. This same right hand, it is said, turned back De Launay from the powder-magazine, and saved Paris.—Carlyle, History of the French Revolution, pt. i. b. l. ch. vi.

2. Lash.

Daniel, a sprightly swain, that used to slash
The vigorous steeds that drew his lord's calash.
King.

3. Cause to make a sharp sound."

She slashed a whip which she had in her hand; the cracks thereof were loud and dreadful.—Dr. H. More, Mystery of Godliness, p. 230: 1800.

Slash. v. n.

1. Strike at random with a sword; lay about him.

The knights with their bright burning blades
Broke their rude troops, and orders did confound, Howling and slashing at their idle shades.
Spenser, Faerie Queen.

2. Cut through rapidly.

The Sybarite slashed through the waves like a knife through cream—cheese; tacked as fast as they could haul the main-yard; went three miles to windward of the Cuttle in the first hour they tried it on a bowline!—Hassany, Singleton Fentony.

Slash. s.

1. Cut; wound.

Some few received some cuts and slashes that had drawn blood.—Lord Clarendon, History of the Grand Rebellion.

2. Cut in cloth.

What! this a sleeve?
Here's snip and nip, and cut, and slash and slash,
Like to a censor in a barber's shop.
Shakespeare, Taming of the Shrew, iv. 3.
Distinguish'd slashes deck the great;
As each exerts in birth or state
His oyle-holes are more and simpler;
The king's own body was a sampler.
Prior, Alma, ii. 448.

Slashing. part. adj.

1. Cutting at random.

Not that I'd lop the beauties from his book,
Like slashing Bentley with his desperate hook.
Pope, Imitations of Horace, b. ii. ep. 1.

2. Severe; sarcastic; cutting-up.

While the Liberal party at Darford were suffering under the daily indignities of Mr. Richy's slash- ing style, and the post brought them very unsatisfactory prospects of a champion, one offered himself, in an address which intimated that he was no man of straw, likely to recede from any contest in which he chose to embark.—B. Disraeli, Contingency,
b. v. ch. iii.

Slatch. s. [slack.]

1. Middle part of a rope or cable that hangs down loose.

2. Transitory breeze of wind; interval of fair weather.

At certain times in the winter season, they take their slatches of flood and ebb according to their occasions, the effects of the tide being manifest quite across the Streight; and ships are ordinarily seen becalmed, &c.—Sir H. Sherre on the Mediter- ranean Sea, Lord Hallifax's Miscellanies, p. v.

Slate. s. [N. Fr. esclat = splinter.] Grey stone, easily broken into thin plates, which are used to cover houses, or to write upon.

A square cannot be so truly drawn upon a slate,
as it is conceived in the mind.—Owen, Cosmologia Særa.

A small piece of a flat slate the ants laid over the hole of their nest, when they foresaw it would rain.
—Addison, Spectator.

Slate. v. a. Cover the roof; tile.

Sonnets and elegies to Chloris
Would raise a house about two stories,
A lyric ode would slate.
Swift.

Slater. s. One who covers with slates or tiles.

That law authorising a seigneur, as he returned from hunting, to kill not more than two serfs, and refresh his feet in their warm blood and bowels, has fallen into perfect disuse, and even into incredi-bility; for if Deputy Lapoula can believe in it, and call for the abrogation of it, so cannot we. No Charolois, for these last fifty years, though never so fond of shooting, has been in use to bring down slaters and plumbers, and see them roll from their roofs; but contents himself with partridges and grouse.—Carlyle, The French Revolution, pt. i. ch. i.
ch. ii.

Slattern. s. [connected with slat.] Sloven.

[A] halfpenny to drop in shoes;
Without the raising of which sum,
You dare not be so troublesome
To pluck the slatterns black and blue,
For leaving you their work to do.
Butler, Hudibras, iii. 1, 1410.

We may always observe, that a gossip in politics is a slattern in her family.—Addison, Freeholder.

The mallow skin, in for the warthy put,
And love can make a slattern of a slut.
Dryden.

Used adjectively.

Beneath the lamp her tawdry ribands glare,
The new-acqu'd manteau and the slattern air.
Gay, Trivia, iii. 269.

Slattern. v. a. Consume carelessly or neg-ligently.

All that I desire is, that you will never slattern away any one minute in idleness.—Lord Chesterfield, Letters.

Slatternly. adj. Not clean; slovenly.

A very slatternly, dirty, but at the same time very gentle French maid is appropriated to the use of my daughter.—Lord Chesterfield.

Young, perhaps, has ridiculed the affected and slatternly with a softer pen.—Rufhead, Life of Pope, p. 281.

Slatternly. adv. Negligently; in a slovenly manner.

A fine suit ill made, and slatternly or stiffly worn, far from adorning, only exposes the awkwardness of the wearer.—Lord Chesterfield.

Slaty. adv. Having the nature of slate.

All the stone that is slaty, with a texture long, and parallel to the side of the stratum, will split only lengthways, or horizontally; and, if placed in any other position, 'tis apt to give way, start, and burst, when any considerable weight is laid upon it.—
Woodward, On Fossils.

Slaughter. s. Massacre; destruction by the sword.

Sinful Macduff,
They were all struck for thee?
Not for their own demerits, but for mine,
Fell slaughter on their souls.
Shakespeare, Macbeth, iv. 3.

On each hand slaughter and gigantic deeds,
Milton, Paradise Lost, xi. 659.

The pair you see in equal armour shine,
Now friends below, in close embraces join;
But when they leave the shady realms of night,
And, clothed in bodies, breathe your upper light,
With mortal heat each other shall pursue:
What wars, what wounds, what slaughter shall ensue?
Dryden, Translation of the Æneid, vi. 1134.

Slaughter. v. a.

1. Massacre; slay; kill with the sword.

Your castle is surprised, your wife and babes
Savagely slaughter'd.—Shakespeare, Macbeth, iv. 3.
Arminius is far more truly one of our national heroes than Caractacus; and it was our own primi-val fatherland that the brave German rescued, when he slaughtered the Roman legions eighteen centuries ago, in the marshy plains between the Lippe and the Rhine.—Sir E. N. Green, The Fifteen Decisive Battles of the World, Victory of Arminius.

2. Kill beasts.

Slaughterer. s. One employed in killing.

Thou hast then wrong me; as the slaughterer doth,
Which giveth many wounds when one would kill.
Shakespeare, Henry VI, Part I, ii. 5.

Slaughterhouse. s. House in which beasts are killed for the butcher.

Away with me, all you whose souls abhor
Th' uncleanly savour of a slaughterhouse.
Shakespeare, King John, iv. 3.

Slaughtering. part. adj. Killing; slaying.

Discord, dire sister of the slaughtering power.
Pope, Translation of the Iliad, iv. 502.

Slaughterman. s. One employed in killing.

The mad mothers with their howls confused
Do break the clouds; as did the wives of Jewry,
At Herod's bloody homicide slaughtermen.
Shakespeare, Henry V, iii. 3.

• Ten chased by one,
Are now each one the slaughterman of twenty.
Id., Cymbeline, v. 3.

Slaughteron. adj. Destructive; murderous.

I have said full with horrors:
Horrors familiar to my slaughteron thoughts
Cannot once start me.—Shakespeare, Macbeth, v. 5.

Slave. s. [Fr. esclave; connected, on insufficient grounds, with the national name Slave, Slavonian.]

1. One mancipulated to a master; one subject to compulsory labour; not a freeman; dependant.

The banish'd Kent, who in disguise
Follow'd his enemy king, and did him serve Improper for a slave.—Shakespeare, King Lear, v. 3.

Of guests he makes them slaves
Inhospitably.
Milton, Paradise Lost, xii. 167.

The condition of servants was different from what it is now, they being generally slaves, and such as were bought and sold for money.—South, Normans.

Perspective a painter must not want; yet without subjecting ourselves so wholly to it, as to become slaves of it.—Dryden.

To-morrow, should we thus express our friendship,
Each might receive a slave into his arms.
Addison, Cato.

The runaway slave was the outcast of society...
There were special provisions to protect their slaves.
By the law of the Alemanni, whoever concealed an ecclesiastic's slave was condemned to a triple fine.
In the Bavarian law, whoever incited the slave of a church or a monastery to flight, must pay a mulct of fifteen solidi, and restore the slave or replace him by another. The church gradually claimed the right of asylum for fugitive slaves. The slave, who had taken refuge at the altar was to be restored to his master only on his promise of remitting the punishment.

As under the Roman law, peculiar solemnity attached to the emancipation of the slave in the church and before the priest; and emancipation thus became an act of piety.—Milman, History of Latin Chris- tianity, b. iii. ch. v.

2. One who has lost the power of resistance.

Slaves to our passions we become, and then
It grows impossible to govern men.
Waller.

3. One in the lowest state of life.

Power shall not exempt the kings of the earth, and the great men, neither shall numerous excuse
the poorest slave.—Milman.

Slave. v. a. Enslave.

Fear... a disease of a life long, which every day slaves man to whatever ill he meets with.—Kalchauer, Andree, i. 71.

Some greater, scornning now their narrow boat,
In mighty bulks and ships (like courts) do dwell,
Staring the skies that in their seas do float.
P. Fletcher, Pastorals, iv. 19.

But will you slave me to your tyranny?
Hammond and Fletcher, Love's Cure.

Slave. v. n. Drudge; toil; toil.

Had women been the makers of our laws,
The men should slave at cards from morn to night.
Swift.

Slaveborn. adj. Not inheriting liberty.

This vain world... a noble stage,
Where slave-born man plays to the seedling stars.
Draughton, Sonnets.

Slaveholder. s. One who possesses slaves.

The influence of the church appears in some singular and contradictory provisions. The churchmen themselves were slaveholders.—Milman, History of Latin Christianity, b. iii. ch. v.

Slave-like. adj. Becoming a slave.

Why this squalid this place?
This slave-like habit?
Shakespeare, Timon of Athens, iv. 3.

Slaver. s. [from slave.] Vessel engaged in the slave-trade.

Slaver. s. [Lat. salvia.] Spittle running from the mouth; drivell.

Of all mad creatures, if the learn'd are right,
It is the slaver kills, and not the letter?
Pope, Letter to Arbuthnot.

Slaver. v. n.

1. Be smeared with spittle.

Should I
Slaver with lips, as common as the stairs
That mount the Capitol, join gripe with hands
Made hard with hourly slaver as with labour.
Shakespeare, Cymbeline, i. 7.

2. Emit spittle.

Also came with scowling eyes to deliver a slaver, ing good me crow to the two ladies.—Sir P. Sidney.
Why must he spittle, spawl, and slaver it,
In vain against the people's favour?
Swift, On the Death of Dr. Swift.

Slaver. v. a. Smeared with drivell.

Twit'ch'd by the slave, he mouths it more and more.
Till with white froth his gown is slaver'd o'er.
C. Dryden, Translation of Juvenal, vii. 113.

Slavery. s. Servitude; condition of a slave;
offices of a slave.

If my dissentings were out of error, weakness, or obstinacy, yet no man can think it other than the badge of slavery, by savage rudeness and importu-nate obtrusion of violence to have the most of his error dispelled.—Edmund Burke.

Slavetrade. s. Purchase and sale of negroes;
traffic in human beings.

Slavish. adj. Servile; mean; base.

A thing
More slavish did I never than answering
A slave without a knock.
Shakespeare, Cymbeline, iv. 2.

You have among you many a purchased slave,
Which, like your asses, and your dogs and mules,
You use in abject and in slavish part,
Because you bought them.
Id., Merchant of Venice, iv. 1.

He, the supreme Good, to whom all things ill
Are but as slavish officers of vengeance,
Would send a glistering guardian, if need were,
To keep my life and honour unassail'd.
Milman, Comus, 217.

Slavish hands our mutual loves rehearse
In lying strains and ignominious verse.
Prior, Solomon, ii. 672.

Slavishly. adv. In a slavish manner; servilely; meanly.

The nature of base people is such, as either they obey slavishly, or command insolently.
Sir W. Raleigh, Arts of Empire, ch. xxv.

They are commonly dejected, slavishly humble.—
Burton, Anatomy of Melancholy, p. 187.

Slavishness. s. Attribute suggested by Slavish; servility; meanness.

Determining them in more than Egyptian slavishness.—Ridgway, Africanus, p. 113: 1622.

His willingness to serve such loose things, in the great brand of his slavishness.—Ibid., p. 129.

On the one hand, then, a man who never adopts a speculative opinion without understanding its grounds may, from sectarian prejudice or some other cause, be infected with the intellectual slavishness of the scholastic or Arabian period, and may receive syllogisms as if they were the responses of an oracle. Sir G. C. Lewis, On the Influence of Authority in Matters of Opinion, ch. x.

Slay. v. a. preter. slaw; past part. slain. [A.S. slæan.] Kill; butcher; put to death.

Wrath killeth the foolish man, and envy slayeth the silly one.—Job, v. 2.

Her father's brother Would be her lord; or shall I say her uncle? Or he that slaw her brothers and her uncle?

Shakespeare, Richard III. iv. 4.

Tyrant, show thy face! If thou be'st slain, and with no stroke of mine, My wife and children's ghosts will haunt me still.

Id., Macbeth, v. 7.

Of Trojan chiefs he view'd a numerous train; All much lamented, all in battle slain.

Dryden, Translation of the Æneid, vi. 619.

Abraham, potent prince, the friend of God, Of human ills must bear the destined load;

By blood and battles must his power maintain, And slay the monarchs, ere he rule the plain.

Prior, Solomon, iii. 410.

'Round to the charge!' cried Anlus; 'The foe begins to yield! Charge for the honour of Vesta! Charge for the golden shield! Let no man stop to plunder! But slay, and slay, and slay! The Gods that live for ever Are on our side to-day.'

Macaulay, Lays of Ancient Rome, The Battle of Lake Regillus.

Slay. s. See Slay.

Slayer. s. Killer; murderer; destroyer.

Witness the guiltless blood poured oft on ground; The crowned often slain, the slayer crowned.

Spenser, Faerie Queen.

The slayer of himself yet saw I there; The joys counsel'd was clothed in his hair;

With eyes half closed and gazing mouth he lay, And grim as when he breath'd his sudden soul away.

Dryden, Palamon and Arcite, ii. 574.

The whole clan met under the roof of an ancient church. Every one in turn laid his hand on the dead man's wrist, and vowed to defend the slayers.

Macaulay, History of England, ch. xviii.

Sleaze. s. [?] Silk in a ravelled or knotty state.

Sleep, that knits up the ravel'd sleaze of care.

Shakespeare, Macbeth, ii. 2.

I'm a fountain light, Whose brim with pinks was platted;

The lanks with daffodillies dight With grass like sleaze was matted.

Dryden, Cynthia.

Of the word sleaze I know not well the meaning; sleaze-silk is explained by Gualtham, 'florens sericeus, a lock of silk;' and the women still say, 'sleaze the silk' for 'untwist it.' Ainsworth calls a weaver's shuttle or reed a 'sleaze,' or 'sley.' 'To sley' is to part a twist into single fibres.—Dr. Johnson.

Sleave. v. a. Separate into threads; sleid.

See Sleid, v. a.

The more subtle, and more hard to sleave a-two, slien thread of self-seeking, is that dominion over consciences.—Whitlock, Discourses on the present Manners of the English, p. 300: 1654.

Sleaved. adj. Raw; not spun; unwrought.

Eight wild men all apparelled in green woad bands with sleaved silk.—Holinshed, History of England, p. 535.

Sleazy. adj. [?] Weak; wanting substance.

I cannot well away with such sleazy stuff, with such colour'd compositions.—Hovell, Letters, i. 1: 1625.

Sleazy holland is so called, because made in Silesia, in Germany; which, from its slightness, occasions all thin, slight, ill-wrought hollands to be called sleazy.—Chambers.

Sled. s. [Dutch.] Carriage drawn without wheels.

Upon an ivory sled Thou shalt be drawn among the frozen poles.

Tinsularian, or the Scythian Shepherd; 1500.

Voltaire . . . Who glads doth suffer on his watery lee, And horses trampling on his icy face.

P. Fletcher, Pictorial Eclogues ii. 15.

950

The sled, the tumble, hurdles, and the fall, The fan of Bacchus, with the flyug sail, These all must be prepared.

Dryden, Translation of the Georgics, l. 243.

Sledded. adj. Mounted on a sled.

So frown'd he once when in an angry parle, He anote the sledded Polack on the ice.

Shakespeare, Hamlet, l. 1.

Sledge. s. Sled: (of which it is now the commoner form).

In Lancashire they use a sort of sledge made with thick wheels, to bring their marl out, and drawn with one horse.—Martiner, Husbandry.

Sledge. s. [from A.S. sleage.] Large heavy hammer.

They him spying, both with greedy force At once upon him ran, and him beset With strokes of mortal steel, without remorse, And on his shield like iron sledges bet.

Spenser, Faerie Queen.

The painful smith, with force of fervent heat, The hardest iron soon doth mollify, That with his heavy sledge he can it beat, And fashion to what he it list apply.

Id.

The upland sledge is used by under-workmen, when the work is not of the largest, yet requires help to batter and draw it out; they use it with both their hands before them, and seldom lift their hammer higher than their head.—Morson, Mechanical Exercises.

It would follow that the quick stroke of a light hammer should be of greater efficacy than any softer and more gentle striking of a great sledge.—Bishop Wilkins, Mathematical Magick.

Sleek. adj. [connected with lick, so as to make smooth.]

1. Smooth; nitid; glossy.

How eagerly ye follow my disgrace, As if it fed ye; and how sleek and wanton Ye appear in everything my bring my ruin.

Shakespeare, Henry VIII. iii. 2.

With odorous oil thy head and hair are sleek, And then thou kensist the tuzzers on thy cheek.

Dryden, Translation of Virgil, iv. 80.

So sleek her skin, so faultless was her make, Ev'n Juno did unwilling pleasure take To see so fair a rival. Id., Translation from Ovid, Transformation of Io.

2. Not rough; not harsh.

Those rugged names to our like mouths grow sleek, That would have made Quintilian stare and weep.

Milton, Sonnets, xi. 10.

Sleek. s. Cosmetic which makes smooth; varnish. Obsolete.

My face, which you behold no seeming red, is done over with Indian licks, sleeks, and other paint-stuff of the Levant.—Translation of Boccaccio, p. 253: 1620.

Sleek. v. a.

1. Comb smooth and even.

Yet are the men more loose than they . . . More sleek'd, more soft, and sleeker lim'd.

B. Jonson, Catiline's Conspiracy, l. 4.

By dead Parthenope's dear tomb, And fair Ligea's golden comb, Wherewith she sits on diamond rocks, Sleeking her soft adorning locks.

Milton, Comus, 870.

2. Render soft, smooth, or glossy.

Gentle, my lord, sleek o'er your rugged looks; Be bright and jovial among your guests to-night.

Shakespeare, Macbeth, iii. 2.

She does sleek With crumbs of bread and milk, and lies a-nights In her neat gloves.

B. Jonson, Catiline's Conspiracy.

The persuasive rhetoric That sleek'd his tongue, and won so much on Eve, So little here, may lose.

Milton, Paradise Regained, iv. 4.

He spake of beauty: that the dull Saw no divinity in grass, Life in dead stones, or spirit in air; Then looking as 'twere in a glass, He smoothed his chin and sleek'd his hair, And said the earth was beautiful.

Tranyson, A Character.

Sleeky. adv. Smoothly; glossily.

Let their heads be sleeky combed, and their blue coats brushed.—Shakespeare, Taming of the Shrew, iv. 1.

Sleekness. s. Attribute suggested by Sleek; smoothness.

We may live to the spectacle and the bearing-stuff, to the stooping back, to the snow or to the sleekness of the declining crown; but how few are there that can unfold you a diary of so many leaves! More die in the spring and summer of their years, than live till autumn or their gowned winter.—Foltham, Reviews, i. 32.

The horses . . . lost their sleekness and grace, and were soon purchased at half the value.—Johnson, Rambler, no. 138.

Sleekstone. s. 'Smoothing stone.

The purest pasteboard, with a sleek-stone rub smooth, and as even as your ear.—Paschall.

Sleeky. adj. In a sleek manner; of a sleek or smooth appearance.

Sweet, sleek doctor, dear pacifick soul! Lay at the best, and suck the vital bowl!

Thomson, To the Soporific Doctor.

Sleep. v. n. [A.S. slæpan.]

1. Take rest, by suspension of the mental and corporal powers.

If the man be poor, thou shalt not sleep with his pledge.—Isaiah, xlv. 12.

I've watch'd and travell'd hard; Some time I shall sleep out; the rest I'll whistle.

Shakespeare, King Lear, ii. 2.

Where's Pede?—go you, and where you find a maid,

That, ere she sleeps, hath thrice her prayers said, Re-in up the organs of her fantasy; She's as a wound as careless infamy; But those that sleep, and think not on their sins, Pinch them, arms, legs, backs, shoulders, sides, and shins.

Id., Merry Wives of Windsor, v. 3.

Peace, good reader! do not weep; Peace! the lovers are asleep; They, sweet turtles! folded in In the last knot that love could tie. Let them sleep, let them sleep on, Till this stormy night be gone, And the eternal morrow dawn, Then the curtains will be drawn, And they waken with that light.

Whose day shall never sleep in night. Crashaw.

Those who at any time sleep without dreaming can never be convinced that their thoughts are for hours busy without their knowing it.—Locke.

Through the moss the ivy creep; And in the stream the long-leaved flowers weep, And from the craggy ledge the poppy hangs in sleep.

Thomson, The Lotus-Eaters.

2. Rest; be motionless.

Steel, if thou turn thine edge, or cut not out the burroughed clown in chains of beef ere thou sleep in thy slouth, I beseech Jove on my knees thou mayest be turned into bobolinks.—Shakespeare, Henry VI, Part II, iv. 10.

How sweet the moonlight sleeps upon this bank! Here will we sit, and let the sounds of music Creep in our ears. Id., Merchant of Venice, v. 1.

The eddy ship, betwixt the winds and tides, Forced back and forwards, in a circle rides, Stunn'd with the different blows; then shoots a main Till counterblow'd she stops, and sleeps again.

Dryden.

3. Live thoughtlessly.

We sleep over our happiness, and want to be raised into a quick thankful sense of it.—Bishop Atterbury.

4. Be dead.

If we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so them also which sleep in Jesus will God bring with him.—1 Thessalonians, iv. 14.

A person is said to be dead to us, because we cannot raise from the grave; though he only sleeps into God, who can raise from the chamber of death.—Ayliffe, Parergon Juris Canonici.

5. Be inattentive; not vigilant.

Heaven will one day open The king's eyes, that so long have sleep'd upon This bold, bad nun. Shakespeare, Henry VIII, ii. 2.

6. Be unnoticed, or unattended: (as, 'The matter sleeps').

Sleep. s. [A.S. slæp.] Repose; rest; suspension of the mental and corporal powers; slumber.

Not thought I heard a voice cry, sleep no more! Macbeth doth murder sleep: the innocent sleep; Sleep that knits up the ravel'd sleeve of care; The birth of each day's life, new labour's bath, Balm of hurt minds, great nature's second course, Chief nourisher in life's feast.

Shakespeare, Macbeth, ii. 2.

That sleeps might sweetly snail His restless eyes, he enter'd, and in his bed in silence took.

Chapman.

Cold calloth the spirits to succour; and therefore they cannot so well close and go together in the head, which is ever requisite to sleep. And for the same cause, pain and noise hinder sleep; and darkness furthereth sleep.—Beacon.

His fastid'd hands the ruler keep, And fix'd on heav'n, his eyes reveal invading sleep.

Dryden, Translation of the Æneid, v. 1103.

Infants spend the greatest part of their time in sleep, and are seldom awake but when hunger calls for the teat, or some pain forces the mind to perceive it.—Locke.

As the first element in a compound.

Hermes o'er his head in air appear'd, And with soft words his drooping spirits cheer'd; His hat adorn'd with wings discombed the god, And in his hand the sleep-compelling rod.

Dryden, Palamon and Arcite, l. 347.

sleepers. s.

1. One who sleeps; one who is not awake.

Sound, music; come, my queen, take hand with me,

And rock the ground whereon these sleepers lie.

*Shakespeare, Midsummer-Night's Dream, iv. 1.*In some countries, a plant which shutteth in the night, openeth in the morning, and openeth wide at noon, the inhabitants say is a plant that sleepeth. There he sleepers enow then; for almost all flowers do the like.—Bacon.

Yet all his dark exploits no more contain Than a spy taken, and a sleeper slain.

Dryden, Translation from Ovid, Contention of Ajax and Ulysses.‘I’m a heavy sleeper,’ said Mr. Dowler, as he flung himself on the bed. ‘I must keep awake. I suppose I shall hear a knock here. Yes, I thought so. I can hear the watchman. . . . He’s turning the corner. Ah!’ When Mr. Dowler arrived at this point, he turned the corner at which he had been long hesitating, and fell fast asleep.—Dickens, Pickwick Papers, ch. xxv.

2. Lazy inactive drouce.

No must be no great eater, drinker, nor sleeper, that will discipline his senses and exert his mind; every worthy undertaking requires both.—Grew.

3. That which lies dormant or without effect.

Let penal laws, if they have been sleepers of long, or if grown unfit for the present time, be by wise judges confined in the execution.—Bacon.

4. Strip of solid timber (or some substantial substitute) which lies on the ground to support the joist of a floor, or the rails of a railway.

The length of hips and sleepers.—*Boetius.*In most of the English and foreign lines the rails rest in cast-iron chairs, which are spiked to cross sleepers of wood; but in the Great Western and a few other lines the rails rest upon longitudinal beams of wood, and in the American lines the bottom flange of the rail is for the most part spiked directly down upon the cross sleepers without the intervention of chairs. Stone blocks, which were generally used in the early railways for supporting the chairs, have now been discarded. But sleepers of cast-iron have latterly been in many cases employed. *Brande and Cox, Dictionary of Science, Literature, and Art.Sleepful. adj. Overpowered by desire to sleep.Distrust will cure a lethargy; of a sleepful man it makes a wakeful one, and he keeps out poverty.—*Scott, Essay of Drapery, p. 138; 1835.Sleepfulness. s. Attribute suggested by Sleepful; strong desire to sleep.Sleepily. adv. In a sleepy manner.

1. Drowsily; with desire to sleep.

2. Dully; lazily.

I rather chuse to endure the wounds of those darts, which only scratch at novelty, than to go on safely and sleepily in the easy ways of ancient mistakes.—Sir W. Raleigh.

3. Stupidly.

He would make us believe that Luther in these actions pretended to authority, forgetting what he had sleepily owned before.—*Bishop Atterbury.Sleepiness. s. Attribute suggested by Sleepy; drowsiness; disposition to sleep; inability to keep awake.Watchfulness prevails too great sleepiness, and in the most ill looking symptom of a fever.—*Arbuthnot.Sleeping. verbal abs.

1. State of resting in sleep.

We will rather sleep than talk; we know what belongs to a watch.—Why you speak like an ancient and most quiet watchman; for I cannot see how sleeping should offend.—Shakespeare, Much Ado about Nothing, iii. 3.

2. State of not being disturbed or noticed.

You ever have wish'd the sleeping of this business, never desired it to be stirred.

*Shakespeare, Henry VIII. ii. 4.Sleepless. adj. Wanting sleep; always awake.

The field To labour calls us, now with sweat imposed, Though after sleepless night.

Milton, Paradise Lost, xi. 171.

While penative poets painful vigils keep, Sleepless themselves to give their readers sleep.

*Pope, Dunciad, i. 93.Sleeplessness. s. Attribute suggested by Sleepless; want of sleep.Lipsius . . . conceives an impossibility of an absolute sleeplessness.—*Bishop Hall, Balm of Gilead.Sleepy. adj.

1. Drowsy; disposed to sleep.

From his feet, even to his sleepie head, She made her poison canker-like to spread.

Mirror for Magistrates, p. 792.

Her sleepy arms she spread.

May, Translation of Lucan, l. v.

2. Not awake.

Why did you bring these daggers from the place? They must lie there. Go carry them, and smear The sleepy grooves with blood.

Shakespeare, Macbeth, ii. 2.

She waked her sleepy crew,

And, rising hasty, took a short adieu.

Dryden, Cymon and Iphigenia, 183.

3. Soporiferous; somniferous; causing sleep.

We will give you sleepy drinks, that your senses, unfeeling of our insinuation, may, though they cannot join us, as little accuse us.—Shakespeare, Winter's Tale, l. 1.

Let such betink them, if the sleepy drench Of that forgetful lake banneth not still.

*Milton, Paradise Lost, ii. 73.*I slept about eight hours, and no wonder; for the physicians had mingled a sleepy potion in the wine.—Swift, Gulliver's Travels.

4. Dull; lazy.

‘Tis not sleepy business,

But must be look'd to speedily and strongly.

*Shakespeare, Cymbeline, iii. 5.Sleet. s. [A.S. slíht.]

1. Kind of smooth small hail or snow, not falling in flakes, but single particles.

Perpetual sleet and driving snow

Obscure the skies, and hang on herbs below

Huge open stand inclosed in wintry walls

Of snow cumulated.

Dryden, Translation of the Georgics, iii. 584.

2. Shower of anything falling thick.

[They] flying, behind them, shot

Sharp sleet of arrowy showers against the face

Of their pursuers.

*Milton, Paradise Regained, iii. 323.Sleety. adj. Bringing sleet.

The sleety storm returning still.

The morning hour, and evening chill.

*T. Warton, Odes, x.Sleeve. s. [A.S. sylf, sylfa.] Part of a garment that covers the arms.

Once my well-waiting eyes espied my treasure,

With sleeves turn'd up, loose hair, and breast enlarged;

Her father's corn, moving her fair limbs, measure.

*Sir F. Sidney.*The deep smock sleeve, which the Irish women use, they say, was old Spanish; and yet that should seem rather to be an old English fashion; for in armor, the fashion of the Manche, which is given in arms, being nothing else but a sleeve, is fashioned much like to that sleeve. And knights, in ancient times, used to wear their mistress's or love's sleeve upon their arms; Sir Launcelot wore the sleeve of the fair maid of Astoloth in a tourney.—*Spenser, View of the State of Ireland.*Your hose should be ungartered, your sleeve buttoned, your shoe studded, demonstrating a careless resolution.—*Shakespeare, As you like it, iii. 2.*He was clothed in cloth, with wide sleeves and a cap.—Lucan.

In velvet white as snow the troop was gown'd,

Their hoods and sleeves the same.

*Dryden, The Foe and the Leaf, 161.As the first element in a compound.You would think a smock were a she-angel; he so claims to the sleeve-hand, and the work about the square on't.—*Shakespeare, Winter's Tale, iv. 3.Laugh in the sleeve. Deride or exult secretly.A trace of sharper laugh at the whole roguesy in their sleeves.—*Sir R. L. Estrange.*Men know themselves. . . . utterly void of those qualities which the impudent hypocrits ascribes to them, and in his sleeve laughs at them for believing.—*South, Sermons.*John laughed heartily in his sleeve at the pride of the esquire.—*Arbuthnot, History of John Bull.Hang on a sleeve. Make dependent; (probably from the custom of wearing a lady's sleeve; which was in token of dependence on her love).It is not for a man which doth know, or should know, what orders, and what peaceable government requireth, to ask why we should hang our judgement upon the church's sleeve, and why in matters of orders more than in matters of doctrine.—*Hooker, Ecclesiastical Polity.Sleeve-knot. s. Ornament or ribbon attached to the sleeve.‘But, for all I could ever discover, you prefer a pretty face and a well-fancied sleeve-knot to all the virtue and housewifery that ever came together.—*Kentia Wyndham, ch. xxx.Sleeveless. adj. Wanting sleeves; having no sleeves.

No man under the said estates and degree shall wear any satin . . . nor any velvet, saving in sleeveless jackets, doublets, coats, &c.—Proclamation in Strype's Appendix to History of the Reformation: 1555.

Sleeveless his jerkin was, and it had been velvet; but 'twas now, so much around was seen, Became tuffaffaty.

They put on sleeveless coats of home-spun cotton.—Sandys.

Behold you idle by palmers, pillarless tree, . . .

Grave mummery! sleeveless wane, and shirtless others.

*Pope, Dunciad, iii. 113.Sleeveless. adj. [See extract from Weigwood.] Bootless; fruitless; (used generally with errand).

One morning timely he took in hand

To make to my house a sleeveless errand.

*Heywood, Works, sign. B. 3. b. v. 1569.*This sleeveless tale of transubstantiation was brought into the world by that other of the multipresence.—*Bishop Hall.*No more but no, a sleeveless reason.—*Milton, Misconducts, §1.*My handily quarrelled with him for scolding every one of her children on a sleeveless errand, as she calls it.—*Spectator.*Sleeveless means without a cover or pretence.—Lucas Tooke.[Sleeveless . . . as in a sleeveless errand . . . seems to be connected with the Danish sláf, dull; the sláf being succeeded by the negative meaning of the word itself. So Platt-Dutch slaf for slak, nasty.—Weigwood, Dictionary of English Etymology.]Sleed. v. a. Prepare for use in the weaver's sley or slay.Sleided. part. adj. Prepared for the sley; prepared for weaving.

She waved the sleided silk

With fingers long.

*Shakespeare, Pericles, iv. Gower.Sleight. s. [sly.] Artful trick; cunning artifice; dexterous practice; (as, ‘sleight of hand’).He that exhorted to beware of an enemy's policy, hath not give counsel to be impolite; but rather to be all prudent foresight, lest our simplicity be over-reached by cunning sleights.—Hooker, Ecclesiastical Polity.

Fair Una to the red cross knight

Betrothed is with joy;

Though false Dulcinea, it to bar,

Her false sleights do enwrap.

Spenser, Faerie Queen, l. xii.

Upon the corner of the moon There hangs a vaporous drop profound; I'll catch it ere it come to ground; And that, distilled by magic sleights, Shall raise such artificial sprights, As, by the strength of their illusion, Shall draw him on to his confusion.

Shakespeare, Macbeth, iii. 5.

In the wily snake

Whatever sleights, none would suspicious mark,

As from his wit and native subtilty.

Proceeding.

Milton, Paradise Lost, ix. 91.

Thoughtless the pleasure is as great

Of being cheated, as to cheat;

As lookers on feel most delight,

That least perceive the juggler's sleight.

*Batter, Hudibras, ii. 3. 1.*Good humour is but a sleight of hand, or a faculty of making truths look like appearances, or appearances like truths. *Sir R. L. Estrange.*When we hear death related, we are all willing to favour the sleight, when the poet does not too grossly impose upon us.—Dryden.

While innocent he seems tenable flight,

His honest friends preserve him by a sleight.

*Swift.Sleight. adj. Deceitful; artful.

Thus I hurle

My powder'd spells into the sponge air,

Of power to cheat the eye with sleight illusion.

*Milton, MS. Book of Comus in the Library of Trinity College, Cambridge.Sleightful. adj. Artful; cunning.

Sleightful others left the purling rill.

*W. Browne.Sleighty. adj. Crafty; artful.Though it [truth] be darkened with mean sleighty jangling and counterbit craft, as it were with certain mists, for a while; yet at the time of God appointed, it bursteth out again, and sheweth itself clearly like the sun.—*Translation of Bishop Gardiner's De Vera Obedientia Oratio, fol. vi.: 1533.Slender. adj. [Provincial German, slinder.]

1. Thin; small in circumference compared with the length; not thick.

So thick the rose bushing round About her slow'd; half stooping to support Each flower of slender stalk.

Milton, Paradise Lost, ix. 423.

2. Small in the waist; having a fine shape.
What slender youth, bedew'd with liquid colours,
Courts thee on roses in some pleasant cave?
Milton, Translation from Horace, b. i. ode iv.
Beauteous Helen shines among the rest,
Tall, slender, straight, with all the graces best.
Dryden, Epithalamium of Helen and Menelaus.
3. Not bulky; slight; not strong.
Love in these labyrinths his slaves detains,
And mighty hearts are held in slender chains.
Pope, Rape of the Lock, canto ii.
4. Small; inconsiderable; weak.
Yet they, who claim the general assent of the whole world unto that which they teach, and do not fear to give very hard and heavy sentence upon as many as refuse to embrace the same, must have special regard, that their first foundations and groundwork be more than slender probabilities.—Hooker, Ecclesiastical Polity.
Where joy most revels, grief doth most lament;
Grief joys, joy grieves, on slender accident.
Shakespeare, Hamlet, iii. 2.
It is very slender comfort that relies upon this nice distinction, between things being troublesome, and being evil; when all the evil of affliction lies in the trouble it creates to us.—Archbishop Tillotson.
5. Spurring; less than enough: (as, 'A slender estate and slender parts').
At my lodging,
The word is this, that, at so slender warning,
You're like to have a thin and slender pittance.
Shakespeare, Taming of the Shrew, iv. 4.
6. Not amply supplied.
The good Othello often deign'd
To grace my slender table with his presence.
A. Phillips.
In obstructive inflammation, the aliment ought to be cool, slender, thin, diluting.—Arbuthnot.
- Slenderly, adv. In a slender manner.
1. Without bulk.
2. Slightly; meanly.
If the debt be not just, we know not what may be deemed just, neither is it a sum to be slenderly regarded.—Sir J. Heyward.
If I have done well, and as is fitting the story, it is that which I desired; but if slenderly and meanly, it is that which I could attain to.—2 Maccabees, xv. 34.
- Slenderness, s. Attribute suggested by Slender.
1. Thinness; smallness of circumference.
Small whistles give a sound because of their extreme slenderness; this air is more pent than in a wider pipe.—Bacon.
Their colours arise from the thinness of the transparent parts of the feathers; that is, from the slen-derness of the very fine hairs or capillaments, which grow out off the sides of the grosser internal branches or fibres of those feathers.—Sir I. Newton.
2. Want of bulk or strength.
It is preceded by a spitting of blood, occasioned by its acrimony, and too great a projectile motion, with slenderness and weakness of the vessels.—Arbuthnot, On Diet.
3. Slightness; weakness; inconsiderableness.
The slenderness of your reasons against the book, together with the inconveniences that must of necessity follow, have procured a great credit unto it.
—Archbishop Whig.
4. Want of plenty.
As the consciousness of the ruin it, so the slen-derness of the diet, is equally to pretend towards a rigid and austere condition of life.—Gregory, Notes on Scripture, p. 135: ed. 1681.
- Silent, v. n. Make an oblique remark; sneer.
Shout your arrows at me till your quiver be empty;
but glance not with the least shooting insinuation at his majesty.—Fuller, Truth Maintained, p. 19: 1613.
- Sley, s. [A.S. sle.] Weaver's reel.
Straight in their posts appointed both repair,
And fix their threaded looms with equal care:
Around the solid beam the web is ty'd,
While hollow comes the parting warp divide;
Through which with nimble flight the shuttles play,
And for the woof prepare a ready way:
The woof and warp unite press'd by the toothy sley.
Crowall, Translation from Ovid's Metamorphoses, b. vi.
- Sley, v. n. Separate; part or twist into threads; sleid.
- Slie, v. n.
1. Cut into flat pieces.
Their cooks make us more sley, but slicing it into fit the goblets, prick it on a prong of iron, and bring it in a furnace.—Sedgely, Journey to Aleppo.
The residue were on foot, well furnished with jack and skull, pikes and sleying weapons, broad, thin, and of an excellent temper.—Sir J. Heyward.

2. Cut into parts.
Nature lost one by thee, and therefore must Slice one in two to keep her number just.
Cleaveland.
3. Cut off in a broad piece.
When hungry thou stoodst staring, like an oak,
I sliced the unclean from the barley loaf.
Gay, Shepherd's Week, Tuesday, 69.
4. Cut; divide.
Princes and tyrants slice the earth among them.—
Burnet.
- Slie, s. [N.Fr. escleche.]
1. Broad piece cut off.
Hacking of trees in their bark, both downright and across, so as you may make them rather in slices than in continued hacks, doth great good to trees.—Bacon.
You need not wipe your knife to cut bread; because in cutting a slice or two it will wipe itself.—
Swift.
The from out the chimney took
A slice of bacon off the hook,
And freely, from the fattest slice,
Cut out large slices to be fried.
Id., Baucis and Philemon.
2. Broad piece.
Then clap four slices of plaster on 't,
That, laced with bits of rustick, makes a front.
Pope, Moral Essays, iv. 33.
3. Broad head fixed in a handle; peel; spatula.
The pelican hath a beak broad and flat, much like the slice of apothecaries, with which they spread plasters.—Hakewill.
When burning with the iron in it, with the slice clap the coals upon the outside close together, to keep the heat in.—Maron, Mechanical Exercises.
- Slie, adj. See Slieck.
- Whom silver-bow'd Apollo bred, in the Pierian mead,
Both slieck and dastile, yet were both in warre of wood'rous dromel.
Chapman.
Glass attracts but weakly; some slieck stones, and thick glasses, indifferently.—Sir T. Browne, Vulgar Errors.
- Slieck, v. n. [A.S. slieckian, slidrian.]
Slide with interruption.
Go thou from me to fate,
And to my father my foul deeds relate.
Now die: with that he dragg'd the trembling sire
Slid'ring through clotted blood.
Dryden, Translation of the Æneid, ii. 746.
- Slidery, adj. Slippery. Colloquial.
- Slide, v. n. pret. slid, past part. slidden.
[A.S. slidan.]
1. Pass along smoothly; slip; glide.
Sounds do not only slide upon the surface of a smooth body, but communicate with the spirits in the pores.—Bacon.
Ulysses, Stenobolus, Thimder slide
Down by a rope, Macdonald was their guide.
Sir J. Denham, Destruction of Troy.
2. Move without change of the foot.
Oh, Ladon, happy Ladon, rather slide than run by her, lest thou shouldst make her legs slip from her.—Sir P. Sidney.
He that once sinks, like him that slides on ice,
Goes swiftly down the slippery ways of vice:
Though conscience checks him, yet those rules gone over,
He slides on smoothly, and looks back no more.
Creek, Translation of Juvenal, xii. 307.
3. Pass inadvertently.
Weigh thy words in a balance, and make a door and a bar for thy mouth: beware thou slide not by it.—Jerusalem, xxviii. 25.
4. Pass unnoticed.
In the princess I could find no apprehension of what I said or did, but with a calm carelessness, letting every thing slide justly, as we do by their speeches, who neither matter nor person do any way belong unto us.—Sir P. Sidney.
5. Pass along by silent and unobserved progression.
Thou shalt
Hate all, show clearly to none;
But let the famish'd flesh slide from the bone,
Ere thou relieve the beggar.
Shakespeare, Timon of Athens, iv. 3.
Then no day vol of lilies, of pleasure leaving,
Ages shall slide away without perceiving.
Dryden.
Remove me from their ignoble hands;
Let me kiss yours when you my wound begin,
Then easy death will slide with pleasure in.
Id., Conquest of Granada, Part iv. 2.
6. Pass silently and gradually from good to bad.
Nor could they have slid into those brutish immoralities of life, had they duly measured those first practical notions and dictates of right reason.—
South, Sermons.

7. Pass without difficulty or obstruction.
Still follow sense, of every art the soul,
Parts answering parts shall slide into a whole;
Nature shall join you, time shall make it grow
A work to wonder at.
Pope, Moral Essays, iv. 65.
8. Move upon the ice by a single impulse, without change of feet.
The gallants dancing by the river side,
They bathe in summer, and in winter slide.
Waller.
'It looks a nice warm exercise that, doesn't it?'
... 'Ah, it does indeed,' replied Wardle. 'Do you slide?' 'I used to do so, on the gutters, when I was a boy,' replied Mr. Pickwick.—Dickens, Pickwick Papers, ch. xix.
9. Fall by error.
The discovering and reprehension of these colours cannot be done but out of a very universal knowledge of things, which no clearest man's judgment, as it is the less apt to slide into any error.—
Bacon.
10. Be not firm.
Yo fair!
Be greatly cautious of your sliding hearts.
Thomson.
11. Pass with a free and gentle course or flow.
- Slide, v. a. Put imperceptibly.
Little tricks of sophistry by sliding in, or leaving out, such words as entirely change the question, should be abandoned by all fair disputants.—Watts.
- Slide, s.
1. Smooth and easy passage.
We have some slides or relishes of the voice or strings, continued without stop, from one to another, rising or falling, which are delightful.—Bacon, Natural and Experimental History.
Kings that have able men of their nobility shall find ease in employing them, and a better slide into their business; for people naturally bend to them.
—Bacon.
2. Flow; even course.
There be, whose fortunes are like Homer's verses, that have a slide and easiness more than the verses of other poets.—Bacon.
3. Ice prepared for sliding on.
Mr. Weller and the fat boy, having by their joint endeavours cut out a slide, were exercising themselves thereupon, in a very masterly and brilliant manner.—Sara Waller, in particular, was displaying the beautiful feat of fancy sliding which he recently performed 'knocking at the colder's door,' and which is achieved by skimming over the ice on one foot, and occasionally giving a postman's knock upon it with the other. It was a grand long slide. ... A way went the good-temper'd old fellow down the slide, with a rapidity which came very close upon Mr.
Weller, and bent the fat boy all to nothing. Mr.
Pickwick paused, considered, pulled off his gloves and put them in his hat: took two or three short runs, hauled himself as often, and at last took another run, and went slowly and gravely down the slide, with his feet about a yard and a quarter apart, amidst the gratified shouts of all the spectators.—
Dickens, Pickwick Papers, ch. xxix.
- Slider, s. One who, that which, slides;
sliding part of an instrument.
Fitting to their size the slider of his guillotine.—
Barke, Letters on a Regicide Peace.
- Sliding, verbal abs.
1. Act of one who slides over ice.
The sport was at its height, the sliding was at the quickest, the laughter was at the loudest, when a sharp smart crack was heard. There was a quick rush towards the bank, a wild scream from the ladies, and a shout from Mr. Tupman. A large mass of ice disappeared; the water bubbled over it; Mr.
Pickwick's hat, gloves, and handkerchief were floating on the surface; and this was all of Mr. Pickwick that anybody could see.—Dickens, Pickwick Papers, ch. xxix.
2. Transgression: (hence bucksliding).
You wou'd of late to make the law a tyrant,
And rather proved the sliding of your brother
A merrier than a vice.
Shakespeare, Measure for Measure, ii. 4.
- Used as the first element in a compound:
(us, sliding-rule, sliding-scale).
- Slight, adj. [German, schlecht = bad.]
1. Small; worthless; inconsiderable.
Their arms, their arts, their manners I disallow,
And how they war, and whence the people rose;
Slight is the subject, but the prize not small,
If heaven assist, and Phœbus hear my call.
Dryden, Translation of the Georgics, iv. a.
Slight is the subject, but not so the prize;
If who inspire, and he approve my lays.
Pope, Rape of the Lock, canto ii.
2. Not important; not cogent; weak.

Some firmly embrace doctrine upon slight grounds, some upon no grounds, and some contrary to appearance.—Lucke.

3. Negligent; not vehement; not done with effort.

The shaking of the head is a gesture of slight refusal.—Bacon.

He in contempt
At one slight bound hath overtopped all bound.
Milton, Paradise Lost, iv. 180.

4. Foolish; weak of mind.
No beast ever was so slight
For man, as for his God, to fight.
Buller, Hudibras, i. 1, 781.

5. Not strong; thin: (as, 'a slight milk').

Slight, s.
1. Neglect; contempt; act of scorn.

Peoche in misfortune construe unavoidable accidents into slight or neglect.—Richardson, Clarissa.

2. Artifice; cunning practice.

As hypocrites a thing as force is, it rarely believes anything but under the countenance of fraud. Slight of hand has done that, which force of hand could never do.—South, Sermons.

After Nic had banished John a while, what with slight of hand, and taking from his own store and adding to John's, Nic brought the balance to his own side.—Arbutnot.

Slight, adv. Slightly.
Is Caesar with Antonius prized so slight?
Shakespeare, Antony and Cleopatra, i. 1.

Slight, v. a.
1. Neglect; disregard.

If they transgress and slight that sole command.
Milton, Paradise Lost, vii. 37.

2. Throw carelessly, (unless in this passage to slight be the same with to sling).

The rogues slighted me into the river with as little remorse as they would have drowned a hith's blind puppys.—Shakespeare, Merry Wives of Windsor, iii. 5.

3. Overthrow; demolish.

The . . . was slighted by order of the parliament.
—Lord Aherden, History of the Grand Rebellion.

Slight over. Treat or perform carelessly.

These men, when they have promised great matters, and failed most shamefully, if they have the perfection of boldness, will but slight it over, and no more ado.—Bacon, Essays.

His death and your deliverance
Were themes that ought not to be slighted over.
Drayden.

Slighten, v. a. Neglect; disregard. Obsolete.

It is an odious wisdom to despise, much more to slighten or deny their powers.
B. Jonson, Full of Sejanus.

Slighter, s. One who slights or disregards.

I do not believe you are so great an undervaluer or slighter of us, as not to perceive it tenderly and thrifily.—Jeremy Taylor, Artificial Handmaiden, p. 102.

Slighting, s. Demolition. Rare.

The committee at York have ordered the slighting of Skipton.—Knickerbocker.

Slighting, adv. In a slighting manner; without reverence; with contempt.

If my sceptic speaks slightly of the odious he appears, I have done no more than became the part.—Boyle.

Slightly, adv. In a slight manner.

Words, both because they are common, and do not so strongly move the fancy of man, are for the most part but slightly heard.—Hooker, Ecclesiastical Polity.

Leave nothing fitting for the purpose
Untouch'd, or slightly handled in discourse.
Shakespeare, Richard III., iii. 7.

To part so slightly with your wife's first gift.
Id., Merchant of Venice, v. 1.

The letter-writer disavows his knowledge of this restriction, and contends himself slightly to mention it towards the close of his pamphlet.—Bishop Atterbury.

2. Scornfully; contemptuously.

He spoke slightly and reflexively of such a lady: that is, perhaps, he treated her without a compliment, and spoke that of her which she had rather a great deal practice, than hear or be told of.—South, Sermons, vi. 98.

Long had the Gallick monarch uncontrouled,
Enlarged his borders, and of human force
Opponent slightly thought.
A. Phillips.

3. Weakly; without force.

Scarcely not
The faint rates of hell too slightly barr'd.
Milton, Paradise Lost, iv. 806.

4. Without worth.

Vol. II.

Slightness, s. Attribute suggested by Slight.

1. Weakness; want of strength.

2. Negligence; want of attention; want of vehemence.

Where gentry, title, wisdom,
Cannot conclude but by the yea and no
Of general ignorance, it must omit Real necessities, and give way, the while
To unstable slightness.

Shakespeare, Coriolanus, iii. 1.

What strong cries must they be that shall drown no loud a clamor of impieties! and how does it reproach the slightness of our shrewd heartless adversaries.—Dr. H. More, Decay of Christian Duty.

Slightly, adj. Trilling; superficial.

Let them show . . . where any thing is advised or commanded after this shallow and slightly way.
—Richard, Observations on the Answer to the Complaint of the Clergy, p. 131: 1604.

Sly, adv. In a sly manner; cunningly;

with cunning secrecy; with subtle covert-ness: (for spelling see Styly).

Were there a serpent seen with forked tongue,
That sly glided towards your majesty,
It were but necessary you were waked.
Shakespeare, Henry V., Part II, iii. 2.

He, closely false and sly wise,
Cast how he might among them most from far.
Faust.

Satan, like a cunning pick-lock, sly rolls us of our ardent treasure.—Dr. H. More, Decay of Christian Piety.

With this he did a herd of goats control;
Which by the way he met, and sly stole;
Clad like a country swain.

Drayden, Translation from Ovid, Metamorphoses, l. i.

May hypocrites,
That sly speak one thing, another think.
Hateful as hell, pleased with the relish weak,
Drink on outward, till by evanishing cups
Infatuate, they their wily thoughts disclose,
And through intemperance grow a wain swine.
J. Phillips, Cyder, ii. 357.

Slim, adj. [Provincial German, schlimm =

awry.]

1. Weak; slight; unsubstantial.

The church of Rome indeed was allowed to be the principal church. But why? Was it in regard to the succession of St. Peter? No; that was a dim excuse.—Barrow, On the Pope's Supremacy.

Now how vain and dim are all those arguments of fatalists, &c. if compared with the solid and manly encouragement which our religion offers.
—Killingbeck, Sermons, p. 376.

2. Slender; thin of shape.

I was jorg'd on the elbow by a slim young girl of seventeen.—Abraham, Spectator.

As the first element in a compound.

A thin slim-gilted box under a hard shift to wrinkle his lady into a brown; and when he had stuff his guts well, squeezed hard to get out again; but the hole was too little.—Sir W. R. Strange.

3. Worthless.

Slim, s. [A.S. slim.] Viscous mire; glut-tinous substance.

Floy had brick for stone, and slime had they for mortar.—Geometria, xi. 3.

The higher Nileus was
The more it promises; as it ebbs, the seedman
Upon the slime and oozes sows his grain.
Shakespeare, Antony and Cleopatra, ii. 7.

God, out of his goodness, caused the wind to blow, to dry up the abundant slime and mud of the earth, and make the land more firm, and to cleanse the air of thick vapours and unwholesome mists.—Sir W. Raleigh.

Some islands grow upon the top of the sea, from some concretion of slime where the sun leaveth hot, and the sea stirs little.—Bacon, Natural and Experimental History.

And with as small a slime, broad as the gate,
Deep to the roots of hell, the gulf'd beach
They fasten'd.—Milton, Paradise Lost, x. 228

Now drawn grown; larger than when the sun
Engender'd in the Python vale on slime.
Id., i. 229.

Slim, v. a. Make slimy; cover with slime;

make slippery.

Like the crocodile, he slimes thy way, to make thee fall; and when that art down he insidiously try intrapped thee.—Kilham, Reader, 21. (Ord MS.)

Slime, s. Viscosity; glutinous matter.

Divers little creatures are procured by the soil's heat, and the earth's slime.—Austin, Dec Home,
p. 47.

By a weak fermentation a pendulous slime is produced, which answers a pituitous state.—*Sir J.
Pinner, Preternatural State of the Animal Hu-*

Slime, s. State or quality of being slim.

6 F

Slimy, adj. [A.S. slimig.]

1. Overspread with slime.

My loaded hook shall pierce
Their slimy jaws; and, as I draw them up,
I'll think them every one an Antony.
Shakespeare, Antony and Cleopatra, ii. 5.

Some lay in dead men's skulls; and in those holes,
Where eyes did once inhabit, there were crept,
As 'twere in seven of eyes, reflecting suns,
That would the slimy bottom of the deep,
And mock'd the dead bones that lay scatter'd by.

Id., Richard III., i. 4.

They have redwells about them, which is a sign of a slimy dryness.—Id.

The rest are all by bad example led,
And in their father's slimy track they tread.
J. Dryden, Jew, Translation of Juvenal, xiv. 46.

Shells of slow base-bearing snails do creep
Over the ripe fruitage, paring slimy tracks
In the sleek rind.
J. Phillips, Cyder, i. 421.

2. Viscous; glutinous.

Then bade from out hell-wards, into the waste,
Wide marshy of chaos, damp and dark,
Flooding upon the waters, what they met
Solid or slimy, as in raging sea,
Tost up and down, together crowded drove.

Milton, Paradise Lost, x. 281.

The astrollogical undertakers would raise men like vegetables, out of some fat and slimy soil, well dressed by the kindly heat of the sun, and impregnated with the influence of the stars.—Butler.

Yea! slimy things did creep with legs,
Upon the slimy sea.—Coleridge, Ancient Mariner.

Sliness. Attribute suggested by Sly;

designing artifice. (See Styly.)

By an excellent faculty in mimicry, my correspondent can assume my air, and give my taciturnity a sliness, which diverts more than anything I could say.—Abraham.

- Sling, s.

1. Missive weapon made by a strap and two strings; the stone is lodged in the strap, and thrown by loosing one of the strings.

Brevets be the twangings of the archer's string?
Or singing stones from the Phœnician sling?
Southey, Poetical Works of Job.

Sling have so much greater swiftness than a stone thrown from the hand, by how much the end of the sling is further off from the shoulder joint,
the center of motion.—Bishop Wilkins.

The Tiberian king
Laid by the lance, and took him to the sling;
Three whirling the thong around his head, and threw;

The heated lead half melted as it flew.
Drayden, Translation of the Æneid, ix. 736.

Whirl'd from a sling, or from an engine thrown Amidst the fœces as flies a mighty stone,
So flew the beast.
Id., Translation from Virgil, Æneid, Milnes and Abbot.

2. Throw; stroke.

At sling
Of thy victorious arm, well-plac'd sea,
Both sin and death, and yawning grave at last Through chaos hurl'd, obstruct the mouth of hell.
Milton, Paradise Lost, x. 453.

3. Hanging bannage, in which a wounded limb is sustained.

4. Drink compounded of spirits and water;
grog.

A citizen of Philadelphia, once of a fair and sober character, drank today for many years, as his constant drink; from this he proceeded to drink more.
After a while, nothing would satisfy him but strong made of equal parts of rum and water, with a little sugar.—Dr. Rush, On the Effects of Ardent Spirits, (Ord MS.)

Sling, v. a. [A.S. slingan.]

1. Throw by a sling.

2. Throw; cast.

We stampt upon the coast where Ætina lies Horrid and waste; its entrails fraught with fire,
That now roasts out dark fumes and pitchy clouds . . .
Increased, or tears up mountains by the roots,
Or *sling*s a broken rock aloft in air.
Abraham, Milton's Style imitated

3. Hang loosely by a string.

From rivers drive the kids, and sling your hook;
And I'd wash 'em in the shadow brook.
Drayden, Translation of Virgil, Æneid, iii. 150.

4. Move by means of a rope.

Census I saw amidst the shouts
Of countrymen and busy care to sling
His horses round ashore. Drayden, Cœmonea, l. 1.

They sling up one of their largest hounds, then rolled it towards my hand, and bent out the top.—Swift, Gulliver's Travels.

Sling-stone, s. Stone hurled from a sling.

The arrow cannot make him fly; sling-stones are turned with him into stubble. Job, xii. 28.

9:3

Slinger. s. One who slings or uses the sling.
The slingers went about it, and smote it.—2 Kings, iii. 25.

Slunk. v. n. preter. slunk. [A.S. slincan.]
Sneak; steal out of the way.

We will slunk away in supper time, discomfit us at my lodging, and return all in an hour.—Shakespeare, Merchant of Venice, ii. 1.

As we do turn our backs
From our companion, thrown into his grave,
So his familiars from his buried fortune
Slunk all away.

Id., Timon of Athens, iv. 2.
Not far from hence doth dwell
A cunning man, light Sidrophil,
To whom all people far and near
On deep importances repair;
When brass and pewter lap to stray,
And linen slinks out of the way.

Beller, Hudibras, ii. 3. 103.
She slunk into a corner where she lay trembling till the company went their way.—Sir R. L'Estrange.

He would pinch the children in the dark, and then slink into a corner, as if nobody had done it.—Arbuthnot, History of John Bull.

A wren once made shift to slink
In at a corn-loft through a chink;
But having amply stuff'd his skin,
Could not get out as he got in.

Pope, Imitations of Horace, b. i. ep. vii.
We have a suspicious, fearful, and constrained countenance, often turning back, and slinking through narrow lanes.—Swift.

Slunk. v. a. Cast; miscarry of: (condemned by Johnson as a low word).

To prevent a mare's slinking her foal in snowy weather, keep her where she may have good spring water to drink.—Mortimer, Husbandry.

Slunk. adj. Produced before its time: (applied to the young of a beast).

This membrane does not properly appertain to dogs, &c., yet it may be found in slunk calves.—Student, vol. i. p. 340.

Slip. v. n. [A.S. slipan.]

1. Slide; not to tread firm.

If a man walks over a narrow bridge when he is drunk, it is no wonder that he forgets his caution while he overlooks his danger; but he who is sober, and views that nice separation between himself and the devouring deep, so that, if he should slip, he sees his grave gaping under him, surely must needs take every step with horror and the utmost caution.—South, Sermons.

A skilful dancer on the ropes slips willfully, and makes a swerving stumble that you may think him in great hazard, while he is only giving you a proof of his dexterity.—Dryden.

If after some distinguished leap
He drops his pole, and seems to slip,
Straight gathering all his active strength,
He rises higher half his length. Prior, Alma, ii. 11.

2. Slide; glide.

Oh Iadon, happy Iadon! rather slide than run
by her, lest thou should'st make her legs slip from her.—Sir P. Sidney.

They trim their feathers, which makes them oily and slippery, that the water may slip off them.—Mortimer, Husbandry.

3. Move or fly out of place.

Sometimes the ankle-bone is apt to turn out on either side by reason of relaxation, which though you reduce, yet, upon the least walking on it, the bone slips out again.—Wiseeman, Surgery.

4. Sneak; slink.

From her most beastly company
I can refrain, in mind to slip away,
Soon as appear'd safe opportunity.

When Judas, therefore, saw that his lust slip'd away, and that the battle press'd upon him, he was sore troubled in mind.—1 Maccabees, ix. 7.

I'll slip down out of my lodging.—Dryden, Don Sebastian.

Thus one tradesman slips away,
To give his partner falser play. Prior, Alma, ii. 150.

In the meantime the cribbage went on, and Mrs.
Toggers went off; for the youngest gentleman, dropping her society, began to take Miss Pecksniff to the play. He also began, as Mrs. Toggers said, to slip home 'in his dinner-bus', and to get away from 'the office' at unholy season; and twice, as he informed Mrs. Toggers himself, he received anonymous letters, including cards from furniture warehouses.—Dickens, Martin Chuzzlewit, ch. xxiii.

5. Glide; pass unexpectedly or imperceptibly.

The banks of either side seeming arms of the loving earth, that fain would embrace it, and the river a wanton nymph, which still would slip from it.—Sir P. Sidney.

The blessing of the Lord shall slip from thee without doing thee any good, if thou hast not ceased from doing evil.—Jeremy Taylor.

Slipping from thy mother's eye, thou went'st
Alone into the temple; there was found

Among the gravest rabbies disputant,
On points and questions sitting Mow's chair.

Milton, Paradise Regained, iv. 216.
Thrice around his neck his arms he threw,
And thrice the sitting shadow slipp'd away.

Like winds, or empty dreams that fly the day.
Dryden, Translation of the Æneid, vi. 650.

Though with pale cheeks, wet beard, and dropping hair,

None but my Geyx could appear so fair;
I would have strid'd him with a strict embrace,

But through my arms he slip'd, and vanish'd from the place. Id., Translation from Ovid, House of Sleep.

When a corn slips out of their paws, they take hold of it again.—Addison, Spectator.

Wise men watch every opportunity, and retrieve every mis-spent hour which has slipped from them.—Rogers.

I will impute no defect to those two years which have slipped by since.—Swift, Letter to Pope.

6. Fall into fault or error.

There is one that slippeth in his speech, but not from his heart.—Revelations, xix. 16.

An eloquent man is known far and near; but a man of understanding knoweth when he slippeth.—Id. xxi. 7.

If he had been as you,
And you as he, you would have slip'd like him;
But he like you would not have been so stern.

Shakespeare, Measure for Measure, ii. 2.

7. Creep by oversight.

Some mistakes may have slip'd into it; but others will be prevented.—Pope.

8. Escape; fall away out of the memory.

By the hearer it is still presumed, that if they be let slip for the present, what good soever they contain is lost, and that without all hope of recovery.—Hooker, Ecclesiastical Polity.

The mathematician proceeds upon propositions he has once demonstrated; and though the demonstration may have slip'd out of his memory, he builds upon the truth.—Addison.

Use the most proper methods to retain the ideas you have acquired; for the mind is ready to let many of them slip, unless some pains be taken to fix them upon the memory.—Watts.

I felt very much inclined to address him upon the subject, and endeavour, by gently pulling the check-string, to remind him that there was such a person as Gilbert Gurney in the world; a circumstance which, it seemed to me, had entirely slipped his memory.—Theodore Hook, Gilbert Gurney, vol. ii.
ch. iii.

Slip. v. a.

1. Convey secretly.

In this officious attendance upon his mistress he tried to slip a powder into her drink.—Arbuthnot, History of John Bull.

2. Lose by negligence.

You are not now to think what's best to do,
As in beginnings; but what must be done,
Being thus enter'd, and slip no advantage
That may secure you.

B. Jonson, Catiline's Conspiracy.
Let us not slip the occasion, whether scorn
Or satiate fury yield it from our face.

Milton, Paradise Lost, l. 178.
One ill man may not think of the mischief he could do, or slip the occasion.—Sir R. L'Estrange.

To slip the market, when thus fairly offered, is great imprudence.—Collier.

One thing I would not let slip: I took notice that now poor Christian was so confounded, that he did not know his own voice.—Bunyan, Pilgrim's Progress.

For watching occasions to correct others in their discourse, and not to slip any opportunity of shew-ing their talents, scholars are most blam'd.—Locke.

Thus far my author has slip'd his first design; not a letter of what has been yet said promoting any ways the trial.—Bishop Atterbury.

3. Part twigs from the main body by laceration.

The runners spread from the master-roots, and have little sprouts or roots to them, which, being cut four or five inches long, make excellent wts:
the branches also may be slipped and planted.—Mortimer, Husbandry.

4. Escape from; leave silly.

This bird you aim'd at, though you hit it not.—
Oh, sir, Lucendo slipp'd me like his greyhound,
Which runs himself, and catches for his master.

Shakespeare, Twelfth of the Shrew, v. 2.

5. Let loose.

On Eryx altars three fat calves he lays;
A lamb new fallen to the stormy sea;
Then slips his haulters, and his anchors weighs.

Dryden, Translation of the Æneid, v. 1000.

6. Let a dog loose.

The impatient greyhound, slip'd from far,
Bounds o'er the glebe, to course the fearful hare.

Dryden.

7. Throw off anything that holds one.

Forced to alight, my horse slipped his bridle, and ran away.—Swift.

8. Pass over negligently.

If our author gives us a list of his doctrines, with what reason can that that inducences be slipped over?—Bishop Atterbury.

Slip. s.

1. Act of slipping; false step.

2. Error; mistake; fault.

There put on him

What forgeries you please: marry, none so rank

As may dishonour him.

But, sir, such wanton, wild, and usual slips,

As are most known to youth and liberty.

Shakespeare, Hamlet, ii. 1.

Of the promise there made, our master hath failed us, by slip of memory, or injury of time.—Sir R. L'Estrange.

One casual slip is enough to weigh down the faithful service of a long life.—Sir R. L'Estrange.

Alonso, mark the characters;
Thou knowest my father's hand; observe it well,
And if the impostor's pen have made a slip,
That shows it counterfeit, mark that and save me.

Dryden, Don Sebastian, v. 1.
Lighting upon a very easy slip I have made, in putting one seemingly indifferent word for another, that discovery opened to me this present view.—
Locke.

Any little slip is more conspicuous and observable in a good man's conduct than in another's, as it is not of a piece with his character.—Addison, Spectator.

Nine! Yes, three times before I get out of my slips; twice at Hackney boarding-school. I don't reckon my guitar-master. Then Frank Frispy, Mr. Pettico. No, sir, only eight, for I never could listen to the handsome laymaker of Duck Lane.—
O'Keefe, Fontainebleau, iii. 2.

3. Twig taken from the main stock.

In truth, they are fewer, when they come to be discussed by reason, than otherwise they seem, when by heat of contention they are divided into many slips, and of every branch an heap is made.—Hooker, Ecclesiastical Polity.

Thy mother took into her blameful bed
Some stern untutor'd churl, and noble stook
Was graft with crab-tree slip, whose fruit thou art.

Shakespeare, Henry VI. Part II. iii. 2.

Trees are apparelled with flowers or herbs by boring holes in their bodies, and putting into them earth holpen with muck, and setting seeds or slips of violets in the earth.—Bacon.

So have I seen some tender slip,
Saved with care from winter's nip,
The pride of her carnation train,
Pluck'd up by some unskilful swain.

Milton, Epitaph on the Marchioness of Winchester.

They are propagated not only by the seed, but many also by the root, and some by slips or cuttings.

—Ray, Wisdom of God manifested in the Works of the Creation.

4. Leash or string in which a dog is held, from its being so made as to slip or become loose by relaxation of the hand.

I see you stand like greyhounds in the slips,
Straining upon the start.

Shakespeare, Henry V. iii. 1.

God is said to harden the heart permissively, but not operatively, nor effectively; as he who only lets loose a greyhound out of the slip, is said to bound him at the hare.—Bishop Burnham.

5. Escape; desertion.

The more shame for her goodbyahip,
To give so near a friend the slip.

Butler, Hudibras.

The daw did not like his companion, and gave him the slip, and away into the woods.—Sir R. L'Estrange.

Their explanations are not yours, and will give you the slip.—Locke.

6. Counterfeit piece of money, being brass covered with silver.

What counterfeit did I give you?—
The slip, sir, the slip.

Shakespeare, Rom. and Juliet, ii. 4.

There are many slips and counterfeits;
Doubt is fruitful. B. Jonson, Epigrams, 64.

7. Long narrow piece.

Between these eastern and western mountains lies a slip of lower ground, which runs across the island.—Addison.

8. Stuff found in the troughs of grindstones, on which edge-tools have been ground.

The filings of steel, and such small particles of edgetools as are worn away upon the grindstone, commonly called slips, is used to the same purpose in dyeing of silks.—Sir W. Petty, in Bishop Sprat's History of the Royal Society, p. 236.

9. Particular quantity of yarn.

10. Kind of loose frock, or petticoat.

Slip. em. v. a. Put on rather hastily: (as,
'To slip on one's clothes'). Colloquial.

slipboard. s. Board sliding in grooves.

I ventured to draw back the slipboard on the roof, contrived on purpose to let in air.—Swift, Gulliver's Travels.

slipknot. s. Bow-knot; knot easily untied.

They draw off so much line as is necessary, and fasten the rest upon the line-rowl with a slipknot, (that no more line turn off).—Mason, Mechanical Exercises.

slipper, or slipshoe. s. [A.S.] Shoe without leather behind, into which the foot slips easily.

Fair lined slippers for the cold,
With buckles of the purest gold. Sir W. Raleigh.
If he went abroad too much, she'd use
To give him slippers, and lock up his shoes. King.
Thrice rung the bell, the slipper knock'd the ground,
And the press'd watch retrun'd a silver sound.
Pope, Rape of the Lock, canto 1.

slipper. adj. [A.S. slipur.] Slippery; not firm. Rare: slippery being the usual term.

A trustless state of earthly things, and slipper hope
Of mortal men, that swinke and sweat for nought. Spenser.

The last is slow, or slipper as the simile,
Oft changing names of innocence and crime.
Mirror for Magistrates, p. 310.

slipped. adj. Wearing slippers.

The lean and slipped pantaloon.
Shakespeare, As you like it, ii. 7.

As the second element in a compound.

The slipper-slipper'd virgin lightly trod.
T. Warton, Triumph of Isis.

slipperiness. s. Attribute suggested by Slippery.

1. State or quality of being slippery; smoothness; glibness.

We do not only fall by the slipperiness of our tongues, but we deliberately discipline them to mischief.—Dr. H. More, Government of the Tongue.
The schirrus may be distinguished by its want of inflammation in the skin, its smoothness, and slipperiness deep in the breast.—Sharp, Surgery.

2. Uncertainty; want of firm footing.

To this all fluid slipperiness and transitory migrations seem giddy and fathery.—Donne, Letter to Sir H. G. Poems, p. 283.

Let his ways be darknesses and slipperiness.—L. Addison, Account of the present State of the Jews, p. 209.

The moisture and slipperiness of the way at this time, added to the sleepiness of it, greatly increased our labour in ascending it.—Maunderell, Travels, p. 7.

slippery. adj.

1. Smooth; glib.

They trim their feathers, which makes them oily and slippery, that the water slips off.—Mortimer, Husbandry.

Oily substances only lubricate and make the bowels slippery.—Aronthod.

2. Not affording firm footing.

Their way shall be unto them as slippery ways in the darkness.—Jeremiah, xxiii. 12.

Did you know the art o' the court,
As hard to leave as keep; whose top to climb,
Is certain falling; or an slippery, that
The frar's as hard as falling.

Shakespeare, Cymbeline, iii. 3.

His promise to trust to an slippery ice.
Tusser, Five Hundred Points of Good Husbandry.

The slippery tops of human state,
The gilded pinnacles of fate. Cowley.

The lighter they are raised, the giddier they are; the more slippery is their standing, and the deeper the fall.—Sir R. L. Estrange.

The highest hill is the most slippery place,
And fortune mocks us with a smiling face.
Sir J. Denham, O. Providence.

Beanty, like ice, our footing down betray;
Who can tread sure on the smooth slippery way?

As they splash in the blood of the slippery street.
Drayton.

Byron, Siege of Corinth.

3. Hard to hold; hard to keep.

Thus surely bound, yet be not overbold,
The slippery god will try to loose his hold.
Drayton, Translation of the Georgics, iv. 585.

4. Not standing firm.

When they fall, as being slippery standers,
The love that leav'd on them, as slippery too,
Both one pluck down another, and together
Die in the dust.

Shakespeare, Troilus and Cressida, iii. 3.

5. Uncertain; changeable; mutable; unstable.

Oh world, thy slippery turns! Friends now that sworn,

Whose double bosoms seem to wear one heart,
Whose hours, whose bed, whose meal and exercise,
Are still together; who twine, as twere, in love
Unseparable, shall within this hour,
On a dissension of a doit, break out
To bitterest enmity. Shakespeare, Coriolanus, iv. 4.

He looking down
With scorn or pity on the slippery state
Of kings, will tread upon the neck of fate.
Sir J. Denham, The Sophy.

6. Not certain in its effect.

One sure trick is better than a hundred slippery ones.—Sir R. L. Estrange.

7. Not chaste.

My wife is slippery. Shakespeare, Winter's Tale, i. 2.

Slippy. adj. Slippery; easily sliding.

From lit, being moist and slippy, she doth slip.
Sir J. Davies, Witte's Pilgrimage, sign. B. 2.

The white of an egg is rosy, slippy, and nutritious.—Sir J. Floyer.

Slipshod. adj. Having the shoes not pulled up at the heels, but barely slipped on.

The slipshod pretence from his master's door
Had pared the dirt, and sprinkled round the floor.
Swift, Description of Morning.

Slipskin. adj. Escaping by sophistry; elusive.

A pretty slipskin conveyance to sift man into no man. Milton, Animadversions on a Defence of the Humble Remonstrance.

Sliplop. s.

1. Bad liquor. Vulgarism.

2. Weak writing or talking.

Slipstrag. s. One who has loosened himself from restraint; prodigal; spendthrift.

Young rascals or scoundrels, raskells, or slipstrags.—Cotgrave, in voce Marvaille.

Slipthrift. s. Spendthrift. Obsolete.

Thus it is in the house of prodigals, drinking slipthrifts, and Bellias.—Granger, On Ecclesiastes, p. 273: 1031.

Sliah. s. Slash.

What! this a sleeve?
Here's snip and slip, and slash and slash,
Like to a censer in a barber's shop.
Shakespeare, Twelfth Night, iv. 3.

Slit. v. a. pret. and part. slit. [A.S. slitan.]

1. Cut longwise.

To make plants medicinal, slit the root, and infuse into it the medicine, as hellebore, opium, scammony, and then bind it up.—Bacon, Natural and Experimental History.

The doors of Argimua had their ears divided, occasioned at first by slitting the ears.—Sir T. Browne, Vulgar Errors.

Had it hit
The upper part of him, the blow
Had slit, as sure as that below.
Butler, Hudibras, i. 2. 822.

A liberty might be left to the judges to inflict death, or some notorious mark, by slitting the nose, or brands upon the cheeks.—Sir W. Temple.

If a tinned or plated body, which, being of an even thickness, appears all over of an uniform colour, should be slit into threads, or broken into fragments of the same thickness with the plate, I see no reason why every thread or fragment should not keep its colour.—Sir I. Newton, On Opticks.

He took a fork
To slit my tongue, and make me speak. Swift.

2. Cut in general.

Comes the blind Fury, with the abhorred shears,
And slits the thin-spun life. Milton, Lycidas, 75.

Slit. s. Long cut, or narrow opening.

In St. James's fields is a conduit of brick, unto which joineth a low vault, and at the end of that a round house of stone; and in the brick conduit there is a window, and in the round house a slit or rift of some little breadth: if you cry out in the rift, it will make a fearful roaring at the window.—Bacon.

Where the tender rinds of trees disclose
Their shooting trunk, a swelling knot there grows:
Just in that place a narrow slit we make,
Then other buds from bearing trees we take;
Inserted thus, the wounded rind we close.
Drayton, Translation of the Georgics, ii. 104.

I found, by looking through a slit or oblong hole, which was narrower than the pupil of my eyes, and held close to it parallel to the prism, I could see the circles much distincter, and visible to a far greater number, than otherwise.—Sir I. Newton.

Slither. v. a. Slide.

Slitter. s. One who cuts or slashes.

Sliver. v. n. [A.S. slifan.] Sliver.Sliver. v. a.

1. Split; divide longwise; tear off longwise.

Liver of blaspheming Jew,
Gall of coat, and sape of yew,
Stood in the moon's eclipse. Shakespeare, Macbeth, iv. 1.

2. Cut or cleave in general.

Sliver. s. Branch torn off.

There on the pendant boughs, her coronet weeds
Clam'ring to hang, an envious sliver broke,
When down her weedy trophies and herself
Fell in the weeping brook. Shakespeare, Hamlet, iv. 7.

Slonks. s. pl. [?] Underpieces of a cart which keep the bottom together.Sllobber. v. a. Slaver; spill upon; slabber.

Mr. Heidelberg lost his election for member of parliament because I would not demand myself to be sllobbered about by drunken shoemakers, beastly chum-mongers, and tallow-chandlers.—G. Colman and D. Garrick, The Claudine Marriage, iii. 2.

Sllobber. s. Slaver; liquor spilled.Sllobber. adj. Moist; dank; floody.

I will sell my dukedom,
To buy a sllobber and dirty farm
In that nook-shotten isle of Albion. Shakespeare, Henry V. iii. 5.

Sllobber weather.—Swift, Letters.

Slöcken. v. n. Slake; quench.

The poor maid, crying miserably out for water, was almost slöcked before she could get redress.
—The Prophane Schisms of the Brownists, p. 26: 1612.

Sloe. s. [A.S. slu.] Fruit of the blackthorn, small wild plum; tree which bears it.

When you fell your underwoods, now lawn and sloes in them, and they will furnish you, without doing of your woods any hurt.—Mortimer, Husbandry.

Sloem. s. Gentle sleep or slumber.Sloemy. adj. Sluggish; slow.Sloop. s. [Fr. chaloupe.] Small ship, commonly (but not always) with only one mast.Slop. v. a. [?]

1. Drink grossly and greedily.

2. Soil by letting water or other liquor fall.

Slop. s.

1. Mean and vile liquor of any kind: (generally some nauseous or useless medicinal liquor).

The sick husband here wanted for neither slopes nor doctors.—Sir R. L. Estrange.

But thou, winter slop she will have bought,
Be thankful, and supply the deadly draught.
Drayton, Translation of Juvenal, vi. 773.

2. Soil or spot made by water or other liquors fallen upon the place.

Slop. s. See Slops.Slop-seller. s. One who sells ready-made clothes.

The slop-seller is a person erect in the navy, I mean to monopolize the vending of clothing only, but since the restoration of king Charles the second; nor then, but by degrees, as he could make interest, and have interest in the affair.—Maydman, Naval Speculation, p. 120: 1691.

Slop-shop. s. Place where ready-made clothes are sold.Slope. adj. [?] Oblique; not perpendicular:

(generally used of arclivity or declivity; forming an angle greater or less with the plane of the horizon).

Where there is a greater quantity of water, and space enough, the water moveth with a slope rise and fall.—Bacon.

Murmuring waters fall
Down the slope hills, dispersed, or in a lake,
Tint to the fringed bank with myrtle crown'd
Her crystal mirror holds, under their streams.
Milton, Paradise Lost, iv. 280.

Slope. s.

1. Oblique direction; anything obliquely directed.

2. Declivity; ground cut or formed with declivity.

Growing upon slopes is caused for that moss, as it is enough of moisture, as the water must but slide, not be in a pool. Bacon.

My lord advances with majestic mien,
Smil'd with the mighty pleasure to be seen . . .
And when up ten steep slopes you've drag'd your thighs,
Just at his study door he'll bless your eyes.
Pope, Moral Essays, iv. 127.

Slope. adv. Obliquely; not perpendicularly.

Uriel...
Return'd on that bright beam, whose point now rais'd
Bore him slope downward to the sun, now fall'n.
Milton, Paradise Lost, iv. 380.

Slope. v. a. Form to obliquity or declivity;
direct obliquely.

Though blindforn be lodged, and trees blown
down,
Though palaces and pyramids do slope
Their heads to their foundations.

On each land the flames,
Drive backward, slope their pointing spires, and
In idyls, leave 't the midst a horrid vale.
Milton, Paradise Lost, i. 222.

Slope. v. n. Take an oblique or declivous direction.

Up starts a palace, lo! the obelisk base
Slopes at its foot, the woods its sides surround.
Pope, Imitations of Horace, b. i. ep. 1.
There is a straight hole in every cat's nest half an inch deep; and then it goes down sloping into a place where they have their magazine.—Addison, Spectator.

Slopesness. s. Attribute suggested by Slope;
obliquity; declivity; not perpendicularity.

The Indians give the cover a graceful pendency of slopesness, dividing the whole breadth into nine parts, whereof two shall serve for the elevation of the highest ridge.—Sir H. Walton, Elements of Architecture.

Slopeswise. adj. Obliquely; not perpendicularly.

The Weir is a frith, reaching slopeswise through the Ose from the land to low-water mark, and having in it a boat or cut with an eye-lock; where the fish entering, upon the eye coming back with the ebb, are stopped from issuing out again, forsaken by the water, and left dry on the Ose.—Carew, Survey of Cornwall.

Sloping. part. adj. Taking an oblique direction.

Between the midst and these the gods assign'd
Two habitable seats for human kind;
And cross their limits cut a sloping way,
Which the twelve signs in beauteous order sway.
Dryden, Translation of the Georgics, l. 226.
There is a handsome work of piles made sloping skewer the river, to stop the trees which are cut down and cast in the river.—Sir T. Browne, Travels.

Each letter was of the easy sloping form, which came from its being made with a reed or pen, instead of the stiff form of the hieroglyphics, which were mostly cut in stone.—Shirpe, History of Egypt,
ch. 2.

Slopingly. adv. In a sloping manner; obliquely; not perpendicularly.

These atoms do not descend always perpendicularly, but sometimes slopingly.—Sir K. Digby, Operations and Nature of Man's Soul.

Sloppy. adj. Miry and wet.

Slops. s. generally plural.

1. Trowsers; large and loose breeches;
drawers.

No were the daughters of Sion... misusing as they went... In that day shall the Lord take away the out of the slippers, and the ewles, and the round attires, and the sweet tails, and the bracelets, and the attires of the head, and the slopes.—Book of Hosea, Against Revers of Apparel.

What said master Dumbleton about the satin for my short cloak and slops?—Shakespeare, Henry IV.
Part II. i. 2.

Six great slops,
Bigger than three Dutch boys!
R. Jonson, Alchemist.

2. Ready-made clothes.

Slop. n. a. Strike or clash hard; slam: (as 'To slop a door').

Slop. s. [A.S. slotinge.] Truck of a deer.

Often from his [the hart's] feed
The does of him do find, or thorough skillful heed
The huntsman by his slop, or breaking earth, perceives

Where he hath gone to lodge.
Dryden, Polyolbion, song xlii.
He leaves the noisome stench of his rude slop behind him.—Milton, Coleridge.

Sloth. s. [A.S. slawð.]

1. Slowness; tardiness.

These cardinals trifle with me: I abhor
This dilatory sloth and tricks of Rome.
Shakespeare, Henry VIII. ii. 4.

2. Laziness; sluggishness; idleness.

Falsely of heart, light of ear, bloody of hand,
Hog in sloth, fox in stealth.
Shakespeare, King Lear, iii. 4.
953

Fame in the world, high titles, and rich prey Shall change their course to pleasure, ease, and sloth.
Milton, Paradise Lost, xi. 703.

3. Animal of the genus Bradypus, so called from its sluggish habits and motions.

The sloth is an animal of so slow a motion, that he will be three or four days at least in climbing up and coming down a tree; and to go the length of fifty paces on plain ground, requires a whole day.—
Greaves.

In the two-toed sloths the vertebral formula is cervical, seven; dorsal, twenty-three; lumbar, three;
sacral, eight; caudal, four; or dorsal, twenty-four;
lumbar, two; or dorsal, twenty-three; lumbar, four;
caudal, seven; the number being essentially the same. The second and third cervicals some-times entirely... No any of the great extinct around sloths have more than seven cervical vertebrae.—
Queen, Anatomy of Vertebrata, vol. iii. p. 400.

Sloth. v. n. Slug; lie idle. Obsolete.

Slothful. adj. Idle; lazy; sluggish; inactive; indolent; dull of motion.

He also that is slothful in his work is brother to him that is a great wander.—Proverbs, xvi.
The desire of the slothful killeth him; for his hands refuse to labour.—Ibid., xxi. 25.

Flora commends, said she, those nymphs and knights,

Who lived in slothful ease and home delights,
Who never acts of honour durst pursue,
The men inglorious knights, the ladies all untrue.
Dryden, The Flower and the Leaf, 561.

The very soul of the slothful does effectually but lie drowsing in his body, and the whole man is totally given up to his senses.—Sir R. L'Estrange.

Another is bent to all the motives to piety, by indulging an idle, slothful temper.—Laur.

Slothfully. adv. In a slothful manner; idly.

Slothfulness. s. Attribute suggested by Slothful; idleness; laziness; sluggish-ness; inactivity.

Slothfulness entitles into a deep sleep, and an idle soul shall suffer labour.—Proverbs, xii. 15.

To trust to labour without prayer, without impiety and prodigality; it maketh light of the providence of God; and although it be not the intent of a religious mind, yet it is the fault of those men whose religion wadeth light of a mature judgement to direct it, when we join with our prayers slothfulness and neglect of convenient labour.—Hooker, Ecclesiastical Polity.

Sloven. s. [connected with sluck.]

1. Idle fellow; one who is stupid, heavy, or clownish.

No weather pleaseth... it is colder; therefore the sloven will not plow; it raineth; the land will be too heavy!—Granger, On Ecclesiastes, p. 225; 1621.

A fool, great, sloven with heavy eyes,
Dr. H. More, Life of the Saint, iii. 8.
Begin thy carols, then, thou vomiting sloven;
Be thine the cask staff, or mine the peach.
Gay, Shepherd's Week, Monday, 30.

2. Downcast look; depression of the head;
ungainly, clownish gait or manner.

Our doctor has every quality which can make a man useful; but, alas! he hath a sort of sloven in his walk.—Swift.

Sloven. v. n. Have a downcast clownish look, gait, or manner.

Sloven. n. a. Press; press down: (as, to sloven the hat).

Slovened. part. adj. Pressed down.

A form, wrapped in a mantle, with a slovened hat and shadowy plume, issued from the bushes, and was lost in a moment amongst the ruins of ancient and of modern buildings, with which... the domains formerly termed York House was now encumbered in all directions.—Sir W. Scott, Peril of the Peak, ch. xxxix.

Slovening. part. adj. Clownish; ungainly.

The awkward, negligent, clumsy, and slovening manner of a booby.—Laur Chesterfield.
The clown could see his slovening gait in his looking-glass, but where was the mirror that should present to this man the thousand wants of his rude uncultured mind?—Kent's Wingham, ch. ix.

Sloven. s. [A.S. slow.] Deep miry place;
hole full of dirt.

The Scots were in a fallow field, whereinto the English could not enter, but over a cross ditch and a sloven; in passing whereof many of the English horses were plunged, and some mired.—Sir J. Flug- scart.

The ways being foul, twenty to one,
He's here stuck in a sloven and overthrown.
Milton, Epitaph on Hobson the Cambridge Carrier.

A carter had laid his wagon fast in a sloven.—
Sir R. L'Estrange.

Sloven. s. Skin which a serpent casts off at his periodical renovation.

They fates open their hands, let thy blood and spirit entrance them; and to insure thyself to what thou art like to be, cast thy humble sloven, and appear fresh.—Shakespeare, Twelfth Night, ii. 5, letter.

When the mind is quicken'd,
The organs, though defunct and dead before,
Break up their drowsy grave, and newly move,
With casted sloven and fresh vigour.

Id., Henry V. iv. 1.
Oh let not sleep my closing eyes invade
In open plains, or in the secret shade.

When he renew'd in all the speckled pride
Of pious youth, how cast his sloven aside;
And in his summer liv'ry rolls along,
Breech and flourishing his forked tongue.

Dryden, Translation of the Georgics, iii. 601.

The sloven of an English viper, that is, the cuticula they cast off twice every year, at spring and fall; the separation begins at the head, and is finished in twenty-four hours.—Greaves.

The body, which we leave behind in this visible world, is as the womb or sloven from whence we issue, and are born into the other.—Id., Comminutio Sacra.

3. It is used by Shakespeare simply for the skin.

As the snake, roll'd in a flowery bank,
With shining checker'd sloven, doth slay a child,
That for the beauty thinks it excellent.

Shakespeare, Henry VI. Part II. iii. 1.

4. Part that separates from a foul sore.

At the next dressing I found a sloven come away with the dressings, which was the scord.—Wise- man, Surgeon, On Ulcers.

Sloven. v. n. Part from the sound flesh.

Sloveny. adj. Miry; boggy; muddy.

That custom should not be allowed, of cutting scraps in low grounds sloveny underneath, which turn into bog.—Swift.

Sloven. s. [Danish, sløv = careless.] Person indolently negligent of cleanliness; man dirtily dressed.

The ministers came to church in handsome lin-day apparel, and that himself did not think them beautified by the law of God to go like slovens.—Hooker, Ecclesiastical Polity.

Affect in things about these cleanliness,
That all may gladly bear thee as a flower;
Sloven take up their stock of noisance
Beforehand, and anticipate their last hour.

You laugh, half bean, half sloven if I stand;
My wig half powder, and all snuff my head.

Pope, Imitations of Horace, b. i. ep. i.
Their methods various, but alike their aim:
The sloven and the fop are the same.

Young, Love of Fame, ii. 252.
The negligent sloven
Had shut out the party in shutting his oven.

Goldsmith, The Hunch of Uinow.

Slovenliness. s. Attribute suggested by Slovenly.

1. Indecent negligence of dress; neglect of cleanliness.

Slovenliness is the worst sign of a hard student, and civility the best exercise of the remiss; yet not to be exact in the phrase of compliment, or gestures of courtesy.—Sir H. Walton.

'Tis possible for Diogenes his cynical slovenliness to trample on Plato's splendid garments with more pride than Plato wore them.—Jeremy Taylor, Arti- ficial Haudocence, p. 104.

2. Any negligence or carelessness.

Whether the multitude of sects, and profane slovenliness in God's service, (in too many) have not been guilty of the increase of profaneness amongst us.—Bishop Hall, Defence of the Humble Reverendness, § 16.

Vander Cabell seems to have been a careless artist;
and discovers great slovenliness in many of his works; but in those which he has studied, and carefully executed, there is great beauty.—Gilpin, Essay on Prints, p. 115.

Slovenly. adj. Negligent of dress; negligent of neatness; not neat; not cleanly; coarse.

That slovenly cynick.—Bishop Hall, Reuer- ence, p. 254.

Our reverential fear of the God of heaven calls us to eschew all sordid incuriousness, and slovenly neglect, in his immediate service.—Ibid., p. 258.

Asop at last found out a slovenly lay fellow,
Jolling at his case, as if he had nothing to do.—Sir R.
L'Estrange.

His [Wicliffe's] style is everywhere coarse and slovenly, though sometimes animated by a popular force or boldness of expression.—Craik, History of English Literature, vol. i. p. 348.

Slovenly. adv. In a coarse inelegant manner.

As I hang my clothes on somewhat slovenly, I no sooner went in but he frowned upon me.—Pope.

Slowness. s. Want of neatness. Rare.

Our gayness and our ill are all bombast'd
With rainy marching in the painful field;
There's not a piece of feather in our host,
And time hath worn us into slowness.

Shakespeare, Henry V. iv. 3.

Slow. adj. [A.S. slaw, slaw.]

1. Not swift; not quick of motion; not speedy; not having velocity; wanting celerity.

Me thou think'st not slow,
Who since the morning hour set out from heaven,
Where God resides, and on mid-day arrived
In Eden, distances incredible.

Milton, Paradise Lost, viii. 110.

Where the motion is no slow as not to supply a constant train of fresh ideas to the senses, the sense of motion is lost.—Locke.

Slow sinks, more lovely ere his race be run,
Along Morea's hills the setting sun.

Byron, The Corsair.

In Composition. Used adverbially, and equivalent to slowly.

This slow-paced soul, which late did cleave
T' a body, and went but by the body's leave,
Twenty perches or thirty mile a day,
Despatches in a minute all the way
'Twixt heaven and earth.

Donne.

To the shame of slow-endeavouring art
Thy easy numbers flow.

Milton, Epitaph on Shakespeare.

This day's death denounc'd, if ought I see,
Will prove no misbless, but a slow-paced evil,
A long day's dying to augment our pain.

Id., Paradise Lost, x. 653.

For eight slow-circling years by tyrants lost,
Pope, Translation of the Odyssey.

Some denounce urged

T' explore the fraud with guile oppos'd to guile,
Slow-pacing thrice around the insidious jule. Ibid.

2. Not happening in a short time.

These changes in the heav'n, though slow, produced
Like change on sea and land.

Milton, Paradise Lost, x. 692.

3. Not ready; not prompt; not quick.

I am slow of speech, and a slow tongue.—Rantius, iv. 10.

Slow ear shall not be slow, mine eye not shut.

Milton, Paradise Lost, iii. 103.

The slow of speech make in dreams unprovoked harangues, or converse readily in languages that they are but little acquainted with.—Addison.

For though in dreadful whirled we hung
High on the broken wave,

I knew thou wert not slow to hear,

Nor impudent to save.

Id., Odes.

4. Dull; inactive; tardy; sluggish.

Fix'd on defence, the Trojans are not slow
To guard their shore from an expected foe.

Dryden.

5. Not hasty; acting with deliberation; not vehement.

The Lord is merciful, and slow to anger.—Book of Common Prayer.

He that is slow to wrath is of great understanding.
—Proverbs, xiv. 29.

The politick and wise
Are slow things with circumspective eyes. Pope.

6. Dull; heavy in wit.

Slow. v. a. Omit by dilatoriness; delay; procrastinate. Rare.

Now do you know the reason of this haste?

I would I knew and why it should be slow'd.

Shakespeare, Romeo and Juliet, iv. 1.

Will you overflow

The fields, thereby my march to slow?

Sir A. Gorges, Translation of Lucan, b. ii.

Slowback. s. Lubber; idle fellow.

The slowness and lax bones will none of this.—Dr. Pever, Antiquity's Triumph over Novelty, p. 63: 1619.

Slowly. adv. In a slow manner.

1. Not speedily; not with celerity; not with velocity.

The gnome rejoicing bears his gifts away,
Spreads his black wings, and slowly mounts to day.

Pope, Rape of the Lock, canto iv.

2. Not soon; not early; not in a little time.

The poor remnant of human seed peopled their country again slowly by little and little.—Bacon.

Our fathers bent their baneful industry
To check a monarchy that slowly grew;

But did not France or Holland's fate foresee,
Whom rising power to swift dominion flow.

Dryden, Anna Mirabilis, cæciv.

We oft our slowly growing works impart,
While iungus red-hot from art to art.

Pope, Epistle to Mr. Jarvis.

3. Not hastily; not rashly; (as, 'He determines slowly').

4. Not promptly; not readily; (as, 'He learns slowly').

5. Tardily; sluggishly.

The chapel of St. Laurence advances so very slowly, that 'tis not impossible but the family of Medici's may be extinct before their burial-place is finished.—Addison, Travels in Italy.

Slowness. s. Attribute suggested by Slow.
1. Smallness of motion; not speed; want of velocity; absence of celerity or swiftness.

Providence hath confus'd these human arts, that what any invention hath in the strength of its nature, is abated in the slowness of it; and what it hath in the extraordinary quickness of its motion, must be allowed for in the great strength that is required unto it.—Bishop Wilkins, Mathematical Magick.

2. Length of time in which anything acts or is brought to pass; not quickness.

Tyrants use what art they can to increase the slowness of death. Hooker, Ecclesiastical Polity.

3. Dulness to admit conviction or affection.
Christ would not heal their infirmities, because of the hardness and slowness of their hearts, in that they believed him not.—Bentley, Sermons.

4. Want of promptness; want of readiness.

5. Deliberation; cool delay.

6. Dilatoriness; procrastination.

Slowworm. s. Blindworm; Anguis fragilis.

Though we have found formal snakes in the belly of the cerevis, or slowworm, yet may the viper rationally bear the name. Sir T. Browne, Vulgar Errors.

Cecilia, the blind-worm or slow-worm, which are again two names for the same sort of animal. It is much less than the adder, and streaked with blackish lines along the body.—Ray, Corruptitudes, p. 230. a.

The leav'd themselves we look-worms name;
The blackhead is a slow-worm.

Pope, Miscellanies, To Mr. James Moore.

Slubber. v. a. [P]

1. Do anything lazily, imperfectly, or with idle hurry.

Nature shew'd she doth not like men who slubber up matters of men account.—Sir P. Sidney.

Bassanio told him, he would make some speed
Of his return; he answer'd, Do not so,
Slubber not business for my sake.

Shakespeare, Merchant of Venice, ii. 8.

As they are slubber'd over, the malignity that remains will show itself in some chronic disease.—Wise-man, Surgery.

2. Stain; daub.

You must be content to slubber the gloss of your new fortunes with this more slubborn and bolsterous expedition.—Shakespeare, Othello, i. 3.

O love, how sweet thou look'st now, and how

I should have slubber'd thee, and stain'd thy beauty.

Bacon and Fletcher, Mad Lover.

Lady, I ask your pardon, whose virtue I have Slubber'd with my tongue. Id., Caput's Revenge.

3. Cover coarsely or carelessly.

A man of secret ambitious ends of his own, and of proportionate counsels, smothered under the habit of a scholar, and slubber'd over with a certain rude and clownish fashion, that had the semblance of integrity.—Sir H. Wotton, Pericles.

Slubberdegullion. s. Pultry, dirty, sorry fellow.

Quoth she, although thou hast deserved,
Base slubberdegullion, to be served
As thou didst vow to deal with me,
If thou hadst got the victory.

Ridley, Hudibras, l. 3, 885.

Slubbering. part. adj. Moving with hurry;
acting imperfectly and hastily.

The main danger is the making too much haste, or a slubbering speech.—Dr. H. More, Song of the Soul, notes, p. 368.

Which answers are to be done not in a huddling or slubbering fashion.—G. Herbert, Country Parson,
ch. vi.

Slubberingly. adv. In an imperfect or slovenly manner.

And slubberingly patch up some slight and shallow rhyme. Dryden, Polydion, song xxi.

Sludge. s. [P] Mire; dirt mixed with water.
The earth I made a mere soft sludge or mud.—Mortimer, Husbandry.

Slue. v. a. In Nautical language. Turn round; cause to revolve.

Slug. s. [Danish.]

1. Idler; drone; slow, heavy, sleepy, lazy fellow.

Drone's, then drone, then snail, then slug, then slut. Shakespeare, Comedy of Errors, ii. 2.

For what a slug is Hastings, that he comes not!

Id., Richard III. iii. 1.

Why stand'st thou peeping here, thou great slug?
forward!—Bonmont and Fletcher, What Game Cham.

As for all other sorts of the Turks, both foot and horse, they are but slugs. Fletcher, Holy War, p. 183.

2. Naked or shell-less snail.

3. Hindrance; obstruction.

Sluggish shells and damps all improvements, wherein money would be stirring, if it were not for this slug.
—Bacon, Essays, Of Envy.

Slug. s. [A.S. sluge = sledge-hammer.] Cylindrical or oval piece of metal shot from a gun.

Shooting arrows dip't in poison, and discharging slugs against our neighbour's reputation.—Bacon, & Bacon, l. 394.

When fractures are made with bullets or slugs,
there the scalp and cranium are driven in together.
—It is said, Surgery.

As forced from wind-rains, lead itself can fly,
And ponderous slugs cut swiftly through the sky.

Spenser, Duynard, l. 81.

I took our largest gun, which was almost musket-hole, and loaded it with a good charge of powder and with two slugs, and laid it down.—*Isaac, l. 33
and Adventures of Robinson Crusoe.*

Slug. v. a. Lie idle; play the drone; move slowly.

All he did was to deceive good knights,
And draw them from pursuit of praise and fame,
To slug in sloth and sensual delights,
And end their days with ignominious shame.

Spenser, Faerie Queen,

He lay not all night slugging in a cabin under his mantle, but used valiantly to keep others waking to defend their lives.—Id., View of the State of Ireland.

One went slugging on with a thousand varra.—*Sir
R. L'Estrange.*

Slug. v. a. Make sluggish.

It worsens and slugs the most learned.—Milton,
Of Reformation in England, l. 1.

Slug-a-bed. s. One who is fond of lying in bed; late riser.

Why, lady! lie, you slug-a-bed!

Shakespeare, Romeo and Juliet, iv. 5.

Sluggard. s. Idler; drone; inactive lazy fellow.

Cry mercy, lords, a of watchful gentlemen,
That you have taken a tardy sluggard here.

Shakespeare, Richard III. v. 3.

This mightier sound shall make
The dead to rise,
And open tombs and open eyes,
To the long sluggards of five thousand years.

Conley.

Up, up, says Avarice; thou snor'st again,
Stretchest thy limbs, and giv'st 'em, but all in vain:
The tyrant Lucius no doubt takes;
At his command the new-forg'd sluggard wakes.

Dryden, Translation of Pericles, v. 161.

Sluggard. adj. Lazy; sluggish.

Strenuously May commands our duty to keep The vigils of her night, and breaks their sluggard sleep. Dryden, Palamon and Arcite, l. 156.

Sluggardize. v. a. Make idle; make drowsy.

Rather see the wonders of the world abroad,
Than, living daily sluggardized at home,
Wear out thy youth with sleepless idleness.

Shakespeare, Twelfth Night of Verona, i. 1.

Sluggish. adj. Dull; drowsy; lazy; slothful; idle; insipid; slow; inactive; inert.

Sluggish idleness, the nurse of sin,
Upon a slothful ass be close to ride.

Spenser, Faerie Queen,

The dull billows, thick as troubled mire,
Whom with a wind out of their seat could force;
Nor lids did drive out of their sluggish source.

Ibid.

One, ladder than the rest,
With his broad sword provoked the sluggish brant.

Waller.

Matter, being impudent, sluggish, and inactive, hath no power to stir or move itself. Id outward.

Sluggishly. adv. In a sluggish manner;
dully; not nimbly; lazily; idly; slowly.

That they might not come sluggishly to possess what others had won for them.—Milton, History of England, b. iii.

Sluggishness. s. Attribute suggested by Sluggish; dullness; sloth; laziness;
idleness; inertness.

The most of mankind are inclined by her thither, if they would take the pains; no less than birds to fly, and horses to run; which if they lose, it is through their own sluggishness, and by that means become her prodigals, not her children.—B. Jonson.

It is of great moment to teach the mind to shake off the sluggishness, and vigorously employ itself about what reason shall direct.—Boeck.

Sluice. s. [Dutch, sluys; Fr. escluse.] Water-gate; floodgate; vent for water.

Two of her precious drops that ready stood,
Each in their crystal sluice, he ere they fell Kiss'd, as the gracious signs of sweet remorse,
And pious awe. Milton, Paradise Lost, v. 132.

Divine Alphaeus, who, by secret sluice,
Stole under seas to meet his Aretinus. Id., Arcades, 30.

As waters from their sluices, flow'd Unbounded sorrow from her eyes. Prior.

Sluice. v. a. Emit by floodgates.

Like a traitor onward,
Sluic'd out his innocent soul through streams of blood,
Shakespeare, Richard III. l. 1.
Veins of liquid ore sluic'd from the lake. Milton, Paradise Lost, l. 708.

You wrong me, if you think I'll sell one drop Within these veins for pargents; but let honour
Call for my blood, I'll sluice it into streams;
Turn fortune loose again to my pursuit,
And let me hunt her through embattled foes
In dusty plains; there will I be the first. Dryden, Spanish Friar, l. 1.

Sluicy. adj. Falling in streams as from a sluice or floodgate.

And oft whole sheets descend of sluicy rain,
Suck'd by the spongey clouds from off the main;
The lofty skies at once come pouring down,
The promise'd crop and golden harvest down. Dryden, Translation of the Georgics, l. 437.

Slumber. v. n. [A.S. slumerian.]

1. Sleep lightly; be not awake nor in profound sleep.

He that keepeth Israel shall neither slumber nor sleep.—Psalm, cxi. 4.

2. Sleep; repose.

Have ye chosen this place,
After the toil of battle, to repose
Your weary virtue, for the use you find
To slumber here? Milton, Paradise Lost, l. 318.

3. Be in a state of negligence and supineness.

Why slumbers Pope, who leads the tuneful train,
Nor hears that virtue which he loves complain?
Young, Love of Fame, l. 35.

Slumber. v. a.

1. Lay to sleep.

To slumber his conscience in the doing, he [Fulton] studied other incentives.—Sir H. Walton, Life of the Duke of Buckingham.
When the tempest doth arise, which may disquiet us, throw us from our station, we may be ready and able, if not to baffle and slumber it, yet to baffle ourselves.—Farinon, Sermons, p. 431. 1647.

2. Stupify; stun.

Then up he took the slumber'd senecian corpse,
And ere he could out of his swoon awake,
Him to his castle brought. Spenser, Faerie Queene.

Slumber. s.

1. Light sleep; sleep not profound.

And for his dreams, I wonder he's so fond
To trust the mockery of unquiet slumbers. Shakespeare, Richard III. iii. 2.

From carelessness it shall fall into slumber, and from a slumber it shall settle into a deep and long sleep; till at last, perhaps, it shall sleep itself into a lethargy, and that such an one that nothing but hell and judgment shall awaken it. —Sir H. Walton, Sermons.
A youth more glittering than a birth-night brow,
That's even in slumber caused her cheek to glow. Pope, Rape of the Lock, canto i.

2. Sleep; repose.

Boy! Lucius! fast asleep? It is no matter;
Enjoy the honey-heavy dew of slumber. Shakespeare, Julius Caesar, ii. 1.

Ev'n lust and envy sleep, but love denies Rest to my soul, and slumber to my eyes;
Three days I promised to attend my doom,
And two long days and nights are yet to come. Dryden, Indian Emperor, iii. 2.

Night sank upon the dusky beach, and on the purple sea;
Such night in England ne'er had been, nor e'er again shall be;
From Edlystone to Berwick bounds, from Lynn to Milford Bay,
That time of slumber was as bright and busy as the day. Macaulay, The Armada.

Slumberer. s. One who slumbers.

A slumberer stretching on his bed. Donne, Poems, p. 228.

Slumbering. s. State of repose.

God speaketh, yet man perceiveth it not: in a dream, in a vision of the night, when deep sleep falleth upon men, in slumberings upon the bed.—Job, xxxiii. 15.

Slumberous. adj. Inviting to sleep; soporiferous; causing sleep.

The timely dew of sleep,
Now falling with soft slumberous weight, inclines
Our eyelids. Milton, Paradise Lost, iv. 613.

While pendive in the silent slumberous shade,
Sleep's gentle power her straying eyes invades;
Minerva, life-like, an embodied air
Impress'd the form of Iphigenia the fair. Pope, Translation of the Odyssey, iv. 1045.

Slumbery. adj. Slumberous.

A great perturbation in nature! to receive at once the benefit of sleep, and do the effects of watching: in this slumbery agitation, what have you heard her say?—Shakespeare, Macbeth, v. 1.

Slur. v. a. [?] 1. Sully; soil; contaminate.

They impudently slur the Gospel, in making it no better than a romantic legend.—Cudworth, Sermons, p. 72.

2. Pass lightly; balk; miss.

He [Christ] coming into the world on purpose to slight and slur that, which is of the greatest redoubt and sweetest relief with the natural man.—Dr. H. More, Mystery of Iniquity, l. iv. ch. 1.

The atheists laugh in their sleeves, and not a little triumph to see the cause of Theism thus betrayed by its professed friends, and the grand argument slurred by them, and so their work done to their hands.—Cudworth.

Studious to please the genius of the times,
With periods, points, and tropes, he slurs his crimes;
He rob'd his wit, but he borrow'd from the poets,
And look but with intention to ravine. Dryden, Translation of Persius, l. 170.

3. Cheat; trick.

What was the public faith found out for,
But to slur men of what they fought for? Butler, Hudibras.

Come, seven's the main,
Cries Ganymede; the usual trick:
Seven, slur a six; eleven a nick. Prior, Cupid and Ganymede.

Slur. s.

1. Faint reproof; slight disgrace.

Here's an age made a king for slurring tricks;
And the fix is then to put a slur upon him, in exposing him for sport to the scorn of the people.—Sir R. L. Edrington.

No one can rely upon such an one, either with safety to his affairs, or without a slur to his reputation; since he that trusts a knave has no other recompence but to be accounted a fool for his pains.—Smith, Sermons.

2. Trick.

All the politicks of the great
Are like the cunning of a cheat
That lets his false dice freely run,
And trusts them to themselves alone;
But never lets a true one stir
Without some fling'ring trick or slur. Butler, Remains.

3. In Music. Mark denoting a connection of one note with another.

Slush. s. [Swedish, slusk.]

1. Soft mud; melting snow and mud.

2. Mixture of soft grease for lubricating purposes.

Slut. s. [Provincial German, stodde.]

1. Dirty, careless, person (especially a female).

He ran away disguised, some say in women's clothes, like a coward of a slut.—Dr. Farmer, Anti-Quity's Triumph over Novelty, p. 391. 1618.

Cricket, to Windsor chimes shall thou leap:
Where drest thou find'st unranked, and heartless un-swep,
Thou pluck the maids as blue as billberry;
Our radiant queen knew sluts and sluttry. Shakespeare, Merry Wives of Windsor, v. 5.

Farewell, rewards and fair-
Good housewives now may say;
For now foul sluts in dairies
Do fare as well as they:
For though they sweep the hearths no less Than they were wont to do;
Yet no one now for cleanliness
Finds space in her shoe. Bishop Corbet.

The veil's all rag, the butter's turn'd to oil;
And thus I buy good meat for sluts to spoil. King.

2. Word of slight contempt to a woman.

Hold up, you slut,
Your aprons incontinent; you're not oathable,
Although I know you'll swear. Shakespeare, Timon of Athens, iv. 3.

The frogs were ready to leap out of their skins for joy, till one crafty old slut in the company advised them to consider a little better on't.—Sir R. L. Edrington.

Sluttish. s. Qualities or practice of a slut.

Sluttish, to such men excellence opposed,
Should make down vomit emptiness. Shakespeare, Cymbeline, l. 7.

These make our girls their sluttish rue,
By plucking them both black and blue;
And put a penny in their shoe,
The house for cleanly sweeping. Dryden, Nymphidia.

A man gave money for a black, upon an opinion that his swarthy colour was rather sluttish than nature, and the fault of his master that kept him no cleaner.—Sir R. L. Edrington.

Sluttish. adj.

1. Nasty; not nice; not cleanly; dirty; indecently negligent of cleanliness.

All preparations both for food and lodging such as would make one detest nigardness, it is no sluttish a vice.—Sir P. Sidney.

Albeit the mariners do covet store of cabbins, yet indeed they are but sluttish dens that breed sickness in peace, serving to cover stench, and in fight are dangerous to tear men with their splinters.—Sir W. Raleigh, Essays.

Sluttish disorder fill'd his stable,
And sluttish plenty deck'd her table. Prior, An Epitaph.

2. Meretricious.

She got a legacy by sluttish tricks.—Holiday.

Sluttishly. adv. In a sluttish manner; nastily; dirtily.

They have taken a toil, surely very laborious, out of infinite huge volumes to pick whatsoever may seem to be either absurdly, or falsely, or fondly, or scandalously, or dishonestly, or passionately, or sluttishly, conceived or written.—Sir R. Sandys, State of Religion.

Sluttishness. s. Attribute suggested by Sluttish; qualities or practice of a slut; nastiness; dirtiness.

That is only suitable in laying a foul complexion upon a filthy favour, setting forth both in sluttishness.—Sir P. Sidney.

I look on the indurct of this noisome and trouble-some creature, the house, of searching out foul and nasty clothes to harbour and breed in, as an effect of Divine Providence, designed to deter men and women from sluttishness and wretchedness, and to provoke them to cleanliness and modesty.—Rap, On the Wisdom of God manifested in the Works of the Creation.

Slut. s. [German, schlau.]

1. Meanly artful; secretly insidious; cunning.

For my slut wiles and subtle craftiness,
The title of the kingdom I possess. Spenser, Mother Hubbard's Tale.

And for I should the Greekish marchant slut,
Will use with him some of his wondrous craft. Fairfax.

His proud step he scornful turn'd,
And with slut circumspection. Milton, Paradise Lost, iv. 536.

Envy is a cursed plant; some flowers of it are rooted almost in every man's nature, and it works in a slut and unperceptible manner.—Watts.

It is odious in a man to look slut and keering at a woman.—Richardson, Clarissa.

2. Slight; thin; fine. Rare.

Libs derived of substance slut. Spenser, Faerie Queene, ii. 9. 44.

On the slut. Secretly; with craftiness.

Gunston inquired, "If loosely had ever had dealings with the money-lender before, and for what purpose it was likely he would want the money now;" and the money-lender answered "that probably loosely had some sport or gaming speculations on the slut, for that it was to pay a gambling debt that he had joined Captain Houghton in a bill for 1,200.—Lord Lytton, What will he do with it? h. vi. ch. vii.

Slut. s. In a slut manner; with secret artifice; insidiously.

Hypocrites,
That slutly speak one thing, another think. J. Phillips, Cypher, ii. 307.

The question as to spelling of dissyllabic compounds and derivatives from monosyllables ending in y, can scarcely be considered a settled one. The first rule that applies to it is that y, when sounded as a vowel (i.e. not a semivowel), is limited to the end of words; moreover that, at the end of words, it is preferred to either ee or i (i.e. to any ordinary vowel). It is evident, however, that the addition of a second element, by depriving y of its final character, involves the substitution of i; e.g. merry, merriment, merrily. The difficulty, however, which attends the present word is the fact of there being two y's. Slyness is, perhaps, better than slyness; but slyly is, perhaps, better than slyly.

Smack. s. [A.S. smacca.] Coasting vessel: (common as the second element in a compound, e.g. fishing-smack, oyster-smack).

Smack. v. n. [A.S. smæccan.]

1. Have a taste; be tinctured with any particular taste.

[It] smacketh like pepper.—Barret, Alcester: 1890.

2. Have a tincture or quality infused.

All sects, all ages, smack of this vice, and he To die for it!

Shakespeare, Measure for Measure, II. 2. He is but a bastard to the time, That doth not smack of observation.

Id., King John, I. 1.

Ceremonies smacking of paganism or popery.—Fuller, Sermons, Of Reformation, p. 18: 1633.

3. Make a noise by separation of the lips strongly pressed together, as after a taste.

He that by a willing audience and attention doth readily suck it [bladder] up, or who greedily swalloweth it down by credulous approbation and assent; he that pleasantly relisheth it, and smacketh at it; as he is a partner in the fact, so he is a sharer in the guilt.—Barrow, Sermons, serm. xvii. vol. I.

4. Kiss with a close compression of the lips, so as to be heard when they separate.

Smack. v. a.

1. Kiss.

No careless flowers, strow'd on the water's face, The curled whirlpools suck, smack, and embrace, Yet drown them.—Donne.

2. Make to emit any quick smart noise.

More than one steed must Della's empire feel, Who sits triumphant o'er the flying wheel; And as she guides it through the admiring throng, With what an air she smacks the silken thong.

Young, Love of Fama, v. 123.

'Everything that money could do was done.' 'And what can do more, Mrs. Gaup?' exclaimed the undertaker, as he emptied his glass, and smacked his lips. 'Nothing in the world, sir.'—Dickens, Martin Chuzzlewit, ch. xix.

Smack. s.

1. Taste; savour.

2. Tincture; quality from something mixed.

The child, that sucketh the milk of the nurse, learns his first speech of her; the which, being the first infused to his tongue, is ever after most pleasing unto him; inasmuch, that though he afterwards be taught English, yet the smack of the first will always abide with him.—Speaner.

Your lordship, though not clean past your youth, hath yet some smack of age in you, some relish of the saltiness of time, and have a care of your health. Shakespeare, Henry IV. Part II., I. 2.

It caused the neighbours to rise, that a petty smack only of piquery opened a gap to the oppression of the whole.—Carson.

As the Pythagorean soul Runs through all beasts, and fish and fowl, And has a smack of ev'ry one, No love does, and has ever done.

Butler, Hudibras, III. 1, 647.

3. Pleasing taste.

Stack press upon hovel; To cover it quickly let owner regard, Lest down and the cadow there finding a smack, With ill stormy weather do perish that stack.

Tupper, Five Hundred Points of Good Husbandry.

4. Small quantity; taste.

Troubling to approach The little harrel, which he fears to branch, He essays the wimble, often draws it back, And dares to thrusty servants but a smack.

Dryden, Translation of Persius, IV. 60.

5. Act of parting the lips audibly, as after a pleasing taste.

6. Loud kiss.

He took The bride about the neck, and kiss'd her lips With such a clamorous smack, that at the parting All the church echo'd.

Shakespeare, Twelfth Night of the Shrove, III. 2.

I saw the lecherous citizen turn back His head, and on his wife's lip steal a smack.

Donne.

7. Blow, or slap, given with the flat of the hand; (as, 'A smack on the face'). Valgarism

Used adverbially.

We were surrounded with trees—I cut down above fifty to make the lawn before the house, and let in the wind and the sun—smack smooth, as you see.—G. Colman and D. Garrick, The Claudine Marriage.

Jump out of every window I have in the house! Hunt my dear into high fever, my fine fellow! ay, d—n it! this is spunk and plain-speaking! Give me a man who is always pumping his dissent to my doctrines smack in my teeth.—G. Colman the younger, The Poor Gentleman, III. 1.

Smacking. part. adj. Sounding as a smack.

[He] visits with a gun, presents you birds, Then gives a smacking lunge, and cries 'No words.'

Pope, Epistles to Miss Blount, II. 25.

Small. adj. [A.S. smæl.]

1. Little in quantity; not great.

For a small moment have I forsaken thee, but with great mercies will I gather thee.—Isaiah, IV. 7. Death only this mysterious truth unfolds, The mighty soul how small a body holds.

Dryden, Translation of Juvenal, x. 279.

All numeration is but still the adding of one unit more, and giving to the whole together a distinct name, whereby to distinguish it from every smaller or greater multitude of units.—Locke.

The ordinary small measure we have is looked on as an unit in number.—Id.

The danger is less when the quantity of the fluids is too small, than when it is too great; for a smaller quantity will pass where a larger cannot, but not contrariwise.—Arbuthnot.

Good cooks cannot slide fiddling work: such is the dressing of small birds, requiring a world of cookery.—Swift, Directions to Servants, Advice to the Cook.

2. Slender; minute.

I took your sin, the calf which ye had made, and burnt it with fire, and stamp'd it, and ground it very small, even until it was as small as dust.—Deuteronomy, ix. 21. Those waved their labor fans For wings, and small lineaments exact.

Milton, Paradise Lost, VII. 478.

As the first element in a compound.

Small-grained sand is esteemed the best for the tenant, and the large for the landlord and land.—Mortimer, Husbandry.

3. Little in degree.

There arose no small stir about that way.—Acts, xix. 23.

4. Little in importance; petty; minute.

Is it a small matter that thou hast taken my husband?—Genesis, xxi. 15. Some men's behaviour is like a verse, wherein every syllable is measured: how can a man comprehend great matters that breaketh his mind too much to small observations?—Bacon.

Narrow man being fill'd with little shares, Courts, city, church, are all shops of small wares; All having blown to sparks their noble fire, And drawn their sound gold ingot into wire.

Donne.

5. Little in the principal quality: (as, small beer); not strong; weak.

Go down to the cellar to draw ale or small beer.—Swift.

6. Gentle; soft; melodious.

After the fire a still small voice.—1 Kings, xix. 12.

Small. s. Small or narrow part of anything: (applied to the part of the leg below the calf).

Her garment was cut after such a fashion, that though the length of it reached to the ankles, yet in her going one might sometimes discern the small of her leg.—Sir P. Sidney.

Into her legs I'd have love's issues fall, And all her calls into a gouty small.

Sir J. Suckling.

His excellency, having mounted on the small of my leg, advanced forwards.—Swift, Gulliver's Travels.

Small-clothes. s. Trowsers or breeches; external clothing for the lower extremities.

He borrowed the count's small-clothes for a day.

Byron, Beppo.

Small-talk. s. Light conversation.

In the tea-room, and hovering round the card-tables, were a vast number of queer old ladies and decrepit old gentlemen, discussing all the small talk and scandal of the day, with a relish and gusto which sufficiently bespoke the intensity of the pleasure they derived from the occupation.—Dickens, Pickwick Papers, ch. xxv.

Smallage. s. [Lat. mollugo.] The explanation of previous editions is, Wild plant of the parsley kind. This, however, is certainly not the smallage of the extract. In the ordinary works on Botany, the word stands as the English equivalent to Apium graveolens, i.e. Wild celery. In its present form the word Smallage may mean almost anything. If, however, its connection with the Latin mollugo be admitted, its true import must be sought in the origin of that word. Here the ordinary connection is with mollis—soft. Yet the Galium mollugo, or Great Hedge Bedstraw, is bristly.

The real origin is probably very different. The primitive mollugo seems to be a pepper: the secondary mollugos, plants of which the seeds were pepper-like. In this respect, those of the parsley and its allies have little beyond the spicy flavour of the caraway and celery. The Galiums, on the other hand, without any notable taste, are round, and, when ripe, black; and when of a certain size, not unlike grains of black pepper. As a name for the true peppers, milagyn is, at the present time, the ordinary Tamil term; and in the word Mulligatawny (=pepper-water) soup, it is an English word.

Smallage is raised by slips or seed, which is reddish, and pretty big, of a roundish oval figure; a little more full and rising on one side than the other, and streaked from one end to the other.—Mortimer, Husbandry.

Smalloon. s. Little wood coals used to light fires.

When smalloon murmurs in the hearer's throat, From smutty dangers guard thy throat and coat.

Gay, Trivia, II. 35.

Used adjectively.

The smalloon man was heard with cadence deep, Till drown'd in shriller notes of chimney-sweep.

Swift, Description of the Morning.

A smalloon man, by waking one of these distressed gentlemen, saved him from ten years' imprisonment.—Spectator.

Smaller. s. Little vessel below the denomination of 'ship.'

Shall he before me sign, whom t' other day A smaller vessel hither did convey; Where stow'd with prizes and rotten fish he lay?

Dryden, Translation of Juvenal, III. 116.

Smallness. s. Attribute suggested by Small.

1. Littleness; not greatness.

The parts in glass are evenly spread, but are not so close as in gold; as we see by the easy admission of light, and by the smallness of the weight.—Bacon, Natural and Experimental History.

2. Littleness; want of bulk; minuteness; exility.

Whichever is invisible, in respect of the fineness of the body, or the smallness of the parts, or subtilty of the motion, is little enquired.—Bacon, Natural and Experimental History.

The smallness of the rays of light may contribute very much to the power of the agent by which they are refracted.—Sir I. Newton, Opticks.

3. Want of strength; weakness.

4. Gentleness; softness: (as, 'The smallness of a woman's voice').

Smallpox. s. Eruptive distemper of great malignity; Variola.

He fell sick of the smallpox.—Wise man, Surgery.

Smally. adv. In little quantity; with minuteness; in a little or low degree: (still used in the north in the sense of puny).

Reasons declared both by the bishop of Canterbury and me to make smally or nothing to your purpose.—Letter of King Henry VIII. in Bishop Burnet's History of the Reformation, I. 301.

A child that is still, and somewhat hard of wit, is never chosen by the father to be made a scholar, or else, when he cometh to the school, is smally regarded.—Arbuthnot.

Cruelty makes a tyrant's frowns to be feared, when the threats of a coward are smally regarded.—Rich, Cabinet Furnished with a Variety of Excellent Descriptions, 1010. (Taken by H. and W.)

Smalt. s. [Italian, smalto; German, schmalz.] Kind of blue colour.

To make a light purple, mingle ceruse with logwood water: and moreover turnish with the mingled with smalt of blue.—Poacham, On Drawing.

Smaragd. s. [Lat. smaragdus; Gr. emeraldos.] Emerald. Obsolete.

The fourth was of a smaragd or an emerald.—Dale, On the Revolution, Part III, H. h. 8. b. 1550. A table of gold richly adorned with carbuncles, smaragles, and other precious stones.—Donne, History of the Septuagint, p. 193.

Smart. s. [A.S. smeort.]

1. Quick, pungent, lively pain.

Then her mind, though too late, by the smart, was brought to think of the disease.—Sir P. Sidney.

2. Pain; corporal or intellectual.

Misapies are master'd by advice discreet,
And counsel mitigates the greatest smart.

Spenser, Faerie Queene.
It increased the smart of his present sufferings,
To compare them with his former happiness—
Bishop Atterbury.

Smart. v. n. [A.S. smeortan.]

1. Feel quick lively pain.

When a man's wounds cease to smart, only because he has lost his feeling, they are nevertheless mortal.—South, Sermons.

2. Feel pain of body or mind.

He that is surety for a stranger shall smart for it.
—Proverbs, xi. 15.

No creature smarta so little as a fool.
Let peals of laughter, Codrus! round thee break,
Thou unconcern'd canst hear the mighty crack.
Pope, Epistle to Arbuthnot.

Smart. adj.

1. Pungent; sharp; causing smart.

How smart a lash that speech doth give my conscience!
Shakespeare, Hamlet, iii. 1.
To the fair he said would quarrel show,
His tender heart recoils at every blow;
If unawares he gives too smart a stroke,
He means but to correct, and not provoke.
Gransville.

2. Quick; vigorous; active.

That day was spent in smart skirmishes, in which many fell.—Lord Clarendon, History of the Great Rebellion.

This sound proceeded from the nimble and smart percussions of the ambient air, made by the swift and irregular motions of the particles of the liquor.—Boyle.

3. Producing any effect with force and vigour.

After showers,
The stars shine smarter, and the moon adorns,
As with unborrow'd beams, her sharpen'd horns.
Dryden.

4. Acute; witty.

It was a smart reply that Augustus made to one that ministered this comfort of the fatality of ill that was so far from giving any ease to his mind, that it was the very thing that troubled him.—Archbishop Tillotson.

5. Brisk; vivacious; lively.

You may see a smart rhetorician turning his hat in his hands, during the whole course of his harangue. A deaf man would think he was cheapening a braver.—Addison.
Who, for the poor renown of being smart,
Would leave a sting within a brother's heart?
Young.

6. Dandylike in dress.

'I more than half believed, just now, seeing you so very smart,' said Pinch, 'that you must be going to be married, Mark.'—Dickens, Martin Chuzzlewit, ch. v.

Smartly. adv. In a smart manner; sharply; briskly; vigorously; wittily.

The art, order, and gravity of these proceedings, where short, severe, constant rules were set, and smartly pursued, made them less taken notice of.—Lord Clarendon, History of the Great Rebellion.
The stories it selects [are] . . . generally of a smart, and . . . briefly and smartly told.—Cruik, History of English Literature, vol. i. p. 524.

Smartness. s. Attribute suggested by Smart.

1. Quickness; vigour.

What interest such a smartness in striking the air hath in the production of sound, may in some measure appear by the motion of a bell, and that of a switch or other wand, which produce no sound, if they do but slowly pass through the air; whereas if they do smartly strike the air, and the other be shut out of a gun, the celerity of their percussions on the air puts it into an undulating motion, which, reaching the ear, produces audible noise.—Doyle.

2. Liveliness; briskness; wittiness.

To those sharp, satirical, and popular invectives . . . your ladyship hath given as much (or more) edge and smartness, as ever I found from any.—Jeremy Taylor, Artificial Happiness, p. 110.
I defy all the elms to invent a new phrase, equal in wit, humour, smartness, or politeness, to my wit.—Swift.

Smartmoney. s. Money paid as a fine or penalty.

Some advanced wages from my new post, my lord. This pressing is hot work, though it entitles us to smart money.—G. Colman the older, The Jewels Wife, iii. 1.

Smash. v. n. [German, schmeissen.] Break with violence; dash to pieces; beat. Colloquial.

Smasher. s. Coiner; stamper of false coin. Slang.

Smatch. v. n. Smack; have a taste.

Allowing his description therein to retain and smatch of verities.—Baister, History of Man, fol. 22: 1874.

Smatch. s. Smack.

1. Taste; tincture; twang.

Thou art a fellow of a good respect;
Thy life hath had some smatch of honour in't.
Shakespeare, Julius Caesar, v. 3.
Some authors may be found to have a peculiar guttural or nasal smatch in their language.—Hollier, Elements of Speech, p. 31.
These salts have somewhat of a nitrous taste, but mixt with a smatch of a vitriolick. Grew.

Smatter. v. n. [. . . sch.]

1. Have a slight taste; have a slight, superficial, and imperfect knowledge.

2. Talk superficially or ignorantly.
In proper terms, such as men smatter,
When they throw out and miss the matter.
Haller, Hudibras, l. 1, 187.

Of state-affairs you cannot smatter;
Are awkward when you try to flatter. Swift.

Smatter. s. Superficial or slight knowledge.

All other sciences were extinguished during this empire, excepting only a smatter of judicial astrology.—Nor W. Temple.

Smatterer. s. One who has a slight or superficial knowledge; sciolist.

Smatterers in other men's matters, talebearers.—Bacon, Anatomy of Melancholy, p. 304.

Every smatterer thinks all the circle of arts confined to the closet of his breast.—Bishop Hall, Fall of Pride.

There are certain sciol or smatterers, that are busy in the skirts and outskirts of learning, and have scarce any thing of solid literature to commend them.—E. Johnson, Discoveries.

These few, who preserve any rudiments of learning, are, except one or two smatterers, the clergy's friends.—Swift.

Smattering. verbal abs. Superficial know-

A quarrelsome man in a parish, especially if he have gotten a little smattering of law, is like a cock in the gale, that tears, and wrings, and turns a whole townslip.—Bishop Hall, Remains, p. 70.

I got among these Venetians some smatterings of the Italian tongue.—Mallet, Letters, i. 1, 3.

A smattering in knowledge (which is the measure of a wit) disposes men to attach; whereas a full proportion would carry them through to the source of God and religion.—Goodman, Winter Evening's Cooks, Part I.

Such a practice gives a slight smattering of several sciences without any solid knowledge.—Watts.
Since by a little smattering in learning, and great conceit of himself, he has lost his religion, may he find it again by harder study and an humbler mind!—Bulwer.

Those who, with a mere smattering of scientific knowledge, seek to impose on the multitude by a parade of mystical jargon, and a whole apparatus of learned phraseology, are quickly detected by rampant and instructed junks.—Sir G. C. Lewis, On the Influence of Authority in Matters of Opinion, ch. iii.

Smear. v. a. [A.S. smearian.]

1. Overspread with something viscous and adhesive; besmear.

If any such be here, that love this painting,
Wherein you see me smearn'd.
If any think leave death out weighs bad life,
Let him wave thus. Shakespeare, Coriolanus, i. 6.
Then from the mountain hewing timber tall,
Began to build a vessel of huge bulk,
Smear'd round with pitch.

Milton, Paradise Lost, xi. 729.

The fury sprang above the Styrian flood,
Dryden, Translation of the Æneid, vii. 470.

2. Soil; contaminate.

Why had I not, with charitable hand,
Took up a beggar's issue at my gates?
Who smearn'd thus, and mix'd with infamy,
I might have said no part of it is mine.
Shakespeare, Much Ado about Nothing, iv.

Smearry. adj. Daubry; adhesive.

A smearry foam works o'er my grinding jaws,
And utmost anguish shakes my labouring frame.
Booc.

Smell. v. a. [see Stink.]

1. Perceive by the nose.

I smell sweet savours, and I feel soft things.
Shakespeare, Twelfth Night of the Shrew, Induck. sc. 2.
Their neighbours hear the same music, or smell the same perfume with themselves; for here is enough.—Collier.

2. Find out by mental sagacity.

The horse smell him out, and presently a croquet came in his hand how to countermine him.—Sir A. L'Estrange.

Smell. v. n.

1. Strike the nostrils.

The king is but a man as I am: the violet smells to him as it does to me; all his senses have but human conditions.—Shakespeare, Henry V. iv. 1.

The distilled smells of flowers are out of those plants whose leaves smell not.—Bacon, Natural and Experimental History.

2. Have any particular scent: (with of).

Honey in Spain smelleth apparently of the rose-mary or orange, from whence the bee gathereth it.—Bacon.

If you have a silver saucepan, and the butter smells of sausk, lay the sausk upon the coals.—Swift.

3. Have a particular tincture or smack of my quality.

My unsold name, the austereness of my life,
Will no your accusation overweigh,
That you shall still in your own report,
And smell of calumny.

Shakespeare, Measure for Measure, ii. 4.
A man no smelling of the people's law,
The court received him first for charity.

Dryden, Sigismunda and Unisorda, 317.

4. Practise the act of smelling.

Whosoever shall make like unto that, to smell therein, shall even be cut off from his people.—Ezekiel, xxx. 38.

5. Exercise sagacity.

Down with the nose, take the bridge quite away,
Of him that, his particular to forefend,
Smells from the general weal.

Shakespeare, Timon of Athens, iv. 3.

Smell. s.

1. Power of smelling; sense of which the nose is the organ.

Nose, in the nostrils, she doth use the smell;
As God the breath of life in them did give,
So makes he now this power in them to dwell,
To judge all air, whereby we breathe and live.
Sir J. Davies, Immortality of the Soul.

2. Scent; power of affecting the nose.

The sweetest smell in the air is the white double violet, which comes twice a-year.—Bacon.
All sweet smells have joined with them some earthy or rancid odours. Id.

Pleasant smells are not confined unto vegetables, but found in divers animals.—Sir T. Browne, Vulgar Errors.

There is a great variety of smells, though we have but a few names for them: the smell of a violet and of musk, both sweet, are as distinct as any two smells.—Locke.

Smeller. s.

1. One who smells.

2. One who is smelled.

These left-handed rascals,
The very vomit, sir, of hospitals,
Birds of ill and spittal-houses; such nasty smellers,
That if they'd been untruss'd of club-franchises,
They might have cudgell'd me with their very sticks.
Beaumont and Fletcher, New Valour.

3. Organ of smelling; nose. Pugilistic slang.

Smellfeast. s. Parasite; one who haunts good tables.

Smellfeast Vitellio
Smiles on his master for a meal or two.
Bishop Hall, Satire, vi. 1.

Who has a stupid intellect, a broken memory, and a blundered wit, and (which is worse than all) a blind and bewitched conscience, but the insipid and marasmus, the epicure and the smellfeast!—North, Sermons, in 75.

The ant lives upon her own, honestly gotten; whereas the fly is an intruder, and a common smellfeast that spongers upon other people's treasurers.—Sir A. L'Estrange.

Smelling. verbal abs. Sense by which smells are perceived.

If the whole body were an eye, where were the hearing? if the whole were hearing, where were the smelling?—1 Corinthians, xii. 17.

I had a mind to know whether they would find out the treasure, and whether smelling enabled them to know what is good for their nourishment.—Addison, Spectator.

Smelt. s. British fish of the genus Osmerus (uperlains); spirling; spurling.

Of round fish there are brit, sprat, bari, smelt.—Carece, Narcey of Cornwall.

Smelts have a very peculiar scent, from whence is derived one of their English names, smell, i. e. smell it. That of spurling, which is used in Wales and the North of England, is taken from the French, 'spurlan'. There is a wonderful disagreement in the opinion of people as to the scent of the fish. Some assert that it flavours of the violet; the Germans, for a very different reason, distinguish it by the elegant name of Stinkfish; . . . and not without reason, if we may depend on Linnaeus, who says there are in the Baltic two varieties; the one which is called Nora, fossilisimus, steracaria indur, which, in the early spring, when the peasants come to buy it, fills all the streets of Umeå with the smell. He adds that, at this season, aquas reign there. . . . Smelte are often sold in the streets of London split and dried. They are called dried spartings, and are recommended as a relish to a glass of wine in the morning. . . . The Atherine . . . is very common in the sea near Southampton, where it is called a smelt.—Pennant, British Zoology, Smelt and Atherine.

The smelt, as a British fish, appears to be almost exclusively confined to the eastern and western coasts of Great Britain. I am not aware of any good authority for the appearance of the true smelt between Dover and the Land's End. . . . Mr. Salt, in his Angler's Guide, says he has caught very fine smelts by angling in Portsmouth Harbour; but there is very little doubt that the smelt, or Atherine, which is there abundant, is the fish alluded to.—Farrall, History of British Fishes.

Smelt, v. a. [German, smelten, schmelzen; Norse, smalta.] Reduce by heat an ore to its metallic state.

The arcillaceous carbonate of iron, or clay ironstone of the coal measures, is the chief ore smelted in England.—Vie, Dictionary of Arts, Manufactures, and Mines: Iron.

Smelter, s. One who smelts ore.

The smelters came up to the assayers.—Woodward, On Poisons.

Smelting, verbal abs. Process of extracting metal from the ore.

He [Ray] added the way of smelting and refining such metals and minerals as England doth produce.—Dehman, Life of Ray.

A sort of earth, of a dusky red colour, found chiefly in iron mines. Some of this earth contains as much iron as to render it worth smelting.—Woodward.
Ores are the mineral bodies which contain so much metal as to be worth the smelting, or being reduced by fire to the metallic state.—Vie, Dictionary of Arts, Manufactures, and Mines: Ores.

Smew, or Smee, s. [?] British bird, akin to the gulls, of the genus Mergus (albellus); lough diver; whitehead goosander; white nun.

The smew, of smere, as it is sometimes called, is a winter visitant here, and the most common species of the genus frequenting our rivers and large pieces of fresh water, as well as most parts of the coast. . . . Young birds, frequently called redheaded smews, are much more common in our markets than old males. . . . The nesting habits of the smew are unknown, but the eggs are eight or ten in number, and of a rich buff colour.—Farrall, History of British Birds.

Smicker, adj. Flattering. Obsolete.

Reverend of his honour he forsook
The smicker use of court humanity.
—Ford, Booke's Memorial, v. 475. (Rich.)

Smickering, s. [Swedish, smickra; Danish, smigre; flatter.] Amorous inclination.

We had a young duction, who rode by our coach, and seemed to have a smickering to our young lady of Milton.—Dryden, Letters (ed. Mahone), p. 88.

Smicket, s. Snork. Rare.

Smickly, adj. In a smicker manner. Obsolete.

Shall I be leave then?—Gibben as the sun.—
What's he that looks so smickly?
—Ford, The Sun's Darling, ii. 1. (Rich.)

Smight, v. a. Smite. (Incorrect; the g being no part of the root.)

As when a Griffin, seized of his prey,
A dragon fierce encountereth in his flight,
Through widest air making his idle way,
That would his rightful ravine rend away:
With hideous horror both together smight,
And sound so sore that they the heavens affray.
—Spenser, Faerie Queen.

Smile, v. n. [Provincial German smielen; Danish, smile.]

1. Throw the countenance, especially the mouth, in a condition expressive of pleasure, kindness, love, or gladness: (contrary to frown).

A fool fliteth up his voice with laughter, but a wise man doth scarce smile a little.—Ecclesiastes, xxi. 20.

Seldom he smiles; and smiles in such a sort
As if he mock'd himself, and scorn'd his spirit
That could be moved to smile at anything.
—Shakespeare, Julius Caesar, i. 2.

The goddess of the mountain smiled upon her votaries, and cheered them in their passage to her palace.—Fuller.

She smiled to see the doughty hero alain,
But at her smile the beau revived again.
—Pope, Rape of the Lock, canto v.

But when her anxious lord return'd,
Raised in her head; her eyes are dried;
She smiles, as William ne'er had mourn'd, Shu looks, as Mary ne'er had died.
—Prior, Ode on the Death of Queen Mary.

2. Express, by a similar modification, slight irony or contempt.

Our king replied, which some will smile at now,
but according to the learning of that time.—Camden.

Did some more sober critick come abroad,
If wrong, I smiled; if right, I knew the road.
—Pope, Epistola Arbuthnot.

'Twas what I said to Crispin and Child,
Who praised my modesty, and smiled.
—Id., Imitations of Horace, l. i. ep. vii.

3. Look gay or joyous.

The river of lakes through midst of heaven
Rolls o'er Elysian flowers her amber stream;
With those, that never fade, the spirits meet Bind their resplendent locks hewer'd with beams;
Now in loose garlands thick thrown off, the bright
Pavement, that like a sea of Jasper shone, Impurpled with celestial roses smiled.
—Milton, Paradise Lost, iii. 534.

Rich industry sits smiling on the plough.
—Pope, Windsor Forest.

4. Be favourable; be propitious.

Then let me not let pass Occasion which now smiles.
—Milton, Paradise Lost, ix. 479.

Me all too mean for such a task I weat,
Yet if the sov'reign lady deigns to smile,
I'll follow Horace with impudent heart,
And clothe the verse in Spenser's native style.
—Prior, Ode to Queen Anne.

Smile, v. a. Awe with a contemptuous smile.
The earthly Roman's smiling path to tread,
And shadowy smile prevailing fully deal.
—Young, Love of Fame, l. 45.

Smile, s.

1. Slight contraction of the face; look of pleasure, or kindness: (opposed to frown).
I frown upon him, yet he loves me still.—
Oh that your frowns would teach my smiles such skill.
—Shakespeare, Midsummer-Night's Dream, i. 1.

No man marks the narrow space
'Twixt a prison and a smile.
—Sir H. Wotton.
To these, that sober race of men, whose lives
Religion tithed from the morn of God, Shall yield up all their virtue, all their fame to duty, to the train and to the smiles
Of these fair athletes.
—Milton, Paradise Lost, xl. 621.

2. Gay or joyous appearance.

Yet what avail her unexhausted stores,
Her blooming mountains and her sunny shores,
With all the gifts that heav'n and earth impart,
The smiles of nature and the charms of art?
—Addison, Letter to Lord Halifax from Italy.

Smiler, s. One who smiles.

Know, smiler, at thy peril thou art pleased;
Thy pleasure is the promise of thy pain.
—Young, Night Thoughts, night i.

Smiling, part. adj. Expressing pleasure or kindness in the countenance.

Let their heirs enrich their time
With smiling plenty and fair prosperous days.
—Shakespeare, Richard III, v. 1.
The smiling infant in his hand smil'd take
The crested basilisk and speckled snake.
—Pope, Messiah, 81.

Smilingly, adv. In a smiling manner; with a look of pleasure.

His flow'd heart,
'Twixt two extremes of passion, joy and grief,
Burst smilingly.
—Shakespeare, King Lear, v. 3.
Caricatures stopping him smilingly, told him, we are not so forward to lose good company.—Boyle.

Smilt, v. n. Become soft and pulpy, like the milt of a fish.

Having too much water, many corrus will smilt, or have their pulp turned into a substance like thick cream.—Mortimer, Husbandry.

Smirch, v. a. [? smutch—? mirk.] Soil.

I'll put myself in joss and mean attire,
And with a kind of imber smirch my face.
—Shakespeare, As you like it, l. 3.

Smirched, part. adj. Dusky; soiled.

Like the slaven Hercules in the smirched worm-eaten tapestry.—Shakespeare, Much Ado about Nothing, iii. 3.

Smirk, v. n. [A.S. smercian.] Smile smugly and complacently.

The hostess, smiling and smirking, as each new guest was presented, was the centre of attraction to a host of young dandies.—Theodore Hook, Gilbert Gurney.

Smirk, s. Smug complacent smile.

The Met stood before him in the utmost confusion, with the prettiest smirk imaginable on the flushed side of her face, pale as ashes on the other.
—Spectator, no. 41.

A constant smirk upon the face, and a whiffing activity of the body, are strong indications of fullbriety.—Lord Chesterfield.

Smirk, adj. Nice; smart; jaunty.

Send, how braze you bullocks horns,
So smirk, so smooth, his pricked ears;
His horns been as broad as rainbow bent,
His dew-lap as little as loss of Kent.
—Spenser, Shepherd's Calendar.

Smirking, part. adj. Showing a smirk.

I have plainly had before your view
That I have cause, as these, to plume of Fortune's smile.
Which smirking through at first she seems to smother and smile. Mirror for Magistrates, p. 177.
Certain gentlemen of the gown, whose awkward, sneering, prim, sneering, and smirking countenances have got good preferment by force of cringing.—
Swift.

Her grizzled locks assume a smirking grace,
And art has level'd her deep-furrow'd face.
—Young, Love of Fame, v. 513.

Smite, v. a. pret. smote; past part. smit, smitten. Less properly, indeed incorrectly, smote. In the following stanza it is associated with broke for broken. [A.S. smitan.]

And the windows of Ashur are loud in their wail;
And the idols are broke on the temple of Baal;
And the might of the Gentile, made by the sword,
Bath melted like snow in the glance of the Lord.
—Byron, Hebrew Melodies, The Destruction of Sennacherib.

1. Strike; reach with a blow; pierce.

The sun shall not smite thee by day nor the moon
by night.—Isaiah, cxi. 6.
So sweet a kiss the golden sun gives not
To those fresh morning drops upon the rose,
As thy eye-beams, when their frosty rays have smote.

The night of dew that on my cheeks down flows,
—Shakespeare, Love's Labour's Lost, iv. 3.

Where the morning sun first warmly smote
The open field, and where the unperched shade imbrown'd the moonlike bowers,
—Milton, Paradise Lost, iv. 244.

2. Kill; destroy.

The servants of David had smitten of Benjamin and of Abner's men, so that three hundred and threescore died.—2 Samuel, ii. 31.

3. Afflict; chasten.

Let us not mistake God's goodness, nor imagine, because he smites us, that we are forsaken by him.—
Archbishop Wake.

4. Blast.

And the flax and the barley was smitten: for the barley was in the ear, and the flax was boiled.—
Exodus, ix. 31.

5. Affect with any passion.

I wander where the mews haunt,
Clear spring, or shady grove, or sunny hill,
Smot with the love of several mews.
—Milton, Paradise Lost, iii. 27.

Smil with the love of sister arts we came,
And met congenial, mingling flame with flame.
—Pope, Epistle to Mr. Jarvis.

Smite, v. n. Strike; collide. Rare.

The heart smote, and the knees smite together.
—Job, ii. 10.

Smither, s.

1. One who, that which, smites.

I gave my back to the smither, and my cheeks to them that plucked off the hair.—Isaiah, l. 6.

2. Fancy pigeon so called. See extract from Selby under Pigeon.

Smith, s. [A.S. smith.]

1. One who forges with his hammer; one who works in metals.

He doth nothing but talk of his horse, and he makes it a great appropriation to his own good parts that he can shoe him himself. I am afraid his mother played false with a smith.—Shakespeare Merchant of Venice, i. 2.

Lawless man, the avil darses profane,
And force that steel by which a man is slain;
Which earth at first for ploughshares did afford;
Nor yet the smith had learned to form a sword.
—Pope, Translation of Juvenal, xv. 209.

The ordinary qualities observable in iron, or a diamond, that make their true complex idea, a smith or a jeweller commonly knows better than a philosopher.—Locke.

2. One who makes or effects anything.

The doves repented, though too late,
Become the smiths of their own foolish fate.
—Dryden, Hind and Panther, iii. 128.

Smith, v. a. [A.S. smithian.] Beat into shape, as a smith.

Smithcraft. [A.S. smiðcraft.] Art of a smith.

Inventors of pastorage, smithcraft, and mudck.—Sir W. Raleigh.

Smithery. s. Smithy; work performed in a smith's shop.

The din of all his smithery may some time or other possibly wake this noble duke.—Burke, Letter to a Noble Lord.

Smithy. s. [A.S. smiððe.] Shop of a smith
His blazing locks went forth a crackling sound,
And him'd, like red hot iron, within the smithy drown'd.—Dryden.

Smock. s. [A.S. smoc.]

1. Under garment of a woman; shift.

Her body covered with a light taffeta garment, so ent, as the wrought smock came through it in many places.—Sir P. Sidney.

How dost thou look now? oh ill-star'd wench!
Pale as thy smock! when we shall meet at court,
This look of thine will hurl my soul from heaven's —Shakespeare, Othello, v. 2.

Though Artemisia talks by fits
Of councils, counsels, fathers, wits;
Reads Malluranch, Blythe, and Locke;
Yet in some things, methinks, she fails;
'Twere well if she would pare her nails,
And wear a cleaner smock.
—Pope, Imitations, Earl of Dorset.

I likewise found ten Portugal pieces in the shoes of a quaker, whom the spirit moved to revise me with great bitterness and devotion; but what I value myself mostly for is this here purchase, a gold smock-box, my girl, with a picture on the inside of the lid; which I nuzzled out of the tail of a pretty lady's smock.—Smollett, Roderick Random, ch. ix.

2. Used in a ludicrous kind of composition for anything relating to women.

At smock-treason, mistress, I believe you;
And if I were your husband; but when I Trust to your cub-web business any other,
Let me there die a fly, and feast you spider.
—B. Jonson, Catiline's Conspiracy, iv. 6.

Plague on his smock loyalty!
I hate to see a brave bold fellow sotted,
Made sour and senseless, turn'd to why by love.
—Dryden, Spanish Friar, il. 1.

3. Smockfrock.

The Swiss stand drawn up, disguised in white canvas smocks; the Invalids without disguise;
their arms all piled against the wall.—*Carlyle,
French Revolution, pt. i. h. ii. ch. vi.*

Smockfaced. adj. Palefaced; maidenly; effeminate.

Your smooth, smock-faced boy.
—Dryden, Translation of Juvenal, x. 491.
Old chiefs reflecting on their former deeds,
Disinclined to rust with battered invalids;
But active in the foremost ranks appear,
And leave young smock-faced beaux to guard the rear.
—Keats, Brutus.

Smock-frock. s. [two words.] Slop, or over garment, worn like a shirt, over the other clothes; gaberline.

A man in a smock-frock was sitting by, eating his morning meal.—W. H. Ainsworth, Rookwood.

Smoke. v. n. [A.S. smecgan = contrive.]
Smell, or hunt out.

He hit her came to observe and smoke
What courses other rinkers took. Batter, Hudibras.
I began to smoke that they were a parcel of num-mers, and wondered that none of the Middlesex justices took care to lay some of them by the heels.
—Addison, Freesholder.

Smoke. v. a.

1. Detect; find out.

He was first smoked by the old lord Lafau: when his disguise and he in part, what a sprat you shall find him!—Shakespeare, All's well that ends well, in. 6.

I am glad, I have smoked you yet at last.—B. Jonson, Every Man in his Humour.
Tom Tattle passes for an impertinent, and Will Trippet begins to be smoked, in case I continue this paper.—Addison, Spectator.

2. Expose; ridicule to the face.

Thou'rt very smart, my dear: but see, smoke the doctor!—Addison, Drummer.
Smoke the fellow there.—Congreve.

Smoke. s. [A.S. smoc, smoc, smec.] Particles of imperfectly burnt material rising from a fire when the fuel is in excess of the flame.

She might utter out some smoke of those flames wherewith else she was not only burned, but smothered.—Sir P. Sidney.
Stand off, and let me take the air;
Why should the smoke pursue the fair?
—Cleveland.

All involved with stench and smoke.

Milton, Paradise Lost, l. 237.
An smoke that rises from the kindling fire,
Is seen this moment, and the next expires. Prior.
Smoke passing through flame cannot but grow red hot, and red hot smoke can appear no other than flame.—Sir I. Newton.

Smoke. v. a.

1. Emit a dark exhalation by heat.

His brandish'd steel,
Which smoked with bloody execution.
—Shakespeare, Macbeth, l. 2.
To him no temple stood nor altar smoked.
—Milton, Paradise Lost, l. 483.

For Venus, Cytherea was invoked, Altars for Pallas to Athens smoked. Graville.
He had been accustomed to believe that the gods had lived upon earth, and taken upon themselves the forms of men; had shared in human passions, in human labours, and in human misfortunes. What was the travail of his own Alcmena's son, whose altars now smoked with the incense of countless ciths, but a toil for the human race.—*Lord Lytton,
The Last Days of Pompeii, b. iii. ch. iii.*

2. Burn; be kindled.

The anger of the Lord shall smoke against that man.—Destruction, xxix. 28.

3. Move with such swiftness as to kindle; move very fast so as to raise dust like smoke.

Arcadius drives his chariot round
The Latin plains, with palms and laurels crown'd,
Proud of his steeds he smokes along the field;
His father's hydra fills the ample shield.
—Dryden, Translation of the Æneid, vii. 907.

With hasty hand the rolling reins he drew,
He lash'd the coursers, and the coursers flew;
Beneath the bending yoke alike they held Their equal pace, and smoked along the field.
—Pope, Translation of the Odyssey, iii. 611.

4. Steam; reek.

That cunning fellow Shaftesbury, and some others amongst the great ones, have taken it up, and are driving on at such a rate as makes harness crack, and horses smoke for it.—Sir W. Scott, Peveril of the Peak, ch. v.

5. Inhale tobacco.

6. Suffer; be punished.

Manners all the world will I keep safe,
Or some of you shall smoke for it in Rome.
—Shakespeare, Titus Andronicus, iv. 2.

Smoke. v. a.

1. Scent by smoke; medicate by smoke, or dry in smoke.

A gambon of bacon smoked.—Hulot.
Friccions of the back-bone with flannel, smoked with penetrating aromatic substances, have proved effective.—Arbuthnot.

2. Expel by smoke.

This king, upon that outrage against his person, smoked the Jesuits out of his nest.—Sir E. Sneyd, State of Religion, G. 3. l. i. ed. 1803.

3. Use for smoking: (in the extract the construction is scarcely active; the tobacco being that which is smoked).

Not blacker tube, nor of a shorter size, Smokes Cambrus-Briton.
—J. Phillips, Splendid Shilling.

Smoke-dry. v. a. Dry by smoke.

Smoke-dry the fruit, but not if you plant them.—
Mortimer, Husbandry.

Smoke-dried. adj. Dried by smoke.

I love, my boy, one jolly hour with thee . . . in this chamber, all smoke-dried though it be.—Lord Lytton, The Last Days of Pompeii, b. ii. ch. ii.

Smoke-furthing. s. In Law. See extract.

Smoke-furthings, the pentecostals or customary donations offered by the dispersed inhabitants within a diocese, where they made their procession to the mother cathedral church, came by degrees into a standing annual rent, called smoke-furthings.— Cowell.

Smoke-jack. s. Jack turned by the current of air which carries up the smoke.

Smoke-money. s. See Smoke-silver.

Smoke-penny. s. See Smoke-silver.

Smoke-silver. s. In Law. See extract.

Land was held in some places by the payment of the sum of sixpence yearly to the sheriff, called smoke-silver. Smoke-silver and smoke-penny are to be paid to the ministers of divers parishes, as a modus in lieu of tithes: and in some manors formerly belonging to religious houses there is still paid, as appendant to the said manors, the ancient Peter-penny, by the name of smoke-money.—Toulmin, Law Dictionary. (Grimper.)

Smoker. s. One who, that which, smokes.

Annoying himself with his pipe and cheroots
The whole afternoon at the old Goat-in-Boots,

With a couple more smokers

Thoroughbred smokers,
Both like himself prime singers and jokers.
—Berham, Inglish Legends, Look at the Clock.

Smokeless. adj. Having no smoke.

Travels with aghs the smokeless tow'n survey,
And turn th' unwilling steed another way.
—Pope, Moral Essays, iii. 191.

Smoking. part. adj. Emitting smoke.

When the sun went down, behold a smoking furnace and a burning lamp that passed between those pieces.—Genesis, xv. 17.

Smoking. verbal abs. Act or habit of one who, or that which, smokes.

a. As of a chimney.

b. As in the use of tobacco.

Smoking has gone out. To be sure it is a shocking thing blowing smoke out of our mouth into other people's mouths, eyes, and noses, and having the same thing done for us. Yet I cannot account why a thing which requires so little exertion, and yet preserves the mind from total vacancy, should have gone out. . . . The taste for smoking has . . . revived, probably from the military habits of Europe during the French wars; but instead of the sober sedentary pipe the ambulatory cigar is now chiefly used.
—Isaac, Life of Johnson, with Note by Cruker: 1880.

c. Equivocal.

Clarkson tells me you are in a smoky house. Have you cured it? It is hard to cure anything of smoking.—Laurel, Letters, Letter to Coleridge.

As the first element in a compound.

And, ladies, think of men who do not merely frequent the dining-room and library, but who use other apartments of those horrible dens . . . think of Canon . . . clattering over the billiard-table . . .
think of him . . . playing guinea points . . . Above all, think, I think, of that den of abomination, which, I am told, has been established in some clubs, called the smoking-room.—*Thackeray, Book of Snobs,
ch. xxxvii.*

Smoky. adj.

1. Emitting smoke.

Victorious to the top aspire, ●
Involving all the wood in smoky fires.
—Dryden, Translation of the Georgics, ii. 420.

2. Having the appearance or nature of smoke.
London appears in a morning drowned in a black cloud, and all the day after smothered with smoky fog, the consequence whereof proves very offensive to the lungs.—Harey.

It blast septentrional with bristling wings
Sweep up the smoky mists, and vapours damp,
Then waft to mortals. —J. Phillips, Cyder, l. 146.

3. Noisome with smoke.

● he's as tedious
As a tired horse, or as a railing wife;
Worse than a smoky house.
—Shakespeare, Henry IV, Part I, iii. 1.

Is sooner found in lowly sheds,
With smoky rafters, than in tapestry halls
And courts of princes. —Milton, Comus, 322.
Morpheus, the humble god, that dwells
In cottages and smoky cells,
Hates gilded roofs and beds of down;
And though he fears no prince's frown,
Flies from the circle of a crown. —Sir J. Denham.

4. Dark; obscure.

Other points the Jesuits, by their smoky doctrine, do resist.—Skinner, Letter to Archbishop Usher, in Parr's Letters, p. 334.

Smolt. s. [Y] Young salmon.

Desirous of ascertaining the appearance of the young salmon at periods intermediate between the states as pinks and salmon peel, other experiments were tried. Pinks in the river Hodder in the month of April are rather more than three inches long, and are considered to be the fry of that year: at this time, smolts of six inches and a half are also taken.
The smolts are considered as the fry of the previous year, and are distinguished by the blue colour on the upper half of their body, the silvery tint of the lower half, and the darker line of the fins generally as compared with those of the pink. In this state as to colour, the smolts are said to have assumed their migratory dress, and go down to the sea in May. In June the young pink in the Hodder measures about four inches; in July it measures five inches, and no smolts are then found in the river.
To be further convinced of this change, and the length of time required to produce it, a pink put into a well at Whitwell in the forest of Bowland in November 1837, was taken out in the state of a smolt of six inches and a quarter in July 1838. In another instance more pinks by Mr. Upton's directions were put into Lallyn in September 1837, and Mr.
Parker caught five or six in the state of smolts of seven and a half inches in August 1838. In referring to the particular size of the pinks in the river Hod-den at stated periods, it may be necessary to remark that the pinks of different rivers, and even in the same river will be found to vary in size, depending on the time at which the spawn was deposited, the temperature of the season, and other causes.—Farrall, History of British Fishes.

Smoor. v. a. Smother.

Smothering. part. adj. Smothering.

Thou hast bound ball of smothering darkness.
Dr. H. More, Philosophical Poems, p. 322: 1647.

Smooth. adj. [A.S. smœð, smœc.]

1. Even of the surface; not rough; level; having no asperities.

Behold Esau my brother is a hairy man, and I am a smooth man.—Genesis, xvii. 11.
The outlines must be smooth, imperceptible to the touch, and even without eminences or cavities.—Dryden.

2. Evenly spread; glossy.

3. Equal in pace; without starts or obstruction.

4. Gently flowing.

Smooth Adonis from his rock
Ran purple to the sea.

Milton, Paradise Lost, l. 450.

5. Voluble; not harsh; soft.

When sage Minerva rose,
From her sweet lips smooth eloquence flows.

Gay, The Fawn, iii. 1.

6. Bland; mild; adulatory.

The subtle flend,
Though inty stung with anger and disdain,
Dissembled, and this answer smooth returned.
Milton, Paradise Regained, l. 463.
This smooth discourse and mild behaviour oft Conceal a traitor.
Addison, Cato, ii. 1.

As the first element in a combination or compound.

Missing thee, I walk unseen
On the dry smooth-shaven green,
To behold the wandering moon
Riding near her highest noon.

Milton, Il Penseroso, 65.

By the . . . and he took me raised,
And over fields and waters, as in air,
Smooth-sliding without steps.

Milton, Paradise Lost, viii. 300.

Nor box nor linings, without their use;
Smooth-grained, and proper for the turner's trade,
Which curious hands may carve, and steel with ease Invade.

Dryden, Translation of the Georgics, ll. 630.

So, Dick adelp, back back thy hair;
And I will pour into thy ear
Remarks, which none did e'er disclose,
In smooth-paced verse or hobbling prose.

Pope, Alca, iii. 141.

He was smooth-tongued, gave good words, and seldom lost his temper.—Arbuthnot, History of John Bull.

The meddling monarchs to compose
The Pylon prince, the smooth-spoken Nestor rose.
Tuckill.

The fair-haired queen of love
Descends smooth-gliding from the courts above.
Pope.

The monarch turns him to his royal guest,
And for the promised journey bids prepare
The smooth-chained horses, and the rapid car.
Id., Translation of the Odyssey, iii. 603.

Used adverbially. Level.

Bob Tizzy, who was famous for such feats, had already made away with the Colgate jump-handle; fired St. Boniface's new smooth with his face; carried off four images of nigger-legs, from the tobaccoists;
painted the senior proctor's horse pea-green, &c.—
Thackeray, Book of Snobs, ch. xiv.

Smooth. s. Smooth part.

Now put the skins of the kids of the goats upon his hams, and upon the smooth of his neck.—Genesis,
xviii. 18.

Smooth. v. a.

1. Level; make even on the surface.

The carpenter encouraged the goldsmith, and he that smoothed with the hammer him that smote
the anvil.—Isaiah, xli. 7.

Smiling she seem'd, and full of pleasing thought,
From ocean as she first began to rise,
And smooth'd the ruffled seas, and rear'd the skies.
Dryden, Palamon and Arcite, ii. 512.

'Why do people spend more money?' here he filled his glass again: 'upon a death, Mrs. Gump, than upon a birth? Come, that's in your way; you ought to know. How do you account for that now?'
'Perhaps it is because an undertaker's charges are dearer than a nurse's charges, sir,' said Mrs.
Gump, titling and smoothing down her new black dress with her hands. 'Ha, ha!' laughed Mr. Mould.
'You have been breakfasting at somebody's expense
this morning, Mrs. Gump.'—Dickens, Martin Chuzzlewit, ch. xix.

Without aid from her husband, the wife took down basket and newsgay, settled her cloak, smoothed her gown, and said, 'Very odd!—they don't seem to expect us, Mark. How still the house is. Go and knock; they can't ha' gone to bed yet.'—Lord

Lyttel, My Novel, b. xi. ch. xvii.

Whither away? he repeated, picking up the ill-omened letter which Gitzally Mann had cast from him, and smoothing it on his knee.—Sala, Dutch Pictures, The Ship-Chandler.

2. Work into a soft uniform mass.

It brings up again into the mouth that which it had swallowed, and chewing it, grinds and smooths it, and afterwards swallows it into another stomach.
Rep., On the Wisdom of God manifested in the Works of the Creation.

3. Make easy; rid from obstructions.

Thou, Alward! the last old office pay,
And smooth my passage to the realms of day.
Pope, Epitaph to Alward.

4. Make flowing; free from harshness.

In their motions harmony divine
So smooths their charming tones.

Milton, Paradise Lost, v. 623.
All your muse's softer art display,
Let Carolina smooth the tuneful lay;
Lull with Amelia's liquid name the Nine,
And sweetly flow through all the royal line.

Pope, Imitations of Horace, b. ii. sat. i.

5. Palliate; soften.

Had it been a stranger, not my child,
To smooth his fault I would have been more mild.

Shakespeare, Richard III. i. 3.

6. Calm; mollify.

Now breathe we, lords; good fortune bids us
pause,
And smooth the frowns of war with peaceful looks.

Shakespeare, Henry VI. Part III. ii. 4.
Each perturbation smooth'd with outward calm.
Milton, Paradise Lost, iv. 720.

7. Ease.

Restored it soon will be; the means prepared,
The difficulty smoothed, the danger shared;
Be but yourself.

Dryden.

8. Flatter; soften with blandishments.

Because I cannot flatter, and look fair,
Smile in men's faces, smooth, deceive, and cog,
Duck with French nouns, and apish courtesy,
I must be held a rancorous enemy.

Shakespeare, Richard III. i. 3.

This man's a flatterer if you be,
So are they all; for every greaze of fortune
Is smooth'd by that below.

Id., Timon of Athens, iv. 3.
He smooths us up in the good opinion of our own precious disposition.—Bishop Hall, Invisible World,
b. iii. § 5.

Smoothbore. s. Smooth-bored gun.

Smoothbored. adj. Having a smooth, as opposed to a rifled, barrel: (applied to guns).

Although the whole of the infantry of the British army is now armed with rifles, the rifle brigade and cavalry regiment, which were armed with rifles while the other troops had only smooth-bored muskets, are still distinguished as rifle regiments, as are also the Ceylon, Cape, and Canadian regiments.—Brande and Cox, Dictionary of Science, Literature, and Art.

Smooth-chinned. adj. Beardless.

Look to your wives too;
The smooth-chinned courtiers are abroad.

Mansinger, The Duke of Milan, ii. 1.

Smoothen. v. a. Make smooth. Rare.

With edged grooving tools they cut down and smoothen the excuberances left.—Mason, Mechanical Exercise.

Smother. s. One who, that which, smooths, or frees from harshness.

They were distinguished by the name of 'smothers,' a word which denotes smotherers and polishers of language.—Bishop Percy, Essay on the Ancient English Minstrelsy, § 1.

Smothered. adj.

1. Mild-looking; having a soft air.

O, shall I say I thank you, gentle wife?
Not so, my lord; a twelve-month and a day,
I'll mark no words that smother'd words say.

Shakespeare, Love's Labour's Lost, v. 2.

Let their hairs
Enrich their time to come with smother'd peace,
With smiling plenty, and fair proud front days.

Id., Richard III. v. 4.

2. Beardless.

3. Having a smooth surface in general.

Smoothly. adv. In a smooth manner.

1. Not roughly; evenly; with even glide.

Beneath the shade of flowing jet
The ivory forehead smoothly wet.

Guardian, no. 108.

The music of that murmuring spring
Is not so mournful as the strain you sing;
Nor rivers winding through the vales below
So sweetly warble, or so smoothly flow.

Pope, Pastorals, Winter.

2. Without obstruction; easily; readily.

Had Joshua been mindful, the fraud of the Gibeonites could not so smoothly have past unnoticed, till there was no help.—Hooker, Ecclesiastical Polity.

3. With soft and bland language.

4. Mildly; innocently.

Some look'd full smoothly, and had a false quart.
Shelton, The Tanning of Elton Ramming Looking so smoothly and innocently on it, and deceiving them.—Dr. H. More, Conjectura Cabbalistica, p. 230.

Smoothness. s. Attribute suggested by Smooth.

1. Evenness on the surface; freedom from asperity.

A countryman feeding his flock by the sea-side, it was no delicate a fine day, that the smoothness of the water tempted him to set up for a merchant.—
Sir R. L. R. R. R.

The nymph is all into a laurel gone,
The smoothness of her skin remains alone.
Dryden, Translation from Ovid,
Metamorphoses, b. i.

2. Softness or mildness on the palate.

Pallidous drink! ye honest men beware,
Nor trust its smoothness; the third revelling glass
Suffices virtue.

J. Phillips, Cyder, ll. 353.

3. Sweetness and softness of numbers.

As French has more fineness and smoothness at this time, so it had more compass, spirit, and force in Montaigne's age.—Sir W. Temple.

Virgil, though smooth, where smoothness is required, is so far from affecting it, that he rather disclaims it; frequently using synalepha, and ending his sense in the middle of his verse.—
Dryden.

4. Blandness and gentleness of speech.

She is too subtle for thee; and her smoothness,
Her very silence, and her patience,
Speak to the people, and not they pity her.

Shakespeare, As you like it, l. 1.

Smother. v. a. [also smoor, A.S. smoran.]

1. Suffocate with smoke, or by exclusion of the air.

She might give passage to her thoughts, and so as it were utter out some smoke of those flames, wherewith she was not only burned but smothered.—
Sir P. Sidney.

We smother'd
The most replenish'd spot of work of nature,
That from the prime creation e'er she framed.

Shakespeare, Richard III. iv. 3.

The helpless traveller, with wild surprise,
Sees the dry desert all around him rise,
And smother'd in the dusty whirlwind dies.

Addison, Cato.

2. Suppress.

Lewd and wicked custom, beginning perhaps at the first announced few, afterwards spreading into greater multitudes, and so continuing; from time may be of force, even in plain things, to smother the light of natural understanding.—Hooker, Ecclesiastical Polity.

She was warmed with the graceful appearance of the hero: she smother'd those sparks out of obedience, but conversation blew them up into a flame.—Dryden, Translation of the Æneid, dedica- tion.

With up.

We are now yet living in the field,
To smother up the English in our thrones.

Shakespeare, Henry V. iv. 5.

Smother. v. n.

1. Smoke without vent.

2. Be suppressed or kept close.

What, in to this grave?
Yea, there shall ye consume.—
And what, should I smother here?
Yea, by my faith, and never more appear.

Every Man (Old Morality no called).

The advantage of conversation is such, that, for want of company, a man had better talk to a post than let his thoughts be smoking and smothering.—
Collier, Essays, Of Friendship.

Smother. s.

1. State of suppression. Rare.

This unfortunate prince, after a long smother of discontent, and hatred of many of his nobility and people, breaking forth at times into additions, was at last distressed by them. Æneid.

A man were better relate himself to a statue, than suffer his thoughts to pass in smother.—Id.

Nothing makes a man suspect much, more than to know little; and therefore men should procure to know more, and not to keep their suspicions in smother.—Id., Essay.

2. Smoke; thick dust.

Thus must I from the smoke into the smother,
From tyrant duke unto a tyrant brother.

Shakespeare, As you like it, l. 1.

SMOTHERING

Where you disordered heap of ruin lies,
Stones rent from stones, where clouds of dust arise,
Amid that smother Neptune holds his place.
Dryden, Translation of the Æneid, li. 825.
The greater part enter only like mutes to fill the stage,
And spend their taper in smoke and smother.
Collier, Songs, Of Fane.

Smothering. part. adj.

1. Wanting vent.

Hay and straw have a very low degree of heat; but yet close and smothering, and which drieth not.—Bacon, Natural and Experimental History.

2. Suffocating.

Smouch. v. a. Salute.

What blessing what smouching and slabbering one of another!—Stubbs, Anatomy of Abuse, p. 114: 1593.

Smoulder. v. a. Smother.

The powder sends his smoke into the cruddy skies,
The smoulder stops our nose with stench, the fume offends our eyes.
Gauciguine, (Rich.)

Smoulder. v. n. Burn with concealed or latent flame.

The tone is a light flame some ruled, the tother smoulderech much lower.—Sir T. More, (Wedgwood.)

Smouldring. part. adj. Smouldry.

With such a horrid claug
As on Mount Sinai rang,
While the red fire and smouldring clouds outbreak.
Milton, On the Nativity, 157. (Rich.)

Smouldry. adj. Burning and smoking without vent.

None can breathe, nor see, nor hear at will,
Through smouldry cloud of dusky stinking smoke,
That the only breath him daunts who hath escaped the stroke.
Spenser, Faerie Queen.

Smudge. s. Smutch.

Smudge. v. a. Smutch.

But rather with the beauty of the mind
Which neither time can alter, sickness change,
Violence deface, nor the black hand of envy
Smudge and disfigure, or spall, or make deformed.
A Pleasant Conceited Comedy: 1605. (Rich.)

Smug. adj. [Danish, smukke—fair, pretty, beautiful: (used without any notion of disparagement, and as the ordinary equivalent to the English pretty, or German schöne, as applied in the way of compliment to the fair sex, as, smukke pige—pretty girl).]

1. Nice; spruce; dressed with affectation of needless, but without elegance.

Do not think I'm a dixerany jay?
No, wis jo, Jack, I look a little more smug.
Preston, King Cambises: 1541.
There I have a bankrupt for a prodigal, who chaws across shew his head on the Rialto; a lecher, that used to come so smug upon the mark.—Shakespeare, Merchant of Venice, iii. 1.
He who can make your visage less horrid, and your person more smug, is worthy some good reception.—Spectator.

2. Applied to things.

That trim and smug saying, that seemed before to shoot up into the sky, flags now.—Annotations on Glanville, p. 184: 1682.

Smug. v. a. Adorn; dress up. Rare.

My man,
In Circe's house, were all, in several baine
Stidiously sweeten'd, smugg'd with oile, and deckt,
With in and outwreids.
Chapman, Translation of the Odyssey.

With up.
Socrates himself, when he went to a feast, was content to be smugg'd up and secured in his pau-toulles.—Pelltham, Remotes, li. ii. rev. li.

Smuggie. v. a. [German, schmuggeln; Danish, smugle—smug, clandestinely; A.S. smugan—creep; smuggelus—lurking places; Dutch, ter smug.]

1. Import or export goods without paying the customs.

I had the greatest reason to believe that not a single article was smuggled by any of our people who were admitted on shore, though many artful means were used to tempt them.—Cook, First Voyage, li. ii. ch. li. (Rich.)

2. Munge or convey secretly.

Smuggler. s. One who imports or exports goods either contraband or without payment of the customs.

Here, in cabal, a disputatious crew,
Each evening meet; the not, the cheat, the shrew:
904

SMUT

Snarers and smugglers here their gains divide,
Ensuring females here their victims hide.
Crabbe, Parish Register.

Smuggling. s. See extract.

Smuggling, or the office of importing goods without paying the duties imposed by the laws of the customs and excise, is restrained by a great variety of statutes.—Sir W. Blackstone, Commentary on the Laws of England.

Smugly. adv. Neutly; sprucely.

Lilies and roses will quickly appear,
And her face will look wondrous smugly. Gay

Smut. s. [A.S. smutta.]

1. Spot made with soot or coal.

2. Must or blackness gathered on corn; mildew.

Peasants have suffered by smutty wheat, when such will not sell for above five shillings a bushel; whereas that which is free from smut will sell for ten.—Mortimer, Husbandry.

Of parasitical fungi the most important are those called the dry rot. . . . Next to these come the blight in corn, occasioned by Puccinia graminis; the smut and ergot, if they are really anything more than the diseased and disorganised tissue of the plants affected; the rust . . . and finally . . . what we call mildew.—Lindley, Vegetable Kingdom.

3. Obscenity.

'I cannot, for my heart, conceive the pleasure of noise, and nonsense, and drunken frocks, and drunken quarrels, and smut, and blasphemy, and so forth, when a man loses money instead of gaining by it.'—Sir W. Scott, Kenilworth, ch. li.

Smut. c. a. [A.S. smuttan.]

1. Stain; mark with, or as with, soot or coal.

No man can like to be smutted and blotched in his face.—Harmer, Translation of Beza, p. 193: 1577.

He is far from being smutted with the soil of atheism.—Dr. H. More.
A fuller had invitation from a collier to live with him: he gave him a thousand thanks; but, says he, as fast as I make anything clean, you'll be smutting it again.—Sir R. L. Estlin.

The toshie is so smutted with dirt and smoke, that neither the marble, silver, nor brass works shew themselves.—Adrian.

I am wonderfully pleased to see my tenants play their innocent tricks, and smutting one another.—Id.

2. Taint with mildew.

Mildew falleth upon corn, and smutted it.—Bacon.

Smut. v. n. Gather smut.

White red-eared wheat is good for clays, and bears a very good crop, and seldom smuts.—Mortimer, Husbandry.

Smutch. v. a. Blacken with smoke; mark with soot or coal.

What, hast smutch'd thy nose?
Shakespeare, Winter's Tale, i. 2.

Have you seen but a bright lily grow,
Before rude hands have touch'd it?
Ha! you mark'd but the fall of the snow,
Before the soil hath smutch'd it?

B. Jonson, Underwoods.

Smutch. s. Foul stain; dirty mark.

His milk-white hand; the palm is hardly clean,
But, here and there, an ugly smutch appears.
Foh! 'twas a bribe that left it: he hath touch'd Corruption.
Cowper, Task, (Rich.)

Smutchin. s. Snuff. Obsolete.

The Spaniards and Irish take it [tobacco] most in powder or smutchin, and it mightily refreshes the brain, and I believe there's as much taken this way in Ireland as there is in pipes in England; one shall commonly see the serving man upon the washing block, and the swain upon the ploughshare, when they are over tired with labour, take out their boxes of smutchin, and draw it into their nostrils with a quill, and it will begot new spirits in them, with a fresh vigour to pull to their work again.—Mallet, Letters, li. ii. letter iii. (Ord MS.)

Smuttily. adv. In a smutty manner.

1. Blackly; smokily.

2. Obscenely.

It is the same poverty which makes men speak or write smuttily, that forces them to talk vexingly.—Tatler, no. 229.

Smuttiness. s. Attribute suggested by Smutty.

My vines and peaches, upon my best south walls, were apt to a smut, or smuttiness upon their leaves and upon their fruits, which were good for nothing.
—Sir W. Temple.

Smutty. adj.

1. Black with smoke or coal.

I leave the smutty air of London, and come hither to breathe sweeter.—Hosell, Letters, li. 4, 6: 1623.

The smutty grain,
With sudden blaze diffus'd, inflames the air.
Milton, Paradise Lost, iv. 617.

SNAI

He was a smutty dog yesterday, and cost me near two hours to wash the ink off his face.—Pope.
The smutty walnut full of cracks. Swift.

2. Tainted with mildew.

Smutty corn will sell dearer at one time than the clean at another.—Locke.

3. Obscene; not modest.

I must forbear blurring out a witty saying if it be smutty or abusive.—Hornock, Fire of the Altar, p. 91.

The piece is a censure of a profane and smutty passage in the Old Bachelor.—Collier.

Snack. s. [snutch.]

1. Shure; part taken by compact.

If the master gets the better on't, they come in for their snack.—Sir R. L. Estlin.
For four times talking, if one piece thou take,
That must be eat, and the judge go snack.
C. Dryden, Translation of Juvenal, vii. 187.

All my denials but double his attacks;
At last he whispers, 'Do, and we go snack.'

Pope, Epistle to Arbuthnot.
'But now,' observed Vandyperken, 'where is this cargo to be men, and when?' 'That's tellings,' replied the man, 'I know that; but you have come to tell, or what the devil else?' replied Vandyperken, who was getting angry. 'That's according'—replied the man. 'According to what?' 'The snacks,' replied the man. 'What will you give up?' 'Give up! How do you mean?' 'What is my share to be?' 'Share! you can't share—you're not a king's officer.' 'No, but I'm an informer, and that's the same thing.' 'Well, depend upon it, I'll believe very liberally.' 'How much, I ask?' 'We'll see to that afterwards; something handsome, depend upon it.' 'That won't do. Wish you good evening, sir.'—Murray, Starleygon.

2. Slight, hasty repast. Colloquial.

Snaffle. s. [Dutch, snafel.] Bridle which crosses the nose.

The third of 'th' world is yours, which with a snaffle

You may pare easy; but not such a wife,
Shakespeare, Antony and Cleopatra, li. 2.

Snuff him with praise . . .
This, from his weaning, let him well be taught,
And then let him in a soft snaffle wrench it.
Dryden, Translation of the Georgics, iii. 293.

Snaffle. v. a. Bridle; hold in a bridle; hold; manage.

Master Bailey, I trow, and he be worth his carers,
Will snaffle these murderers.
Gammer Gurton's Needle: 1551.

Hitherto the writers' wills writ,
Which have engrossed princes' chiefs affairs,
Have been like horses snaffled with the bits
Of fancy, fears, or doubts.

Mirror for Magistrates, p. 305.

Snag. s. [A.S. snacc.]

1. Jag, or sharp protuberance.

The one her other leg had lame,
Which with a staff, all full of little snags,
She did disport, and impudently her mame.
Spenser, Faerie Queen.

The coat of arms,
Now on a naked snag in triumph borne,
Was hung on high.
Dryden, Translation of the Æneid, xi. 10.

Hailstones . . . pellucid throughout, like great pieces of ice, many of them having several long snags issuing out of the body of them.—Bay, Remains, p. 54.

2. Tooth left by itself, or standing beyond the rest; tooth, in contempt.

In China none hold women sweet,
Except their snags are black as jet:
King Chihlu put nine queens to death,
Convict on statute every teeth. Prior, Alma, li. 427.

Snagg'd. adj. Full of snags; full of sharp protuberances; shooting into sharp points.

Naked men belabouring one another with snagg'd sticks, or dully falling together by the ears at dirty-cuffs.—Dr. H. More.

Snaggy. adj. Having snags.

His stalking steps are stay'd
Upon a snaggy oak, which he had torn
Out of his mother's bowels, and it made
His mortal nace, wherewith his fœmen he dings'd.
Spenser.

Snail. s. [A.S. snegl.] Testaceous, or shell-bearing, land animal of the genus Helix; the so-called black snail is a slug (Limax).

I can tell why a snail has a house.—Why?
Why, to put 's head in; not to give it away to his daughters, and leave his horns without a case.—Shakespeare, King Lear, i. 5.

Seeing the snail, which every where doth roam,
Carrying his own house still, still is at home,
Follow, far he is easy-paced, this snail;
Be thine own palace, or the world's thy goal.

Donne.
There may be as many ranks of beings in the lu-visible world superior to us, as we ourselves are superior to all the ranks of being beneath us in this visible world, even though we descend below the snail and the oyster.—Watts.

As the first element in a compound.

The patch is kind enough, but a huge feeder:
Snail-slow in profit, but he sleeps by day
More than the wild cat.

Shakespeare, Merchant of Venice, II. 5.

Snail-like. adv. Resembling a snail (in respect to slowness).

A fox upon referring to commissioners;
I had rather hear that it were just the snail.
You courtiers move so snail-like in your business.
B. Jonson, The Devil is an Ass.

Snail-paced. adj. Slow as a snail; moving like a snail.

Fearful commenting
Is laden servitor to dull delay;
Delay leads impotent and snail-paced beggary.
Shakespeare, Richard III. IV. 3.

Has that snail-paced conveyance, old Forret, of Gray's Inn, settled the articles at last?—G. Colman and Garrick, The Chastelaine Marriage, II. 2.

Snake. s. [A.S. snaca. The etymological connection of this word with snail, in A.S. snay-el, in Danish and Swedish, snække, snicka, shows that the notion of creeping is at the bottom of its several meanings. Hence it is with words like serpens, rep-tilis, ῥεπειρόν, and the like, rather than with words like anguis, ὄφις, &c., that it must be compared; i.e. it is, etymologically, a general, rather than a specific, name. Nor is the English application of the term universal; the German name being schlange; the Norse, orm. See under Worm and Snake.]

1. In a general and somewhat lax sense, any member of the class Ophidia (Gr. ὄφις = serpent), i.e. reptiles with a backbone, but without either fins or feet, and, as such, crawlers or creepers, may be called a snake; the term thus used applying to adders, boas, and even to the slowworm or blindworm, which is really a lizard rather than an ophidian. In Latin, anguilla—eel, is a derivative of anguis = snake. With this meaning the word is common as the second element in a compound, e.g. rattle-snake and whipsnake; both of which are venomous. A distinction between serpent, as the name of the venomous, and snake as that of the non-venomous, ophidians has been suggested; and this, in Zoology, is, probably, convenient.

We have scolded the snake, not killed it:
She'll escape and be herself; whilst our poor malice
Remains in danger of her former teeth.
Shakespeare, Much to, III. 2.

The parts must have their outlets in waves resembling the girdle of a snake upon the ground;
they must be smooth and even.—Dryden, Translation of Diderot's Art of Painting.

Nor chalk, nor crumbling stones, the fool of snakes,
That work in hollow earth their winding tracks.
Id., Translation of the Georgics, II. 293.

2. Specifically, the common snake (Natrix torquata), as opposed to the slow-worm, or blindworm, and to the adder or viper, which is venomous.

The family of Colubridæ, to which our common snake belongs, is one of the most extensive of all the natural groups of reptiles. It includes a number of generic divisions, some more and some less strongly marked, which are found in every quarter of the globe. They are all of them perfectly free from any poisonous quality.—Bell, British Reptiles.

Snake. s. In Botany. See extract.

A very general character of the snowdrops, is to have their embryos either curved or twisted spirally. This occurs in a very remarkable manner in the unit of a Democraea tree, called the snakeant, in consequence of the large embryo resembling a snake curled up. Sir R. Schomburgk, who first described this production, has called the tree (Ophicaryon paradoxum).—Lindley, Vegetable Kingdom.

Snake-root. s. In Botany and Pharmacy.

See extract.
Others (of Polygalææ) are distinguished for their emetic, purgative, and diuretic action. Of these, the most celebrated is a North American herb called snake-root, Polygala senega; of this plant, the root is somewhat acid and acerb. It acts as a sudorific and expectorant in small doses, and as an emetic and cathartic in large ones. It is employed in jaundice, asthma, dropsy, chronic rheumatism, and especially in such derivate complaints as amenorrhœa. Dr. Archer has extravagantly praised it in gynaecologic tracheitis. Chemists refer the action to the presence of a particular principle called polygallic or senegic.—Lindley, Vegetable Kingdom.

Snakeshead. s. In Botany. Rare and doubtful native, but common garden plant, of the genus Fritillaria (Melengris); so called from the markings of its flower. Both the Latin names intimate a comparison with something chequered, or dotted; fritillus = dice-box, and melengris = a guinea-fowl. The plant is sometimes called the Snakeshead Lily, and sometimes the Snakeshead iris.

Snakewood. s.

1. See extract.

What we call snakewood is properly the smaller branches of the root of a tall straight tree growing in the island of Timor and other parts of the East. It has no remarkable smell; but is of an intensely bitter taste. The Indians are of opinion, that it is a certain remedy for the bite of the hooded serpent, and from thence its name of lignum colubinum, or snakewood. We very seldom use it.—Sir J. Hill, Materia Medica.

2. South American tree of the genus Brosimum, or Piratinum (gummiensis).

Snakewood, or Bois de Lettres, so called because of the markings which it presents . . . is obtained from a tree sixty or seventy feet high, whose beautiful timber is so hard that it can only be felled by the American axe.—Lindley, Vegetable Kingdom.

Snaky. adj.

1. Serpentine; belonging to a snake; resembling a snake.

Venomous tongue, tip with vile adder's sting,
Of that self kind with which the furies fell
Their snaky heads do crank.
Spenser.

The cracked arms Meander bow'd with his so snaky bowd,
Resolv'd for conduct the choice youth of all their mortal blood.
Chapman.

The true lover's knot had its original from 'moss Herculean,' or Hercules's knot, resembling the snaky complication in the caduceus, or rod of Hermes.—Sir T. Browne, Vulgar Errors.
So to the coast of Jordan he directs
His easy steps, girded with snaky wiles.
Milton, Paradise Regained, I. 119.

2. Having serpents.

Look, look, into this snaky reel,
And stop your ears against the charming rod.
B. Jonson.

In his hand
He took caduceus, his snaky wand.
Spenser, Mother's Hither's Tale.

His flying hat was fasten'd on his head;
Wings on his heels were hung, and in his hand
He holds the virtue of the snaky wand.
Dryden, Translation from Ovid, Metamorphoses, II. 1.

As the first element in a compound.

What was that snaky-headed gorgon shield
That wise Minerva wore, unconquer'd virgin,
Wherewith she freed her face to snaky stone?
Milton, Comus, 115.

Snap. v. a. [compare with knap.]

1. Break at once; break short.

If the chain of necessity be no stronger, but that it may be snapped so easily in sunder; if his wit was no otherwise determined from without himself, but only by the signification of your desire, and my modest courtesy, then we may conclude, human affairs are not always governed by absolute necessity.
—Bishop Bramhall, Against Hobbes.

Light is broken like a body, as when 'tis snapped in pieces by a tougher body.—Sir A. Digby.
Dauntless as death, away he walks;
Breaks the doors open, snaps the locks;
Searches the parlour, chamber, study.
Nor stops till he has culprits by.

Prior, An English Padlock.

The barons, without perhaps one exception, and a large proportion of the gentry, were of French decent, and preserved among themselves the speech of their fathers. This continued much longer than we should naturally have expected: even after the loss of Normandy had snapped the thread of French familiarity, and they began to pride themselves in the name of Englishmen, and in the inheritance of traditional English privileges.—Hollin, The State of Europe during the Middle Ages, II. II.

Just when I was intertwin'd what is left of my life with the bright threads of his, he snaps the web asunder; he quits this London world again; says;

he will return to it no more.—Lord Lytton, What will he do with it? II. vii. ch. xix.

2. Strike with a knocking noise or a sharp sound.

The howdy stro

First shook from out his pipe the seeds of fire.
Then snapped his box.
Pope, Innocent, IV. 493.
He then snapped his fingers (as was usual with him) and took two or three turns about the room in an extasy.—*Fiddling, Adventures of Joseph Andrews,
ch. xvi.*

When I asked the gentleman usher what was the usual house-fee paid to the king of the country, he informed me that you advanced your hand before you on a level with your face, and snapped your fingers at him. That the ladies you could snap them, the more accomplished and elegant, you were considered.
But in my confusion I quite forgot his injunctions; and it was not until the ladies all snapped their fingers in obedience to the commands of their sovereign, that I recollected the omission which I had been guilty of.—Murray, The Facha of Many Tales, Huckleback.

3. Bite.

All mungrel curs bawl, snarl, and snap, where the fox flies before him.—Sir R. L'Estrange.
A grand-lama passing by a coach, one of the horses snapped off the end of his finger.—Wiccome, Surgery.
A notion generally received, that a lion is dangerous to all women who are not virgins, may have given occasion to a foolish report, that my lion's jaws are so contrived as to snap the heads of any of the female sex who are not thus qualified.—Addison, Spectator.

His snaps deceitful air with empty jaws,
The subtle hare darts swift beneath his paws.
Gay, Rural Sports, II. 213.

4. Catch suddenly and unexpectedly.

Sir Richard Graham tells the marquess he would snap one of the kids, and make some shift to carry him close to their lodgings.—Sir H. Bolton.
Some with a noise and groans light
Are snapped, as men catch larks at night.

Roth, Hudibras, II. 3. 7.

You should have thought of this before you was taken; for now you are in danger to be snapped sinecure man.—Sir R. L'Estrange.

Did I not see you, rascal, did I not?
When you lay some to snap young Damon's goat?
Dryden, Translation of Virgil, Eclogues, III. 23.
Belated seen on watch to lie,
And snapped some early passing by.
Swift.

5. Treat with sharp language.

Cajoch'd your rabbins of the synod,
And snapped their came: with a whir not.
Roth, Hudibras, II. 3. 529.

A surly ill-bred lord
That chides and snaps her up at every word.
Graville.

Snap. v. n.

1. Break short; fall asunder; break without bending.

Side the ship's sicknesses, the mast
Shook with an awe, and the hold and waist
With a salt dropy cleav'd; and our treklines
Snapping, like to too high stretch'd tackle strings,
Donne.

The backbone is divided into so many vertebrae for commodious bending, and not one entire rigid bone, which, being of that length, would have been often in danger of snapping in sunder.—Ray, II. 10.
of God manifested in the Works of the Creation.

But whether that was the cause or not the cause;
or whether the snapping of my father's tobacco pipe so critically, happened through accident or necessity, will be seen in due time. Though my father was a good natural philosopher, yet he was something of a moral philosopher too; for which reason, when his tobacco pipe snapped short in the middle—he had nothing to do, as such, but to have taken hold of the two pieces, and thrown them gently upon the back of the fire.—Steele, The Tatler, vol. II. ch. vi.
If your steel be too hard that is, too brittle, if it be a spring, it will not hold; but with the least bending it will snap asunder.—Mason, Mechanical Exerccises.

The makers of these needles should give them a due temper: for if they are too soft, they will bend;
and if they are too brittle, they snap.—Sharp, Surgery.

2. Make an effort to bite with eagerness;
catch, or seize, eagerly.

If the young deer be a bait for the old pike, I see no reason but I may snap at him.—Shakespeare, Henry IV. Part II. act. 2.

We snapped at the bait without ever dreaming of the hook that goes along with it.—Sir R. L'Estrange.

Tower snaps

At people's heels with frothy chaps.
Swift.
To the astonishment of everybody [he] joined the 'Sylvatic'—that 'hell agent.' He made the chuden deliberately: he wanted work, he wanted healthy employment. Belden, who, besides the second number, had nobody but our acquaintances, Twigg and Hig-on board, snapped at him.—Murray, Singleton Pantoon.

3. Express sharp language.

With the peremptory Jewish wits, we have snaps at God's ministers, as they did at the prophet Jeremiah in Egypt, and told them in plain terms, let them say what they would, we would do as we list.—Bishop Prideaux, Euchologia, p. 235: 1666.

Snap. s.

1. Act of breaking with a quick motion.

2. Greedy fellow.

He had no sooner said out his say, but up rises a cunning snap, then at the board.—Sir R. L. K. tramps.

3. Quick eager bite.

With their bills, thwarted crosswise at the end, they would cut an apple in two at one snap.—Carew, Survey of Cornwall.

4. Catch; theft.

Snádragon. s.

1. Plant so called of the genus Linaria (vulgaria); the name is applied also, perhaps more usually, to the garden plant of the genus Antirrhinum.

It has been remarked, that the flowers of certain species, whose parts are not symmetrically arranged, and which do not alternate in the manner described, do nevertheless occasionally assume a perfectly regular structure, by the development of supernumerary parts. As an illustration of our meaning, we may select the common snádragon; in which, as well as in some other species of this and of the allied genus Antirrhinum, the phenomenon we are about to describe may occasionally be observed.—Henslow, Principles of Descriptive and Physiological Botany, pt. i. ch. vi.

2. Kind of play, in which brandy is set on fire, and raisins thrown into it, which those who are unused to the sport are afraid to take out; but which may be safely snatched by a quick motion, and put blazing into the mouth, which being closed, the fire is at once extinguished.

We got into a dark corner with a porringer of brandy, and threw raisins into it; then set it on fire. My chamber-fellow and I diverted ourselves with the sport of vomiting our fingers for the raisins; and the wantonness of the thing was, to see each other look like a demon, as we burnt ourselves and snatched out the fruit. This fantastical mirth was called snádragon.—Tutler, no. 83.

When they were all tired of blind-man's bluff, there was a great game at snádragon; and when fingers enough were burnt with that, and all the raisins were gone, they sat down to a substantial supper.—Dickens, Pickwick Papers, ch. xxviii.

3. Thing eaten at snádragon.

He bore a strange kind of appetite to snádragon, and to the livid snuffs of a burning candle, which he would catch and swallow with an agility wonderful to conceive; and by this procedure maintained a perpetual flame in his belly.—Swift, Tale of a Tub, sect. 21.

Snáphance. s. Kind of firelock.

There arrived four horsemen . . . very well appointed, having snáphances hanging at the pommel of their saddles.—Shelton, Translation of Don Quixote, iv. 16.

Snápper. s. One who snaps.

My father named me Snáppers, being littler under Mercury; who, as I am, was likewise a snápper up of unconsider'd trilles.—Shakespeare, Winter's Tale, iv. 2.

Snápping. verbal abs. Act of one who, that which, snaps.

I must inform you, that I inherited a considerable portion of my father's courageous temper, and not much liking the snápping of the pistols in my face, I had thrown myself down on the ground and had remained there very quietly, preferring to be trampled on, rather than interfere with what was going on above.—Marryat, The Pacha of Many Tales, Story of Hudud.
(See, also, under Snap, s. n.)

Snáppish. adj.

1. Eager to bite, or catch, at a snap.

The snáppish cur, the passenger's annoy,
Close at my heel with yelping treble flow.
They lived in the temple; but were such snáppish curs, that they frightened away most of the votaries.—Spectator.

2. Peevish; sharp in reply.

I spoke to my lord chief justice about lord Farlow's bill; . . . the lord chief justice was very snáppish, and said he would take none whom Mr. Mudd did not approve of.—Henry, Earl of Clarendon's Diary: 1666.

Snáppishly. adv. In a snáppish manner.

After some minutes, however, during which he had resumed his pen, he appeared to be again aware of the presence of his clients; raising his head from the paper, he said, rather snáppishly, 'Who is with me in this case?'—Dickens, Pickwick Papers.

Snáppishness. s. Attribute suggested by Snáppish; peevishness; tartness.

He threatened, with great snáppishness, to stop me.—Wakefield, Memoirs, p. 23.

Snápsack. s. Knapsack.

We should look upon him as a strange soldier, that when he is upon his march, and to go upon service, instead of his sword should take his snápsack.—Smith, Sermons, viii. 235.

Snar. v. n. Snarl.

Tyrus that did seem to grin,
And snar at all that ever passed by.
Spenser, Faerie Queen.

Snare. s. [German, schnur = lace, band.]

1. Anything set to catch an animal; gin; net; noose.

O poor hapless nightingale, thought I,
How sweet thou sing'st, how near the deadly snare!
Milton, Comus, 306.

2. Anything by which one is intrapped or entangled.

A fool's mouth is his destruction, and his lips are the snare of his soul.—Proverbs, xviii. 7.

This I speak for your own profit, not that I may cast a snare upon you.—1 Corinthians, vii. 33.

Propound to thyself a constant rule of living, which, though it may not be fit to observe scrupulously, lest it become a snare to thy conscience, or endanger thy health, yet let not thy rule be broken.
Jeremy Taylor, Rules and Exercises of Holy Living.

For thee ordain'd a help, became thy snare.
Milton, Paradise Lost, xl. 163.

Beauty, wealth, and wit,
And prowess, to the power of love admit;
The spreading snare for all mankind is laid,
And lovers all betray, or are betray'd.
Dryden.

From the moment at which Grandval entered the Netherlands, his steps were among snarcs. His movements were watched; his words were noted; he was arrested, examined, confronted with his accomplices, and sent to the camp of the allies.—Marsden, History of England, ch. xix.

Snare. v. a. Entrap; entangle; catch in a noose; (Eysnare, the commoner form).

The wicked is snared in the work of his own hands.—Psalms, li. 16.

Gloster's shew
Revels him, as the monstrous crocodile
With sorrow snarcs a reluctant passenger.
Shakespeare, Henry VI. Part II, iii. 1.

Warn all creatures from thee
Henceforth, but that too heavily form, pretended
To hellish falsehood, snare them.
Milton, Paradise Lost, x. 871.

Snärer. s. One who lays snarcs.

Never prate on't; nor, like a cunning snärer,
Make thy clipp'd mune the bird to call in others.
Middleton, The Witch.
Snarers and smugglers here their gains divide.
Crabbe, Parish Register.

Snarl. v. n. [?]

1. Growl as an angry animal.

What I were you snarling all before I came,
Ready to catch each other by the throat,
And turn you all your hatred now on me?
Shakespeare, Richard III, i. 3.

Now, for the bare-jaw'd'nt' bones of unjesty
Dish dogged war bristled his angry crew,
And snarled in the gentle eyes of peace.
Id., King John, iv. 3.

The shew even of the savage herd are safe;
All, when they snarl or bite, have no return,
But courtship from the male.
Dryden, Don Sebastian.

An angry cur
Snarls while he feeds.
Dryden and Lee, Eclipses.

2. Speak roughly; talk in rude terms.

'Tis malicious and unmanly to snarl at the little hopes of a pen, from which Virgil himself stands not exempted.—Dryden.

The honest farmer and his wife,
To years declined from prime of life,
Had struggled with the marriage-noose,
As almost every couple does;
Sometimes my plagues; sometimes my darling!
Kissing to-day, to-morrow snarling.
Prin, The Ladies.

Where hast thou been snarling odious trills, and entertaining company with discourse of their dissensions?—Congreve.

Snarl. v. a. Snare; entangle.

You snarl yourself into so many and heinous absurdities, as you shall never be able to wynn yourself out.—Archbishop Cranmer, Answer to Bishop Gardiner, p. 128.

Snarled. part. adj. Entangled.

From her back her garments she did tear,
And from her head off rent her snarled hair.
Spenser, Faerie Queen.

Confused snarled consciences render it difficult to pull out thread by thread.—Dr. H. More, Discourse of Christian Piety.

Snarier. s. One who snarls; growling, surly, cynical fellow.

Should stupid liels grieve your mind,
You soon a rourdy may find;
Lie down obscure like other folks,
Below the lash of *snarlers*Swift*.
The one writes The Snarler, the other The Scourge.
Goldsmith, The Hunch of Venesia.*

Snary. adj. Entangling; insidious.

Spiders in the vault their snary webs have spread,
Dryden.

Snast. s. [?] Snuff of a candle.

It first burned fair, till some part of the candle was consumed, and the saddest gathering about the snast; but then it made the snast big and long, and burn duskiely, and the candle wasted in half the time of the wax pure.—Bacon.

Snatch. v. a.

1. Seize anything hastily.

A virtuous mind should rather wish to depart this world with a kind of treatable dissolution, than to be suddenly cut off in a moment; rather to be taken than snatched away from the face of the earth.—Hooker.

Death,
So snatch'd, will not exempt us from the pain.
Milton, Paradise Lost, x. 1023.

Life's stream hurries all too fast:
In vain we make reflections we would make,
When half our knowledge we must snatch, not take.
Pope.

[She] snatch'd a sheet of Thule from her bed;
Suchien she flew, and whelm'd it o'er the pyre;
Down sink the flames.
Id., Dunciad, i. 228.

They, sailing down the stream,
Are snatch'd in moments by the quick-eyed trout
Or darting salmon.
Thomson, Seasons, Summer.

2. Transport or carry suddenly.

He had scarce performed any part of the office of a bishop in the diocese of London, when he was snatched from thence, and promoted to Canterbury.
—Lord Clarendon, History of the Grand Rebellion.
(Of nature)

Kerish me with the knowledge of thy works,
Snatch me to heaven.
Thomson, Seasons, Autumn.

Snatch. v. n. Bite, or catch eagerly at some thing.

He shall snatch on the right hand, and be hungry.
—Isaiah, li. 20.

Lords will not let me: if I had a monopoly of soul, they would have part on't; my, the lady's too will be snatching.—Shakespeare, King Lear, i. 4.

Lycus, swifter of his feet,
Runs, doubles, winds and turns, amidst the war;
Springs to the walls, and leaves his foes behind,
And snatches at the beam he first can find.
Dryden, Translation of the Æneid, ix. 747.

Snatch. s.

1. Hasty catch.

After a shower to wedding a snatch;
More easily wedd with the root to dismatch.
Tasso, Five Hundred Points of Good Husbandry.

2. Short fit of vigorous action.

She chanted snatches of old times,
As one incapable of her own distress.

Shakespeare, Hamlet, iv. 7.

In this work attempts will exceed performances, it being composed by snatches of time, as medical variations would permit.—Sir T. Browne, Vulgar Errors.

3. Broken or interrupted action; short fit.

The snatches in his voice,
And burst of speaking, were as his.
Shakespeare, Cymbeline, iv. 2.

They move by fits and snatches; so that it is not conceivable how they conduce unto a nation, which, by reason of its perpetuity, must be regular and equal.—Bishop Wilkins, Iudaea.

We have often little snatches of sunshine and fair weather in the most uncomfortable parts of the year.—Spectator.

5. Quip; shuffling answer.

Come, sir, leave me your snatches, yield me a direct answer.—Shakespeare, Measure for Measure,
iv. 2.

Snatcher. s. One who, that which, snatches, or takes anything in haste.

They of those marches Shall be a wall sufficient to defend
Our inland from the pilfering borderers.—
We do not mean the coursing snatchers only.
But fear the main intentment of the fleet.
Shakespeare, Henry V, i. 2.

No catchers and snatchers do take both night and day,
Not needa but greedily, still prolling for their pray.
Mirror for Magistrates, p. 278.

Used as the second element in a compound: (as, body-snatcher, i.e. resurrection-man).

Snatch. v. a. [A.S. snitan.] Cut. Flare.

Snatch. v. a. [snuck.] Chip; slice; cutting. Snatch of that very cream; of cedar some, some of juniper.—Gayton, Pastious Notes on Don Quixote, p. 275.

Snack. v. n. [A.S. snican = creep; same root as Snake.]

1. Creep slyly; come or go as if afraid to be seen.

Once the eagle, England, being in prey,
To her unguarded nest the wizard, Scot,
Came sneaking, and so snuck her princely crown.
Shakespeare, Henry V. l. 2.

Snack not away, sir, for the friar and you Must have a word anon; lay hold on him.
Id., Measure for Measure, v. 1.

Discover'd, and defeated of your prey,
You skulk'd behind the fence, and sneak'd away.
Dryden, Translation of Virgil, Eclogues, iii. 27.

I ought not to turn my back, and to sneak off, in silence, and leave the truth to be baffled, bleeding, and slain.—Watts.

[He] sneak'd into the grave,
A monarch's half, and half a harlot's slave.
Pope, Dunciad, iv. 311.

Are you all ready? Here's your music here:
Author, sneak off, we'll tickle you, my dear. Moore.

2. Behave with meanness and servility; crouch; truckle.

I need salute no great man's threshold, sneak to none of his friends to speak a good word for me to my conscience.—North, Sermons.

You strut a soldier, open, bold, and brave;
Will sneak a scrivener, an exceeding knave.
Pope, Moral Essays, iii. 153.

Snack. v. a. Hide; conceal.

Some sin dare the world in open defiance, yet this [slander] lurks, and sneaks its head.—Archbishop Wake, Rationale on Texts of Scripture,
p. 222: 1701.

Snack. s. Sneaking fellow.

A set of simpletons and superstitious sneaks.—
Glanville, Sermons, p. 212: 1681.

Snacker. s.

1. Small vessel of drink: (a sneaker of punch is a term still used in several places for a small bowl).

I have just left the right worshipful and his myrmidons about a sneaker of five gallons!—Spectator.

2. Fellow wanting spirit.

Beshrew the man who on such a day as this, ... should affect to stand aloof. I am none of these sneakers. I am free of the corporation, and engaged who knows it. He that meets me in the forest today, shall meet with no wise-acre, I can tell him.—
C. Lamb, Essays of Elia, All Fools' Day.

Sneaking. part. adj.

1. Servile; mean; low.

When the smart diadem grows rich,
With sneaking dog, and ugly litch. Ruse.

When int'rest calls off all her sneaking train,
When all the obliged desert, and all the vain,
She waits, or to the world, or the cell,
When the last lingering friend has hid farewell.
Pope, Epistle to the Earl of Oxford.

Here Mr. Cleary Nym, whose great abilities seemed one and all to point towards the sneaking quarter of the moral compass, nudged his friend stealthily with his elbow, and whispered in his ear.
—Dickens, Martin Chuzzlewit, ch. iv.

And, sinking into tears, she felt exhausted upon a chair; while the terrified attorney, looking the very picture of sneaking cowardice and cunning, hui-toned up his pocket, and was preparing to leave the room.—Russell Wyndham, ch. v.

2. Covetous; niggardly; meanly parsimonious.

Sneakingly. adv. In a sneaking manner.

1. Meanly; servilely.

Do all things like a man, not sneakingly:
Think the king sees thee still. G. Herbert.

While you sneakingly submit,
And beg our pardon at our feet,
Disown'd by your guilty fears
To hope for quarter for your ears.
Butler, Hudibras.

2. In a covetous manner.

Sneakiness. s. Attribute suggested by Sneaking.

A sneakiness which so implies a guilt.—Doble, Against Customary Sneaking, p. 73.

Sneakish. s. [for the -ly, compare Rude-by.] Paltry fellow; cowardly, sneaking fellow.

A domine sneakish, a clownish singularist.—
Borrow, Sermons, vol. iii. serm. xxiv.

Sneakup. s. Cowardly, creeping, insidious scoundrel.

The prince is a Jack, a sneakup; and if he were here, I would ender him like a dog, if he would say so.—Shakespeare, Henry IV. Part I. iii. 3.

Well, well, give him a quinea. Stay; I have thought, suppose I make him an engine to torment Greville; but he is such a sneakup? Were he a loy of mettle, I would adopt him; but he is so honest, Nicholas.—J. Morton, Secrets worth knowing, iii. 1.

Sneap. v. a. [Icelandic, sneipa.]

1. Reprimand; check.

Life that's here,
When into it the wind dash closely wind,
Is often sneap'd by anguish and by fear.
Dr. H. More, Song of the Soul, iii. 3, 18.

2. Nip.

Herbs and fruits sneap'd with cold weather.—
Ray.

Sneap. s. Reprimand; check. Obanlete.

My lord, I will not undergo this sneap without reply; you call honourable boldness impudent sanctiness: if a man will make courtesy and say nothing, he is virtuous.—Shakespeare, Henry IV. Part II. ii. 1.

Sneaping. part. adj. Nipping.

What may
Breed upon our absence, may there blow
No sneaping winds at home.
Shakespeare, Winter's Tale, i. 2.

Sneb. v. a. Check; chide; reprimand.

Which made this foolish love were so bold,
That on a thine he cast him to scold
And snebe the good coat, for he was old.
Spenser, Shepherd's Calendar.

Sneed. s. [A.S. snead.] Handle of a sith.

This is fixed on a long sneed, or straight handle.
—Keble.

Sneer. v. n.

1. Show, or insinuate, contempt by covert expressions.

Damn with faint praise, assent with civil leer,
And, without sneering, touch the rest to sneer.
Pope, Epistle to Arbuthnot.

2. Utter with grimace.

I have not been sneering fulsome lies, and nan-cous flattery, at a little tawdry whore.—Congress.

3. Show awkward mirth.

I have no power over one muscle in their faces, though they sneered at every word spoken by each other.—Teller.

Sneer. v. a. Treat with a kind of contempt.

I could be content to be a little sneered at in a line for the sake of the pleasure I should have in reading the rest.—Pope.

I cannot help thinking but Milton brought the word 'sneer' in P. l. vi. 117, in order to sneer at the hybrids of his time.—Thyer, Notes on Milton.

Sneer. s.

1. Look of contemptuous ridicule.

Did not the sneer of more impartial men
At some and virtue, balance all again. Pope.

2. Expression of ludicrous scorn.

Socrates or Cæsar might have a fool's coat clapt upon them, and in this disguise neither the wish-on of the one nor the majesty of the other could secure them from a sneer.—Watts.

Both were kind hearts; but Sir Chetwode was joyful, Sir Tichborne rather stern. Sir Chetwode often broke into a joke, Sir Tichborne sometimes broke into a sneer.—B. Disraeli, The Young Duke,
ii. ii. ch. viii.

Sneerer. s. One who sneers.

The luffoon and sneerer are still on the wrong side of the charter.—Bishop Warburton, On Prodiges, p. 30.

Sneerful. adj. Given to sneering. Rare.

The sneerful maid
Will not fatigue her hand.
Shakespeare, Economy, pt. iii.

Sneering. part. adj. Indicating contempt by covert expressions.

The wolf was by, and the fox in a sneering way advised him not to irritate a prince against his subjects.—Sir R. L. Estrange.

If there has been anything expressed with too much severity, it will fall upon those sneering or daring writers of the age against religion, who have lost reason and decency.—Watts.

Sneeringly. adv. In a sneering manner;

with look or with expression of ludicrous scorn.

The father sneeringly adds, he was obliged to maintain this maxim.—Mather, Vindication of the Bible, p. 281: 1723.

Sneese. v. n. [A.S. sneasan.] Emit wind audibly by the nose.

If one be about to sneese, rubbing the eyes till tears run will prevent it; for that the humour descending to the nostrils is diverted to the eyes.—
Brown.

To thee, among the crowd
Of rival princes, Cupid sneezed aloud;
And every lucky omen sent before,
To meet thee landing on the Martian shore.
Dryden, Epithalamium of Helen and Menelaus.

An officer put the sharp end of his half-pike a good way up into my nostril, which tickled my nose like a straw, and made me sneese violently.—Swift.

Sneese. s. Emission of wind audibly by the nose.

I heard the rack
As earth and sky would mingle; but myself
Was distant, and these flaws, though mortals fear them.

As dangerous to the pillar'd frame of heaven,
Or to the earth's dark basis underneath,
Are to the main as inconsiderable
And harmless, if not wholesome as a sneese
To man's less universe, and soon are gone.
Milton, Paradise Regained, iv. 452.

We read in Godolphin, that upon a sneese of the emperor of Montanap, there passed acclamations successively through the city.—Sir T. Browne, Vulgar Errors.

Sneezewort. s. In Botany. Native plant of the genus Achillea (ptarmica = connected with sneezing); goose-tongue.

Sneezing. verbal abs.

1. Act of one who sneezes; sternutation.

If anything oppress the head, it hath a power to free itself by sneezing.—Ray, On the Wisdom of God manifested in the Works of the Creation.

If the pain be more intense and deeper within amongst the membranes, there will be an itching in the palate and nostrils, with frequent sneezing.—
Witman, Surgery.

It is probable that this custom, so universally prevalent, originated in some ancient superstition; it seems to have excited inquiry among all nations.
Some Catholics, says Father Peysson, have attributed the origin of this custom to the ordinance of a pope, Saint Gregory, who is said to have instituted a short benediction to be used on such occasions, at a time when, during a pestilence, the crisis was attended by sneezing, and in most cases followed by death. But the rabbins, who have a story for everything, say, that before Jacob men never sneezed but once, and then immediately died: they assure us that that patriarch was the first who died by natural disease, before him all men died by sneezing; the memory of which was ordered to be preserved in all nations by a command of every prince to his subjects to employ some salutary exclamation after the act of sneezing. ... A member of the French Academy notices the practice in the New World on the first discovery of America. Everywhere man is saluted for sneezing. An amusing account of the ceremonies which attend the sneezing of a king of Montanap shows what a national concern may be the sneezing of despotism. Those who are near his person, when this happens, salute him in school a time that persons in the antechamber hear it, and join in the acclamation; in the adjoining apartments they do the same, till the noise reaches the street, and becomes propagated throughout the city; so that at each sneezing of his majesty, results a most horrid cry from the salutations of many thousands of his vassals. When the king of Senegal sneezes his courtiers immediately turn their backs on him, and give a loud snap on their right thigh.—J. Disraeli, Curiosities of Literature, On the Custom of Saluting after Sneezing.

Coughing is produced by a quick and forcible contraction of the diaphragm; by which a large quantity of air is received into the chest; this, by a powerful and rapid contraction of the abdominal muscles, is propelled through the trachea with considerable force; and in this way discharges mucus, or any other extraneous substance which irritates the parts. ... Sneezing, in many respects, resembles coughing, but it differs from it in being more violent, and in being involuntary.—Hall, Elementary Spoken of Physiology, p. 421: 1836.

The difference in coughing and sneezing consists in this, that in the latter the communication between the larynx and the mouth is partly or entirely closed by the drawing together of the sides of the velum palati over the back of the tongue; so that the blast of air is directed, more or less completely, through the nose, in such a way as to carry off any source of irritation that may be present there.—Dr. Carpenter, Principles of Human Physiology, p. 536: 1854.

2. Medicine to promote sneezing.

Sneezing, mastatories, and muls are generally received. Montanus gives several receipts of all three.—Burton, Anatomy of Melancholy, p. 363.

Snib. v. a. Check; nip; reprimand.

Asked for their pass by every snib,
That list at will them to revile or snib.
Spenser, Mother Hubbard's Tale.

Through the principles of sympathy, the seeds of piety and virtue, scattered and disseminated in the soul, to bring forth the fruit of virtue and felicity; may be trampled on and kept under, cropped and snubbed, by the bestial part; yet they will sometimes be starting out, sprouting, and putting forth themselves.—Fishp Ward, Sermon on the 30th of January, p. 13; 1674.

Snick. s.

1. Small cut or mark.

2. Latch.

Snick and Snoc. s. Flemish combat with knives.

Among the Dunkirkers, where snick and snoc was in fashion, a boatswain with some of our men drinking together, became quarrelsome: one of our men bent him down; then kneeling upon his breast, he drew out a knife, sticking in his back, and cut him from the ear towards the mouth.—Wicman, Surgery.

Sniff. v. n. [snuff.] Draw breath audibly up the nose.

So then you look'd scornful, not sniff at the dean, As, who should say, Now am I skimming and leant.
Swift, The Grand Question debated.

Sniff. s. Perception by the nose.

O, could I but have had one single snip.
One single snip at Charlotte's candle-snuff!
T. Harlow, Newcastle's Verse: 1767.
With ineffable severity sniffs great Snives, aloft, alone.—Carple, French Revolution, pt. ii. l. 1, ch. ii.
Mrs. Gamp... gave a sniff of uncommon significance, and said, it didn't signify.—Dickens, Martin Chuzzlewit, ch. xix.

Sniff. v. n. Snort: (in contempt).

Reverentment expressed by sniffing.—Johnson, in voce Snuff.

Snig. s. Eel. Provincial.

Sniggle. v. n. In Angling. See extract.

Sniggle is thus performed: in a warm day, when the water is lowest, take a strong small hook, tied to a string about a yard long; and then into one of the holes where an eel may hide herself, with the help of a short stick put in your bait loosely, and, as far as you can conveniently: if within the sight of it, the eel will bite instantly, and as certainly gorge it: pull him out by degrees.—I. Walton, Complete Angler.

Sniggle. v. a. Catch; snare.

Have you remembered what we thought of?—
Yes, sir, I have sniggle'd him.
Beaumont and Fletcher, Theodor and Thersites.

Snip. v. a. Cut at once with scissors.

Take measure of your worth, sir, and because I will not afflict you with my large bill of circumstances, I will snip off particulars.—Beaumont and Fletcher, Fair Maid of the Inn.
The snip should be laid open, which was snip up about two inches with a pair of prodigious scissors, and the incised lips dressed.—Wicman, Surgery.
Putting one blade of the scissors up the gut, and the other up the wound, snip the whole length of the fistula.—Sharp, Surgery.

Snip. s.

1. Single cut with scissors.

What! this a sleeve?
Here's snip and nip, and cut, and slash and slash.
Like to a censor in a barber's shop.
Shakespeare, Twelfth of the Shrew, iv. 3.
The ulcer would not cure faster than it was laid open; therefore with one snip more I laid it open to the very end.—Wicman, Surgery.

2. Small shred.

Those we keep within compass by small snips of complaint, hoping to defend the parts about; but, in spite of all, they will spread further.—Wicman, Surgery.

3. Slang word for a tailor.

4. Share; snuck.

He found his friend upon the mending hand, which he was glad to hear, because of the snip that he himself expected upon the dividend.—Sir R. L. Estlin, Jr.

Snipe. s. [German, scheppe.]

1. In Ornithology. British bird of the genus Scelopax (species gallinago, gallinula, major): as an equivalent to the Latin scelopax the word has a wider import, and includes woodcocks, &c. Great, double, full, jack, snipe.

The external evident causes of the atra bills are a high fermenting diet; as old elvers, birds feeding in fens, as geese, ducks, woodcocks, snipes, and swans.—Sir J. Poyser.

The great snipe (Scelopax major) is rarely seen in this kingdom: ... weight, eight ounces; length, twelve inches; and to the end of the toes, sixteen. ... The weight of [the common snipe] is four ounces. ... [The jack snipe] is about half the size of the common snipe, and weighs scarcely two ounces.—Latham, General History of Birds.

The birds ... shot ... on the coast of Devonshire ... seem to vary so little in the essential characters from the brown snipe described by Mr. Pennant and Dr. Latham, that we cannot hesitate to pronounce it a variety of that bird.—Montagu, Ornithological Dictionary.

This [the snipe] division of the numerous Scelopax genus of Linnaeus, amounts, according to Latham, to about twenty species, besides varieties, of which only the woodcock, common snipe, and jackcock, and their varieties, are accounted British birds. Pennant has placed the woodcock after the curlew, as the head of the gadwall and snipe; and others are of opinion, that the knot, from the similarity of its figure to that of the woodcock, ought to be classed in this tribe. In these subdivisions, ornithologists may vary their classifications without end. ... The author has seen three specimens of a large kind of snipe called, by some sportsmen, from being always found alone, the solitary snipe.—Bewick, History of British Birds.

The great snipe was at first described as a British bird by Pennant ... and was at that time considered a very rare bird. The habits of the great snipe, or solitary snipe, as it is often called, ... are, &c.—Turrell, History of British Birds.

Snipe is often used for snipes, i.e. as a plural, like sheep; or rather as a collective. The same is done with the word player: players. As far as the Editor's personal experience goes, he thinks that this use of the collective singular form is found in the Isle of Ely (Cambridgeshire), rather than in the Holland (Lincolnshire), fen, or snipe and plaver, districts. In favour of this collective form is the fact of the greater part of the edible fen-birds that appear in the local winter markets being known chiefly in the singular forms, teal, widgeon, and often wild-duck, rather than wild ducks.

2. Fool; blockhead.

I mine own gain'd knowledge should profane,
If I should thus expend with such a snipe,
But for my sport and profit.
Shakespeare, Othello, i. 3.

Snipper. s. One who, that which, snips.

Dryden complained, that 'our snippers (tailors) go over once a year into France, to bring back the newest mode, and to learn to cut and shape it.'—Noble, Grammar, l. 353.

Snippet. s. Small part; share.

Witches snipping, and on gildets
Cutting from malefactors snippets;
Or from the pultry tips of ears.
Batter, Hudibras, ii. 3, 823.

Snipsnap. s. Tart dialogue; with quick replies: ('You say snip, and I'll say snap,' are words used in a child's game, where what one of the players lays down, whether a material object or a catchword, is taken up by the other. It implies readiness to go on with what is begun).

Denies and disavours, and capdious art,
And snipsnap shout, and interruption snort.
Pope, Dunciad, ii. 230.

(See under Snip, p. 2.)

Snite. s. [A.S. snita.] Snipe. Rare or provincial. Bewick gives it as the synonym for the larger of the two common English snipes. But the jack is always a jack snipe; neither snipe simply, nor jack.

Of tame birds Cornwall hath doves, geese, and ducks; of wild, quail, rail, snite, and wood-dove.

Snite. v. a. [A.S. snytan.] Eject, clear, or get rid of, snout. Obsolete.

Nor would any one be able to snite his ... to sneeze; in both which the passage of the breath through the mouth, being intercepted by the tongue is forced to go through the nose.—Grew, Cosmology Noctua.

Snivel. s. [A.S. snifel; snytling.] Running at the nose.

Snivel. v. n.

1. Running at the nose.

2. Cry as children.

Funeral tears are hired out as mourning cloaks; and whether we go to our graves snivelling or snoring, 'tis all more gone.—Sir R. L. Estlin, Jr.
Away now he snivelling and yelping, that he had snipt his ax into the water.—Id.

Snivel. v. a. Draw in snivel by short sniffs.

Sniveller. s. One who snivels; weak lament.

He'd more lament when I was dead,
Than all the snivellers round my bed.

Swift, On the Death of Dr. Swift.

Snivelling. part. adj. Crying; lamenting.

Each snivelling hero some of blood can spill,
When wrongs provoke, and honour bids him kill;
Each tiny lily lives can freely bleed,
When pressed by wind, or punk to knock on the head;

Give me your thorough-paced rogue, who scorns to be

Prompted by poor revenge or injury,

But does it of true blood cruelty.

Oltham, Satire upon the Jesuits.

Snob. s. [Dealt with as an English word, the nearest original of this is Knobstick, i.e. a violator of the rules for strikes in the work of artificers, or one who works at lower wages than his fellows. As a correlative of nob, the Italian suggests nobile = noble, and ignobile.] Intrinsically vulgar person.

A funny little waiter immediately appeared, ... having ... received private intelligence from the landlord that the gentleman in the drawing-room was a regular nob. ... Of all the great distinctions in life none perhaps is more important than that which divides mankind into the two great sections of nobs and snobs. ... Almost at the very moment that Captain Armitage arrived at his miserable hotel, a poor devil of a tradesman who had been arrested for fifty pounds, and torn from his wife and family, had been forced to repair to the same asylum. He ... had continued weekly to ring at intervals for the last half hour in order that he might write and forward his letter. The waiter heard the coffee-room bell ring, but never dreamed of noticing it, though the moment the signal of the private room sounded, and sounded with so much emphasis, he rushed up stairs, three steps at a time, and instantly appeared before our hero; and all this difference was occasioned by the simple circumstance, that Captain Armitage was a nob, and the poor tradesman a snob.—B. Disraeli, Henrietta Temple, l. vi. ch. xv.

First the world was made; then, as a matter of course, snobs. ... Not above five-and-twenty years since, a name, an inexpressive monosyllable, arose to designate that race. That name has spread over England like railroad subsequently. Snobs are known and recognized throughout an empire on which I am given to understand the sun never sets. ... I have (and for this gift I congratulate myself with a deep and abiding thankfulness) an eye for a snob. If the truth be the beautiful, it is beautiful to study even the snobbish; to track snobs through history as certain little dogs in Hampshire hunt out truffles; to stalk snobs in society and come up a rich vein of snobs. Snobbishness is like death in a quotation from Horace, which I hope you never have heard, 'heating with equal food at poor men's doors, and kicking at the gates of emperors.' It is a great mistake to judge of snobs lightly, and think they exist among the lower classes merely. An immense percentage of snobs, I believe, is to be found in every rank of this mortal life. You must not judge hastily or vulgarly of snobs; to do so shows that you are yourself a snob. I myself have been taken for one.—Thackeray, Book of Snobs, perfect my remarks.

Used unfretfully.

If their lordships are inclined to make [this] declaration, a great lapse of offensiveness will be removed, and the snob papers will not have been written in vain.—Thackeray, Book of Snobs, ch. xi.

Snobbish. adj. Having the character of a snob.

Singiness is snobbish. Two great professions are snobbish. Taft-hunting is snobbish; but I own there are people more snobbish than all those whose defects are above mentioned, viz. those individuals who can, and don't, give dinners at all.—Thackeray, Book of Snobs, ch. xix.

Snobbishness. s. Attribute suggested by Snobbish.

Snobbishness is vulgar—the mere words are not; and that which we call a snob, by any other name would still be snobbish.—Thackeray, Book of Snobs, ch. xviii.

Snobling. s. Little snob.

In either of which cases, you see, dear snobling, that though the person would not have been authorized, yet he might have been excused for interfering. ... But if the clergyman did in the duke's ear what he would not do in Smith's ... then, I confess, my dear snobling, your question might elicit a disagreeable reply, and one which I respectfully decline to give.—Thackeray, Book of Snobs, ch. xii.

Snooze. v. n. Sleep comfortably.

He was snoozing in his berth, and I was unwilling to awake him.—Marryat, Jacob Faithful.

Snooze. s. Comfortable sleep or nap.

was awakened out of my quiet snooze.—Marryat, Jacob Faithful.

Snore. v. n. Breathe hard through the nose, as men in sleep; the sound being that of the soft palate vibrating under respiration through the nose and mouth at the same time.

I did unworrenly blame the gods,
Who wake for thee, though thou snore for thyself.
B. Jonson, Catiline's Conspiracy, iii. 3.
Whose railing heros, and whose wounded gods,
Make some suspect his *snore*s as well as noise.

Lord Rochester.
He may lie in his shades, and snore on to tomorrow day for me, unless I see farther reason of disturbing his repose.—Bishop Stillingfleet.
Is not yonder Proteus' cave?
It is; and in it lies the god asleep;
And snoring by
We may decry
The mountains of the deep.

Dryden, Athion and Albanus.
The giant, gorged with flesh, and wine, and blood,
Lay stretch'd as length, and snoring in his den,
Beating raw goblets from his nose, o'er-lashed
With purple wine and cruddled sure confusion.
Adrian, Milton's Style imitated.

Snore. s. [A.S. snora.] Audible respiration of sleepers through the nose.

The surfeited groans
Do mock their charge with snore: I've dream'd their passions. Shakespeare, Macbeth, ii. 2.

Snorer. s. One who snores.

Snork. s. Obsolete.
At the cock-crowing before daye thou shalt not heare there the servants snork, thou shalt not heare the doores shut.—Mapleton, Fortunes of the Fifth which Protestants call Papistry, fol. 121. b. i.
1535.

Snort. v. n. [snore.]

1. Breathe hard through the nose, as men in sleep.

He found a country fellow dead-drunk, snorting
on a balk.—Barton, Anatomy of Melancholy, p. 27 b.
We can't tell you of an age, wherein men not only sleep, but also snorted.—Archbishop Usher, Answer to the Jesuit Malone, p. 5.

The spark of divinity that dwells within is quenched, and the mind snorts, dead with sleep and fuzziness in the fowler regions of the belly.—Jeremy Taylor, Sermons, ii. 298: 1633.

No more able to direct thy course, than a pilot who snorts, when a ship is tossed in the midst of the sea.—Archbishop Patrick, On Provverbs, xxiii. 34.

2. Blow through the nose as a high-mettled horse.

The fiery war-horse paws the ground,
And snorts and trembles at the trumpet's sound.
Adrian.

From their full racks the generous steeds retire,
Dropping ambrosial fumes, and snorting fire.
Id., Translation of Ovid, Story of Phaeton.

Snorting. verbal adv.

1. Act of snoring.

2. Act of blowing through the nose as a high-mettled horse.

The snorting of his horses was heard from Dan.—Jeremiah, viii. 14.

Snout. s. [A.S. snout.]

1. Mucus of the nose.

This when a greedy shaven once has thrown
His snout into the new, 'tis all his own. Swift.

2. Contemptible person. Vulgar.

Snotty-nosed. adj. Having a nose foul with snout.

This squire South my husband took in a dirty snotty-nosed boy.—Arbuthnot.

Snout. s. [Dutch, snout.]

1. Nose, when elongated, of a beast.

His nose in the air, his snout in the skies.
Tupper, Five Hundred Points of Good Husbandry.
In shape a hogs's whip throughout,
With broader forehead, and a sharper point.
Dryden, The Cock and the Fox, 120.

2. Nose of a man. Contemptuous.

Her subtle snout
Did quickly wind his meaning out.
Rusler, Hudibras.

But when the date of Noe was out,
Off dropt the sympathetic snout. Ibid. l. 1, 253.
What Ethiop him he has,
How foul a snout, and what a hanging face!

Dryden, Translation of Juvenal, x. 102.
Charm'd with his eyes, and chin, and snout,
Her pocket-glass drew nigh out;
And grew enamour'd with her phiz,
As just the counterpart of his. Swift.

3. Nozzle or end of any hollow pipe: (as, 'The snout of a bellows').

Snout. v. a. Furnish with a nozzle or point.
Vol. II.

Their shoes and pattens are snouted and piked more than a finger long.—Camden, Remains.

Snouted. adj. Having a snout.

Their dogs snouted like foxes, but deprived of that property which the legions call primum quarto modo, for they could not bark.—Hoglin.
Snouted and tailed like a bear, and footed like a goat.—Gress.

Snouty. adj. Resembling a beast's snout.

The nose was ugly, long, and big,
Broad and snouty like a pig. Olney, Ode.

Snow. s. [A.S. sneow, snaw.] Small particles of water frozen before they unite into drops; crystallized rain, or mist (the latter more properly sleet).

He saith to the snow, Be thou on the earth.—Joh, xxviii. 4.

He gives the winter's snow her airy birth,
And bids her virgin dress clothe the earth. Sandys.
Snow is the frozen of descending snows. Pope.
Snow [is] congealed water, which falls from the atmosphere. Very little is yet known respecting the formation of this meteor. The only observations which may be considered as in any degree complete have reference to the different forms which the flakes assume. This subject was considered by Kepler, Hooke, Cassini, Muenchbroek, and many others; but the most interesting series of observations hitherto obtained are those of Scoresby, and more recently of Glashier, who have reduced the different forms into classes, and given a number of excellent representations of the flakes in different states. It had been remarked by the ancients that snow sometimes assumes a red tint, and Pliny ascribes the cause to agnæ. 'Ipsa nix vetustate rubescit.'—Brande, in Brande and Cox, Dictionary of Science, Literature, and Art.

Used adjectivally.

An experiment of Professor Tyndall's has shown in a very beautiful manner that ice is but an agglomeration of snow crystals; the transparency of the former being due to the expulsion of the air entrapped in, and causing the whiteness and opacity of the latter. By exposing a piece of clear ice to the radiation from the sun, a flame, or a bright fire, numberless minute specks are suddenly developed within the ice. After a few seconds' exposure, these attain a diameter of about 0.1 of an inch, and when examined through a lens are seen to be little six-rayed stars; the less developed ones resembling tiny flowers with six petals each. These ice-flowers are composed of water resulting from the disintegration of the ice by radiant heat, and indicate the way in which the ice originally crystallized; hence, as we should expect, their planes are parallel to the plane in which the ice froze. When the ice-flowers are compared with snow crystals, the two are essentially the same, the rays and serrations in both following the common angle of 60°.—Frankland, in Brande and Cox, Dictionary of Science, Literature, and Art.

Snow. v. n. [A.S. sneawan.] Fall in snow.

The hills being high about them, it snows at the tops of them oftener than it rains.—Sir T. Browne, Travels.

'How it snows!' said one of the men, in a low tone. 'Nooses, does it?' said Wardle. 'Rough, cold night, sir,' replied the man; 'and there's a wind got up, that drifts it across the fields, in a thick white cloud.'—Dickens, Pickwick Papers, ch. xxviii.

Snow. v. a. Scatter like snow.

If thou be'st born to see strange sights,
Ride ten thousand days and nights,
Till age snows white hairs on thee. Dante.

Snow-bunting. s. In Ornithology. British bird of the genus Plectrophanes (nyctalis).

On our way [on the top of the Barrench to the source of the Garrachory] we missed several flocks of ptarmigan; but these, beside a few snow-buntings, were the only birds we saw in the whole of this range.—McGillivray, Natural History of De-sale and Braemar, ch. xii. p. 198: 1835.

Snow-line. s. Line, in elevation, of perpetual snow.

Since the temperature of the atmosphere continually diminishes in ascending from the surface into the higher altitudes, there must be in every latitude a certain limit of elevation at which the air attains the temperature of freezing water. This limit is called the snow-line, or line of perpetual congelation; and the mountains which rise above it are covered with perpetual snow. . . . The altitude of the snow-line . . . is dependent not upon latitude alone, but also on the configuration, and aspects of the mountain-chains, the extent and temperature of the surrounding plains, the quantity of snow which falls annually, and the multitude of causes which influence the climate of a country. On the Himalaya chain, for example, the limit of perpetual congelation on the northern side, is at an elevation exceeding by upwards of 4,000 feet that on the southern side. . . . No dependence, then, can be placed upon any general rule for estimating the height of the snow-line; and it affords an exceedingly fallacious indication of the altitude of a mountain.—Brande, in Brande and Cox, Dictionary of Science, Literature, and Art.

Snow-plant. s. Microscopic plant growing in snow, and giving it the appearance of being coloured.

Meyer states that the red and green snow-plants, which have been described as conferva, and assigned to the genus Protoceus, are nothing more than the animalcules called Eurethia sanguinea and Pulexiscus. But this does not affect the genus Protoceus, which contains productions respecting whose vegetable nature no doubt is entertained.—Lindley, Vegetable Kingdom.

Snow-shoe. s. Shoe or patten made broad, so as to check the tendency to sink, when walking in the snow.

Snow-skate. s. Long, thin, elastic piece of wood, about as broad as the foot, and about six feet long, used by the Laplanders for skating on the snow; partially adopted by the Norwegians and Swedes.

Snow-white. adj. White as snow.

Let fair humanity abhor the deed,
That spots and stains love's modest snow-white weed.
Shakespeare, Rape of Lucrece.
A snow-white ball shall on your shore be slain;
His offer'd entrails cast into the main.
Dryden, Translation of the Æneid, v. 398.

Snowball. s.

1. Round lump of compressed snow.

They passed to the east-rising of Yorkshire, their company daily increasing, like a snowball in rolling.
—Sir J. Heyward.
His lady fully anthers as it goes,
And, smiling n'er you, like a snowball grows. Dryden.

A snowball having the power to produce in us the ideas of white, cold, and round, the power, as they are in the snowball, I call qualities; and as they are sensations in our understandings, ideas.—Locke.

2. In Cookery.

For snowballs, swell rice in milk, strain it off, and having pared and cored apples, put the rice round them, tying each up in a cloth. Put a bit of lemon-peel, a clove, or cinnamon in each, and boil them well.—Mrs. Gordin, New Domestic Cookery.

Snowball-tree. s. Tree so called from its globular white bunches of flowers; Guelder-rose; Viburnum opulus.

Snowbroth. s. Very cold liquor.

And lo, a men whose blood
Is very snowbroth, one who never feels
The wanton stings and motions of the sense.
Shakespeare, Measure for Measure, l. 5.

Snowcrowned. adj. Having the top covered with snow.

From snow-crown'd Skiddow's lofty cliffs, Dryden, Barons' Wars, vi. 65.

Snowdrift. s. Mass of drifted, or driven, snow.

It is thus that the adventurous travellers who explore the summit of Mont Blanc, now move on through the crumbling snow-drift so slowly, that their progress is almost imperceptible, and thus abridge their journey by springing over the intervening chasms which cross their path, with the assistance of their pilgrim-staves.—Sir W. Scott, Red-Gannet, ch. l.

'What does Jen say?' inquired the old lady. 'There ain't nothing the matter, is there?' 'No, no, mother,' replied Wardle; 'he says there's a snow-drift, and a wind that's piercing cold. I should know that, by the way it rumbles in the chimney.'—Dickens, Pickwick Papers, ch. xxviii.

Snowdrop. s. In Botany. Native plant of the genus Galanthus (nivalis).

When we tried the experiment with the leaves of these purely white flowers that appear about the end of winter, called snowdrops, the event was not much unlike that newly mentioned.—Hople, Experiments and Considerations touching Colours.

The little slope, by magic power,
Grew less and less, contracted to a flower;
A flower, that first in this sweet garden smiled,
To virgin sacred, and the snowdrop styled. Tickell.

Snowdrop-tree. s. Tree with white flowers; Chionanthus virginica. [Gr. χιών=snow.]

Snowflake. s. In Botany. Native plant of the genus Leucolium (vernum); summer snowdrop.

Snowy. adj.

1. White like snow.

No snows a snowy dove trooping with crows,
As yonder lady o'er her fellows shows.
Shakespeare, Romeo and Juliet, l. 5.
969

The blushing ruby on her snowy breast.
Bender'd its panting whiteness more confest. Prior.

2. Abounding with snow.

He went down and slew a lion in a pit in a snowy day.—1 Chronicles, xi. 22.

These first in Crete
And Ida known; thence on the snowy top
Of cold Olympus reared the middle air.

Milton, Paradise Lost, l. 514.

As when the Tartar from his Russian foe,
By Astracan, over the snowy plains,
Retires. Ibid. x. 431.

3. Pure; white; unblemished.

There did he lose his snowy innocence,
His undegraded will. J. Hall, Poems, p. 95: 1646.

SNUB. s.

1. Jag; snag; knot in wood.

Lifting up his dreadful club on high,
All arm'd with ragged snubs and knotty grain,
Him thought at first encounter to have slain.

Spenser, Faerie Queene.

2. Nose somewhat flat at the bridge, and turned-up at the tip.

My mother fondled and made much of me, declared that I was the image of my father;... but, as my father's nose was aquiline, and mine is a snub, or aquiline reversed; his mouth large, and mine small; his eyes red and ferret, and mine projectile; and, moreover, as she was a very handsome woman, and used to pay frequent visits to the cave of a sainted man in high repute, of whom I was the image, when she talked of the jansary's maternity, I very much doubted the fact.—Murray, The Pacha of Many Tales, Story of Aladasi.

SNUG. v. a.

1. Check; reprimand.

We frequently see the child, in spite of being neglected, snubbed, and thwarted at home, acquire a behaviour which makes him agreeable to all the rest of the world.—Tutler, no. 235.

2. Nip.

Near the sea-shore the heads and boughs of trees run out far to landward; and toward the sea are snubbed by the winds, as if their boughs had been pared or shaven off.—Bay, On the Wisdom of God manifested in the Works of the Creation.

SNUDGE. v. n. [snug.] Lie idle, close, or snug.

Now he will fight it out, and to the wars;
Now eat his bread in peace,
And snudge in quiet; now he scorns increase:
Now all day snarls. G. Herbert.

SNUFF. s.

1. Smell.

In some this light goes out with an ill-savoured stench; but others have a save-all to preserve it from making any snuff at all.—Mowbray, Letters, iv. 21.

The Immortal, the Eternal, wants not the snuff of mortal incense for his, but for our sakes.—Nisbet, Paleographia Sacra, p. 15.

2. Useless excrescence of a candle.

My snuff and lathed part of nature should Burn itself out. Shakespeare, King Lear, iv. 6.

But dearest heart, and dearest image, stay!
Alas! true joys at best are dreams enough:
Though you stay here, you pass too fast away:
For even at first life's taper is a snuff. Donne.

If the liquor be of a close and glutinous consistency, it may burn without any snuff, as we see in camphire, and some other bituminous substances; and most of the ancient lamps were of this kind, because none have been found with such wicks.—Bishop Wilkins.

3. Candle almost burnt out.

Lamentable!
To hble me from the radiant sun, and solace
I' the dungeon by a snuff. Shakespeare, Cymbeline, l. 7.

4. Fired wick of a candle remaining after the flame.

A torch, snuff and all, goes out in a moment, when dipped into the vapour.—Addison, Travels in Italy.

5. Resentment expressed by sniffing or snorting; perverse resentment.

The Pharisees derided Christ; which is elegant in the original, ἐξουφισμός, nam suspectum est, they took it in snuff; and, expressing their derision by drawing together the nose, they made noise at him.—Bishop Andrews, On the Dialogue, p. 394: 1650.

What hath been seen
Either in snuffs or packings of the duke's,
Or the hard rein which both of them have borne
Against the old kind king.

Shakespeare, King Lear, iii. 1.
Jupiter took snuff at the contempt, and punished him: he sent him home again.—Sir R. L'Estrange.

6. Powdered tobacco taken by the nose.

He... administer'd a dose.

Of snuff manducatus to his nose.

Bulter, Hudibras, iii. 2, 1005.

Just where the breath of life his nostrils drew,
A charge of snuff the wily virgin threw;
The gumes direct, to every atom just,
The pungent grains of titillating dust.

Pope, Rape of the Lock, canto v.
Ordinary totemen in the basis of snuff, other matters being only added to give it a more agreeable scent.—Rees, Cyclopaedia.

SNUFF. v. a.

1. Draw in with the breath.

With delight he snuff'd the smell
Of mortal change on earth.

Milton, Paradise Lost, x. 272.

He snuffs the wind, his heels the sand excite;
But when he stands collected in his night,
He roars and pines a more successful flight.

Dryden, Translation of the Georgics, iii. 302.

The youth, who first appears in sight,
And holds the nearest station to the light,
Already seems to snuff the vital air,
And leans just forward on a shining spear.

Id., Translation of the Iliad, vi. 1029.

With in.

A heifer will put up her nose, and snuff in the air against rain.—Bacon.

With up.

My troops are mounted; their Numidian steeds
Snuff up the wind, and long to scour the desert.

Adrian, Cato.

My nag's greatest fault was snuffing up the air about Brackendale town, whereby he became such a lover of liberty, that I could scarce hold him in.—Swift.

2. Scent.

The cow looks up, and from afar can find
The change of heaven, and snuffs it in the wind.

Dryden, Translation of the Georgics, l. 519.

O'er all the blood-hound boasts superior skill,
To scent, to view, to turn, and boldly kill!

His fellows' vain alarms reject with scorn,
True to the master's voice and learned horn:

His nostrils oft, if ancient fame sing true,
Trace the sly felon through the tainted dew:

Once snuff'd, he follows with unalter'd aim,
Nor colours lure him from the chosen game;

Deep-mouth'd he he thunders, and inflames his views,
Springs on relentless, and to death pursues.

Tickell.

3. Crop the candle.

The late queen's gentlewoman
To be her mistress' mistress I
This candle burns not clear; 'tis I must snuff it,
And out it goes. Shakespeare, Henry VIII, iii. 2.

Against a communion-day our laund should be dressed, our lichts snuff'd, and our religion more active.—Jeremy Taylor.

You have not
An office for your talents fit,
To snuff the lights, and stir the fire,
And get a dinner for your hire.

Swift.

SNUFF. v. n.

1. Snort; draw breath by the nose.

The fury flew the pack, they snuff, they vent,
And feed their hungry nostrils with the scent.

Dryden, Translation of the Iliad, vii.

Says Hymeneus, Sir, my master bid me pray
Your company to dine with him to-day:

He snuffs, then follows, up the stairs he goes;
Never pulls off his hat, nor cleans his shoes.

King.

2. Sniff in contempt.

Ye said, What a weariness is it, and ye have snuffed at it.—Mabius, ii. 15.

Do the enemies of the church rage and snuff, and breathe nothing but threats and death!—Bishop Hall, Thanksgiving Sermon, 1625.

SNUFFBOX. s. Box in which snuff is carried.

If a gentleman have a snuffbox on the table, and goeth away, lock it up as part of your vails.—Swift.

Sir Plume, of snuff snuffbox justly vain,
And the nice conduct of a cluded cane.

Pope, Rape of the Lock, canto iv.

SNUFFER. s. One who snuffs.

SNUFFERS. s. Instrument with which the candle is clipped.

When you have snuffed the candle, leave the snuffers open.—Swift, Advice to Servants, Directions to the Butler.

'Mr. Puch,' said Pecksniff, setting himself with folded arms on one of the spare beds, 'I don't see any snuffers in that candlestick. Will you oblige me by going down and asking for a pair?'—Dickens, Martin Chuzzlewit, ch. v.

On the seventh night of cribbage, when Mrs.
Tolmers, sitting by, proposed that instead of gambling they should play for 'love,' Mr. Moddle was seen to change colour. On the fourteenth night, he kissed Mrs. Pecksniff's snuffers, in the passage, when she went up stairs to bed; meaning to have kissed her hand, but missing it.—Ibid. ch. xxxii.

SNUFFER-DISH. s. Tray for snuffers.

Upon the chimney-piece of painted wood—of that hue which painted wood assumes in a neglected house in London—there is not a single ornament but a snuffer-dish and a pair of snuffers.—Scott Wynham, ch. xvi.

SNUFF. v. n. Speak through the nose; breathe hard through the nose.

It came to the ape to deliver his opinion, who smelt and snuffed, and considered on't.—*Sir E.
L'Estrange*.

One clad in purple
Eats, and recites some lamentable rhyme...
Snuffing at nose, and croaking in his throat.

Dryden, Translation of Persius, l. 74.

SNUFF. s. Speaking or breathing through the nose.

SNUFFING. part. adj. Speaking, or breathing, in a snuffle.

A water-spaniel came down the river, shewing that he hunted for a duck; and with a snuffling grace, disdaining that his snuffling force could not as well prevail through the water as through the air, waded with his eye to see whether he could espise the duck's setting up again.—Sir P. Sidney.

Snuffers of the loudest tones,
With snuffling broken-whole tones,
Whose blasts of air, in pockets shut,
Sound sicker than from the gut.

Bulter, Hudibras, ii. 2, 621.

'By the Temple of that wise king, which our wiser brother Richard proved unable to recover, she is the very Bride of the Canities!'—'The Rose of Sharon and the Lily of the Valley,' answered the Prior, in a sort of snuffling tone; but your Grace must remember she is still but a Jewess.—Sir W. Scott, Ivanhoe, ch. viii.

SNUFFTAKER. s. One who takes snuff.

The whetler is obliged to refresh himself every moment with a liquor, as the snuff-taker with a powder.—Tutler, no. 131.

SNUG. v. n. Snudge.

There snugging well, he well appear'd content,
So to have done amiss, so to be silent. Sir P. Sidney.

As the loving couple lay snugging together, Venus, to try if the cat had changed her manners with her shape, turned a mouse loose into the chamber.—*Sir
R. L'Estrange*.

SNUG. adj. Close and comfortable; free from any inconvenience, yet not splendid.

They lived at last a country farm,
Where all was snug, and clean, and warm;
For woods before, and hills behind,
Secured it both from rain and wind.

Prior, The Lullie, 67.

Lie snug. Close; out of notice; slyly concealed.

At Will's the following day,
Lie snug, and hear what critics say.

Swift, On Poetry.

Did I not see you, rascal, did I not
When you lay snug to snip young Damon's coat?

Dryden, Translation of Virgil, Eclogues, iii. 23.

SNUGGERY. s. Small comfortable room.

'Who there is in the house!' said Sam, in whose mind the inmates were always represented by that particular article of their costume which came under his immediate superintendence. 'There's a wooden box in number six; there's a pair of floun-ders in thirteen; there's two pair of halves in the commode; there's these here painted tops in the snuggery inside the bar; and five more tops in the colley-room.'—Dickens, Pickwick Papers, ch. x.

SNUGGLE. v. n. Lie close, warm, and comfortable.

Snuggly. v. a. Make snug. A coined word.

Coleridge! I devoutly wish that Fortune, who has made sport with you so long, may play one freak more, throw you into London, or some spot near it, and there snug-gly you for life.—C. Lamb, Letter to Coleridge.

SNUGNESS. s. Attribute suggested by Snug; in the extract, retiredness.

O'er me soft snugness spreads her wings;
And innocence reflects her ray
To gild my calm sequester'd way.

Warton, Phœnix and One-Horse Chair.

So. adv. [A.S. swá.]

1. In like manner: (it answers to as either preceding or following; noting comparison).

As whom the fables feign a monstrous size,
Titanian or earthborn that war'd on Jove,
So stretch'd out huge in length the arch-defend lay.

Milton, Paradise Lost, l. 107.

Thick as autumnal leaves that strew the brooks,
In Valambrosa, where the Etrurian shades
High over-arch'd embower, so thick bestrewn Albeit and lost lay these.

Ibid. l. 802.

Thral'd at first sight with what the muse imparts,
In fearless youth we tempt the heights of arts;
So pleas'd at first the tow'ring Alps we try,
Mount o'er the vales, and seem to tread the sky.

Pope, Essay on Criticism, ii. 219.

As into air the purer spirits flow,
And separate from their kindred dregs below,
So flow the soul to its congenial place.

Id., Hymn to the Memory of an Unfortunate Lady.

2. To such a degree.

Why is his chariot so long in coming?—Judges, v. 22.

Can nothing great, and at the height,
Remain so long, but its own weight
Will ruin it? Or let blind chance
That still desires no states advance?

B. Jonson, Catiline's Conspiracy.

Amoré, my lovely foe,
Tell me where thy strength does lie;
Where the power that charms us so,
In thy soul, or in thy eye?
I viewed in my mind, so far as I was able,
The beginning and progress of a rising world.—T. Burnet, Theory of the Earth.

Since then our Arcite is with honour dead,
Why should we mourn that he so soon is freed?
Upon our first going into a company of strangers, our benevolence or aversion rises towards several particular persons, before we have heard them speak, or so much as know who they are.—Addison, Spectator.

We think our fathers fools, so wise we're grown;
Our wiser sons, no doubt, will think us so. Pope.

3. In such a manner.

There's no such thing as that we beauty call,
It is meer coynage all;
For though some long ago
Liked certain colours mingled so and so,
That doth not tie me now from choosing new.

Sir J. Suckling.

We may be certain that man is not a creature that hath wings; because this only concerns the manner of his existence; and we seeing what he is, may certainly know that he is not so or as.—Locke.
I shall minutely tell him the steps by which I was brought into this way, that he may judge whether I proceeded rationally, if so be any thing in my example is worth his notice.—Id.

This gentleman is a person of good sense, and knows that he is very much in Sir Roger's esteem, so that he lives in the family rather as a relation than dependant.—Addison, Spectator.

4. It is regularly answered by us or that, but they are sometimes omitted.

So frown'd the mighty combatants, that hell Grew darker at their frown.

Milton, Paradise Lost, li. 719.

There is something equivalent in France and Scotland; so as 'tis a very hard calumny upon our soil to affirm that so excellent a fruit will not grow here.—Sir W. Temple.

5. In the same manner.

Of such examples add me to the roll;
Me easily indeed mine may neglect,
But God's proposed deliverance not so.

Milton, Nuncius Agonizans, 299.

To keep up the tutor's authority, use him with great respect yourself, and cause all your family to do so too.—Locke.

According to the multifariousness of this immutability, so are the possibilities of being.—Norris.

6. Thus; in this manner.

Not far from thence the mournful fields appear,
So call'd from lovers that inhabit there.

Dryden, Translation of the Æneid, 304.

It concerns every man with the greatest seriousness to enquire into these matters whether they be so or not.—Archbishop Tillotson.
No nation ever complained they had too broad,
too deep, or too many rivers; they understand better than so, how to value those inestimable gifts of nature.—Bentley.

So when the first bold vessel dared the seas,
High on the stern the Thracian raised his strain.

Pope, Ode on St. Cecilia's Day.

Whether this be from an habitual motion of the animal spirits, or from the alteration of the constitution, by some more unaccountable way, this is certain, that so it is.—Locke.

7. Therefore; for this reason; in consequence of this.

The god, though loth, yet was constrain'd to obey;
For longer time than that, no living wight,
Below the earth might suffer'd to be stay;
So back again him brought to living light.

Spenser, Faerie Queen.

Trafalce, or rove ye, and like thecess oppresso
Poore strange adventures, exposing so
Your souls to danger, and year lives to woe!

Chapman, Translation of the Odyssey.

If he act industriously and sincerely to perform the commands of Christ, he can have no ground of doubting but it shall prove successful to him, and so all that he hath to do is to endeavour by prayer and use of the means, to qualify himself for this blowed condition.—Hammond, On Penance.

It leaves instruction, and an instructor, to the society of the settled articles and rule of the church.
—Holyday.

Some are fall'n, to disobedience fall'n;
And so from heaven to deepest hell.

Milton, Paradise Lost, v. 511.
God makes him in his own image an intellectual creature, and so capable of dominion.—Locke.

8. On these terms; noting a conditional petition: (answered by as).

O goddess! tell what I would say,
Thou know'st it, and I feel too much to pray,
So grant my suit, as I entreat my might,
In love to be thy champion.

Dryden, Palamon and Arcite, li. 153.

Here then exchange we mutually forgiveness:

So may the guilt of all my broken vows,
My perjuries to thee be all forgotten;
As here my soul acquits thee of my death,
As here I part without an angry thought.

Rome, Jane Shore, iv. 2.

9. Provided that; on any condition that.

Be that sad;
Evil into the mind of God or May come and go, so unimproved, and leave
No spot or blame behind.

Milton, Paradise Lost, v. 116.
So the doctrine be but wholesome and edifying, though there should be a want of exactness in the manner of speaking or reasoning, it may be overlooked.—Bishop Atterbury.

Too much of love thy impless friend has proved,
Too many giddy foolish hours are gone;
May the remaining few know only friendship:
So that my dearest, truest, best friend,
Vincennes to help me in thy gentle heart,
A partner there; I will give up mankind.

Rome, Jane Shore.

10. In like manner; noting concession of one proposition and assumption of another: (answering to as).

As a war should be undertaken upon a just motive, so a prince ought to consider the condition he is in when he enters on it.—Swift.

11. So sometimes returns the sense of a word or sentence going before, and is used to avoid repetition; as, 'the two brothers were valiant, but the eldest was more so;'

that is, more valiant. The French article le is often used in the same manner. This mode of expression is not to be used but in familiar language, nor even in that to be commended. (This is the criticism of the previous editions. According to the present editor it is hypercritical.)
Who thinks his wife is virtuous, though not so,
Is pleased and patient till the truth is known.

Sir J. Denham.

Not to admire is all the art I know
To make men happy, and to keep them so.

Creech, Translation of Horace.

One may as well say, that the configuration shall be only national, as to say that the deluge was so.—
T. Burnet, Theory of the Earth.

However soft within themselves they are,
To you they will be valiant by despair;
For having once been guilty, well they know
To a revengeful prince they still are so.

Dryden, Tyrannick Love, l. 1.

His grandeur he derived from heaven alone;
For he was great ere fortune made him so.

Id., Heroic Stanza on the Death of Oliver Cromwell.

I laugh at every one, said an old cynick, who laughs at me. Do you not replied the philosopher;
then you live the merriest life of any man in Athens.
—Addison.

They are beautiful in themselves, and much more so in that noble language peculiar to that great poet.
—Id.

Common-place books have been long used by industrious young divines, and still continue so.—
Swift.

As to his using Indian expressions, my opinion is, that they are not so.—Pope.

The best to-day is as completely so,
As who began a thousand years ago.

Id.

12. Thus it is; this is the state.

How sorrow shakes him!
No, now the tempest tears him up by the roots,
And on the ground extends the noble ruin.

Dryden, All for Love, l. 1.

13. At this point; at this time.

When
With wild wood-leaves and weeds I ha' strow'd his grave.

And on it said a country of prayers,
Such as I can, twice o'er, I'll weep and sigh;
And, leaving so his service, follow you.

Shakespeare, Cymbeline, iv. 2.

14. It notes a kind of abrupt beginning; well.

O, so, and had you a council
Of ink too? Who was your speaker, Madam?

B. Jonson, Catiline's Conspiracy.

15. It sometimes is little more than an ex-pletive, though it implies some latent or surd comparison: (in French, si).
An ascription is not quite so proper, where relaxing the urinary passages is necessary.—Arbutnot.

16. A word of assumption: thus be it.

There is Percy; if your father will do me any honour, so; if not, let him kill the next Percy himself.—Shakespeare, Henry IV. Part I, v. 4.
I will never bear a base mind; so I be my destiny, so; so 't be not so. No man is too good to serve his prince.—Id., Henry IV. Part II, iii. 2.

17. Form of petition.

Ready are the appellant and defendant,
The prosecutor and his man, to enter the lists,
So please your highness to behold the fight.

Shakespeare, Henry VI. Part II, ii. 3.

So forth. More of the like kind.

In not birth, beauty, good shape, discourse, manner, learning, and so forth, the spive and salt that season a man.—Shakespeare, Troilus and Cressida,
1. 2.

So much as. However much: (this is, I think, an irregular expression).

So much as you admire the beauty of his verse, his youth is full as good.—Pope.

So, so.

a. Exclamation after something done or known.

I would not have thee linger in thy pain:
So, so, Shakespeare, Othello, v. 2.
So, so; it works: now misadventure, sit you fast.
Dryden, Cleonice, iv. 1.

b. Indifferently; not much amiss nor well.

He's not very tall; yet for his years he's tall;
His leg is but so, so; and yet 'tis well.

Shakespeare, As you like it, iii. 5.

Deliver us from the numerous repetition of so and so, which some so writers, I may call them so, are continually sounding in our ears.—Fulton, Dis-ertation on Reading the Classics.

So then. Thus then it is that; therefore.

So then the Volscians stand but as at first,
Ready, when time shall prompt them, to make road
Upon us again.

Shakespeare, Coriolanus, iii. 1.

To a war are required a just quarrel, sufficient forces, and a prudent choice of the designs; so then I will first justify the quarrel, balance the forces, and propound designs.—Bacon.

Soak. v. a. [A.S. socian.]

1. Macerate in any moisture; steep; keep wet till moisture is imbibed; drench.

Many of our princes
Lie drown'd and soak'd in unnecessary blood:
So do our vulgar drench their peasant limbs
In blood of princes. Shakespeare, Henry IV. Part I, iv. 7.
Their hand shall be soaked with blood.—Isaiah,
xxiv. 7.

There deep Galens soaks the yellow sands.

Dryden, Translation of the Iliad, iv. 187.
Warwood, put over this brim you soak your corn in, prevents the birds eating it.—Mortimer,
Household.

2. Draw in through the pores.

Thou whose life's a dream
Of lazy pleasures, tak'd a worse extreme;
In all thy business, business how to slum,
To ask thy naked body in the sun;
Supine thy stiffen'd joints with fragrant oil;
Then in thy spacious garden walk a while,
To suck the lustre up and soak it in.

Dryden, Translation of Persius, iv. 71.

3. Drain; exhaust; ? suck.

Plants that draw much nourishment from the earth, and soak and exhaust it, hurt all things that grow by them.—Bacon.

A greater sorer than a savor; for health he had such means to accumulate, yet his torts, and his garrulous, and his sensings, wherein he was only sumptuous, could not but soak his exchequer.—Sir
H. Wotton.

Soak. v. n.

1. Lie steeped in moisture.

For thy conceit in soaking will draw in
More than the common blocks.

Shakespeare, Winter's Tale, i. 2.

2. Enter by degrees into pores.

Lay a heap of earth in great frosts upon a hollow vessel, putting a canvas between, and pour water upon it so as to soak through: it will make a harder ice in the vessel, and less apt to dissolve than ordinarily.—Bacon.

Rain soaking into the strata, which lie near the surface, bears with it all such moveable matter as is.—Hutton.

3. Drink gluttonously and intemperately: (condemned by Johnson as a low term).

Soaker. s. One who, that which, soaks: (in the extract, by drinking).

A good fellow! a painful, aise, and laborious soaker; . . . who owes all his good-nature to the pot and the pipe.—South, Sermons, vi. 111.
You may have taken notice of a mandarin kind of soakers, who commonly relent when they are well moistened, as if they shrink in the wringing.—Goodman, Water-Bearing Conference, pt. 1.
The sun's an honest soaker. He has a collar at your Antipodes. . . . Your Antipodes are a good rascally sort of topsy-turvy fellows. If I had a hump, I'd stand upon my head and drink a health to 'em.—Congree, Way of the World.

Soaking, part. adj. Guzzling; drinking intemperately.

Let a drunkard see that his health decays, his estate wastes, yet the habitual thirst after his cups drives him to the tavern, though he has in his view the loss of health and plenty; the heat of which he confesses is far greater than the teeming of his palate with a glass of wine, or the idle chat of a soaking club.—Locke.

Soap, s. [Lat. sapo; A.S. sapa.] Substance used in washing, made of a lixivium of vegetable alkaline ashes and any oily or fatty substance. When the alkali is soda the soap is hard; when potash, soft. Since the chemistry of the compounds resulting from certain elements in the fats and oil with an alkali, in other words the process of saponification, has been investigated, the word has had a more general meaning, and denotes the result of the combination of a fatty acid (margaric, oleic, or stearic) with an alkali.

He is like a refiner's fire, and like fuller's soap.—Melchior, iii. 2.

A bubble blown with water, first made tenacious by dissolving a little soap in it, after a while will appear tinged with a great variety of colours.—Sir I. Newton, On Opticks.

Soap is a mixture of a fixed alkaline salt and oil; its virtues are cleansing, penetrating, attenuating, and resolving; and any mixture of any oily substance with salt may be called a soap.—Arbuthnot, On the Nature and Choice of Aliments.

Soap is a chemical compound of saponified fats or oils, with potash or soda, prepared for the purpose of washing linen, &c. . . . Some chemical writers describe under the title soap, every compound which may result from the union of fats with the various earths and metallic oxides—a latitude of nomenclature which common language cannot recognise, and which would perplex the manufacturer. Soaps are distinguished into two great classes, according to the consistency; the hard and the soft; the former being produced by the action of soda upon fats, the latter by that of potash. The nature of the fats contribute also somewhat to the consistency of soaps; thus, tallow, which contains much stearine and margaric, forms with potash a more consistent soap than liquid oils will do, which consist chiefly of oleine. The drying oils, such as those of linseed and poppy, produce the softest soaps.—Cree, Dictionary of Arts, Manufactures, and Mines.
The fat-acids (stearic, oleic, &c.), when separated from glycerin, are easily saponified by the action of alkaline carbonates. . . . Resins also, which are chiefly mixtures of acid compounds, easily decompose alkaline carbonates, and form soaps.—H. Watts, Dictionary of Chemistry, Soap.

As the first element in a compound.

Soap-earth is found in great quantity on the land near the banks of the river Hormus, seven miles from Suwayra.—Woodward.

Soap-ashes are much recommended, after the soap-makers have done with them, for cold or sour lands.—Mortimer, Husbandry.

As rain-water diminishes their salt, so the moistening of them with chamber-lee or soap-ashes adds thereto.—Id.

Soap and water. Washing. Colloquial.

The healthy man is a most meritorious product of Nature, so far as he goes. A healthy body is good; but a soul in right health—it is the thing beyond all others to be prayed for. . . . The false and foreign will not adhere to him; east and all fantastic diseased incrustations are impossible.—as Walker, the Original, in such eminence of health was he, for his part, could not, by much abstinence from soap-and-water, attain to a dirty face.—Cartledge, Critical and Miscellaneous Essays, Scott.

Soap, v. a. Apply soap.

You've then soaped and lathered, scrubbed and sponged the skin of the pilgrim, until it was as smooth and glossy as the back of a roven.—Maryat, The Pacha of Many Tales, The Water-Carrier.

Soap-pan, s. [the p doubled in sound as well in spelling.] Pan or vessel for soap-boiling.

The soap-pans used in the United Kingdom are made of cast-iron, and in three separate pieces joined together by iron-rod cement.—Cree, Dictionary of Arts, Manufactures, and Mines.

Soap-test, s. See extract.

On washing in hard water no lather can be obtained until the lime and other hardening salts have been decomposed by, and have decomposed, the soap. The product of the decomposition is the well-known curd which floats on the surface of the water. This action being definite, the hardness of waters may be determined by adding to equal quantities of them a solution of soap of known strength until a permanent lather is produced on shaking. Such a soap solution is called a soap-test.—Brande and Cox, Dictionary of Science, Literature, and Art.

Soapboiler, s. One whose trade is to make soap.

A soapboiler confides with me on the duties on castile-soap.—Addison, Spectator.

The soap-ash used by the soap-boilers contains in general about thirty-six per cent. of real soda, in the state of dry carbonate mixed with muriate of soda, and more or less unincorporated sulphate.—Cree, Dictionary of Arts, Manufactures, and Mines.

Soaphouse, s. Soapwork.

In a Marsellian soap-house there are four lyo-vats in each set. Cree, Dictionary of Arts, Manufactures, and Mines.

Soapmaker, s. Soapboiler.

Three such boils must be given in the course of one day's work by an active soap-maker.—Cree, Dictionary of Arts, Manufactures, and Mines.

Soapstone, s. Steatite.

When very strongly heated, soapstone loses the small portion of contained water which it contains, and becomes harder and susceptible of polish. In this state it is made into jets for gas-burners, which have the advantage of not being liable to rust or corrosion. When reduced to powder, it is used like plumbago, as a lubricant and to diminish friction, as well as to give a surface to some kinds of paper-hangings. The soapstone of Mysore is an important article of commerce in Turkey and Russia, where it is used instead of soap.—Brande and Cox, Dictionary of Science, Literature, and Art.

Soapsuds, s. See Suds.

Soapwork, s. Building for making soap.

Motling is usually given in the London soap-works, by introducing into the nearly finished soap in the pan a certain quantity of strong lye of caustic soda through the rose spout of a watering-can.—Cree, Dictionary of Arts, Manufactures, and Mines.

Soapwort, s. Plant chiefly, but not exclusively, of the genus Saponaria, yielding a soapy, or detergent, juice.

The species are in general remarkable for little except insipidity. A few, such as Dianthus and Lychnis are handsome flowers; but the greater part are mere weeds. Vaccaria vulgaris is said to increase the lactical secretions of cows fed upon it. It contains saponine, as also does the Egyptian soapwort, which is derived from Gypsophila struthium.—Lindley, Vegetable Kingdom.

Soapy, adj. Resembling soap; having the quality of soap.

Tar-water . . . as a soapy medicine, dissolves the grumous concretions of the fibrous part.—Bishop Beckley, Stris, § 3d.

Upon one ton of tallow put into the soap-pan about two hundred gallons of soda-lye, of specific gravity 1.010, being poured, lent is applied, and after a very gentle ebullition of about four hours, the fat will be found to be completely saponified, by the test of the spatula, trowel, or pallet knife; for the fluid lye will be seen to separate at once upon the steel blade from the soapy mass.—Cree, Dictionary of Arts, Manufactures, and Mines.

Soar, v. a.

1. Fly aloft; tower; mount; properly to fly without any visible action of the wings.

'Tis but a base ignoble mind.

That mounts no higher than a bird can soar.

They annu'd their pens, and soaring the air sublime.

With clang despoil'd the ground.

Milton, Paradise Lost, vii. 422.

2. Mount intellectually; tower with the mind.

How high a pitch his resolution soars.

Valour soars above

What the world calls misfortune and afflictions.

Addison.

3. Rise high.

Who aspires must down as low

As high he soar'd. Milton, Paradise Lost, ix. 169

When swallows fleet soar high, and sport in air,

He told us that the welkin would be clear.

Gay, Shepherd's Week, Monday, 29.

Soar, s. Towering flight.

Of towering eagles, to all the fowls he seems

A phoenix. Milton, Paradise Lost, v. 270.

Soaring, verbal abs. Act of mounting aloft; act of elevating the mind.

Proverbs were ambitiously soared by the lyric and by the epic muse in their most rapid career, and their sublimest soarings.—Parr, On Education, 1. 2.

Sob, v. n. Heave audibly with convulsive sorrow; sigh with convulsion.

When thy wretched father, like a child,

Told the sad story of my father's death,

He twenty times made jaime to sob and weep.

Shakespeare, Richard III. 1. 2.

She sigh'd, she sob'd, and furious with despair,

She rent her garments, and she tore her hair.

Dryden.

Sob, s. Convulsive sigh; convulsive act of respiration obstructed by sorrow.

Break heart, or choke with sobs my hated breath;

Do thy own work, admit no foreign death.

Dryden.

There oft are heard the notes of infant woe,

The short thick sob, loud sob, and shriller squall.

Rape, Imitations, Spencer.

A wondrous lag with both her hands she binds:

There she collects the force of female lungs,

Nights, sobs, and passions, and the war of tongues.

Id., Raps of the Lock, canto iv.

Sob, v. a. Soak. Rare.

The tree being sobbed and wet, swells.—Mortimer, Husbandry.

Sobbing, verbal abs. Act of one who sobs.

The license sobbing of the widow'd dove.

Drummond, Sonnet.

As if her life and death lay on his saying,

Some tears she shed, with sighs and sobbing mist,

As if her hopes were dead through his delaying.

Sir T. Purfuz.

When children have not the power to obtain their desire, they will, by their clamour and sobbing, maintain their title to it.—Locke, On Education.

Sober, adj. [Lat. sobrius; Fr. sobre.]

1. Temperate, particularly in liquors; not drunken.

That we may hereafter live a godly, righteous, and sober life.—Book of Common Prayer.

The vines give wine to the drunkard as well as to the sober man.—Jeremy Taylor, Worthy Communicant.

No sober temperate person, whatsoever other sins he may be guilty of, can look with complacency upon the drunkenness and sottishness of his neighbour.—South, Sermons.

2. Not overpowered by drink.

A law there is among the Grecians, whereof Pity is author; that he which being overcome with drink did then strike any man, should suffer punishment double as much as if he had done the same being sober.—Hooker, Ecclesiastical Polity.

3. Not mad; right in the understanding.

Another, who had a great genius for tragedy, following the fury of his natural temper, made every man and woman in his plays stark raging mad: there was not a sober person to be had; all was tempestuous and inhuman.—Dryden.

No sober man would put himself into danger, for the applause of escaping without breaking his neck.—Id.

4. Regular; calm; free from inordinate passion.

The governor of Scotland being of great courage and sober judgement, amply performed his duty both before the battle and in the field.—Sir J. Hayward.

These confusions disposed men of any sober understanding to wish for peace.—Lord Charendon, History of the Grand Rebellion.

Among them some sober men confessed, that as his majesty's affairs then stood, he could not grant it.—Id.

To these, that sober race of men, whose lives Religion, titled them the sons of God, Shall yield up all their virtue, all their fame

Ignorant to the trains and to the smiles

Of these fair artists.

Milton, Paradise Lost, iv. 589.

As the first element in a compound.

Young men likewise exhort to be sober-minded.—Titus, ii. 6.

This same young sober-blooded boy . . . a man cannot make him laugh.—Shakespeare, Henry IV, Part II, iv. 3.

Come, civil night,

Thou sober-suited matron, all in black.

Id., Romeo and Juliet, iii. 2.

5. Serious; solemn; grave.

Shall offer me, disguised in sober robes,

To old Haptists as a schoolmaster.

Shakespeare, Twelfth of the Shrew, 1. 2.

Twilight grey

Had in her sober livery all things clad.

Milton, Paradise Lost, iv. 589.

What parts gay France from sober Spain?

A little rising rocky chain;

(Of men born south or north of the hill,
Those seldom move, these never stand still.
Prior, Alma, ii. 505.
For Swift and he despised the fawn of state,
The sober follies of the wise and great. Pope.
See her sober over a sampler, or gay over a jointed baby.—Id.

Sober. v. a. Make sober.

A little learning is a dangerous thing;
Drink deep, or taste not the Pierian spring;
There shallow draughts intoxicate the brain,
And drinking largely sobers us again.
Pope, Essay on Criticism, ii. 215.

Sobriety. adv. In a sober manner.

1. Temperately; moderately.

Let any prince think sobriety of his forces, except his militia of natives be valiant soldiers.—Macaulay.

2. Coolly; calmly.

Whenever children are chastised, let it be done without passion, and sobriety, laying on the blows slowly.—Locke, Thoughts on Education.

Soberminded. adj. Temperate in opinion and action.

I found two other volumes . . . enriched with manuscript notes. I wish every book I have were so noted. They have thoroughly converted me to relish Daniel, or to say I relish him: for, after all, I believe I did relish him. You will call him sob- er-minded.—C. Lamb, Letter to Coleridge.

Sobermindedness. s. Attribute suggested by Soberminded; calmness; regularity;
freedom from inordinate passion.

To induce habits of modesty, humility, temperance, frugality, obedience, in one word, sob- er-mindedness.—Bishop Porteus, Sermon before the University of Cambridge.

Soberness. s. Attribute suggested by Sober.

1. Temperance, especially in drink.

Keep my body in temperance, soberness, and chastity.—Book of Common Prayer, Collectian.

2. Calmness; freedom from enthusiasm;
coolness.

I am not mad, most noble Festus, but speak forth the words of soberness and truth.—Acts, xxvi. 25.

A person noted for his soberness and skill in specyical preparations, made Helmont's experiment succeed very well.—Huyke.

The soberness of Virgil might have shown the difference.—Dryden.

Sobriety. s.

1. Temperance in drink; soberness.

Drunkenness is more uncharitable to the soul, and in Scripture is more decried against than glot-tany; and sobriety hath obtained to signify temperance in drinking.—Jeremy Taylor.

2. Present freedom from the power of strong liquor.

3. General temperance.

In setting down the form of common prayer, there was no need that the book should mention either the learning of a fit, or the usefulness of an fervent minister, more than that he which describes the manner how to pitch a field should speak of moderation and sobriety in diet.—Hooker, Ecclesiastical Poetry.

4. Freedom from inordinate passion.

The liberality could not prevail on men of virtue and sobriety to give up their religion.—Rogers.

5. Calmness; coolness.

Enquire, with all sobriety and severity, whether there be in the footsteps of nature any such transmission of immoderate virtue, and what the force of imagination is.—Bacon.

The sobriety of a holy life.—Jeremy Taylor, Sermons, p. 21: 1651.

The sobriety of virtue.—South, Sermons, vi. 157.
Sobriety in our ripper years is the effect of a well concocted warmth: but where the principles are only phlegm, what can be expected but an insipid manhood, mild and infertile?—Dryden.

If sometimes Ovid appears too gay, there is a secret gratefulness of youth which accompanies his writings, though the staydness and sobriety of age be wanting.—Id.

6. Seriousness; gravity.

A report without truth; and I had almost said, without any sobriety or modesty.—Bishop Hater-
land.

Mirth makes them not mad,
Nor sobriety sad.

Sir J. Denham.

On Kilgrew's Return from Venice, See s. Thus spelt, i.e. with a final c, the word is Anglo-Saxon rather than English, Soko being the English form; the vowel being long, and the addition of the c unite being necessary to ensure its being so sounded. To write it, however, sore, would run the risk of its being pronounced suse.

It is the same word as the German sach,
the Danish sag, the English sake = thing, matter, case, cause. It was the name of a certain fensal tenure, lower than military, and higher than predial service. See next entry; also Soko.

Socage. s. [L.Lat. socagium.] Tenure by Soc.

The lands are not holden at all of her majesty, or not holden in chief, but by a mean tenure in socage, or by knight's service.—Bacon.

Socage [is] tenure of lands for certain inferior or husbandry services to be performed to the lord of the fee. All services due for land being knight's service, or socage; so that whatever is not knight's service is socage. This socage is of three kinds; a socage of free tenure, where a man holdeth by free service of twelve pence a year for all manner of services. Socage of ancient tenure is of land of ancient demesne, where no writ original shall be used, but the writ 'secundum consuetudinem mate-ril'. Socage of base tenure is where those that hold it may have none other writ but the 'monstraverunt';
and such socages hold not by certain service.—Cowell.

Used adjectively.

Some might be inclined to suspect that the words were sliding more and more towards a state of servitude before the conquest. . . . By the laws of William the Conqueror, there was still a composition fixed for the murder of a villain or eorl, the strongest proof of his being, as it was called, low-worthy, and possessing a rank however subordinate, in political society. And this composition was due to his killed, not to the lord. Indeed, it seems positively declared in another passage, that the cultivators, though bound to remain upon the land, were only subject to certain services. . . . Nobody can doubt that the Villani and Burghers of Domesday Book, who are always distinguished from the serfs of the demesne, were the equals of Anglo-Saxon law. And I presume that the socages, who so frequently occur in that record, though far more in some counties than in others, were equals more fortunate than the rest, who by purchase had acquired freeholds, or by prescription and the indulgence of their lords had obtained such a property in the outlands allotted to them, that they could not be removed, and in many instances might dispose of them at pleasure. They are the root of a noble plant, the free socage tenants, or English yeomanry, whose independence has stamped with peculiar features both our constitution and our national character.—Hollan, View of the State of Europe during the Middle Ages, pt. i.
ch. viii.

Socager. s. Tenant by socage; Socman.

Sociability. s. Sociableness.

He introduceth the system of human sociability, by showing it to be the dictate of the Creator.—
Bishop Warburton.

Sociable. adj. [Fr.; Lat. sociabilis.]

1. Fit to be conjoined.

Another law teacheth them as they are sociable, parts united into one body: a law which teacheth them each to serve unto other's good, and all to prefer the good of the whole before whatsoever their own particular.—Hooker, Ecclesiastical Poetry.

2. Ready to unite in a general interest.

To make men mild, and sociable to man,
To cultivate the wild licentious savage
With wisdom, discipline. Addison, Cato.

3. Friendly; familiar; conversible.

Then thus employ'd, behold
With pity heav'n's look King, and to him call'd
Raphael, the sociable spirit, that design'd
To travel with Tobias. Milton, Paradise Lost, v. 221.

4. Inclined to company.

In children much solitude and silence I like not,
nor any thing born before his time, as this word needs be in that sociable and ripened age.—Sir H.
Wotton.

Sociable. s. Kind of less exalted phneton, with two seats facing each other, and a box for the driver.

Sociableness. s. Attribute suggested by Sociable.

1. Inclination to company and converse.

Such as would rail her friendship love, and feign
To sociableness a name profane. Denne.

2. Freedom of conversation; good fellowship.

He always used courtesy and modesty, disliked of none; sometimes sociableness and fellowship well liked by many.—Sir J. Hayward.

Sociably. adv. In a sociable manner; con-versibly; as a companion.

Yet not terrible,
That I should fear; nor sociably mild,
As Raphael, that I should much confide;
But solemn and sublime. Milton, Paradise Lost, xi. 224.

Social. adj. [Lat. socialis.]

1. Relating to a general or public interest; relating to society.

To love our neighbour as ourselves is such a fundamental truth for regulating human society, that by that alone one might determine all the cases in social morality.—Locke.

Thine God and Nature link'd the general frame,
And made self-love and social love the same.

Pope, Essay on Man, iii. 317.

Its admirable analysis of the complex political and social organisations, of which the modern civilized world is made up, must have led thousands to trace with keener interest the great crisis of times past, by which the characteristics of the present were determined.—Sir E. S. Creasy, The Fifteen Decisive Battles of the World, Victory of Arminius.

I would not here undertake to decide what other hypothetical or abstract sciences similar to political economy, may admit of being carved out of the general body of the social sciences. . . . Social phenomena are in a sufficiently close and complete dependence, in the first resort, on a peculiar class of causes, to make it convenient to create a preliminary science of those causes.—J. S. Mill, System of Logic, pt. vi. ch. ix. § 3.

2. Easy to mix in friendly gaiety; compunctionable.

Withers, adieu! yet not with thee remove Thy martial spirit or thy social love.

Pope, Epitaph on General Henry Withers.

3. Consisting in union or converse with another.

Thou in thy secrecy although alone,
Dost with thyself accompanied, seek'st not Social communication.

Milton, Paradise Lost, viii. 427.

Socialism. s. Proposed, and partially adopted, system in politics and political economy, for securing a comparative equality in the distribution of property, as opposed to the existing system of extremes in the way of poverty and wealth; it aims at the competence of the many rather than the opulence of the few; favouring labour and skill rather than capital, and cooperation rather than competition. When dealing with the tenure of land, it is generally called communism; and communism, when it deals with questions of manufacturing industry, may be called socialism.
Which of the two terms is the more general, or which is the more current, is uncertain; nor have they exactly the same meaning. In writings about Russia and Poland, where the question is of serfage and land, communism is the word which occurs the oftenest; whereas, in France, where the question is mainly one of skilled labour and capital, the term is socialism.
Of this the system of Fourier is, perhaps,
the best representative; indeed Fourierism, like St. Simonism, is a synonym founded on the name of one of the chief expositors of the doctrine.

These theories commonly pass under the general name of socialism, and in this sense not only the theories of philosophers, but many existing or proposed laws and usages, may be regarded as socialist in their tendencies. Such are: agrarian laws, limiting the quantity of land to be held by an individual; laws fixing the maximum of rent, or the minimum of wages; laws interfering in other ways between the capitalist and the labourer (for shortening the duration of labour, and the like); the usages of 'trades' unions; any, poor laws, and income taxes limited to the higher classes; all these, some of them immocently, others intentionally, bear in the same direction. Socialism in this sense had a large part in the institution, and still more in the theories, of classical antiquity. . . . But in the middle ages it may be said to have entirely disappeared. . . . Hence, with the revival of political speculation, socialism may be said to have made its way to the light through two different avenues. . . . Robert Owen of Lanark . . . stands in point of date next to Babeuf among the leading advocates of socialism. . . . Saint Simon . . .
theory partook of the religious as well as the political aspect of socialism. Property was to be in common.
But the enjoyment of it by individuals was to be regulated by a superior authority. . . . Charles Fourier, of Besançon, . . . developed the theory that all the tendencies of man are naturally good, and that the real function of government is simply to favour and direct their development. . . . Etienne Cabet . . . in the last socialist authority of whom it is necessary to make detailed mention. According

to his ideas, an imaginary State is to regulate the life of every member of society.—Morville, in Brault and Cox, Dictionary of Science, Literature, and Art.

Socialist. s. One who maintains the doctrine of socialism; socialistic.

The fifth, or Republican party [in France] is made up of—1. The Republican of 1848. . . 2. The advanced Republican of the Ledru-Rollin shade. . . 3. The Socialist Republican. This denomination is also somewhat vague. We can only convey an idea of it by saying that a Socialist Republican is one who is never content with the Republic when he has it. 4. The Republican of 1793, who is devotedly of the school of Robespierre. He approaches the Socialist, but wants his energy in the study of social problems and theories of social regeneration. . . 5. The Republican of the school of Hébert. . . 6. The Socialist, who have no connexion with the Terrorist Republicans. These form a group of humanitarian philosophers, sympathizing with the sufferings of the people, occupying themselves with solving 'social problems,' and indulging in dreams of perfectibility. They combine together the theories of Owen, Fourier, and St. Simon, and produce something which nobody understands or accepts. They are given to study, are decidedly pacific, and believe themselves to be the apostles of a new creed.—The Times, February 3, p. 10: 1864.

Socialist. adj. Connected with, relating to, constituted by, socialism.

(For examples see Socialism and Socialist, s.)

Socialistic. adj. Socialistic.

The national or Anti-western current of Russian political thought finds no more quarter in another paper on the socialistic system of the Russian peasant communities.—Saturday Review, Jan. 10, 1869, p. 94.

Sociality. s. Socialness.

The progress of sociality.—Sterne.
A scene of perfectly easy sociality.—Bonwell, Life of Johnson.

Socially. adv. In a social manner.

Sociate. v. n. Associate: (the latter being the commoner word).

One sort will not sociate with the rest of their neighbours.—Shelford, Learned Discourses, p. 58: 1655.

Sociate. s. Associate. Rare.

Beloved retreat, where every tree is hung
With some fond record of a brighter day,
Sociate of joy, when love and youth were young.
Sir W. Boddy, Surveys.

Society. s. [Fr. société; Lat. societas, -utis.]

1. Union of many in one general interest.

If the power of one society extend likewise to the making of laws for another society, as if the church could make laws for the state in temporal, or the state make laws binding the church, relating to spirituals, then is that society entirely subject to the other.—Leila.

2. Numbers united in one interest; community.

As the practice of piety and virtue is agreeable to our reason, so is it for the interest of private persons and publick societies.—Archbishop Tillotson.

3. Company; converse.

To make society
The sweeter welcome, we will keep ourself
Till supper time alone. Shakespeare, Much Ado, iii. 1.
Whilst I was big in clamour, came there a man
Who having seen me in my worse state,
Said 'twould my shame be society. Id., King Lear, v. 3.
For solitude sometimes is best society,
And short retirement sweetest return.

Milton, Paradise Lost, ix. 219.
The middle ages, according to the division I have adopted, comprise about one thousand years, from the invasion of France by Clovis to that of Naples by Charles VIII. This period, considered as to the state of society, has been esteemed dark through ignorance, and barbarous through poverty and want of refinement. . . . No circumstance is so prominent on the first survey of society, during the earlier centuries of this period as the depth of ignorance in which it was immersed; and as from this, more than any single cause, the moral and social evils which those ages experienced appear to have been derived and perpetuated, it deserves to occupy the first place in the arrangement of our present subject.—Hallam, View of the State of Europe during the Middle Ages, pt. i. ch. ix.
Examine [your] own mind solemnly, and ask, 'Do I, or do I not, eat peas with a knife?' . . . I may as well say what the moral of this . . . is. Society having ordained certain customs, men are bound to obey the law of society, and conform to its harshness or orders. . . . If I should go to the British and Foreign Institute . . . if I should go to one of those parties in a dressing-gown and slippers, and not in the usual attire of a gentleman, viz. pumps, a gold waistcoat, a cravat hat, a shawl frill, and a white choker, I should be insulting society, and eating peas with my knife. Let the porters of the Institute hustle out the individual who shall so offend. Such an offender is, in regard to society, a most emphatical and refractory snail. It has its code and police as well as governments, and he must conform who would profit by the decrees set forth for their common comfort.—Thackeray, Book of Snobs, ch. 1.

4. Partnership; union on equal terms.

Among unequals what society
Can sort? what harmony or true delight?
Milton, Paradise Lost, viii. 383.
Heaven's greatness no society can bear;
Servants he made, and those that wait not here.
Dryden, State of Innocence, li. 1.

Sociological. adj. Connected with, relating to, constituted by, sociology.

Sociology. s. [Fr. sociologie.] The barbarism of the term, justly condemned in the extract, which explains its meaning, may possibly be sufficiently recognised to prevent it (for it is a new one) becoming current. At the same time it is by no means easy to suggest an improvement on it; while the necessity for the name, and the reality of the department of philosophy to which it applies, is beyond doubt. In the last part of J. S. Mill's System of Logic it appears in almost every page; a fact which shows that at least one influential authority has committed himself to its adoption. Its fault is of course not so much its simple hybridism (socius being Latin, and lógos Greek) as the flagrant and patent character of it; the Greek origin of the forms in -logy being generally known, and the exceptions to it being few.] Science of social life.

Sociology [is] a word somewhat barbarously coined by the school of M. Comte to express the science which has to do with man in his social capacity; including politics, political economy, and similar subjects.—H. Morville, in Brault and Cox, Dictionary of Science, Literature, and Art.

Sock. s. [Lat. soccus; A.S. soc.]

1. Something put between the foot and the shoe.

Ere I lead this life long, I'll sow nether sock, and mend them, and foot them too.—Shakespeare, Henry IV. Part I, li. 4.

A physician, that would be myxical, prescribeth for the rheum to walk continually upon a ranunculus albus; meaning he should put cammils within his socks.—Bacon.

2. Shoe of the ancient comic actors, taken in poems for comedy, and opposed to buskin or tragedy.

What do we act to-day?—Agave's frenzy,
With Pentheus' bloody raid.—It kills not what,
The times are dull, and all that we receive
Will barely satisfy the day's expense.
The Greeks, to whom we owe the first invention
Both of the buskin scene and humble sock,
That reign in every noble family,
Decline against us; and our theatre,
Great Pompey's work, that hath given full delight
Both to the eye and ear of fifty thousand Spectators in our day, as if it were
Some unknown desert, or Great Rome unpeopled,
Is quite forsaken.

Manning, The Roman Actor, l. 1.
Then to the well-trail stage anon,
If Jason's leamed sock be on,
Or sweetest Shakespeare, Faery's child,
Warble his native wood-notes wild.

Milton, L'Allegro, 131.
Great Fieldour never treads in buskin here,
Nor greater Junoon darts in socka appear;
But gentle Simkin, just reception finds Amidst the monument of vanquish'd mules.

Dryden, A Sicilian, 79.
On two figures of actors in the villa. Mithra at Rome, we see the fashion of the old sock and larva.
—Audians.

Socket. s. [Fr. souquette.]

1. Any hollow pipe; generally the hollow of a candlestick.

Two goodly beacons, set in watchful stead,
Therein give light, and flamed continually;
For they of living fire most subtilly
Were made, and set in silver sockets bright.

Spenser, Faerie Queen.
She at your flames would soon take fire,
And like a candle in the socket Dissolve.

Bentley, Hudibras.
The stars runned run backward from the sight,
And, shrunk within their sockets, lost their light.
Dryden.

Two dire comets

In their own plague and fire have breath'd their last,
Or dimly in their slinking sockets frown. Dryden.
The nightly virgin, while her wheel she plies,
Foresees the storm impending in the skies.
When sparkling lamps their quivering light advance,
And in the sockets only bubbles dance.

Id., Translation of the Georgics, l. 535.
To nurse up the vital flame, as long as the matter will last, is not always good husbandry; it is much better to cover it with an extinguisher of honour, than let it consume till it turns blue, and lies agonizing within the socket, and at length goes out in no perfume.—Collier.

2. Receptacle of the eye.

His eye-balls in their hollow sockets sink;
Breath of sleep, he loathes his meat and drink;
His withers at his heart, and looks as wan
As the pale spectra of a warbler's inn.

Dryden, Palmyra and Artax, l. 559.

3. Any hollow that receives something inserted.

The sockets and supporters of flowers are fluted, as in the live brethren of the rose, and sockets of gilliflowers.—Bacon.

Cymophos is the connection of a tooth to its socket.—Wiseman, Surgery.
As the weight leans wholly upon the axis, the grating and rubbing of these axes against the sockets wherein they are placed, will cause some inaptitude and resistance to that rotation of the cylinder which would otherwise ensue.—Hubb, Wilkin.

On either side the head produce an ear,
And sink a socket for the shining sphere.
Dryden, Translation of the Georgics, l. 253.

Socket-hisel. s. Stronger sort of chisel.

Carpenters, for their rougher work, use a stronger sort of chisel, and distinguish them by the name of socket-hisels; their shank made with a hollow socket a-top, to receive a strong wooden spring made to fit into the socket.—Maron, Mechanical Exercises.

Sockless. adj. Wanting socks or shoes.

You shall behold one pair of legs, the feet of which were in times past sockless, but are now, through the change of time that alters all things, very strangely become the legs of a knight and courtier.—Beaumont and Fletcher, Woman Hater.

Socle. s. [Italian, zoccolo = shoe.] In Architecture. Square member, under the bases of statues and pedestals of vases: (it serves as a foot or stand).

A socle differs from a pedestal in being without base or corner.—Brault and Cox, Dictionary of Science, Literature, and Art.

Socman. s. Socager.

In almost every page [Domesday Book] we meet with tenants either of the crown, or of other lords, denominated thanes, freetholders, (liberi homines,) or socagers (socmanni.) None of these, it is stated, might sell their lands to whom they pleased; others were restricted from alienation. . . . I am not aware that military service is specified in any instance to be due from one of these tenants, though it is difficult to speak as to a negative proposition of this kind with any confidence. . . . It has been shown in another place how the right of territorial jurisdiction was generally, and at last inseparably, connected with feudal tenure. Of this right we meet frequent instances in the laws and records of the Anglo-Saxons, though not in those of an early date. A charter of Edward grants to the monastery of Croyland soc, scc, toll, team, and infangthief; words which generally went together in the description of these privileges, and signify the right of holding a court to which all freemen of the territory should repair, of deciding pleas therein, as well as of imposing amercements according to law, of taking tolls upon the sale of goods, and of punishing capitally a thief taken in the fact within the limits of the manor. . . . Some have derived their name from the Saxon soc, which signifies a franchise, especially one of jurisdiction. And whatever may come of this etymology, which is not perhaps so well established as that from the French word soc, a ploughshare, they undoubtedly were antients to the court-baron of the lord, to whose soc, or right of justice, they belonged. . . . It is not easy to divide between these two derivations of the words socage and socmann. On the one hand, the frequent recurrence in Domesday-book of the expression, socmanni de soco Agari, &c. seems to lead us to infer that these words, so near in sound, were related to each other. Socman . . . is clearly for this derivation. But Bracton . . . derives socage from the French soc, and this etymology is judiciously illustrated by a passage in Blondell's history of Norfolk. In the manor of Cawston, a man, with a barren hand holding a ploughshare, was carried before the steward as a man that it was held by socage of the duchy of Lancaster. Perhaps, however, this custom may be thought not sufficiently ancient to confirm Bracton's derivation.—Hallam, View of the State of Europe during the Middle Ages, ch. viii. pt. ii. and note.
(See, also, under Socage.)

Socmanry. s. Tenure by socage.

It shall be lawful for the unknown of the socmanry of the said Robert in Fitz-Walter to demand the court of the said Robert.—T. Blount, Ancient Tenures, p. 119.

Socome. s. [A.S. soc.] Custom of tenants to grind corn at their lord's mill: (in the extract, as the second element in a compound).

There is hand-socome, where tenants are bound to grind at the lord's mill; and free-socome, where they do it freely out of love to their lord.—Cowell.

Sod. s. [sward.] Turf; clod.

The sexton shall green sods on three bestow;
Alas! the sexton in thy banker mow. Siriff.
Here fane shall draw a sweeter sod
Than fancy's feet have ever trod. Collins, Odes.

My brothers' graves without a sod.

Byron, The Prisoner of Chillon.

Soda. s. In Chemistry. Oxide of sodium; the word, however, is used commercially to denote other less simple combinations, as the hydrates and carbonates. Soda and potassa are the two typical alkalis; indeed in the previous editions the explanation, or definition, is simply Alkali.

Caustic soda is . . . used in chemical researches, in bleaching, and in the manufacture of soap. It is prepared by boiling a solution of crystallized carbonate of soda in four or five parts of water, with half its weight of recently slaked or sifted lime. At the end of half an hour the vessel . . . may be removed from the fire, and covered carefully, till the calcareous matter has settled into a solid mass at the bottom. The clear supernatant lye may then be decanted into bottles for use in the liquid state, or evaporated, out of contact of air, till it assumes an oily appearance, then poured upon an iron or marble slab, broken into pieces, and put up in phials secured with greased stoppers or corks.—Croft, Dictionary of Arts, Manufactures, and Mines.

Soda-water. s. See first extract.

Soda-water is the name given to water containing a minute quantity of soda, and highly charged with carbonic acid gas, whereby it acquires a sparkling appearance, an agreeable pungent taste, an exhilarating quality, and certain medicinal powers.—Croft, Dictionary of Arts, Manufactures, and Mines.

Nor e'en the blent sherbet, combined with snow,
Nor the first sparkle of the desert spring,
Nor burringly in all its sunset glow,
After long travel, cumulant, love or slaughter,
Vie with that glass of luck and soda-water.

Byron, Don Juan, il. 180.

We took him home, and put him to bed,
And told his wife and daughter
To give him next morning a couple of red Herrings and soda-water. Barham.

Sodatic. adj. Used sometimes as soda adjectival; e. g. 'Sodatic powders' may be read on druggists' labels.Sodalitty. s. [N. Fr. sodalité; Lat. sodalitas, -utis.] Fellowship; fraternity.

Sodalities of all sorts and conditions whatsoever, either regular or ecclesiastical.—Parthenius Sower, p. 180, 183.

A new confraternity was instituted in Spain, of the slaves of the blessed Virgin, and this sodaloty established with large indulgences.—Bishop Stillington.

Sodden. part. adj.1. Seethed; boiled.

Can sodden water, their barley-broth,
Decoet their cold blood to such valiant heat?
Shakespeare, Henry V. iii. 5.
Sodden business! there's a stew'd plume here!
Id., Troilus and Cressida, iii. 1.
Mix it with sodden wines and rabelins.—Dryden.

As the first element in a compound.

Thou sodden-witted lord; thou hadst no more brain than I have in my elbows.—Shakespeare, Troilus and Cressida, ii. 1.

2. Applied, in some places, to bread not well baked; doughy: (Sad is a common provincial form of this word).Soder. v. a. Solder.

Let him bethink . . . how he will solder up the shifting flaws of his unright persuasions.—Milton, Doctrines and Discipline of Divorce, preface.

Solder. s. Solder.

Still the difficulty returns, how these hooks were made: what is it that fastens this solder, and links these first principles of bodies into a chain?—Collins, Essay, On Pride.

Soldering. verbal abs. Soldering.

He that smootheth with the hammer encourageth him that smote the anvil, saying, it is ready for soldering.—Isaiah, xli. 7.

Sodium. s. [the termination -um belonging to the technical language of Chemistry shows that the word is the name of a metal.] Metallic basis of soda.

Pure sodium . . . is white like silver, softer and more malleable than any other metal, and may be readily reduced into very thin leaves. . . . If a drop of water be thrown upon it, it becomes so hot by the chemical action as to take fire.—Croft, Dictionary of Arts, Manufactures, and Mines.

Sodomite. s. One guilty of sodomy.Sodomy. s. [from Sodom, the city of Scripture, doomed, along with Gomorrah, for its wickedness.] Unnatural crime.Soe. s. Large wooden vessel with hoops, for holding water: (used in the extract as the first element in a compound. Probably connected with Soden, Seethe, Souchy, &c.)

A pump grown dry will yield no water; but pouring a little into it at first, for one basin-full you may fetch up as many soe-fulls.—Dr. H. More.

Sover. adv. Word properly joined with a pronoun or adverb, as whoever, whatsoever, howsoever.

What great thing soever a man proposed to do in his life, he should think of achieving it by fifty.—Sir W. Temple.

What love soever by an heir is shown,
Or you could ne'er suspect my loyal love. Dryden.
The younger Pitt . . . came far too early into public life, and was too suddenly plunged into the pool of office, to give him time for the study and the reflection which can alone open to any mind, how vigorous soever may be its natural constitution, the views of a deep and original wisdom.—Lord Brougham, Historical Sketches of Statesmen of the Reign of George III., Lord Chatham.

Sôfa. s. [Persian.] Long cushioned seat.

The king leaped off from the sôfa on which he sat, and cried out, 'My Abdullah!'—Guardian.

Soft. adj. [A.S.]1. Not hard.

Some bodies are hard, and some soft; the hardness is caused by the junctions of the spirits, which, if in a greater degree, make them not only hard, but fragil.—Bacon.

Hot and cold were in one body fixt,
And soft with hard, and light with heavy mixt.
Dryden, Translation from Ovid, Metamorphoses, li. 1.

Hard and soft are names we give things, only in relation to the constitution of our own bodies; that being called hard, which will put us to pain sooner than change figure, by the pressure of any part of our bodies; and that soft, which changes the situation of its parts upon an easy touch.—Locke.

2. Not rugged; not rough.

What went ye out for to see? a man clothed in soft raiment? behold, they that wear soft raiment are in kings' houses.—Matthew, xi. 8.

3. Ductile; not unchangeable of form.

Spirits can either sex assume; so soft
And uncompounded in their essence pure.
Milton, Paradise Lost, i. 424.

4. Facile; flexible; not resolute; yielding.

A few divines of so soft and servile tempers as disposed them to so sudden acting and compliance.—Bishop Butler.

Our king is too soft and easy, another too fiery.—Sir R. L'Estrange.

However soft within themselves they are,
To you they will be valiant by despair.
Dryden, Tyrannick Love, i. 1.

As the first element in a compound.

What he hath done famously, he did it to that end, though soft-conscienced men can be content to say it was for his country.—Shakespeare, Coriolanus, i. 1.

Christ be the venge, how well softer it flow,
That tends to make our world by man my foe;
Give virtue scandal, innocence a fear,
Or from the soft-eyed virgin steal a tear.
Pope, Epistle to Arbuthnot.

6. Mild; gentle; kind; not severe.

Would my heart were flint like Edward's;
Or Edward's soft and pitiful like mine.
Shakespeare, Richard III. i. 3.

Our torments may wax more
As soft as now severe.
Milton, Paradise Lost, ii. 275.

Yet soft his nature, though severe his lay,
His anger moral, and his wisdom easy.
Pope, Epitaph on the Earl of Dorset.

7. Meek; civil; complaisant.

Thou art their soldier, and being bred in broils,
Hast not the soft way, which thou dost confound

Were fit for thee to use, as they to claim
In asking their good loves.

Shakespeare, Coriolanus, iii. 2.

8. Placid; still; easy.

On her soft ash-white skin pavia even,
She bears these soft, with the smooth air along.
Milton, Paradise Lost, vii. 165.

9. Effeminate; viciously nice.

This sense is also mistook of an art
Which to soft people sweet perfume doth sell;
Though this dear art doth little good impart,
Since they smell best, that do of nothing smell.
Sir J. Daines, On the immortality of the Soul.

10. Delicate; elegantly temper.

Her heavenly form
Angelle, but more soft and feminine.
Milton, Paradise Lost, ix. 454.
I expiate thee, fair indeed and tall,
Under a plume; yet thoughtless less fair,
Less winning soft, less amiably mild.
Id., iv. 479.

11. Weak; simple.

He made soft fellows stark noddies, and such as were foolish quite mad.—Barton, Anatomy of Melancholy, p. 119.
What cannot such scoffers do, especially if they find a soft creature on whom they may work.—Id., p. 150.
The deceiver soon found this soft place of Adam's, and innocency itself did not secure him.—Glanville.

12. Gentle; not loud; not rough.

Her voice was ever soft,
Gentle, and low; an excellent thing in women.
Shakespeare, King Lear, v. 3.
The Dorian mood of flutes and soft recorders,
Milton, Paradise Lost, i. 551.
When some great and majestic monarch dies,
Soft whispers first, and mournful murmurs rise,
Among the sad attendants; then the sound
Soon gathers voice.
Dryden.

13. Smooth; flowing; not vehement; not rapid.

Nor then the solemn nightingale
Cessant warbling, but all night tuned her soft lays.
Milton, Paradise Lost, vii. 453.
Soft were thy numbers; who could take offence,
When smooth description held the place of sense?
Pope, Epistle to Arbuthnot.

Hark! the numbers soft and clear
Gently steal upon the ear.
Id., Ode on St. Cecilia's Day.

14. Not forcible; not violent.

The timely dew of sleep
Now falling with soft unobtrusive weight inclines
Our eyelids.
Milton, Paradise Lost, iv. 614.

15. Mild; not glaring.

The sun shining upon the upper part of the clouds, made them appear like fire down or wool, and made the softest sweetest lights imaginable.—Sir T. Browne, Tracta.

Soft. adv. Softly; gently; quietly.

Then panting soft, and trembling every joint,
Her fearful face to toward the lower she moved.
Shakespeare, Fair Queen

He . . . with voice
Mild, as when Zephyrus on Flora breathes,
Her hand soft touching, whisper'd thus.
Milton, Paradise Lost, vii. 15.

Soft whispering thus to Nestor's son,
His hand reclined, young Ulysses hegan.
Pope, Translation of the Iliad, iv. 81.

There soft extended, to the murmuring sound
Of the high porch, Ulysses sleeps profound.
Id., vi. 455.

Soft. interj. Hold; stop; not so fast.

Soft, I pray you; did King Richard then Proclaim my brother?
Shakespeare, Henry IV. Part I. i. 3.

Oh! come in, Emilia;
Soft, by and by, let me the curtains draw.
Id., Othello, v. 2.

But soft, my mine, the world is wide,
And all at once was not desicred. Sir J. Suckling.

Sôtem. v. a.1. Make soft; make less hard.

Bodies, into which the water will enter, long seething will rather soften than indurate.—Bacon, Natural and Experimental History.
Their arrow's point they soften in the flame,
And sounding banners break its barbed frame.
Gay, The Fawn, i. 183.

2. Make less fierce or obstinate; mollify.

I will clear their senses dark,
And soften stony hearts.
Milton, Paradise Lost, iii. 184.
Our friends see not our faults, or conceal them, or soften us by their representation.—Addison.

3. Make easy; compose; make placid; mitigate; palliate; alleviate.

Call round her tomb each object of desire,
Bid her be all that cheere or softens life,
The tender sister, daughter, friend, and wife.
Pope.

Musick the fiercest griefs can charm;
And Fate's severest rage obarm;
Musick can soften pain to ease,
And make despair and madness please.
Pope, Ode on St. Cecilia's Day.

4. Make less harsh; less vehement; less violent.

He bore his great commission in his look,
But sweetly temper'd awe, and soften'd all he spoke.
Dryden.

5. Make less glaring.

6. Make tender; enervate.

SOFTEN. v. n.

1. Grow less hard.

Many balles that will hardly melt, will soften; as iron in the forge.—Bacon, Natural and Experimental History.

2. Grow less obdurate, cruel, or obstinate.

He may soften at the sight of the child;
The silence often of pure innocency
Persuades, when speaking fails.
Shakespeare, Winter's Tale, II. 2.

SOFTENING. verbal abs. Act of making less hard, less vehement, or less violent.

I allow that elevations and softenings of the voice, judiciously managed, are both ornamental and useful; but those sudden starts and explosions are most ungraceful and unbefitting the gravity of the pulpit.—Archbishop Horst, Charge to the Clergy, 1712.

SOFTENING. part. adj. Making less fierce; mollifying.

I would correct the harsh expressions of one party by softening and reconciling methods.—Watts.

SOFTHEARTED. adj. Kind-hearted; gentle; meek.

Thou art some practice fellow;
One that hath studied out a trick to talk,
And wore soft-hearted people.
Beaumont and Fletcher, Maid's Tragedy.

A right reasonable, innocent, and soft-hearted petition.—Milton, Of Reformation in England, II. 1.

SOFTING. s. Effeminate or viciously nice person. Rare.

We receive fashions of our conjugalous.—The drunken leathery his guests into drunkenness. Effeminate men and softings cause the stout man to waver.—Bishop Wadson, Christian Manual, I. 6. 11. 1576.

SOFTLY. adv. In a soft manner.

1. Without hardness.

2. Not violently; not forcibly.

Solid bodies, if very softly percussed, give no sound; as when a man treads very softly upon marble.—Bacon.

3. Not loudly.

Alah rent his clothes, and went softly.—1 Kings, xxi. 27.

In this dark silence softly leave the town,
And to the general's tent direct your steps.
Dryden, Indian Emperor, III. 1.

4. Gently; placidly.

Death will dismiss me,
And lay me softly in my native dust.
To pay the forfeit of ill-managed trust.
Dryden.

5. Mildly; tenderly.

The king must die;
Though pity softly plead within my soul,
Yet he must die, that I may make you great.
Dryden, Spanish Friar, III. 1.

SOFTNER, or SOFTENER. s. One who, that which, softens; one who mollifies.

These softners, and expedient-mongers, shake their heads so strongly, that we can hear their pebbles jingle.—Swift.

SOFTNESS. s. Attribute suggested by Soft.

1. Quality of being soft; quality contrary to hardness.

Softness cometh by the greater quantity of spirits, which ever indeth yielding and cession; and by the more equal spreading of the tunicular parts, which thereby are more sliding and following; as in gold.—Bacon, Natural and Experimental History.

Their hearts are enlarged, they know how to gather the down and softness from the sharpest thistles. Jeremy Taylor, Sermons, p. 143. 1651.

2. Mildness; kindness.

A wise man, when there is a necessity of expressing any evil action, should do it by a word that has a secondary idea of kindness or softness; or a word that carries in it rebuke and severity.—Watts, Logic.

3. Civility; gentleness.

They turn the softness of the tongue into the hardness of the tooth.—Holmes.
Improve these virtues, with a softness of manners, and a sweetness of conversation.—Dryden.

4. Effeminacy; vicious delicacy.

So long as idleness is quite shut out from our lives, all the sins of wantonness, softness, and effeminacy, are prevented; and there is but little room for temptation.—Jeremy Taylor.

5. Timorousness; pusillanimity.

This virtue could not proceed out of fear or softness; for he was valiant and active.—Bacon, History of the Reign of Henry VII.

Saving a man's self, or suffering, if with reason, is virtue: If without it, is softness, or obstinacy.—Gre.

6. Quality contrary to harshness.

Softness of sounds is distinct from the softness of sounds.—Bacon.

7. Facility; gentleness; candour; easiness to be effected.

Such was the ancient simplicity and softness in spirit which sometimes prevailed in the world, that they whose words were even as oracles amongst men, seemed evermore loth to give sentences against any thing publicly received in the church of God.—Hooker, Ecclesiastical Polity.

8. Contrariety to energetic vehemence.

Who but thyself the cold and ear can please,
With strength and softness, energy and ease?
Maria.

9. Mildness; meekness.

For contemptibility he and valour form'd,
For softness him and sweet attractive grace.
Milton, Paradise Lost, IV. 207.

Her stubborn look
This softness from thy finger took.
Waller.

10. Weakness; simplicity.

SOGGY. adj. [sodgy.] Moist; damp; steamy with damp.

The warping condition of this green and soggy multitude.—B. Jonson, Every Man out of his Humour.

SOLÓ. interj. Form of calling from a distant place; sportsman's halloo.

Soló! soló!—What sweet thou?—Him we go to find.—Shakespeare, Two Gentlemen of Verona, III. 1.

SOIL. v. a. [A.S. sylian.]

1. Foul; dirt; pollute; stain; sully.

A silly man in simple weeds forlorn,
And soil'd with dust of the long dried way.
Spenser, Faerie Queen.

Although some heretics have played this text, yet the sun is not soil'd in passage.—Bacon, Advancement learning a Holy War.

If I soil
Myself with sin, I then but vainly toll.
Samuels.

I would not soil these pure unbrodied weeds
With the rank vapours of this sin-worn mould.
Milton, Comus, 16.

Bad fruit of knowledge, if this be to know,
Which leaves us naked thus, of honour void,
Of innocence, of faith, of purity,
Our wotted ornaments now soil'd and stain'd.

One who had I'll fear exhaled been,
And could not for a taste of the flesh come in,
Licks the soil'd earth, which he thinks full as good,
While creaking with a muzzled Umbre's blood.
Tate, Translation of Job, c. 118.

If the eye-glass be thirted faintly with the smoke of a lamp or torch, to obscure the light of the star, the fainter light in the circumference of the star comes to be visible, and the star, if the glass be sufficiently soil'd with smoke, appears something more like a unobscured point. Sir I. Newton.

An absent hero's wealth they sought to soil,
An absent hero's wealth they made their spoil.
Pope, Translation of the Odyssey, xxiv. 524.

2. Dung; manure.

Men now present, just as they soil their ground;
not that they love the dirt, but that they expect a crop.—South, Sermons.

3. To soil a horse is to purge him by giving him grass in the spring.

SOIL. s.

1. Dirt; spot; pollution; foulness.

By indirect ways
I met this crown; and I myself know well
How troublesome it sat upon my head;
To thee it shall descend with better quiet;
For all the soil of the achievement goes
With me into the earth.
Shakespeare, Henry IV. Part II. IV. 4.

That would be an great soil in the new dress of your marriage.—Id., Much Ado about Nothing, III. 2.

Vex'd I am with passions,
Which give some soil perhaps to my behaviour.
Id., Julius Caesar, I. 2.

A lady's honour must be touch'd,
Which, nice as ermine, will not bear a soil.
Dryden.

2. Ground; earth, considered with relation to its vegetative qualities.

Judgment may be made of waters by the soil which they run.—Bacon, Natural and Experimental History.

Her spots thou see'st
As clouds, and clouds may rain, and rain produce Fruits in her soften'd soil.
Milton, Paradise Lost, viii. 118.

The first cause of a kingdom's thriving is the fruitfulness of the soil, to produce the necessaries and conveniences of life; not only for the inhabitants, but for exportation.—Swift.

3. Land; country.

Dorset, that with fearful soul
Leads discontented steps in foreign soil,
This fair alliance shall call home
To high promotions. Shakespeare, Richard III. IV. 4.

Most I thus leave thee, paradise! thus leave Thine native soil; these happy walks and shades, Fit haunts of gods. Milton, Paradise Lost, xi. 208.

4. Dung; compost.

The haven has been stopped up by the great heaps of dirt that the sea has thrown into it; for all the soil on that side of Ravenna has been left there luxuriously by the sea.—Addison, Travels in Italy.

Improve land by dung, and other sort of soils.—Mortimer, Husbandry.

Take soil. Run into the water, as a deer when closely pursued.

O sir, have you ta'en soil here? It's well a man may reach you after three hours running yet!—B. Jonson, Bartholomew Fair.

SOILINESS. s. Stain; foulness.

Make proof of the incorporeality of silver and tin, whether it yield no soiliness more than silver.—Bacon.

SOILING. verbal abs. Feeding a horse with green food.

He keeps his horses in the yard, well littered all summer, soiling on clover.—Annals of Agriculture, 46. 233.

SOILURE. s. Stain; pollution. Rare.

He merits well to have her,
Not making any scruple of her soilure.
Shakespeare, Troilus and Cressida, IV. 1.

SOIRÉE. s. [Fr.] Evening party; meeting.

Consider that crowning phenomenon, and summary of modern civilization, a soirée of lions. glittering are the rooms, well-lighted, thronged; bright flows the quadrilateral flood of blouse-sown and dress-coats; a soft smile dwelling on all faces; far behold there also flow the lions, hovering distinguished; circles of the age, of one sort or another. One's really pleasant to see; look at them, but inquire not of them, depart rather and be thankful. For your lion-soirée admits not of speech. . . . (Literary there is not. . . . For which reason it has been suggested with an eye to sincerity and silence in lion-soirées, might not each lion be, for example, tickled as wine-decanter are?—Chirley, Critical and Miscellaneous Essays, Sir W. Scott.

SOJOURN. v. n. [Fr. séjourner; Italian, soggiornare.] Dwell anywhere for a time; live as not at home; inhabit as not in a settled habitation.

If, till the expiration of your month, you will return and sojourn with my sister, Unobscuring lust your train, come then to me.

Th' advantage of his absence took the king,
And in the mean time sojourn'd at my father's.
Id., King John, I. 1.

How comes it he is to sojourn with you? how comes acquaintance?—Id., Cymbeline, I. 5.

Here dwells he; though he sojourns every where in progress, yet his standing house is here. Id.

The soldiers first assembled at Newcastle, and there sojourn'd three days.—Sir J. Hayward.

To sojourn in that land

He comes invited. Milton, Paradise Lost, xii. 120.

He who sojourns in a foreign country, returns what he seen abroad to the state of things at home.—Bishop Atterbury.

SOJOURN. s. [Fr. séjour.] Temporary residence; casual and no settled habitation.

The princes, France and Burgundy,
Long in our court have made their airy sojourn.
Shakespeare, King Lear, I. 1.

Thou I revisit now,
Escaped the Stygian pool, though long detain'd
In that obscure sojourn.
Milton, Paradise Lost, III. 13.

Rare view'd the Galilean town,
And once a year Jerusalem, five days.
Short sojourn. Id., Paradise Regain'd, III. 233.

SOJOURNER. s. One who sojourns; temporary dweller.

We are strangers before thee, and sojourners, as were all our fathers: our days on the earth are as a shadow.—1 Chronicles, xxi. 16.

Waves overthrow
And his Memphis chivalry,
While with perfidious hatred they pursued
The sojourners of Goshen.
Milton, Paradise Lost, I. 306.

Not for a night, or quick revolving year;
Welcome an owner, not a sojourner. Dryden.
Sojourning. verbal abs. Act of dwelling anywhere but for a time.

The sojourning of the children of Israel, who dwelt in Egypt, was four hundred and thirty years.
—Exodus, xii. 40.

Sojournment. s. Sojourning

God has appointed our sojournment here as a period of preparation for futurity.—Wakefield, Life,
ii. 272.

Soke. s. [A.S.]

1. Jurisdiction; circuit, or place, where a lord has the power or liberty of holding a court of his tenants, and administering justice.

The said Robert de Fitz-Walter... hath a soke [see] in the city of London... If any thief shall be taken in his soke, he ought to have his stocks and imprisonment in his soke.—T. Mount, Ancient Tenures, p. 118.

2. Liberty or privilege of tenants excused from customary burdens.

3. Privilege claimed by millers of grinding all the corn which is used within the manor, or township, wherein their mill stands.

Sol. s. In Heraklery. Old term, in the emblazoning of arms, equivalent to or, i.e.
gold. 'Sol in its splendour' means the sun figured as a human face surrounded with rays.

Sol. s. In Musie. Name in French and Italian of the note in the gamut, corresponding to G in *sol-fa*ing.

Sol-fa. v. n. In Musie. Pronounce the several notes of a song by the terms of the gamut, ut, re, mi, fa, sol, in learning to sing.

An you'll not knock, I'll wring it;
I'll try how you can sol-fa, and sing it.
Shakespeare, Twelfth Night, i. 2.

Sol-fa'ing. verbal abs. In Musie. Singing by the terms of the gamut.

Those words might not, and probably would not,
for a long time have any meaning, but might resemble the syllables which we make use of in solfa'ing.—A. Smith, On the Imitative Arts, p. 6.

Solace. v. a. Comfort; cheer; amuse.

We will with some strange pastime solace them.
Shakespeare, Love's Labour's Lost, iv. 3.
The birds with song
Solaced the woods. Milton, Paradise Lost, vii. 331.

Solace. v. n. Take comfort; be recreated.
Rare.

One poor and loving child,
But one thing to rejoice and solace in,
And cruel death hath catch'd it from my sight.
Shakespeare, Romeo and Juliet, iv. 5.
Were they to be ruled, and not to rule,
This sickly land might solace us before.

Id., Richard III. ii. 3.
Solace. s. [Lat. solatium.] Comfort; pleasure; alleviation; that which gives comfort or pleasure; recreation; amusement.

Therein sat a holy fresh and fair,
Mingling sweet solace to herself alone;
Sometimes she sung as loud as lark in air, Sometimes she laugh'd, that nigh her breath was gone. Spenser, Faerie Queen.

If we live that which is most and right, although they be gild, we are not to envy them this their solace; we do not think it a duty of ours to be every such thing their tormentors. Mocker, Ecclesiastical Polity.

(Give me leave to go;
Sorrow would solace, and my eye would ease.
Shakespeare, Henry VI. Part II. ii. 3.)

If I would delight my private hours
With music and with poem, where so I would
As in our native language can I find
That solace! Milton, Paradise Regained, iv. 331.

Though sight be lost,
Life yet hath many solaces, enjoy'd
Where other senses want not their delights.

Id., Seneca Agonistes, 914.
Through waters and through flames I'll go,
Suffer and solace of my woe.

Solacement. s. Comfort.

A probable conjecture were, that this same theology, through theurgy, solacement of the poor, to which our archbishop now more and more betook himself, might serve not only as a hireling for external peace, but also half-momentarily as a salve for muzzling his own spiritual woe.—Carlyle, Critical and Miscellaneous Essays, Const Cagliostro.

Solacions. adj. [N.Fr. solacien.] Affording comfort or amusement. Rare.

It is a solacion vine when it raineth, releeveth, and quickeneth the desolate conscience with fortable promyses.—Dale, On the Reedation, p. i.
b. s. b.: 1520.

Solacion pastimes, solacieness, and cruetie.—Id.,
Acts of English Parliament, pt. ii. c. 1. b.

Solar. adj. [Fr. solaire; Lat. solaris; sol- sun.]

1. Belonging to, connected with, the sun.

Instead of golden fruits,
By genial showers and solar heat squally'd,
Unsoluble winter hath defaced
Earth's blooming charms, and made a barren waste.
Sir R. Blackmore.

2. Belonging to the sun.

They denominate some herbs solar, and some lunar.—Bacon.

3. Born under or in the prehumant influence of the sun.

'... a cock was pleased to hear him speak so fair,
And proud beside, as solar people are.
Dryden, The Cock and the Fox, 631.

4. Measured by the sun.

The rule to find the moon's age, on any day of any solar month, cannot show precisely an exact account of the moon, because of the inequality of the motions of the sun and moon, and the number of days of the solar months.—Hobbes, On Time.

The Ptolemaic of the solar system has, in recent times, drawn the attention of speculators; and an hypothesis has been started, that our sun and his attendant planets have been produced by the condensation of a mass of diffused matter, such as that which constitutes the nebulous patches which we observe in the starry heavens.—Herschel, History of Scientific Ideas, vol. ii. p. 267; 1848.

Solary. adj. Connected with, relating to, the sun; (Solar commoner).

The corpuscles that make up the beams of light be solary effluvia, or minute particles of solar ethereal substance, thrusting on one another from the mid body.—Huygh.

Scripture hath been punctual in other records, concerning solary miracles.—Sir T. Browne, Vulgar Errors.

Sold. s. [N.Fr. soult.] Military pay; warlike entertainment.

But were your will her sold to entertain,
And number'd be amongst knights of manhood,
Great quarters, well I wot, should you remain,
And in her favour high be reckoned.

Spenser, Faerie Queen.

Soldado. s. Soldier. Archaic or rhetorical.

Those that are soldados in thy state,
Do bear the badge of base, effeminate,
Ev'n in their plumbe crests.

Marston, Scourge of Villany, iii. 8: 1529.

Soldan. s. Sultan.

[Thy] at the soldan's elms defy'd the bed.

Milton, Paradise Lost, i. 761.

Solder. v. a. [Fr. souder.]

1. Unite or fasten with any kind of metallic cement.

A concave sphere of gold, filled with water, and adhered up, has upon pressing the sphere with great force, let the water squeeze through it, and stand all over its outside in multitudes of small drops like dew, without bursting or cracking the body of gold.—Sir I. Newton, Opticks.

Tin-plates are soldered with an alloy consisting of from one to two parts of tin, with one of lead.
Pewter is soldered with a more fusible alloy, containing a certain proportion of bismuth added to the lead and tin; iron, copper, and brass are soldered with spelter, an alloy of zinc and copper, in nearly equal parts; silver, sometimes with pure tin but generally with silver-solder.—Cro. Dictionary of Arts, Manufactures, and Mines.

2. Mend; unite anything broken.

It lodgeth them not thus to solder up a broken cause, whereas their first and last discourses will fall apart.—Hooker, Ecclesiastical Polity.

Was't wixt you twain would be
As if the world should cleave, and that slain men Should solder up the rift.

Shakespeare, Antony and Cleopatra, iii. 4.

Thou visible god,
That solderest close impossibilities,
And mak'st that kiss! Id., Titus of Athens, iv. 3.

Learn'd he was in medicinal lore,
For by his side a pouch he wore,
Replete with strange hermetick powder,
That wounds nine miles point-blank would solder.

Butler, Hudibras, i. 2, 223.
The naked cynick's jar ne'er flames; if broken,
'Tis nakedly soldered, or a new besoken.

J. Dryden, Jun., Translation of Juvenal,
xiv. 300.

At the Restoration the Presbyterians and other sects, did all unite and solder up their several schemes, to join against the church.—Swift.

Solder. s. Metallic cement; metallic body that will melt with less heat than the body to be soldered.

Goldsmiths say, the coarsest stuff

Will serve for solder well enough. Swift.

The silver-solders and brazers mix their respective solders with mustard and gunpowder. . . . The strong solder of the coppersmith consists of eight parts of brass and one of zinc.—Cro. Dictionary of Arts, Manufactures, and Mines.

Solderer. s. One who solders or mends.

Soldering. verbal abs. Process by which two metals are soldered together.

Soldering is the process of uniting the surfaces of metals, by the intervention of a more fusible metal, which being melted upon each surface, serves, partly by chemical attraction, and partly by cohesive force, to bind them together.—Cro. Dictionary of Arts, Manufactures, and Mines.

Soldier. s. [N.Fr. soult pay.]

1. Fighting man; warrior.

Your sister is the better soldier.
Shakespeare, King Lear, iv. 5.

Good Richard,
An solder and a better solder none.

Id., Macbeth, iv. 3.

A soldier
Full of strange oaths, and bearded like a pard,
Jealous in honour, sudden and quick in quarrel,
Seeking the bubble reputation
Ev'n in the common's mouth.

Id., As you like it, ii. 7.

A hateful service that dissolved the knee.

Of many a soldier. Chapman.

I have not yet forgot I am a king;

If I have wrong'd thee, charge me free to face;

I have not yet forgot I am a soldier.

Dryden, Don Sebastian, iv. 3.

2. It is generally used of the common man, as distinct from the commanders.

It were meet that any one, before he came to be a captain, should have been a soldier.—Spenser, View of the State of Ireland.

Soldieress. s. Female soldier.

Honour'd Hippodamia

Most dreaded Amazonian;—Soldieress

That equal to east's fierce sternness with pity, Hammond and Fletcher, Two Noble Annals.

Soldierlike. adj. Martial; warlike; military; becoming a soldier.

I will maintain the word with my sword to be a soldierlike word, and a word of good command.—
Shakespeare, Henry IV. Part II. iii. 2.

Soldierly. adj. Soldierlike; having the character of a soldier.

Although at the first they had fought with beastly fury rather than any soldierly discipline, justice had now made them commendable to the best.—*Sir
P. Sidney*.

They, according to a soldierly custom, in cases of extremity, by interchange of a kiss by every of them upon the swords of others, sealed a resolution to maintain the place. Sir J. Hopeswell.

Enemies as well as friends confessed, that it was as soldierly an action as had been performed on either side.—Lord Clarendon, History of the Great Rebellion.

Soldiership. s. Military character; martial qualities; behaviour becoming a soldier;
martial skill.

Thy father and myself in friendship
First tried our soldiership; he did look far Into the server of the time, and was Disciple of the bravest.

Shakespeare, All's well that ends well, i. 2.

By so you throw away

The absolute soldiership you have by hand, Disgrace your army, which doth most consist
Of war-mark'd footmen.

Id., Antony and Cleopatra, iii. 7.

Soldiery. s.

1. Body of military men; soldiers collectively.

The Memphian soldiery,
That swell'd the Egyptian wave, when wall'd,
The unfrown waters marvellously stood. A. Phillips.

I charge not the soldiery with ignorance and contempt of learning, without allowing exceptions.—
Swift.

The controversy slept during the reign of Neephar, and that of Michael, surrounded Rhinopates.
The monks throughout this period seem to form an independent power. . . . and to dictate to the Emperor, and even to the Church. On the other hand, among the soldiery are heard some deep but un-expressed murmurs of attachment to the memory of Constantine Copronymus.—Milman, History of Latin Christianity, ii. iv. ch. viii.

2. Soldiership; military service.

Offering him, if he would exercise his courage in soldiery, he would commit some charge unto him under his lieutenant Philinus.—Sir P. Sidney.

Sole. s. In Ichthyology. Fish so called; Solea vulgaris.

Solea may be taken at any time of the year, but they must not be under seven inches from the eye to the end of the tail.—Rees, Cyclopædia.

Sole. s. [Lat. solum.]

1. Bottom of the foot.

I will only be bold with Benedicet for his company; for from the crown of his head to the sole of his foot he is all mirth.—Shakespeare, Much Ado about Nothing, iii. 2.

Tirking is most in the sole of the feet: the cause is the rareness of being touched there.—Bacon, Natural and Experimental History.

The sole of the feet have great affinity with the liver and the mouth of the stomach; as going washed, to those that use it not, affords food.—Ibid.

Such resting found the sole of mildest feet.

Milton, Paradise Lost, l. 257.
In the make of the eagle's foot the sole is flat and broad, being very fleshy, and covered only with a thick, soft, and somewhat rarious skin, fit to travel in sandy places.—Ray.

2. Foot.

To reform this woeful parent's head
From tyrant's rage and ever-dying dread,
Hast wander'd through the world now long a day,
Yet ceasest not thy weary soles to lead.
Spenser, Faerie Queene.

3. Bottom of the shoe.

Nay, gentle ladies, we must have you dance,—
Not I, believe me: you have dancing shoes,
With humble sole.

Shakespeare, Romeo and Juliet, i. 4.
The caliga was a military shoe, with a very thick sole, tied above the instep with leather thongs.—Arbuthnot, Tables of ancient Coins, Weights, and Measures.

4. Part of anything that touches the ground.

Thrustrike-block is a plumb shorter than the jointer, having its sole made exactly flat and straight, and is used for the shooting of a short joint.—Mason, Mechanical Exercises.
Elm is proper for mills, soles of wheels, and pines.—Mortimer, Husbandry.

Sole. v. a. Furnish with soles: (as, 'To sole a pair of shoes').

His feet were soled with a triple tuft of a close short lumpy down.—Greene, Mollus.

Sole. adj. [Lat. solus.]

1. Single; only.

Take not upon thee to be judge alone: there is no sole judge but only one; say not to others, Receive my sentence, when their authority is above thine.—Hooker, Ecclesiastical Polity.

Orpheus ever, through the infinite and sole power of song, though he used the name of Jupiter.—Sir W. Raleigh.

To me shall be the glory sole among
The infernal powers.—Milton, Paradise Lost, ix. 135.

[He.] sole in power, at the lexicon said,
Let sea, and air, and earth, and heaven be made;
And it was so; and, when he shall obtain
In other sort, he will to speak again
And they shall be no more.—Prior, Solomon, l. 693.

2. In Law. Not married.

Some others are such as a man cannot make his wife, though he himself be sole and unmarried.—Ascham, Parergon Juris Civilis.

Solecism. s. [Gr. σολεκισμός, from Σόλεκος, inhabitants of an Attic colony, who spoke a corrupt dialect.]

1. Unfitness of one word to another; impropriety in language: (a barbarism may be in one word, a solecism must be of more).

There is scarce a solecism in writing which the best author is not guilty of, if we be at liberty to read him in the words of some manuscript.—Addison.

This confusion of terms, this great solecism of two Presents, is in a degree common to all posterity.—C. Lamb, Distant Correspondence.

The last circumstance which I shall mention, as having contributed to render society from the intellectual degradation into which it had fallen during the dark ages, is the revival of classical learning. The Latin language indeed, in which all legal instruments were drawn up, and of which all ecclesiastics availed themselves in their episcopal intercourse, as well as in their more solemn proceedings, had never ceased to be familiar. Though many solecisms and barbarous words occur in the writings of what were called learned men, they possessed a fluency of expression in Latin which does not often occur at present.—Milton, View of the State of Europe during the Middle Ages, pt. ii. ch. ix.

Great havoc . . . was made in the libraries of Constantinople at its capture by the Latins; an epoch from which a rapid decline is to be traced in the literature of the eastern empire. Solecisms and barbarous forms, which sometimes occur in the old Byzantine writers, are said to deform the style of the fourteenth and fifteenth centuries.—Ibid.

2. Any unfitness or impropriety.

To have one fair gentlewoman thus be made
The unkind instrument to wrong another,
And one she knows not, ay, and to persevere,
In my poor judgement is not warranted
From being a solecism in our sex,
If not in manners.—H. Jonson, Volpone, iv. 2.

He never observed you
To twirl a dish about you did not like of,
All being pleasing to you; or to take Assay of venison, or staid fowl by your nose,
Which is a solecism at and her's table.

Manning, The Unnatural Combat, iii. 1.
There is no decorum in it; nothing but solecism and absurdity.—Farinford, Sermons, p. 20: 1647.

Here also they drink tea in the afternoon, and play at cards or dance in the evening. One rindom, however, prevails, which I took upon as a solecism in politeness. The ladies treat with tea in their turn; and even girls of sixteen are not exempted from this shameful imposition.—Smollett, Expedition of Humphry Clinker.

Solecist. s. [Gr. σολεκιστής.] One who is guilty of impropriety in language.

Shall a udder writer, and an inspired udder writer, be called a solecist, and barbarian, for giving a new turn to a word so agreeable to the analogy and genius of the Greek tongue?—Blackwall, Sacred Classics, i. 139.

Solecistical. adj. Not correct; barbarous.

He thought it made the language solecistical and absurd.—Blackwall, Sacred Classics, i. 157.
The use of these combinations, with respect to the pronunciation, is almost always solecistical.—Tyrwhitt, Glossary to Chaucer, in voce Self.

Solecistically. adv. In a solecistical manner.

Which I had formerly for my own use set down, some of them briefly, and almost solecistically.—Wollaston.

Solecize. v. n. [Gr. σολεκίζω.] Be guilty of impropriety in language.

They solecize in saying that works do justify.—Dr. Clarke, Sermons, p. 470: 1637.

This being too loose a principle . . . to fancy the holy writers to solecize in their language, when we do not like the sense.—Dr. H. More, Mystery of Iniquity, b. i. ch. ix.: 1690.

Solely. adv. [the sound of the l doubled.] Singly; only.

You knew my father well, and in him me,
Left solely heir to all his lands.

Shakespeare, Twelfth Night, ii. 1.

This night's great business
Shall to all our nights and days to come Give solely sovereign sway and masterdom.

Id., Macbeth, i. 5.
That the intemperate heat of the time solely occasions this complexion, experience admits not.—Sir T. Browne, Vulgar Errors.

This truth is pointed chiefly, if not solely, upon sinners of the first rate, who have cast off all regard for piety.—Bishop Atterbury.

They all choose rather to rest the cause solely on logical disputation, than upon the testimonies of the ancients.—Bishop Watcound.

Solemn. adj. [Lat. solemnis; Fr. solennel.]

1. Anniversary; observed once a year with religious ceremonies.

The worship of this image was advanced, and a solemn supplication observed every year.—Bishop Stillingfleet.

2. Religiously grave; awful.

His holy rites and solemn feasts profaned.
Milton, Paradise Lost, l. 330.

3. Formal; ritual; religiously regular.

The necessary business of a man's calling, with some, will not afford much time for set and solemn prayer.—Dr. H. More, Whole Duty of Man.

4. Striking with seriousness; sober; serious.

Then can he loudly through the house to call,
That no one eared to answer to his cry;
There reign'd a solemn silence over all.

Spenser, Faerie Queene.
Swam with solemn tangles trodded thoughts.
Milton, Paradise Lost, l. 557.

Nor then the solemn midnight
Ceased warbling, but all night tuned her soft lays.
Ibid., vii. 435.

5. Grave; affectedly serious.

When Steele reflects upon the many solemn strong barriers to our succession of laws and customs, he thinks all for vanishing; so do I, provided the spirit solemn goes for nothing; because though I have heard of a solemn day, and a solemn reason, yet I run conceive no idea of a solemn barrier.—Swift.

Solemnness. s. Attribute suggested by Solemn.

1. Grave staidness; sober dignity.

A diligent decency was in Polydorus, above others; to whom, though the highest praise be attributed by the most, yet some think he wanted solemnness.—Sir H. Wotton, Elements of Architecture.

2. Gravity; seriousness.

Pythias, Virgilia, turn thy solemnness out of door,
And go along with us.—Shakespeare, Coriolanus, i. 2.

3. Religious ceremony.

Honest men's words are Stygian oaths and promises inviolable. These are not the men for whom the fetters of law were first forged; they needed not the solemnities of oaths; by keeping their faith they swear, and evaluate such contrivances.—Dr. T. Browne, Christian Morals, iii. 10.

Solemnity. s.

1. Ceremony or rite annually performed.

Were these annual solemnities only practised in the church?—Nelson.

Though the days of solemnity, which are but few, must quickly flit that onward exercise of devotion which appertains to such times; yet they increase men's inward dispositions to virtue for the present, and, by their frequent returns, bring the same at length to perfection.—Id.

Great was the cause; our old solemnities
From no blind zeal or fond tradition rise;
But, saved from death, our Ancestors yearly pay
These grateful honours to the god of day.

Pope, Translation of the Odyssey.

2. Awful ceremony or procession.

Call the holy Coadjutor;
Some speedy messenger bid her repair
To our solemnity.—Shakespeare, King John, ii. 2.

... like to a silver ix
Now bent in heaven, shall behold the night
Of our solemnities.

Id., Midsummer-Night's Dream, i. 1.

There may be greater danger in using such compositions in churches, at arraignments, plays, and solemnities.—Bacon.

What funeral pomp shall floating Tiber see,
When rising from his bed he views the sad solemnity!

Dryden's Translation of the Æneid, vi. 1294.

Though the forms and solemnities of the last judgment may bear some resemblance to those we are acquainted with here, yet the rule of proceeding shall be very different.—Bishop Atterbury.

3. Manner of acting awfully serious.

With much more skillful cruelty, and horrible solemnity, he caused each thing to be prepared for his triumph of tyranny.—Sir P. Sidney.

4. Gravity; steady seriousness.

The staidness and gravity of the Spaniards shows itself in the solemnity of their language.—Addison, Spectator.

5. Affected gravity.

Be this truth eternal never forgot,
Solemnity's a cover for a nod.

Junius, Lure of Fame, ii. 195.

This speech ended with a solemnity of accent.—Female Quixote.

Solemnization. s. Act of solemnizing; celebration.

Soon followed the solemnization of the marriage between Charles and Anne duchess of Bretagne, with whom he received the duchy of Bretagne.—Hume, History of the Reign of Henry VII.

Solemnize. v. a. [Fr. solemniser.]

1. Dignify by particular formalities; celebrate.

Dorlaus in a great battle was deprived of life; his obsequies being no more solemnized by the tears of his undertakers than the blood of his enemies.—Sir P. Sidney.

Baptism to be administered in one place, and marriage solemnized in another.—Hooker, Ecclesiastical Polity.

Then can they sprinkle all the parts with wine,
And made great feast to solemnize that day.

Spenser, Faerie Queene.

The multitude of the celestial host were heard to solemnize his miraculous birth.—Boyle, Seraphick Love.

Their choice nobility and flower Met from all parts to solemnize this feast.
Milton, Samson Agonistes, 1657.

2. Perform religiously once a year.

What remembrance the Jews had to celebrate their feast of dedication, is never spoken of in the law, yet solemnized even by our Saviour himself.—Hooker, Ecclesiastical Polity.

Solemnizer. s. One who solemnizes; one who performs a solemn rite or ceremony.

The second regard is of the solemnizer.—Dr. Clarke's Sermon, p. 518: 1637.

Solemnly. adv. In a solemn manner.

1. With annual religious ceremonies. Latinism.

2. With formal gravity and staidness; with affected gravity.

There are, in points of wisdom and sufficiency, that do nothing or little very solemnly.—Bacon, Essays.

The ministers of state, who gave us law,
In corners, with selected friends, withdraw;
There in deaf murmurs solemnly are wise,
Whispering like winds, ere hurricanes arise.

Dryden.

3. With due state or form. Latinism.

Let him land,
And solemnly see him set on to London.
Shakespeare, Henry V. v. chorus.

4. With religious seriousness.

To demonstrate how much men are blinded by their own partiality, I do solemnly assure the reader that he is the only person from whom I ever heard that objection.—Swift.

Solemnity. s. Attribute suggested by Sole.

France has an advantage over and above its abilities in the cabinet and the skill of its negotiators; which is (if I may use the expression) its solemn-continuity of riches and power within itself, and the nature of its government.—Lord Chesterfield.

Solemnity. s. State of being not connected or implicated with others; single state.

This ambition of a sole power... this dangerous solitude is a fruit in our church indeed.—*Sir E.
Dering, Speeches* p. 133.

Solicit. v. a. [Fr. soliciter; Lat. solicito.]

1. Importune; importune.

If you bethink yourself of any crime,
Unrepented as yet to heaven and grace,
Solicit for it straight.—Shakespeare, Othello, v. 2.

We heartily solicit
Your gracious will to take on you the charge
And kingly government of this your land.

Id., Richard III. iii. 7.

How he solicits heaven
Himself best knows; but strangely visited people,
The mere desirer of surgery, he cures.

Id., Macbeth, iv. 3.

Did I request thee, Maker! from my clay,
To mould me man? Did I solicit thee
From darkness to promote me?

Milton, Paradise Lost, x. 714.

The guardian of my faith so false did prove,
As to solicit me with lawless love.

Deffen, Aurengzebe, l. 1.

Call to action; summon; awake; excite.

Solicit Henry with her wood-rat's praise.

Shakespeare, Henry VI. Part 2, v. 3.

That fruit solicited her longing eye.

Milton, Paradise Lost, ix. 743.

Sounds and some tangible qualities solicit their proper senses, and force an entrance to the mind.—
Locke.

He is solicited by popular custom to indulge himself in forbidden liberties.—Rogers, Sermons.

3. Implore; ask.

With that she wept again, till he again soliciting the conclusion of her story, Then must you, said she, know the story of Amphitruus.—*Sir F.
Salem.*

4. Attempt; try to obtain

I do not long
To go a-foot yet, and solicit causes.

Reston and Fletcher, Captain.

I have been detained all this morning soliciting some business between the Treasury and our office.

—Sir R. North, Speeches, p. 123.

I view my crime, but kindly at the view,
Repeat old pleasures, and solicit new.

Pope, Eloisa to Abchurch.

5. Disturb; disquiet. Latinism.

Solicit not thy thoughts with matters hid.

Milton, Paradise Lost, viii. 167.

I find your love, and would reward it too;
But anxious fears solicit my weak breast.

Dryden, Spanish Friar, iii. 3.

Solicitation. s.

1. Importunity; act of importuning.

I can produce a man
Of female seed, far nobler to resist
All his solicitations, and at length
All his vast force, and drive him back to hell.

Milton, Paradise Regained, l. 120.

2. Invitation; excitement.

Children are surrounded with new things, which,
by a constant solicitation of their senses, draw the mind constantly to them.—Locke.

Solicitor. s. [Fr. soliciteur.]

1. One who importunes, or entreats.

He became, of a solicitor to corrupt her, a most devout exhorter, and a most earnest persuader, that she should all her life-days persevere in her most glorious profession of perpetual virginity.—Martin, Marriage of Priests, A. 4. 1334.

2. One who petitions for another.

Be merry, Cassio;
For thy solicitor shall rather die,
Than give thy cause away.

Shakespeare, Othello, iii. 3.

Honest minds will consider justly as a recompensation in the person who applies himself to them, and make the justice of his cause the most powerful solicitor in his behalf.—Addison.

3. One who does in Chancery the business which is done by attorneys in other courts.

For the king's attorney and solicitor general, their continual use for the king's service requires men every way fit.—Baron.

Solicitorship. s. Rank, or condition, of a solicitor.

Your good solicitorship and roguish Welborn
Were brought into her presence.

Mansinger, New Way to Pay Old Debts.

Solicitous. adj. [Lat. solicitus.] Anxious; careful; concerned: (it has commonly about before that which causes anxiety; sometimes for or of; for is proper before something to be obtained).

Our hearts are pure, when we are not solicitous of the opinions and censures of men, but only that we do our duty.—Jerrard Taylor.

The colour had been latent upon other things,
and not enough solicitous to finish the fortifications.
—Lord Clarendon, History of the Grand Rebellion.

In providing money for disbanding the army:
upon which they were unreasonably solicitous, the r.
arose a question.—Ibid.

They who were in truth zealous for the preservation of the laws, were solicitous to preserve the king's honour from any indignity, and his royal power from violation.—Ibid.

Land attended on his majesty, which he would have been excused from, if that design had not been in view, to accomplish which he was solicitous for his safety.—Ibid.

There kept their watch the legions, while the grand
In counsel sat, solicitous what chance Might intercept their emperor's wit.

Milton, Paradise Lost, x. 427.

Without sign of boast, or sign of joy,
Solicitous and blank, by thus bewail.

Id., Paradise Regained, ii. 119.

No man is solicitous about the event of that which he has in his power to dispose of.—South, Sermons.

You have not only been careful of my fortune, the effect of your nobleness, but you have been solicitous of my reputation, which is that of your kindness.—Dryden.

The tender dame, solicitous to know Whether her child should reach old age or no,
Consults the sage Thersias.

Addison, Translation from Ovid,

Transformation of Echo.

How lawful and praiseworthy is the care of a family! And yet how certainly are many people rendered incapable of all virtue, by a worldly solicitous temper.—Laure.

Solicitously. adv. In a solicitous manner; anxiously; carefully.

The medical art being conversant about the health and life of man, doctrinal errors in it are to be solicitously avoided.—Boght.

He would surely have as solicitously promoted their learning, as ever he obstructed it.—*Dr. H.
More, Decay of Christian Philosophy.*

Solicitor. s. Woman who petitions for another.

I had the most earnest solicitor, as well as the fairest; and nothing could be refused to my lady Hyde.—Dryden.

Solitude. s. [Fr.; Lat. solitude.] Anxiety; carefulness.

In this, by comparison, we behold the many cares and great labours of worldly men, their solitude and outward shows, and public ostentation, their pride and vanities.—Sir H. Keston.

If they would but provide for eternity with the same solitude, and real care, as they do for this life, they could not fail of heaven.—Archbishop of Tillison.

They are to be known by a wonderful solitude
for the reputation of their friends.—Tillot.

In the plural.

Mrs. Tolson looked a little worn by cares of gravity and other such solitudes arising out of her establishment, but displayed her usual earnestness and warmth of manner.—Dickens, Martin Chuzzlewit, ch. xxvii.

Solitudinous. adj. Full of solitude.

More circumspectly, not meticulously, and rather carefully solitudinous than anxiously solitudinous.
—Sir T. Browne, Christian Morals, sect. xxiii.
(ord MS.)

Solid. adj. [Lat. solidus; Fr. solide.]

1. Not liquid; not fluid.

Land that ever burn'd
With solid, as the lake with liquid fire.

Milton, Paradise Lost, l. 228.

2. Not hollow; full of matter; compact; dense.

Thin airy things extend themselves in place,
Things solid take up little space.

Locke.

I hear his thundering voice resound,
And trampling feet that shake the solid ground.

Dryden.

3. Having all the geometrical dimensions.

In a solid foot are 1728 solid inches, weighing 76 pound of rain water.—Arbuthnot, Tables of ancient Coins, Weights, and Measures.

4. Strong; firm.

The duke's new palace is a noble pile, built after this manner, which makes it look very solid and majestick.—Addison.

5. Sound; not weakly.

If persons devote themselves to science, they should be well assured of a solid and strong constitution of body, to bear the fatigue.—Watts, On the Improvement of the Mind.

6. Real; not empty; true; not fallacious.

The earth may of solid good contain
More plenty than the sun.

Milton, Paradise Lost, viii. 23.

7. Not light; not superficial; grave; pro- found.

These, wanting wit, affect gravity, and go by the name of solid men; and a solid man is, in plain English, a solid solemn fool.—Dryden.

Solid. s. Part containing the fluids.

The first and most simple solids of our body are perhaps merely terrestrial, and incapable of any change or disease.—Arbuthnot.

Solidarity. s. [Fr. solidarité.] Joint, or joint and separate, liability. (Of recent in- troduction and somewhat lax application in English; a political rather than a com- mercial term, the solidarity of nations re- presenting their mutual interests and re- sponsibilities.)

Solidate. v. a. Make firm or solid. Rare.

This shining piece of ice,
Which melts so soon away
With the sun's ray,
Thy verse does solidate and crystallize.

Croley.

Solidify. v. n. Grow solid; become com- pact.

For the preparation of lucilla these plants are dried in heaps like hay, and afterwards burnt upon a rude grate constructed over a large hole, into which the semillid tubular matter flows, and is there left to cool and solidify.—Brande and Cox, Dictionary of Science, Literature, and Art.

Solidity. s. [Fr. solidité.]

1. Firmness of matter; not hollowness.

Firmness; hardness; compactness; density; not fluidity.

That which hinders the approach of two bodies, when they are moving one towards another, I call solidity.—Locke.

The stone itself, whether naked or invested with earth, is not by its solidity secured, but washed down.—Woodward.

3. Truth; not fallaciousness; intellectual strength; certainty.

The most known rules are placed in so beautiful a light, that they have all the graces of novelty; and make the reader, who was before acquainted with them, still more convinced of their truth and solidity.
—Addison, Spectator.

His fellow-judges have attended to his eloquence, and have been convinced by the solidity of his reasoning.—Prior.

Solidly. adv. In a solid manner.

1. Firmly; densely; compactly.

Truly; on good grounds.

A complete brave man ought to know solidly the man and he is in the world for.—Sir K. Digby.

I look upon this as a sufficient ground for any rational man to take up his reason upon, and which I defy the subtletiest atheist in the world solidly to answer; namely, that it is good to be sure.—South, Sermons.

Solidness. s. Attribute suggested by Solid; solidity; firmness; density.

It beareth misfortune: the cause may be the closeness and solidness of the wood and path of the oak.— Lucan.

It is built with that manual solidness, that it seems he intended to make a sacrifice to perpetuity, and to contest with the iron teeth of time.—Hosell, Vocal Forest.

Solidungulous. adj. [Lat. solidus + ungula = hoof.] Whole-hoofed.

It is set down by Aristotle and Pliny, that an horse and all solidungulous or whole-hoofed animals have no tail, which we find repugnant unto reason.
—Sir T. Browne, Vulgar Errors.

Solifidian. s. [Lat. solus + fides = faith.]

One who supposes only faith, not works, necessary to justification.

979

It may be justly feared, that the title of Solidism, being ordinarily confined to the doctrine of faith, hath occasioned that great scandal in the church of God, at which so many myriads of solidists have stumbled, and fallen irreversibly, by conceiving heaven a reward of true opinions.—Hawmond.

Solidism. adj. Professing the tenets of a solidism.

A solidist Christian is a nullifidian pagan, and confutes his tongue with his hand.—Erasmus, Resolves, ii. 47.

Solidism. s. Tenets of solidists.

Such is his discourse of justification by faith without works, which runs throughout the epistle; which was aimed, even in the apostolic age, to a dangerous kind of solidism by the Gnostick heretics.—Bishop Bull, Works, iii. 880.

Soliloquize. v. n. Utter a soliloquy.

Soliloquy. s. [Fr. soliloque; Lat. solus + loquor = I speak.] Discourse made by one in solitude to himself.

The whole poem is a soliloquy; Solomon is the person that speaks; he is not once the hero and the author; but he tells us very often what others say to him.—Prior, Solomon, preface.

He finds no respite from his anxious grief, Then seeks from his soliloquy relief.

If I should own myself in love, you know lovers are always allowed the comfort of soliloquy.—Spenser.

Soliped. s. [Lat. pes, pedis = foot.] Animal whose hoofs are not cloven; solidungulous animal.

Solipeds, or firm-footed animals, as horses, asses, and mules, are in mighty number.—Sir T. Browne, Vulgar Errors.

Solitaire. s. [Fr.]

1. Recluse; hermit.
Often have I been due to take possession of tranquility, when your conversation has spoiled me for a solitaire.—Pope.

2. Ornament for the neck.

Before a solitaire, behind A twisted ribbon.

She wears him now in sash and solitaire March in review with Milo's strut and stare.

Needle, Lullaby of Juvenal, p. 70.

3. In Ornithology. Extinct brevipedate (short-winged) bird akin to the Dodo; Didus solitarius, or Pezophaps solitaria.

I now proceed to notice another bird of equally remarkable structure to the Dodo, and the evidence, both historical and osteological, of whose existence, though less abundant, is equally positive. The Island of Rodriguez... gave birth to an apterous bird called the solitaire, which seems to have been an homologous representative of the Dodo in the Mauritius. The name solitaire had been given to an allied, though doubtless distinct bird in Bourbon... Legend... probably supposed the Rodriguez bird to be the same, and therefore gave it the name which other voyagers had imposed on the Bourbon bird. But as Legend's bird is the type of the Didus solitarius of systematists, I prefer retaining for it 'per excellence' the name of solitaire.—H. Strickland, The Dodo and its Kindred.

Solitarian. s. Hermit; solitary.

This man gathered together all the dispersed monks and other solitarians of Italy, so that in a short time he had no less than twelve monasteries about him.—Sir R. Twiss, Monastic Life, p. 8.

Solitarly. adv. In a solitary manner; in solitude; with loneliness; without company.

How should that subside solitarly by itself, which hath no substance, but individually the very same whereby others subsist with it?—Hooker, Ecclesiastical Polity.

Feed thy people with thy rod, the flock of thine herbage, which dwell solitarly in the wood.—Micaiah, vii. 14.

Solitariness. s. Attribute suggested by Solitary; solitude; forbearance of company; habitual retirement.

There is no cause to blame the prince for sometimes hearing them; the blame-worthiness is, that to hear them he rather goes to solitariness than makes them come to company.—Sir P. Sidney.

You subject yourself to solitariness, the ally enemy that doth most separate a man from well-doing.—Id. At home in wilderness solitariness, My piteous soul began the wretchedness Of solitude at the court to mourn. Donne.

Neither did Kearton betray the air of the married man; for ineffable solitariness seemed stamped upon one whose private life had long been so stern a solitude.—Lord Lytton, My Novel, b. xi. ch. xiii.

Solitary. adj. [F. solitaire; Lat. solitarius.]

1. Living alone; not having company.

Those rare and solitary, these in flocks.

Milton, Paradise Lost, vii. 461.

2. Retired; remote from company; done or passed without company.

In respect that it is solitary, I like it very well; but in respect that it is private, it is a very vile life.

—Shakespeare, As you like it, iii. 2.

Satan explores his solitary flight.

Milton, Paradise Lost, ii. 632.

His fair Lavinia, thy surviving wife,

Shall breed in groves to lead a solitary life.

Dryden, Translation of the Æneid, vi. 1037.

3. Gloomy; dismal.

Let that night be solitary, let no joyful voice come therein.—Job, iii. 7.

4. Single.

Nor did a solitary vengeance serve; the cutting off one head is not enough; the eldest son must be involved.—Eikon Basilike.

Relations alternately relieve each other, their mutual concurrences supporting their solitary instabilities.—Sir T. Browne.

Solitaire. s.

1. One that lives alone; hermit.

You describe so well your hermitical state of life, that none of the ancient anchorites could go beyond you, for a cave, with a spring, or any of the accommodations that befit a solitaire.—Pope, Letters.

2. In Ornithology. Solitaire.

Of all the birds in the island the most remarkable is that which goes by the name of the solitaire, because it is very seldom seen in company, though there are abundances of them. The feathers of the males are of a brown ery colour; the feet and beak are like a turkey's, but a little more crooked. They have scarcely any tail, but their hind-part covered with feathers is roundish, like the erupier of a bee... They never fly; their wings are too little to support their bodies; they only serve to lean themselves, and flutter when they call one another... The dates of the plantane are larger than those of the palm-tree. Having abundance of better things to feed on, fish, and flesh, fruits, &c., we left the dates for the turtles and other birds, particularly the solitaires.... The [sea-fowl] lay three times a year, and but one egg at a time, like the solitaires.... My mouth confesses from the abundance of my heart.

That my soul is touched with sorrow Now I am about to leave thy wholesome air, Thy good palm wine, thy excellent melons, Thy solitaires, thy laurentines, Thy hills always verdant, The clear water of thy rivers, Thy fruitful and smiling sun, And all thy innocent and rare delight.

Translation of Voyageur's Account de François Leguat 1720.

Solitude. s. [Fr.; Lat. solitudo.]

1. Lonely life; state of being alone.

It had been hard to have put more truth and untruth together, in few words, than in that speech; whosoever is delighted with solitude, is either a wild beast or a zeal. Lucan.

What couldst thou think of solitude? Is not the earth With various living creatures, and the air. Replenish'd, and all these at thy command To come, and play before thee?

Milton, Paradise Lost, viii. 269.

Such only can enjoy the country who are capable of thinking when they are there; then they are prepared for solitude, and in that solitude is prepared for them.—Dryden.

2. Loneliness; remoteness from company.

The solitude of his little parish is become matter of great comfort to him, because he hopes that God has placed him and his flock there, to make it their way to heaven.—Laur.

3. Lonely place; desert.

In these deep solitudes, and awful cells, Where heavenly-jessive contemplation dwells.

Pope, Eloisa to Abelard.

Solivagant. adj. [Lat. solivagus.] Wandering about alone.

A description of the impure drudge: ... that is to say, a solivagant or solitary vagrant.—Grainger, Commentary on Ecclesiastes, p. 99: 1823.

Sollar. s. [L. Lat. sollarium; N. Fr. sollier.]

Upper room; loft; garret.

Some skillfully drieth their lozes on a kel, And some on a sollar, oft turning them wel.

Tusser, Five Hundred Points of Good Husbandry.

Stones steps that led to the solar or chamber.—A. Wood, Annals of the University of Oxford: an. 1250.

Solmisiation. s. Solfining.

Shakespeare shows by the context, that he was well acquainted with the property of these syllables [sasol. la, mi.] in solmisiation, which imply a series of sounds so unnatural, that ancient musicians prohibited their use.—Dr. Harvey, Note on Shakespeare's King Lear.

Solo. s. [Italian.] Tune played by a single instrument; air sung by a single voice.

There is not a labourer or handicraftsman that, in the end of the evening, does not relieve himself with a solo and somnus.—Feller, iii. 232.

It were to be wished, that in our established church extempore playing were as much discountenanced as extempore praying; and that the organist was as closely obliged, in this solo and separate part of his office, to keep to set forms, as the collecting minister.—Mason, Three Essays on Church Music, p. 108.

Solomon's-seal. s. In Botany. Plant, akin to the lily of the valley, of the genus Convallaria (polygamium).

Even in Europe the young shoots of Polygonatum (Solomon's seal) and others, have been substituted for squarung. Linnaeus, Vegetable Kingdom.

Solstice. s. [Fr.; Lat. solstitium.]

1. Point beyond which the sun does not go; tropical point; point at which the day is longest in summer, or shortest in winter.

2. Summer solstice.

The sun, ascending into the northern sign, begetteth first a temperate heat in the air, which by its approach unto the solstice he intendeth, and by continuation increaseth the same even upon declination.—Sir T. Browne, Vulgar Errors.

Let the plowmen's prayer Be for most solstices, and winters fair.

Mary, Translation of Virgil.

Solstitial. adj.

1. Belonging to the solstice.

Observing the day-days, two days before and after the equinoctial and solstitial points, by this observation alone, are exempted a hundred days.—Sir T. Browne, Vulgar Errors.

2. Happening at the solstice, or at Midsummer.

From the north to call Deeregot Winter; from the south to bring Solstitial Summer's heat.

The fields labour'd with thirst; Aquarius had not shed His wanted showers, and Sirius parch'd with heat Solstitial the green herbes. J. Philips, Cyder, l. 188.

Soluble. adj. [Lat. solubilis.]

1. Capable of dissolution or separation of parts.

Sugar is a sal oleum, being soluble in water and fusible in fire.—Arbuthnot, On the Nature and Choice of Aliments.

2. Producing laxity; relaxing.

Solubility. s. Capability of being dissolved; susceptibility of separation of parts.

This cannot account for the indissoluble edginess of some bodies, and the fragility and solubility of others.—Chaurde.

Solus. adj. [Lat.] Alone; (used in stage directions).

Will you shoo off? I would have you solus.

But now... she herself this way a bit. I would have you solus. They leaped over the tuffard, while Hance whispered with more seriousness than he usually showed.—Sir W. Scott, The Pirate, ch. xxviii.

Solète. adj. [Lat. solutus.] Loose; discursive. Rurr.

As to the interpretation of the scriptures solus and alors, there have been divers kinds introduced and devised; some of them rather curious and unsafe than sober and warranted.—Bacon, On the Advancement of Learning. (1603 M.)

Solution. s. [Fr.; Lat. solutio, solutus.]

1. Disruption; breach; disjunction; separation.

In all bodies there is an appetite of union, and evitment of solution or continuity.—Bacon, Natural and Experimental History.

2. Matter dissolved; that which contains anything dissolved.

Arcturus, to procure sleep, recommends a solution of opium in water to foment the forehead.—Arbuthnot, Tables of ancient Coins, Weights, and Measures.

When salt of tartar 'per deliquium' poured into the solution of any metal, precipitates the metal, and makes it fall down to the bottom of the liquor in the form of mud, does not then argue, that the acid particles are attracted more strongly by the salt of tartar than by the metal, and by the stronger attraction go from the metal to the salt of tartar.—Sir I. Newton, Opticks.

3. Resolution of a doubt; removal of an intellectual difficulty.

Something got of doubt remains,
Which only thy solution can resolve.

Milton, Paradise Lost, viii. 13.

They give the reins to wandering thoughts,
Fill, by their own perplexities involved,
They revel more, still less resolved,
But never find self-satisfying solution.

Id., Sonnet on Agonistes, 383.

With hope and fear
The woman did the new solution hear;
The man diffides in his own hurry,
And doubts.

Dryden, Translation from Ovid,

Metamorphoses, l. i.

This will instruct you to give a plainer solution of any difficulties that may attend the theme, and refute objections. Watts.

4. Release; deliverance; discharge.

A deliverance out of any state or power is called solution.—Barrow, On the Power of the Keys.

SOLUTIVE. adj. [Fr. solutif.] Laxative; causing relaxation.

Though it would not be an abstergent, opening, and solutive as meal, yet it will be more lenitive in sharp diseases.—Boisson.

SOLUBLE. adj. Possible to be cleared by inquiry or reason; capable of being paid;
(the latter is the French meaning; soluble seems a more correct spelling than solui- ble; so, ra soluble).

For soluble and solvable we might say solvent and apparent.—H. Tucker, Dissertations of Poetry, ii.
381.

SOLVE. v. a. [Lat. solvere = loose, liberate, pay.] Clear; explain; untie an intellectual knot.

He, she knew, would intermix
Grateful discussions, and solve high dispute
With conjugal caresses.

Milton, Paradise Lost, viii. 51.

The limiting of the realm only to christian princes did rather divide and perplex the cause than any way solve it.—Lisle.

On thou, my soul, the destined period wait,
When God shall solve the dark decrees of fate;
His now unequal dispensations clear,
And make all wise and beautiful appear. Tickell.
It is more trifling to raise objections, merely for the sake of answering and solving them.—Watts.

SOLVENCY. s. Ability to pay.

They see the debtor prescribing at the point of the bayonet the medium of his solvency to the creditor.—Hurke.

SOLVENT. adj. [Lat. solvens, -entis; pres.
part. of solvere.]

1. Having the power to cause dissolution.

When dissolved in water, it is not by the eye distinguishable from the solvent body, and appears as fluid.—Boyle.

2. Able to pay debts contracted.

The man died in the King's Bench, and was not solvent at. Hackett, Life of Archbishop Williams, p.
267: 1683.

SOLUBLE. adj. Soluble; Solvable. Rare.

Intellective memory I call an act of the intellect-ive faculty, because it is wrought by it, though I do not inquire how or where, because it is not soluble.
—Sir M. Hale, Originibus of Manhood.

SOMATIC. adj. [Gr. somatos, from soma,
-atos = body.] Connected with, relating to,
constituted by, the body.

The death of the body as a whole, which may appropriately be termed somatic death, becomes a necessary consequence of the death of a certain part of it, or molecular death, only when the cessation of activity in the latter interferes with the elaboration, the circulation, or the depuration of the blood, which supplies not merely the nutritive medium in every part of the organism, but also the oxygen which is essential to the activity of the nervous-muscular apparatus. . . . This term (somatic) was first suggested by Dr. Pritchard, in the place of the less accurate term systemic, which was previously in use.—Dr.
 Carpenter, Principles of Human Physiology, s. 1063 and note.

Has insanity a centrifugal or a centripetal, a subjective or an objective origin? In less technical physiology, do the disordered ideas of the insane depend upon central causes of irritation and disease operating from within to without, or are they the consequences of eccentric or objective influences, acting from without to within. . . . Is insanity an affection of the mind 'per se'? Has the disease a psychical or a somatic origin? Is it possible for thought in the abstract to be diseased?—Dr. Forbes Winflow, Obscure Diseases of the Brain and Mind,
ch. iii.

SOMBRE. adj. [Fr.] Gloomy.

In Hackley you were seen
With bloodshot eyes and sombre mien.
Quainger, Ode to Solitude.

The dinner was silent and sombre; happily it was also short. Lord Marney tasted several dishes, ate of none; found fault with his own elixir, though the latter had given him a choice bottle; praised Lord Mowbray's, wondered when he got it.—R.
Thackeray, Sybil, l. i. ch. ii.

The evening grew more dull every moment, and a melancholy wind sounded through the deserted fields, like a distant giant whistling for his house-dog. The sadness of the scene impinged a sombre tint to the feelings of Mr. Winkle. He started as they passed the angle of the trench: it looked like a colossal grave.—Dickens, Pickwick Papers, ch. ii.

SOMBRE. adj. Sombre.

A sombre richness of expression.—Warburton,
Doctrine of Grace, l. 75.

A certain uniform strain of sombre gravity.—T.
Warton, History of English Poetry, iii. 171.

SOME. pron. [A.S. sum.]1. More or less, noting an indeterminate quantity.

We landed some hundred men, where we found some fresh water.—Sir W. Raleigh.

2. More or fewer, noting an indeterminate number.

Let me now leave some of the folk that are with me.—Chaucer, xxxiii. 15.

First go with me some few of you, and see the place, and how it may be made convenient for you, and then send for your sick.—Shakespeare,

3. Certain persons: (often used absolutely for some people: part).

Some to the shores do fly,
Some to the woods, or whither fear advised;

But running from, all to destruction hie. Daniel,
Not in the neighbouring main, as some have dream'd. Milton, Paradise Lost, iii. 459.

Your edicts some reprove from sin,
But most your life and best example win.

Dryden, Astræa Rediviva, 311.

Opposed to some, or to others.

It may be that the queen's treasure, in so great but being paid as it is, now some, and then some, it is no great impoverishment to her coffers.—Spenser,
View of the State of Ireland.

4. It is added to a number, to show that the number is uncertain and conjectural.

Being encountered with a strong storm some eight leagues to the westward of Scilly, I held it the office of a commander to make a port.—Sir W. Lambton.

At the higher end of a creek Millbrook lurketh two hills, a village of some eighty houses.—
Carew, Survey of Cornwall.

Old men's spirits usual, contrary to those of ju-vilitud men, unite not, but when the object is at some good distance.—Harmon.

Sir Edward Poling, after he had continued at Shirley some good while, returned unto the king, then before Balaune.—Id.

The number slain at the rebels' part were some two thousand. Id.

They have no black men amongst them, except some few which dwell on the seacoast.—Hepburn.

He bore away the prize, to the admiration of some hundreds.—Johnson.

Your good-intended gods, they say,
Descent some twice or three a-day.

Prior, The Ladies, 15.

Paint, patches, jewels laid aside,
At night astronomers were,
The evening has the day body'd,
And Phylis is some forty-three.

Id., Phyllis's Age.

5. One; any without determining which.

The pilot of some small night-fighter's skill.
Milton, Paradise Lost, i. 704.

6. Sometimes in Logic it is equivalent to all.

Remember that some does not guarantee more than one. There is small distinction between none (no one) as the logical

(no one) and nothing as the limit of some quantity.
In passing from the proposition, 'no man can live without air,' to 'there is one man at least who can live without air,' we make a transition which alters the notions or concepts attached to man; the word man no longer represents entirely the same idea.
But in passing from an indeterminate of apprehensiveness with no premium at all, to one with a premium of one farthing, we make no change of notion. An Act was once passed exempting such indentures from duty when the premium was under five pounds sterling. The Court of King's Bench held that the exemption did not apply when there was no premium at all, because 'no premium at all' is not a premium under five pounds. That is, the judges gave to nothing as the terminus of continuous quantity the force of none, as the logical contrary of some; and violated to the utmost the principle of the Act, which was intended as a relief to those who could only pay small premiums, and 'a fortiori,' or rather 'a fortissimo,' to those who could pay none at all. Lawyers ought to be much of logicians and something of mathematicians. Some may be All. In common language this is or is not the case, according to the speaker's state of knowledge. But in Logic there are no implications which depend upon the matter. When a logician says that every X is Y, he means that all the X's are some Y's, and that some Y's are all the X's. Whether he have or have not exhausted all the Y's, he does not here profess to state, even if he knew. Again, when he says

'some X's are Y's,' he does not mean to imply 'all X's are not Y's'; that is, his some may be all, for anything he asserts to the contrary. But when two propositions, each of which contains the vague some, are conjoined, the mere meaning may render the conjunction an absurdity, such as some take the force of all. Just as in algebra, an equation, having two unknown quantities, has the values of those quantities vague; but when two such equations are conjoined, these values become definite: so in Logic, in which the same thing occurs. Thus, the two propositions: all X's are some Y's, and all Y's are some X's, when true together, force the inference that some must in both cases be all. Forget that some is that which may be all, and these two propositions appear to contradict one another; very distinguished logicians have asserted that they do.—
Dr. Morgan, Syllogisms of a Proposed System of Logic, § 14.

SOMEBODY. *s.*1. One; not nobody; person indiscriminate and undetermined.

Jesus said, Somebody hath touched me; for I perceive that virtue is gone out of me.—Luke, viii. 12.

That Sir John were come, he would make this a bloody day to somebody.—Shakespeare, Henry IV.

Part II. v. 1.

If there be a tacit league, it is against somewhat or somebody; who should they be? Is it against wild beasts? No, it is against such rants and shocks of people as have utterly degenerated from the laws of nature.—Bacon.

If he had not done it when he did, somebody else might have done it for him. Hopkins.

We must draw in somebody, that may stand Twist us and danger. Sir J. In Olm, The Sophy.

The hopes that what he has must come to some- body, and that he has to live, have that effect, that he has every day three or four invitations.—Addi- son, Spectator.

Person of consideration.

Before these days rose up Theudas, boasting himself to be somebody.—Acts, v. 36.

SOMEDIAL. adv. [A.S. sumdæl; dæl=part.]
In some degree. Obsolete.

Siker now I see them speak of spite.

All for thou lackest some due their delight. Spenser.

SOMEHOW. adv. One way or other; I know not how.

The vascular cells may be for receiving the arterial and nervous juices, that by their action upon one another they may be excited somehow, so as to shorten the length of every fibril. Ch. Gray.

'Good, my lady!' said somebody, looking after her,
and biting a piece of straw, almost to powder;
'you'll catch it for this when you are married!'
It's all very well now, it keeps and you know it—but I'll pay you off now and be by and bye.—Dickens, Martin Chuzzlewit, ch. xiv.

SOMERSAULT. s. Leap by which a jumper throws himself from a height, and turns over his head.

He could do
The vaulter's somerset. Donne, Poems, p. 310.

As when some boy, trying the somerset, Stands on his head and feet, as he did he
To kick against earth's squar'd canopy.

W. Browne, Britannia's Progress, l. i. song iii.

SOMERSET. s. [Fr. somersault.] Current form of Somersault.

Now I'll only
Take him break his neck in doing a somersault.

And that's all the revenge I mean to take of him.
De Witt, and Fletcher, Fair Maid of the Inn.

He landed the world turned round with him, and that the revolution was just about doing the somers- et.—Account of T. W. Kemp, Esq., p. 2: 1710.

Here, the goblin gave a loud shrill laugh, which the echoes returned twenty-fold; and throwing his legs up in the air, stood upon his head, or rather upon the very point of his sugar-loaf hat, on the narrow edge of the tomb-stone; whence he threw a somerset with extraordinary agility, right to the execution's feet, at which he planted himself in the attitude in which tailors generally sit upon the shop-board.—Dickens, Pickwick Papers, ch. xix.

SOMETHING. *s.*1. Thing existing, though it appears not what; thing or matter indeterminate.

When fierce Ravaar on Judogun's spacious plain Did start the British chief behold,

Between despair and rage, and hope and pain,
Something within his warlike bosom roil'd.

Prior, Ode to Queen Anne.

The force of the air upon the pulmonary artery is but small, in respect of that of the heart; but it is still something.—Arbuthnot, On the Nature and Choice of Aliments.

You'll say the whole world has something to do, something to talk of, something to wish for, and something to be employed about; but pray put all these somethings together, and what is the sum total but just nothing?—Pope, Letters.

Here she beholds the chaos dark and deep, Where nameless somethings in their crimes sleep.
Id., Drucal, l. 55.

2. More or less; not nothing.

Something yet of doubt remains.
Milton, Paradise Lost, viii, 13.
Years following years steal something every day, At last they steal us from ourselves away.
Pope, Imitations of Horace, l. ii, ep. ii.

Still from his little he could something square, To feed the hungry, and to clothe the bare, Harte.

3. Thing wanting a fixed denomination.

Something between a cottage and a cell— Yet virtue here could sleep, and peace could dwell.
Harte.

4. Part.

Something of it arises from our infant state.—Watts.

SOMETHING, adv. In some degree; somewhat.

I will acquaint you with the perfect age of the time for 't must be done to-night, and something from the palace.—Shakespeare, Much Ado, iii, 1.

The pain went away upon it; but he was something discommoded by a new pain falling some days after upon his elbow, on the other side.—Sir W. Temple.

SOMETIME, adv.

1. Once; formerly.

What art thou that usurp'd this time of night, Together with that fair and warlike form, In which the majesty of buried Denmark Did sometime march?—Shakespeare, Hamlet, i, 1.
Good sometime queen, prepare these bones for France.
Id., Richard II, v, 1.

2. At one time or other hereafter.

SOMETIMES, adv. [the genitive, not the plural of time]

1. Not never; now and then; at one time or other.

It is good that we sometimes be contradicted, and that we always hear it well; for perfect peace cannot be had in this world.—Jeremy Taylor.

2. At one time; (opposed to sometimes, or to another time).

He does not always at a piece, but sometimes mixes trivial things with those of greater merit; as anybody also, though not often, he runs in and knows not when he has said enough.—Dryden, Tiber and Eridanus, preface.

SOMEWHAT, s.

1. Something; not nothing, though it be uncertain what.

Upon the sea somewhat methought did rise, Like lightning mists.—Dryden, Indian Emperor, l. 2.
He that shuts his eyes against a small light, on purpose to avoid the sight of somewhat that displeases him, would, for the same reason, shut them against the sun.—Bishop Atterbury.

2. More or less.

Concerning every of these, somewhat Christ both commanded, which must be kept till the world's end; on the contrary side, in every of these somewhat there may be added, as the church judges it expedient.—Hooker, Reformation of Policy.

These salts have somewhat of a bitter taste, but mixt with a stomach of vitriolick.—Grew.

3. Part; greater or less.

Somewhat of his good sense will suffer in this transposition, and much of his beauty of his thoughts will be lost.—Dryden.

SOMEWHAT, adv. In some degree.

The flowers of amies, Lycopodium, that somewhat cool grow.—Chaucer.
Holding of the breath doth help somewhat to cease the hiccough.—Bacon, Natural and Experimental History.

He is somewhat arrogant at his first entrance, and is too inquisitive through the whole; yet these imperfections kinder not our compassion.—Dryden.

SOMEWHERE, adv. In one place or other; not nowhere.

Hopeless and forlorn They are return'd, and somewhere live obscurely.
Sir J. Denham.

Compressing two primes hard together, that their sides, which by chance were a very little convex, might somewhere touch one another, I found the place in which they touched to become absolutely transparent, as if they had there been an continued piece of glass.—Sir I. Newton, On Opticks.
Does something still, and somewhere yet remain, Award or punishment?
Prior, Solomon, iii, 500.

Of the dead we must speak gently; and therefore, as Mr. Dryden says somewhere, Peace be to its names.—Pope.

SOMEWHERE, s. [A.S. som hwile; hwile = time.] Once; for a time.

Though under colour of the shepherds somewhere, There crept in wolves full of fraud and guile, That often devoured their own sheep, And often the shepherd that did 'em keep.
Spenser, Shepherd's Calendar.

SOMNAMBULATE, v. n. [Lat. somnus = sleep; ambulo = I walk.] Walk in one's sleep; dream or wander, as a somnambulist.

It is the bright May month; his eminence again somnambulating the Promenade de la Rose, ... But all this time how fares it with his eminence, left somnambulating the Promenade de la Rose, and at times impenetrably stuporous?—Carlyle, Critical and Miscellaneous Essays, The Diamond Necklace, ch. xiv.

SOMNAMBULISM, s. Sleep walking.

The Jacobins are lazier; but their work is not; it is unimpaired by the loss of the world, as it can. It might be seen lately, for instance, with barrel organ and death-deafening eye, as far as as Greek Mosadonid, strummed enough, did slumbering hollow was resuscitated, into somnambulism which will become clear wakefulness, by a voice from the Rue St. Honore!—Carlyle, French Revolution, pt. ii, l. i, ch. v.

The phenomenon of somnambulism ... occurs in a state of consciousness so far distinct from the ordinary waking condition, as not to be connected with it by the ordinary link of memory. ... In either of these extreme forms of somnambulism (natural and artificial), and in the numerous intermediate phases which connect the two, the consciousness seems entirely given up to the one impression which is operating upon it at the time; so that whilst the attention is exclusively directed upon any object, whether actually perceived by the senses, or brought suggestively before the mind by previous ideas, nothing else is felt. Thus there may be complete insensibility to bodily pain, the somnambulist's whole attention being given to what is passing in his mind. ... So, again, when the attention of the somnambulist is fixed upon a certain train of thought, whatever may be spoken in harmony with this, is heard and appreciated, but what has no relation to it, or is in discordance with it, is disregarded.—Dr. Carpenter, Principles of Human Physiology, § 87; 1853.

SOMNAMBULIST, s. One who walks in his sleep.

The somnambulist directs himself with unerring certainty through the most intricate windings, and over the most dangerous precipices; and, with all apparent assistance from the organs of sense, has been known to read, write, and compose.—Bishop Porteus, Sermons; 1789.
(See, also, under Somnambulism.)

SOMNER, s. Summoner: (this latter being the commoner word: Sommer and Sumner, however, are current as proper names. Another form of this word is Summers; upon which the remark has been made that those proper names which seem to be derived from the seasons are only so in appearance. Spring is a topographical term and Winter—Vintner; Autumn, being nonexistent.)

We are desirous to redress such abuses and grievances, as are said to grow by somners or sumnerers.—Constitutional and Canonical Ecclesiastical, § 158.

SOMNIFEROUS, adj. [Lat. somnifer; somnus = sleep; fero = I bear.] Causing sleep; procuring sleep; somniferous; dormitive.

They ascribe all this redundant melancholy to somniferous potions.—Barton, Anatomy of Melancholy, p. 30.

I wish for some somniferous potion that might force me to sleep away the intermediate time as it does with men in sorrow.—J. Walton, Complete Angler.

SOMNOLENCE, s. [Lat. somnulentia.] Tendency to fall asleep; sleepiness; drowsiness.

Somnolence after meals is a singular sign of a weak digestion.—Dr. Mason Good, Signs of Medicine.

SOMNOLENT, adj. Sleepy; drowsy.

He is invincibly somnolent.—Laub, Letter to Coleridge.

SON, s. [A.S. sunu.]

1. Male horn of one or begotten by one; correlative to father or mother.

Cast out this bond-woman and her son.—Genesis, xxi, 10.

She had a son for her errand, ere she had a husband for her bed.—Shakespeare, King Lear, i, 1.

He compares the affection of the Divine Being to the indulgence of a wise father, who would have his sons exercised with labour and pain, that they may gather strength.—Addison.

2. Descendant, however distant: (as, 'the sons of Adam').

I am the son of the wise, the son of ancient kings.—Isaiah, xiv, 11.

3. Compellation of an old to a young man, or of a confessor to his penitent.

Be plain, good son, and honestly in thy drift; Riddling confession finds but riddling shrift.
Shakespeare, Romeo and Juliet, ii, 3.

4. Native of a country.

Britain then Sees arts her savage sons enchain.—Pope.

5. Second person of the Trinity.

If thou be the Son of God, come down.—Matthew, xvii, 40.

6. Product of anything.

Our imperfections prompt our corruption, and badly tell us we are sons of earth.—Sir T. Browne, Vulgar Errors.

The rest of my forced ten centuries Were sons of earth like him, or sons of whales.
Dryden, Translation of Persius, vi, 139.

Earth's tall sons, the cedar, oak, and pine, Their parent's undecaying strength declare.
Sir R. Blackmore.

7. In scripture (as in sons of pride, and sons of light), denoting some quality.

This new favourite Of Heaven, this man of clay, son of despite,
Milton, Paradise Lost, ix, 173.

SON-IN-LAW, s. One married to one's daughter.

If virtue be outweighed beauty lack, Your son-in-law is far more fair than black.
Shakespeare, Othello, i, 3.

A foreign son-in-law shall come from far, (Such is our doom), a chief renown'd in war, Whose name shall tower aloft the Latin name.
Dryden, Translation of the Æneid, vii, 371.

SONATA, s. [Italian.] Musical composition, strictly for a single instrument, but sometimes applied to compositions for more than one.

He whistled a Scotch tune, and an Italian sonata.—Addison, Spectator.

Could Pedro, think you, make no trial Of a sonata on his viol, Unless he had the fiddle out, Whence every string at first was cut?

This Preface [of Purcell] was written a year after the death of Charles II. and preloved to a set of sonatas. Mason, Essay, Historical and Critical, on English Church Music.

Sonata ... at present ... is confined to solos for a single instrument; as Corelli's solos for the violin, Martini's solos for the German flute, and three or four compositions in three parts, for two violins and a basso, &c. But which in the body of these works are all called sonatas.—Ross, Cyclopaedia.

Sonata in music [is] an instrumental composition, usually containing three movements, an adagio, a slow movement, and a rondo. Modern sonata is generally for one or two instruments only, as for the pianoforte, or for the piano and violin.—Reisch and Gae, Dictionary of Science, Literature, and Art.

SONG, s. [A.S.]

1. Anything modulated in the utterance.

Noise other than the sound of dunes and soap.—Milton, Paradise Lost, vii, 245.

He first thinks fit no sonnetter advance His course further than the song or dance.
Dryden.

2. Poem to be modulated by the voice.

In her days every man shall sing The merry songs of peace to all his neighbours.
Shakespeare, Henry VIII, v, 1.

3. Lay; strain.

The bard that first adorn'd our native tongue, Tuned to his British lyre this ancient song.
Dryden, Epistle, To the Duchess of Ormond.

There we while will rest; Our next ensuing song to wondrous things address.
Dryden.

4. Poetry; poesy.

This subject for heroic song pleased me.
Milton, Paradise Lost, ix, 25.

Names memorable long, If there be force in virtue or in song.
Pope.

5. Notes of birds.

The lark, the messenger of day, Saluted in her song the morning grey.
Dryden.

AN OLD SONG, Trifle.

I do not intend to be thus put off with an old song.—Dr. H. More.
A hopeful youth, newly advanced to great honour, was forced by a cobbler to resign all for an old song.—Addison.

songish. adj. Containing songs; consisting of songs. Rare.

The songish part must abound in the softness and variety of numbers, its intention being to please the hearing. — Dryden.

songster. s. [See under Spinster.] Singer.

The pretty songsters of the spring, with their various notes, did seem to welcome him as he passed. — Hawell.

Some songsters can no more sing in any chamber but their own, than some clerks read in any book but their own. — Sir R. L. Estlin.

Either songster huddling out their throats, And folding up their wings, renew'd their notes. — Dryden, The Flower and the Leaf, 449.

songstress. s. [See under Spinster.]

Female singer.

Through the soft silence of the listening night, The sober-suited songstress trills her lay. — Thomson, Seasons, Summer.

Here the poet availed himself of an opportunity of paying a just compliment to the voice and skill of a real songstress. — Warton, Notes on Milton's Smaller Poems.

soniferous. adj. [Lat. sonus = sound + fero = I bear.] Giving or bringing sound.

This is a word which it will, either the atmosphere, or the ethereal part thereof, or soniferous particles of bodies. — Berlin.

sonnet. s. [Fr.; Italian, sonnetto.]

1. Short poem consisting of fourteen lines, of which the rhymes are adjusted by a particular rule.

It is known by adepts that the sonnet is composed of two quatrains and two tercets, and that this form, most frequently contained in four rhymes, never admit more than five. Adepts find an harmonious grace in its peculiar cut or division; in its two quatrains which, on similar rhymes, exhibit the subject and prepare the audience; in its two tercets, which by a more rapid movement, sweep the excited expectations, complete the image, and satisfy the natural emotion. The sonnet, essentially musical, essentially founded on the harmony of the sounds, the music of which it bears, acts on the heart much more by the words than by the thought; the richness, the plenitude of rhymes, constitute a part of its grace. The recurrence of the same sounds makes an impression so much the more forcible in proportion to its being more repeated and more complete; the reader is astonished at finding himself moved, without almost being able to say what has contributed to cause his natural emotion. . . . Preceding here to give a particular account of mechanism of the Italian sonnet, which is not l'usage, or par excellence, the sonnet, it is to be observed that all other kinds, whatever be the reputation which they possess or deserve, are not entitled to the appellation. They are irregular in their structure, and rather resemble a maze with richness than an elegantly arranged garden; and are certainly devoid of that systematic form which constitutes the delicacy and beauty, and even essence, of the sonnet. The mechanism, then, for the Italian sonnet is the following: — The quatrains which form the first eight verses or lines, ought to be in two different rhymes, which may be arranged in three different manners: in the first, which is the most used; the first line rhymes with the fourth, the fifth, and the eighth; the second, with the third, the sixth, and the seventh; in the second, the first line rhymes with the third, the fourth, sixth, and eighth; in the third, the first line rhymes with the third, the sixth, and eighth; the second, with the fourth, the fifth, and seventh. With regard to the six lines of the two tercets, there are also three sorts of arrangement; the lines of the first tercet, in the first instance, being in three different rhymes, which have their respective corresponding ones in the three verses of the second, in any order whatever, according to the will or necessity of the composer. Secondly, of these six lines the first is made to rhyme with the third and the fifth; the second with the fourth and the sixth. Lastly, the first rhymes with the third, fourth, sixth, and eighth; and the second only with the fifth. — W. P. Long, Sonnets writ in strictness in the Italian Style, Prefatory Essay, 1840.

2. Small poem.

Let us into the city presently, To sort a new gentleman well skill'd in music; I have a sonnet that will serve the turn. — Shakespeare, Two Gentlemen of Verona, iii. 2.

sonnet. v. n. Compose sonnets. Rare.

Nor lady's wanton love, nor wandering knight, Lend'd I out in rhymes all richly dight; . . . Nor list I sonnet of my mistress' face, To paint some blowiness with a borrow'd grace. — Bishop Hall, Satires, l. 1.

Once did I sonnet to my mint, My soul in numbers move; Once did I tell a thousand lies; And then I was in love. — Jonson, Masque Garden of Delights, 1610.

He ascribes all virtue to his wife in strains that come almost to sonneting. — Milton, Iconoclastes, ch. vii.

sonnet-writer. s. Sonneteer.

A suite of tales was published by George Whetstone, a sonnet-writer of some rank, and one of the most passionate among us, to bewail the perplexities of love! — T. Warton, History of English Poetry, iii. 483.

sonneteer. s. Small poet; writer of sonnets. Contemptuous.

Assist me, some extemporal god of rhyme; For I am sure I shall turn sonneteer. — Shakespeare, Love's Labour's Lost, l. 2.

There are as many kinds of gardening as of poetry: your makers of parterres and flower-gardens are epigrammatists and sonnetteers in this art. — Spectator.

What woful stuff this madrigal would be, In some starved hackney sonneteer or me! But let a lord once own the happy lines, How the wit brightens! how the style refines! — Pope, Essay on Criticism, ii. 418.

sonnetist. s. Sonneteer. Rare.

The prophet of the heavenly lyre, Great Solomon, sings in the heavenly quire, And is become a new-found sonnetist. — Bishop Hall, Satires, l. 9.

sonorific. adj. Producing sound.

If he should ask me why a clock strikes, and points to the hour; and I should say it is by an indicating form, and sonorific quality, this would be unsatisfactory. — Watts, Logic.

sonorous. adj. [Lat. sonorus; Fr. sonoreux.]

1. Loud-sounding; giving loud or shrill sound.

All the while Sonorous metal became martial sounds; At which the universal host up-sent A shout that tore hell's concave. — Milton, Paradise Lost, l. 539.

With the, the construction being substantial.

Amen, let me ask a person of the most refined musical taste, . . . when he has heard the finest quintets of Haydn executed by four of the first violins in the kingdom, and the finest violoncellos, if he would desire it to be repeated with a duplication of the parts performed by flutes, or hautboys, and a lessor? If he should, I must shrewdly presume that a horn of the sonorous has unaccountably mingled itself with his passion for the pathetic and sublime. — Mann, Essays, Historical and Critical, on English Church Music, essay 1.

2. High-sounding; magnificent of sound.

The Italian opera, amidst all the murmurs and familiarity of the thoughts, has something beautiful and sonorous in the expression. — Addison, Travels in Italy.

The vowels are sonorous. — Dryden.

Gilbert West was born about 1705, and died in 1761; besides other works, he published a translation of a portion of the ode of Pindar, which had long considerable reputation, but is not very Pindaric, though a smooth and sonorous performance. — Cruik, History of English Literature, vol. ii. p. 265.

sonorousness. s. Attribute suggested by sonorous.

1. Quality of giving sound.

Enquiring of a maker of violins and lutes of what age he thought lutes ought to be, to attain their full and best resonating for sonorousness, he replied, That in some twenty years would be requisite, and in others forty. — Boyle.

2. Magnificence of sound.

sonship. s. Filiation; character of a son.

The epistle to the Hebrews makes afflictions not only incident but necessary to Christianity, the leader and encouragement of sonship. — Dr. H. More, Decay of Christian Piety.

But thou wert born to be a Son, God's Son in heaven, Thy will was this, To pass the chain of sonship on, And bind in our whatever be, Thou canst't the Son of Man to be, That so thy brethren too might bear Adoptive sonship, and with Thee Thy Sire's eternal kingdom bear. — Andrew de Vere, pt. 1. st. xvii.

soon. adv. [A.S. sona.]

1. Before long time be past; shortly after any time assigned or supposed.

Nor did they not perceive the evil plight In which they were, or the three plagues not feel; Yet to their general's voice they soon obey'd. — Milton, Paradise Lost, l. 353.

You must obey me, soon or late; Why should you vainly struggle with your fate? — Dryden.

2. Early; before any time supposed: (opposed to late).

Do this, that I may be restored to you the sooner. — Hebrews, xiii. 19.

O boy! thy father gave thee life too soon, And hath bereft thee of the life too late. — Shakespeare, Henry VI. Part III, li. 3.

The earlier strength for the later, and not that the later cometh sooner. — Bacon, Natural and Experimental History.

3. Readily; willingly.

I would as soon see a river whirling through woods and meadows, as when it is tressed up in so many whimsical figures at Versailles. — Addison, Guardian.

4. Signification of an adjective; speedy, quick.

He hath preserved Armin alive, under pretence of a sooner issue. — Sir P. Sidney.

Make your sooner haste. — Shakespeare, Antony and Cleopatra, iii. 1.

Soon as. Immediately; at the very time.

As soon as he came night unto the camp, he saw the cuff and the dance. — Keats, xxxi. 19.

Nor was his virtue poison'd, soon as burn, With the too early thoughts of being king. — Dryden, The rite Statues on the Death of Oliver Cromwell.

Feasts, and business, and pleasure, and enjoyments, seem great things to us, whilst we think of nothing else; but as soon as we add death to them, they all sink into an equal littleness. — Lar.

Soonly. adv. Quickly; speedily. Rare.

A soonly move with a stone that wants no cutting, and, soonly approving of it, places it in his work. — Dr. H. More.

Soot. s. [A.S. soot, sot.] Collected smoke.

Soot, though thin spread in a field, is a very good compost. — Bacon.

If the fire be not kept within the funnel of the chimney, and some appointed to sweep down the soot, the house will be in danger of burning. — Hawell.

Off they assay'd, Hunger and thirst constraining; dragg'd as off With late-fall'd disrelish, writhed their jaws, With soot and cinders fill'd. — Milton, Paradise Lost, x. 367.

Our household gods, that droop upon our hearths, Each from his venerable face shall brush The Macedonian soot, and shine again. — Dryden, Cleomenes.

And every tongue, with utter drought, Was withered at the root; We could not speak, no more than if We had been choked with soot. — Coleridge, The Ancient Mariner.

Sooted. adj. Smeared, manured, or covered with soot.

The land was sooted before. — Mortimer, Householdry.

Sooterkin. s. [?] False birth fabled to be produced by the Dutch women from sitting over their stoves.

Kisses and foods being near of kin As Dutch hours to a sooterkin, Both parties join'd to do their best To damn the public interest. — Batler, Hudibras, iii. 2. l. 13.

Sooth. s. [A.S. soð.]

1. Truth; reality.

Sir, understand you this of me in sooth, The youngest daughter, whom you hark'd for, Her father keeps from all access of suitors, Until the eldest sister first be wed. — Shakespeare, Twelfth Night of the Shrove, l. 2.

He looks like sooth: he says he loves my daughter; I think so too; for never gaz'd the moon Upon the water, as he'll stand and read My daughter's eyes. — Shakespeare, Winter's Tale, iv. 3.

If I have any skill in meddling, as in sooth I leave none, it doth pre-eminently that I shall change eyes. — Garden, Remains.

The very sooth of it is, that an ill habit has the force of an ill fate. — Sir R. L. Estlin.

I did not mean to chide you; For, sooth to say, I hold it noble in you To cherish the distressed. — Rome, Jane Shore, l. 1.

2. Pragmatism; soothsaying. Rare.

Tried time yet taught me greater things; The solemn rising of the evening sun, The sooths of byrles by letting of their wings. — Spenser, Shepherd's Calendar.

3. Sweetness; kindness.

That e'er this tongue of mine, That laid the sentence of dread banishment On you proud man, should take it off again With words of sooth. — Shakespeare, Richard II. iii. 3.

Sooth. s. [A.S. soð, soðe.] True; faithful; that may be relied on.

If thou speak'st false, Upon the next tree shalt thou hang alive, Till famine cling thee: if thy speech be sooth, I care not if thou dost for me as much. — Shakespeare, Macbeth, v. 5.

Some other means I have which may be used,
Which once of Melchior's odd I learnt.
The soothest shepherd that e'er plumed on pinnas.
Milton, Comus, 821.

Soothe. v. a. [A.S. geaðdian.]

1. Flatter; please with blandishments.

In soothing them, we nourish 'gainst our senate
The cuckoo of rebellion, insolence, sedition.
Shakespeare, Coriolanus, iii. 1.

Can I soothe the tyrannous;
Seven pleased to see my royal master murder'd,
His crown usurp'd, a distaff in the throne?
Dryden, Spanish Frier, iv. 2.
I've try'd the force of every reason on him,
Soothed and cared, been angry, soothed again;
Laid sooty, life, and interest in his sight;
But all are vain, he scorns them all for sooty.
Adrian, Cato.

2. Calm; soften; mollify.

On high the technique holds her hands,
Soothed her with blandishments, and frights with threats.
Dryden, Translation from Ovid, Cinyras and Myrrha.

3. Gratify; please.

This calm'd his cares; soothed with his future fame,
And pleas'd to hear his projected name.
Dryden, Translation of the Æneid, vi. 519.

Soother. s. Flatterer; one who gains by blandishments.

I cannot flatter: I defy
The tongues of soothers.
Shakespeare, Henry IV, Part I, iv. 1.

Paulocheus, an inn-keeper, a receiver of all, and a soother of every man for his gain.—Bishop Bancroft, Iniquitous Position, b. iv. ch. 1.

Soothing. verbal abs. Act of one who soothes.

Thinks he that Memnon, soldier as he is,
Thoughtless and dull, will listen to his soothing?
Rare.

Soothingly. adv. In a soothing manner; with blandishments; with flattery.

Herewithal Amelina rested the most soothingly and contentedly decreed that could be found in the world. Shelton, Translation of Don Quixote, pt. iv. ch. vii.

Wonder and joy a passing faintness threw
Over my brow—a hand supported me,
Whose touch was magic strength; an eye of blue
Look'd into mine, like moonlight, soothingly.
Shelton, The Lord of Ialm.

Soothly. adv. [A.S. soðlice.] In truth; really.

He was fain to use his wits, and soothly to tell them, I have seen your face. Hales, Golden Remains, p. 48.

Soothsay. v. n. Predict; foretell.

A certain dunsel, possessed with a spirit of divination, met us, which brought her matters much pain by soothsayings.—Ista, xvi. 102.

Soothsay. s. Prediction. Rare.

Well seen in every science that mode be,
And every secret work of nature's ways,
In witty riddles, and in wise soothsayings.
Spenser, Faerie Queene, iv. 2. 35.

Soothsayer. s. Foreteller; prognosticator.

Scarcely was Musidorus made partaker of this blinding light, when there were found numbers of soothsayers who affirmed strange and incredible things should be performed by that child.—Sir P. Sidney.

A soothsayer bids you beware the iles of March.—
Shakespeare, Julius Cæsar, i. 2.
He was animated to expect the papacy by the prediction of a soothsayer, that one should succeed pope Leo, whose name should be Adrian, an old man of mean birth, and of great learning and wisdom.—Hume, History of the Reign of Henry VII.

Soothsaying. s. Prophesying.

Divinations, and soothsayings, and dreams are vain.—Ecclesiastes, xxiii. 5.

Sootish. adj. Sooty. Rare.

Things become black by a sootish and fuliginous matter proceeding from the sulphur of bodies ter-ried.—Sir T. Browne, Vulgar Errors, (Ord. 38.)

Sooty. adj. [A.S. sofig.]

1. Breeding soot.

By fire of sooty coal the alchemist turns Metals to gold.
Milton, Paradise Lost, v. 440.

2. Consisting of soot; fuliginous.

There may be some chymical way so to debrute this oil, that it shall not spend into a sooty matter.
—Bishop H. Atkins.

3. Black; dark; dusky.

All hell run out, and sooty figns display.
P. Fletcher, Locrine, p. 58: 1027.
All the grisly legions that troop
Under the sooty flag of Acheron;
Harpies and hydra and all monstrous forms.
Milton, Comus, 603.

I looked upon that sooty drug, which he held up in his crest.—Tatler, no. 131.

Swift on his sooty pinions flits the gnome,
And in a vapour rear'd the gloomy dune.
Pope, Rape of the Lock, canto iv.

Sooty. v. a. Make black with soot.

Then (for his own weals) shirt and coat all rent,
Tann'd all sootied with noxious smoke,
She put him on; and over all a cloak. Chapman.

Sop. v. a. Steep in liquor.

Sop. s.

1. Anything steeped in liquor: (commonly to be eaten).

The bounded waters
Would lift their bosoms higher than the shores,
And make a sop of all that solid globe.
Shakespeare, Troilus and Cressida, i. 3.
Draw, you rogues; for though it be night, yet the moon shines: I'll make a sop of the moonshine of you.—Id., King Lear, ii. 2.
Sops in wine, quantity for quantity, inebriate more than wine of itself.—Bacon, Natural and Experimental History.

2. Anything given to pacify: (from the sop given to Cerberus).

The prudent slyl had before prepared
A sop, in honey steep'd, to charm the gaurd,
Which, mix'd with powerful drugs, she cast before
His greedily gnawing jaws, just ope'd to roar.
Dryden, Translation of the Æneid, vi. 566.
Ill nature is not cured with a sop; quarrelsome men, as well as quarrelsome curs, are worse for fair usage.—Sir R. L. Estrange.

To Cerberus they give a sop,
His tripe barking mouth to stop. Swift.

Sops in wine (plural). Popular name of the pink (flower).

Bring cucumbers, and sops-in-wine,
Worms of paramours.
Spenser, Shepherd's Calendar.

Sops-in-wine, a flower in colour much like to a carnation, but differing in smell and quantity.—
E. K. Notes on the Shepherd's Calendar.

Soph. s. [Lat. sophista.] Young man who has been two years at the university.

Three Cambridge sophs, and three per Templars came.

The same their talents, and their tastes the same;
Each prompt to query, answer, and debate,
And suit with love of psey and prate.
Pope, Dunciad, ii. 379.

Sophi. s. Supreme ruler of Persia.

By this scimitar
That slew the sophi and a Persian prince.
Shakespeare, Merchant of Venice, ii. 1.

A lie for the sultan and sophi. Congreve.

Sophical. adj. Teaching wisdom. Rare.

All those books which are called sophical, such as the Wisdom of Sirach, &c., tend to teach the Jews
the true spiritual meaning of God's economy.—*Dr.
Harris, On the Island of Chios, p. 254: 1739.*

Sophism. s. [Fr. sophisme; Lat. sophisma.]

Fallacious argument; unsound subtlety;
fallacy.

When a false argument puts on the appearance of a true one, then it is properly called a sophism or fallacy.—Halle.

I, who as yet was never known to show
False pity to premeditated woe,
Will graciously explain great nature's laws,
And hear thy sophisms in so plain a cause. Harte.

In every age it is the sophism of malignant and peevish men to traduce the cause of freedom itself,
on account of the interested motives by which its ostensible advocates have frequently been actuated.
—Hallam, View of the State of Europe during the Middle Ages, pt. iii. ch. viii.

Every political party, however honourable may be its objects and character, is liable to be disgraced by the association of such insinuations. But though it is an unworldly sophism to charge the leaders with the excesses they profess to disapprove
in their followers, it must be confessed that few chiefs of faction have had the virtue to condemn with sufficient energy the misrepresentations which are intended for their benefit.—Id., Constitutional History of England, vol. i. ch. iv.

Philbus, the physician, lived in his service; and
one day at supper, when Philbus silenced a tiresome
talker with a foolish sophism, the young Antony gave him as a reward the whole sideboard of plate.
—Shæpe, History of Egypt, ch. x.

The ambiguity of the word 'infinite' is the real fallacy in the amusing logical puzzle of Achilles and the Tortoise, a puzzle which has been too hard for the ingenuity or patience of many philosophers, and among others of Dr. Thomas Brown, who considered the sophism as insoluble; as a sound argument, though leading to a palpable falsehood; not seeing that such an admission would be a redundant absurdum of the reasoning faculty itself. The fallacy, as Hobbes hinted, lies in the tacit assumption that whatever is infinitely divisible is infinite.—
J. S. Mill, System of Logic, pt. v. ch. vii.

Sophist. s. [Fr. sophiste; Lat. sophista.]

Professor of philosophy.

The court of Cæsar is said to have been much resorted to by the sophists of Greece in the happy beginning of his reign.—Sir W. Temple.

He [Alexander] was desirous of carrying away with him some of the Indian sophists as companions of Anaxarchus. Fifteen of them were pursuing their contemplative exercises in a grove near Taxis, and Ctesicritus was sent to them with the king's invitation. It was rejected with disdain by Dandamis, the eldest and head of the cœnobites; but one of them—by the Greeks nicknamed Calanias—was induced, it is said, by the persuasion of Taxis, to accept it, and accompanied Alexander to the end of his expedition; a sacrifice of his independence, by which he incurred the contempt of his fellowrecluses.—*Bishop Thirlwall, History of Greece, ch.
lii.*

Now such musical teachers as Damon, and the others above-mentioned, were sophists, not merely in the natural and proper Greek sense of that word, but to a certain extent, even in the special and restricted meaning which Plato afterwards thought proper to confer upon it. A sophist, in the genuine sense of the word, was a wise man—a clever man—one who stood prominently before the public as distinguished for intellect or talent of some kind. Thus Sælon and Pythagoras are both called sophists;
Timæus, the skilful bard, is called a sophist; Sokrates is so denominated, not merely by Aristotle, Phanias, but by Æschines. Aristotle himself calls Aristippus, and Xenophon calls Antisthenes both of them disciples of Sokrates by that name; Xenophon, in describing a collection of instructive fables, calls them 'the writings of old poets and sophists,' meaning by the latter word prose-writers generally.
Plato is alluded to as a sophist, even by Sokrates;
Sokrates himself was harshly criticised as a sophist, and defends both himself and his profession. Lastly,
Timon, the friend and admirer of Pyrrho, about 320-210 B.C., who bitterly satirised all the philosophers, designated them all, including Plato and Aristotle, by the general name of sophists. In this large and comprehensive sense, the word was originally used, and always continued to be so understood among the general public. But along with this idea, the title sophist also carried with it or connoted a certain invincible feeling. Timon, who hated the philosophers, thus found the word sophist exactly suitable in sentiment as well as meaning to his purpose in addressing them. Now, when in the period succeeding 320 B.C., the rhetorical and mathematical teachers came to stand before the public at Athens in such increased numbers, they, of course, as well as other men intellectually celebrated, became designated by the appropriate name of sophists.
But there was one characteristic peculiar to themselves whereby they drew upon themselves a double measure of that invincible sentiment which lay wrapped up in the name. They taught for pay; of course, therefore, the most eminent among them taught only the rich, and earned large sums; a fact naturally provocative of envy. To some extent, among the many who benefited nothing by them; but still more among the inferior members of their own profession. But even great minds, like Sokrates and Plato, though much inferior to any such envy, dis-rushed in that age a genuine and vehement reputation amongst receiving pay for teaching. . . . Plato not only stole the name out of general circulation, in order to fasten it specially to his opponents, the paid teachers, but also connected with it expres-sionable attributes, which formed no part of its primitive and recognised meaning, and were altogether distinct from, though grafted upon, the vague sentiment of dislike associated with it. Aristotle, following the example of his master, gave to the word sophist a definition substantially the same as that which it bears in the modern languages—an imposturous pretender to knowledge, a man who employs what he knows to be fallacy, for the purpose of deceit and getting money. And he did this at a time when he himself, with his estimate of consocratory, Sokrates, were considered at Athens to come under the designation of sophists, and were called so by every one who disliked either their profession or their persons.—*Grote, History of Greece,
pt. ii. ch. lxvii.*

Sophism. s. [Fr. sophisme; Lat. sophisma.]

Fallacious argument; unsound subtlety;
fallacy.

When a false argument puts on the appearance of a true one, then it is properly called a sophism or fallacy.—Halle.

I, who as yet was never known to show
False pity to premeditated woe,
Will graciously explain great nature's laws,
And hear thy sophisms in so plain a cause. Harte.

In every age it is the sophism of malignant and peevish men to traduce the cause of freedom itself,
on account of the interested motives by which its ostensible advocates have frequently been actuated.
—Hallam, View of the State of Europe during the Middle Ages, pt. iii. ch. viii.

Every political party, however honourable may be
its objects and character, is liable to be disgraced by the association of such insinuations. But though it is an unworldly sophism to charge the leaders with the excesses they profess to disapprove
in their followers, it must be confessed that few chiefs of faction have had the virtue to condemn
with sufficient energy the misrepresentations which are intended for their benefit.—Id., Constitutional History of England, vol. i. ch. iv.

Philbus, the physician, lived in his service; and
one day at supper, when Philbus silenced a tiresome
talker with a foolish sophism, the young Antony
gave him as a reward the whole sideboard of plate.
—Shæpe, History of Egypt, ch. x.

The ambiguity of the word 'infinite' is the real fallacy in the amusing logical puzzle of Achilles and
the Tortoise, a puzzle which has been too hard for
the ingenuity or patience of many philosophers,
and among others of Dr. Thomas Brown, who considered the sophism as insoluble; as a sound argument, though leading to a palpable falsehood; not seeing that such an admission would be a redundant absurdum of the reasoning faculty itself. The fallacy, as Hobbes hinted, lies in the tacit assumption that whatever is infinitely divisible is infinite.—
J. S. Mill, System of Logic, pt. v. ch. vii.

Sophist. s.

1. Disputant fallaciously subtle; artful but insidious logician.

It is great sin to swear unto a sin;
But greater sin to keep a sinful oath.—
A subtle traitor needs no sophist.
Shakespeare, Henry IV, Part II, v. 1.

If a heathen philosopher brings arguments from reason, which none of our atheistical sophists can confute, for the immortality of the soul, I hope they will so weigh the consequences, as neither to think, nor live, as if there was no such thing.—Sir J. J. A. know, Of Old Age, preface.

Not all the subtle objections of sophists and rabbins, against the gospel, so much prejudiced the reception of it, as the reproach of those crimes with which they aspersed the assemblies of Christians.—
Magna.

2. Professor of philosophy; sophist.

Aldidius the sophist hath arguments to prove, that voluntary and extemporal for exalted premeditated speech.—Hooker, Ecclesiastical Polity.

Sophister. v. a. Maintain by a fallacious argument. Obsolete.

It is well sophistered of you both: preposterous are your judgments evermore; you judge evil good, and good evil.—Lord Cobham, in Fox's Acts and Monuments.

Sophistic. adj. Fallaciously subtle; logically deceitful.

Frank is the ready minister of injustice:—the currency of false pretences and sophistic reasoning was expedient to their designs.—Burke, Letter to a Member of the National Assembly.

Sophistical. adj. Fallaciously and plausibly subtle, after the manner of a sophist.

The subtilty persuasions and sophistical civilisations of the papists.—Archbishop Cranmer, Defence of the Doctrine of the Sacrament, fol. 112: 1534.

Neither know I whether I should prefer for malice, and sophistical cunning, that the same body of Christ should be in a thousand places at once of this ambulatory world.—Hall.

When the state of the controversy is well understood, the difficulty will not be great in giving answers to all his sophistical cavils.—Bishop Stillingfleet.

That may seem a demonstration for the present, which to posterity will appear a mere sophistical knot.—Dr. H. More.

Sophistically. adv. In a sophistic manner.

Bolingbroke argues most sophistically.—Swift.

Sophisticate. v. a. Adulterate; corrupt with something spurious.

If the passions of the mind be strong, they easily sophisticate the understanding, they make it apt to believe upon every slender warrant, and to imagine infallible truth, where scarce any probable show appears.—Hooker, Ecclesiastical Polity.

Here's three of us are sophisticated.

Shakespeare, King Lear, iii. 4.

Divers experiments succeeded not, because they were at one time tried with genuine materials, and at another time with sophisticated ones.—Boyle.

The only persons amongst the heathens who sophisticated nature and philosophy in this particular, were the Stoicks; who offered a fatal, unchangeable concatenation of causes, reaching even to the eldest acts of man's will.—South, Sermons.

The eye hath its coats and humours transparent and colourless, lest it should time and sophisticate the light that it lets in by a natural jaundice.—Bentley.

Sophisticate. part. adj. Adulterate; not genuine.

Wine sparkles brighter for than she:
'Tis pure and rich, without deceit,
And such no woman e'er will be;

No, they are all sophisticate.—Cowley, Song.

Since then a great part of our scientific treasure is most likely to be adulterate, though all bears the name and superscription of truth; the only way to know what is sophisticate and what is not, is to bring all to the criterion of the times.—Glanville.

No truth, when only one supplied the state,
Grew scarce and dear, and yet sophisticate.—Dryden.

Sophistication. s. Adulteration; not genuineness.

Besides easy admissions to sophistications of sense, we have inability to prevent the misarrangement of our junior reasons.—Glanville.

The drugs and simples sold in shops, generally are adulterated by the fraudulent avarice of the sellers, especially if the price be small; may make their sophistication very beneficial.—Boyle.

Sophistication is the act of counterfeiting or adulterating anything with what is not so good, for the sake of unlawful gain.—Quincy.

Sophisticator. s. Adulterator; one who makes things not genuine.

I cordially commend, that the sophisticators of who may suffer punishment above any ordinary thief.—Whitaker, Blood of the Grapes, p. 107: 1553.

Great depravers and sophisticators of antiquity.—Bibliotheca Biblica, l. 306.

Sophistry. s.

1. Fallacious ratiocination.

His sophistry prevailed; his father believed.—Sir P. Sidney.

These men have obscured and confounded the nature of things, by their false principles and wretched sophistry; though an act be never so sinful, they will strip it of its guilt.—South, Sermons.

Numerous similar instances might be found of fallacies thus veiled by indistinctness of language in most of the treatises extant on 'fatalism,' 'free-agency,' and other kindred matters; in which the words 'may,' 'can,' 'possible,' &c., are understood partly in reference to power, partly to probability.

In these, however, and in all other cases where indistinctness of language serves to veil sophistry from a man's hearers, or which is quite as common from himself, the expressions must always appear his.

Vol. II.

telligible, and we must follow, or imaginatively follow the meaning, as we proceed. There are, however, certain spurious kinds, as they may be called, of writing or speaking, (distinct from what is strictly termed sophistry), in which obscurity of style may be applied.—Archbishop Whately, Elements of Rhetoric, pt. iii. ch. i.

What probability was there that any sheriff would pack a jury, that any barrister would employ all the arts of sophistry and rhetoric, . . . in order to convict an innocent person of burglary or sheep-stealing? But on a trial for high treason a verdict of acquittal must always be considered as a defeat of the government; and there was but too much reason to fear that many sheriffs, barristers, and judges might be impelled . . . to do anything which might save the government from the inconvenience and shame of a defeat.—Macaulay, History of England, ch. xviii.

2. Logical exercise.

The more youthful exercises of sophistry, themes, and declamations.—Fallon.

Sopited. adj. [Lat. sopitus, pass. part. of sopio.] Laid to sleep; dandered. Rare.

That in our present sense of existence, our natural powers are tied down, sopited, and fettered by the manner of our origination and coming into natural life, is self-evident.—Cheyne, Philosophical Conjectures, (Ord. MS.)

Soporiferous. adj. [Lat. sopor + fero = I bear.] Productive of sleep; causing sleep;

narcotic; opiate; dormitive; somniferous; anodyne; sleepy.

The particular ingredients of those magical ointments are opiate and soporiferous; for anointing of the forehead, neck, face, and back-bone, procures dead sleep.—Bacon.

While the whole operation was performing, I lay in a profound sleep, by the force of that soporiferous medicine infused into my liquor.—Swift.

Soporific. adj. Causing sleep; opiate; narcotic.

The colour and taste of opium are, as well as its soporific or anodyne virtues, mere powers depending on its primary qualities.—Lodge.

Soporous. adj. [Lat. soporosus.] Sleepy; causing sleep.

In small synopses it may perhaps rouse the spirits a little, but in soporosus diseases it is commonly an uncertain and ineffectual remedy.—Greenhill, Art of Embalming, p. 53.

Sorb. s. [Lat. sorbum.] Service-tree; berry of the tree.

The timber of the sorb is useful to the joiner.—Evelyn.

Sorbtion. s. [Fr.; Lat. sorbeo = I suck up; sorbitio, -onis.] Act of drinking or sipping.

Sorbonical. adj. Belonging to a Sorbonist.

Great-bellied bingers, or sorbonical masters in Paris, which, commencing with reds from the cheerful banquet of Birelms, called prandium theologorum, culminated Martyr Luther in 1523. —Jule, Let a Course at the Sorbonne Fair, fol. 36: 1513.

The sorbonical or theological wine, and their feasts or study days, are now come to be proverbially jested at.—Florio, Translation of Montaigne, p. 676.

Sorbonist. s. Doctor of the theological house of Sorbon, or Sorbonne, in the University of Paris; (the Sorbonne was also a term used in general for the whole faculty of theology there).

In school-divinity as able
As he that hight irrefragable:
A second Thomas, or at once
To name them all, another Dunce;
Profound in all the nominal
And real ways beyond them all;
For he a rope of sand could twist
As tough as learned Sorbonist.

Baith, Hudibras, l. 1, 151

Sorcerer. s. [Fr. sorcier; L. Lat. sortarius, from sortes = lots.] Conjuror; enchanter; magician.

They say this town is full of cozenage,
As nimble jugglers that deceive the eye,
Drug-working sorcerers that change the mind,
Soul-killing witches that deform the body,
And many such like liberties of sin.

Shakespeare, Comedy of Errors, l. 2.

The weakness of the power of witches upon kings and magistrates may be ascribed to the weakness of imagination; for it is hard for a witch or a sorcerer to put on a belief that they can hurt such.—Bacon, Natural and Experimental History.

[He] saw a subtle sorcerer arise,
Swift to whose hand a wizard volume flew;
All sudden gorgeous him, and dragons glare,
And ten-horn'd heads and giants rush to war.

Pope, Dunciad, iii. 233.

The Egyptian sorcerers contended with Moses; but the wonders which Moses wrought did so far transcend the power of magic, as made them confess it was the finger of God.—Watts, Logic.

Sorceress. s. Female sorcerer; enchanteress.

Bring forth that sorceress condemn'd to burn.
Shakespeare, Henry VI, Part I. v. 4.

Divers witches and sorceresses have fed upon man's flesh, to aid their imagination with high and foul vapours.—Bacon.

The wily sorceress that sat
Just by hell-gate, and kept the fatal key.
Milton, Paradise Lost, li. 726.

How cunningly the sorceress displays
Her own transgressions, to uphold her mine!
Id., Samson Agonistes, 810.

Sorcerous. adj. Containing enchantments.

The sorcerous proceedings of Silver.—Bale, Acts of English Volaries, pt. ii. b. vi.: 1550.

'Tis art enring sorcer's house,
Where by her medicines, black and sorcerous,
The soldiers all are shut in well sorced sleep,
And turn'd to wine.—Chapman.

The wine being concentrated, it is carried home, that therewith they may sprinkle their houses, to preserve them from witchcraft and sorcerous malignities.—L. Addison, Account of the present State of the Jews, p. 17: 1675.

Sorcery. s. Magic; enchantment; conjuration; witchcraft; charms.

This witch Sycorax,
For mischiefs manifold, and sorceries terrible,
Was banish'd.—Shakespeare, Tempest, i. 2.

Address wisdom I have learn'd!
To fence my ears against thy sorceries.
Milton, Samson Agonistes, 870.

Acton has long tracts of rich soil; but had the misfortune in his youth to fall under the power of sorcery.—Tait.

Sord. s. Sward. Rare.

This is the prettiest low-born lass that ever
Ran on the green sward.
Shakespeare, Winter's Tale, iv. 3.

'Tis midst an altar as a landmark stood,
Runic, of grassy sord.
Milton, Paradise Lost, xl. 452.

Sordes. s. [Lat.] Foulness; drags.

They swear they have found out and can sell you
The true elixir, the philosopher's stone, which will Turn baser metals into gold; while yet, poor wretches, Their ruses, sordis, and beggary, sufficiently confute their rare skill.—Bishop Gauden, Hieraspates, p. 219: 1653.

The sea washes off the soil and sordes whereby natural mosses were involved and concealed, and thereby renders them more conspicuous.—Woodward.

Sordid. adj. [Lat. sordidus.]

1. Foul; gross; filthy; dirty.

Never man more affected bravery and pride than they did beggary and meanness; . . . let these and their ill-advised followers pass for cynicks in Christianity;
. . . whilst the original rule of their sordid
founder was.—Bishop Hall, Remains, p. 252.

There Charon stands, who rules the dreary coast;
A sordid god; down from his lofty chin
A length of beard descends, uncombed, unclean.

Dryden, Translation of the Æneid, vi. 413.

2. Intellectually dirty; mean; vile; base.

Thou canst not these execrations make,
Which vulgar sordid mortals take.
Cowley.

It is strange, since the priest's office heretofore was always splendid, that it is now looked upon as a piece of religion to make it low and sordid.—South, Sermons.

3. Covetous; niggardly.

He may be old,
And yet not sordid, who refuses gold.
Sir J. Denham, Of Old Age, pt. iii.

If one should cease to be generous and charitable, because another is sordid and uncharitable, it would be much in the power of vice to extinguish christian virtues.—Sir R. L. Edmoune.

But he [Lord Loughborough] was not unpopular at the head of the profession. His manners were
. . . treas and even noble; his liberality was great.
Wholly above any sordid feelings of avarice or parsimony, and only valuing his high station for the powers which it conferred, and the dignity with which it was compassed round about, he maintained his state with a unimpaired expenditure, and undid not money for his heirs.—Lord Brougham, Historical Sketches of Statesmen of the Reign of George III., Lord Loughborough.

Sordidly. adv. In a sordid manner; meanly; poorly; covetously.

Sordidness. s. Attribute suggested by Sordid.

1. Meanness; baseness.

I could the baseness of Caligula's delights, and the execrable sordidness of those of Tiberius.—Cowley.

983.

2. Nastiness; not neatness.

Providence draws people from slothfulness and sordidness, and provokes them to cleanliness.—Ray.

Sore. s. [A.S. sár = pain.] Place tender and painful; place excoriated; ulcer: (not used of a wound, but of a breach of continuity, either long continued or from internal cause; to be a sore, there must be an excoriation; a tumour or bruise is not called a sore before some disruption happen).

Let us hence provide

A salve for any sore that may betide.

Shakespeare, Henry VI. Part III. iv. 6.

Receipts abound; but searching all thy store,
The best is still at hand, to lance the sore,
And cut the head; for, till the cure be found,
The secret vice is fed and gathers ground.

Dryden.

By these all fest'ring *sore*s her counsels heal,
Which time or loss disclosed, or shall reveal.

Id., Hind and Panther. ii. 367.

Lies and flies, which have a most wonderful instinct to find out convenient places for the hatching and nourishment of their young, lay their eggs upon *sore*s.—Bentley.

Sore. adj. [A.S. sár = painful.]

1. Tender to the touch.

We can ne'er be sure,
Whether we pain or not endure;
And just so far are sore and griev'd,
As by the fancy is believ'd.

Batter, Hudibras. ii. 1. 107.

While sore of battle, while our wounds are green,
Why should we tempt the doubtful die again?

Dryden.

It was a right answer of the physician to his patient, that had sore eyes, if you have more pleasure in the taste of wine than in the use of your sight, wine is good; but if the pleasure of seeing be greater to you than that of drinking, wine is naught.—
Locke.

2. Tender in the mind; easily vexed.

Males and haire are very fretting and venacious, and apt to make our minds sore and uneasy; but let that can moderate these affections will find ease in his mind.—Arsenius Tillotson.

Laugh at your friends; and, if your friends are sore,

So much the better, you may laugh the more.

Pope, Epilogue to the Satires, dialogue I.

3. Violent with pain; afflictively vehement.

My lungs are filled with a sore disease, and there is no whole part in my body.—Book of Common Prayer, Psalms, xxxvii. 7.

Three-score and ten I can remember well,
Within the volume of which time I've seen Hours dreadful, and things strange; but this sore
night
Hath tri'd former knowings.

Shakespeare, Macbeth. ii. 1.

I will persevere in my course of loyalty, though the conflict be sore between that and my blood.—
Id., King Lear. iii. 5.

As likeliest was, when two such foes met arm'd.

Milton, Paradise Lost, vi. 637.

Gentle lady, may thy grave
Peace and quiet ever have;
After this day's travel sore,
Sweet rest shall thee evermore.

Id., Epitaph on the Marchioness of Winchester.

They are determined to live up to the holy rule, though sore evils and great temporal inconveniences should attend the discharge of their duty.—Bishop Atterbury.

4. Bad. Obsolete.

To lapse in fulness
Is sorer than to lie for need; and falsehood
Is worse in kings than beggars.

Shakespeare, Cymbeline. iii. 2.

Sore. adv. [A.S. sáre; German, schr.]

1. Intensely; in a great degree.

Good men delight sore when they hear of virtuous men.—For, Acts and Monuments, Thorpe's Examination (in 1407).

Thou sore longedst after thy father's house, [in the XXXI. of 1378, 'thou greatly longedst.']—Genesis, lxxi. 30.

2. With painful or dangerous vehemence; very painful degree; with afflictive violence of pertinacity.

The knight, then lightly leaping to the prey,
With mortal steel his wounds again so sore,
That headless his unwieldy body lay.

Spenser, Faerie Queen.

Thine arrows stick fast in me, and thy hand jerebeth me sore.—Book of Common Prayer, Psalms, xxxvii. 2.

He that and that, and each man's blow
Doth eye, defend, and shift, being laid to sore.

Daniel.

Though iron hew and mangle sore,
Wood wounds and bruises honour more,
Batter, Hudibras. i. 2. 311.

So that if Palamon were wounded sore,
Arcite was hurt as much.

Dryden, Palamon and Arcite. l. 271.

Sore sigh'd the knight, who this long sermon heard:

At length, considering all, his heart he cheer'd.

Id., Wife of Bath's Tale. 609.

How, Didins, shall a Roman sore requish
Greet your arrival to this distant isle?

How bid you welcome to these shatter'd ledgers?
A. Phillips.

Sore. v. a. Wound; make sore. Rare.

The wydo wound . . .

Was closed up, as it had not been sored.

Spenser, Faerie Queen. iii. 12. 38.

Sore. s. [see under Sorrel.]

1. Hawk of the first year.

The distinction of eyes and rannage hawks, of *sore*s and enternewes.—Sir T. Browne, Miscella-neus. p. 118.

As the first element of a compound.

Of the war-falcon so I learn to fly.

Spenser, Hymns.

2. Buck of the fourth year.

A buck is the first year a fawn; the second year,
a pricket; the third year, a sorel; and the fourth year, a sore.—Return from Parnassus. 1000.

Sorehon. s. See Sorn.

They exact upon them all kinds of services; yea, and the very wild exactions, coinage, livery, and sorehon; by which they poll and utterly mangle the poor townlands and freeholders under them.—Spenser, View of the State of Ireland.

Sorely. adv. In a sore manner.

1. With a great degree of pain or distress.

Here's the smell of the blood still; all the perfu-mance of Arabia will not sweeten this little hand.
O! O! O!—What a sore is there! the heart is sorely overcharged.—Shakespeare, Macbeth. v. 1.

That which gladdened all the warrior train,
Though most were sorely wounded, none were slain
Dryden, Palamon and Arcite. li. 72.

2. With vehemence dangerous or afflictive.

I have done ill.

Of which I do accuse myself so sorely,

That I will enjoy no more.

Shakespeare, Antony and Cleopatra. iv. 6.

Soreness. s. Attribute suggested by Sore; tenderness of a hurt.

He that, whilst the soreness of his late jauges of conscience remains, finds himself a little indisposed for sin, presently concludes repentance hath had its perfect work.—Dr. H. More, Decay of Christian Piety.

My foot began to swell, and the pain assuaged, though it left such a soreness that I could hardly suffer the clothes of my bed.—Sir W. Temple.

Sorites. s. [from Gr. σύνθεσις = heap.] In Logic. Series of elliptic syllogisms, i.e. syllogisms in which the conclusion of all but the last is omitted;

e.g. instead of A—B, C—A, C—B, the sequence is C—A, D—C, E—D, E—A.

The instances given in the extracts are legitimate; but it is easy to see how the sorites may lend itself to a sophism. Let
A=100; B = n large number; C = 99; D = 98; and E = 97. By continuing the train of argument in a series of numbers;
each imperceptibly smaller than the number preceding, we arrive at one; and thus, inasmuch as, in the fact of its being a large number, it has been treated as equal to any of the ones between it and 99 (99 itself being equal, as a large number, to 100), we get as the result 1 = 100. That this is not the case is evident. Where, however, can we draw the distinction? It is chiefly as an instrument of sophistry that the sorites has commanded attention; and this we expect from its name. A heap (σύνθεσις) of wheat gives us large numbers of grains.
Take away one at a time, and when does the number become small? Another familiar illustration is got from the hairs in a horse's tail. They are many. Pluck them out one by one, and say when they become few. This is the result of a series of subtractions. A series of additions gives us, of course, the converse. One is a small number; a hundred a large one.

But add one at a time, and the difficulty of saying where the small number ends and the large one begins is manifest.

Chrysippus the Stoic invented a kind of argument, consisting of more than three propositions, which is called sorites, or a heap.—Dryden.

Sorites is when several middle terms are chosen to connect one another successively in several propositions, till the last proposition connects its predicative with the first subject. Thus, all men of revenge have their souls often uneasy; uneasy souls are a plague to themselves; now to be one's own plague is fully in the extreme.—Watts, Logic.

The sorites . . . is strictly syllogistic; as may be seen by the examples. If the premises stated be true, the conclusion must be true. For, when you have a string of syllogisms in the first figure, in which the conclusion of each is made the premise of the next, till you arrive at the main or ultimate conclusion of all, you may sometimes state these briefly, in the form called sorites; in which the predicate of the first proposition is made the subject of the next;
and so on, to any length, till finally the predicate of the last of the premises is predicated (in the conclusion) of the subject of the first: . . . (The English are a brave people; a brave people are free; a free people are happy; therefore the English are happy.)
A sorites, then, has as many middle terms as there are intermediate propositions between the first and the last; and consequently, it may be drawn out into as many separate syllogisms; of which the first will have, for its major premise, the second, and for its minor, the first, of the propositions of the sorites; as may be seen by the examples. The reader will perceive also by examination of that example, and by framing others, that the first proposition in the sorites is the only minor premise that is expressed; when the whole is resolved into distinct syllogisms, each conclusion becomes the minor premise of the succeeding syllogism. Hence, in a sorites, the first proposition, and that alone, of all the premises, may be particular; because in the first there the minor may be particular, but not the major; and all the other propositions, prior to the conclusion, are major premises. It is also evident that there may be, in a sorites, one, and only one, negative premise, viz. the last: for if any of the others were negative, the result would be that one of the syllogisms of the sorites would have a negative minor premise; incompatible with correctness.—Archbishop Whately, Elements of Logic. li. ch. iv. § 7.

Sore. v. a. See extract.

Whenever a chieftain had a mind to revel, he came down among his vassals with his followers, by way of contempt called in the lowlands 'gilt-willits,' and lived on free quarters; so that ever since,
when a person obtrudes himself upon another, stays at his house, and hangs upon him for food and board, he is said to sore, or to be sorner.—Macdonald.

Sórner. s. Chieftain who lives in the house of a tenant at his expense.

(For example, see preceding entry.)

Sórel. adj. Reddish; inclining to a red colour: (as, 'a sórel horse').

To reddish herrings, lay them on furrows in a close room, and there smoke them with the dried leaves of elm or oak, or with tanner's bark, until they have gotten their sórel hue. Colgrave, in voce Saur.

[Sórel.—1. French sórel, the herb sórel, or sorrel; or sorrelwood; sórel du bois, wood sorrel, wood sorrel [wood-sorrel].
(Colgrave.—2. Norse, sargr; German, sauerampfer; Greek, σάρα, from σάω = salar. A horse of a mixed red colour. Italian, saur, a sorrel colour of a horse. French, saur, sorrel of colour; harene saur, a red herring. Saurer les harenes, to reddish herrings, to lay them on hurdles in a close room and then smoke them with dried leaves until they have gotten their sórel hue; sórel, to reek, to dry or smoke red as herrings in the smoke. (Colgrave.) As the sorrel stems are of a brown-red colour, strikingly conspicuous in a field of mowing-grass, the word may simply signify the colour of sorrel. On the other hand it may be from Platt-Deutsch, sórr, dry; Old High German saur, saur, to dry. See Saur.
The name of the colour would then be taken from that of a dried herring.—Wedgwood, Dictionary of English Etymology.]

Sórel. s.

1. Buck of the third year.

I am but a mere sórel; my head's not hardened yet!—A Christian turned Turk. 1612.

(See also under Sore, s. 2.)

2. Native plant of the genus Rumex (acetosa and acetosella); the wood sorrel is Oxalis (acetowella and corniculata).

Of all roots of herbs the root of sórel goeth the fastest into the earth. It is a cold and acid herb that loveth the earth, and is not much drawn by the sun.—Bacon.

Acid astringent vegetables contract and strengthen the fibres, as all kinds of sórel, the virtues of which lie in acid astringent salt, a sovereign antidote against the putrescent bilious ailment.—*Arbuthnot,
On the Nature and Choice of Aliments.*

Sorrlly. adv. In a sorry manner; meanly; poorly; despicably; wretchedly; pitifully. Thy pipe, O Pan, shall help, though I sing sorrlly.

—Sir P. Sidney.

How does this hero in buckins perform? So wretchedly and sorrlly, as exactly to the same tune and his wretched pitch, that he has not struck one right stroke. — Bentley, Philoktetes Lipsianus, § 33.

Sorrow. v. n. [A.S. sorgian.] Grieve; be sad; be dejected.

Now I rejoice, not that ye were made sorry, but that ye sorrowed to repentance. — 2 Corinthians, vi. 9.

The miserable change, now at my end, Lament our sorrow us.

Shakespeare, Antony and Cleopatra, iv. 13.

Wherever sorrow is, relief would be; If you do sorrow at my grief in love, By giving love, your sorrow and my grief.

Were both exterminated. — Id., As you like it, iii. 5.

I neither fear to die nor desire to live; and having mastered all grief in myself, I desire no man to sorrow for me. — Sir J. Hayward.

Send them forth, though sorrowing, yet in peace. Milton, Paradise Lost, xi. 117.

Sad the prisoner exclaims The neighboring main, and sorrowing treads the shores. — Pope.

Sorrow. s. [A.S. sorg, sorh.] Grief; pain for something past; sadness; mourning; (not commonly understood as the effect of present evil, but of lost good).

Sorrow on thee, on all the pack of you, That triumph thus upon my misery!

Shakespeare, Twelfth of the Shrew, iv. 3.

A world of woe and sorrow, Milton, Paradise Lost, viii. 333.

Some other hour I will to tears allow; But having you, can show no sorrow now. — Dryden, Indian Emperor, v. 2.

Sorrow is unbusiness in the mind, upon the thought of a good lost, which might have been enjoyed longer; or the sense of a present evil. — Locke.

Sorrowed. adj. Accompanied with sorrow. Obsolete.

Now the publick body, which hath seldom Play the reciter, feeling in itself A lack of Timon's aid, hath sense withal Of its own fall, restrains and to Timon; And sends forth us to make their sorrowed tender.

Shakespeare, Timon of Athens, v. 2.

The much wounded and over sorrowed state of matrimony. — Milton, Doctrine and Discipline of Divorce, preface.

Sorrowful. adj.

1. Sad for something past; mournful; grieving.

Blissed are they which have been sorrowful for all thy securities; for they shall rejoice for thee, when they have seen all thy glory. — Tobit, xii. 14.

2. Deeply serious.

Hannah said, No, my lord, I am a woman of a sorrowful spirit: I have drunk neither wine nor strong drink, but I have poured out my soul before the Lord. — 1 Samuel, i. 15.

3. Expressing grief; accompanied with grief.

The things that my soul refused to touch are as my sorrowful weal. — Joh, vi. 7.

Sorrowfully. adv. In a sorrowful manner.

The matter he hath sorrowfully lamented. — Lord Herbert, History of Henry VIII., p. 471.

Sorrowing. s. [A.S. sorgian.] Expression of sorrow.

Marina, hearing sighs, to him drew near; And did conceal his cause of grief to hear; But had she known her beauty was the sting, 'Twas caused all this instant sorrowing.

Silence in bands her tongue but stronger kept. — W. Browne, Britannia's Pastorals, b. i. song 1.

Sorrowless. adj. Free from sorrow.

If their repentance be sorrowless, it will prove but a sorry one. — Wesley Sermons, v. 23: 1638.

Sorrry. adj. [A.S. sorgig, sarig.]

1. Grieving for something past: (generally used of slight or casual misarrangements or vexations, but sometimes of greater things; it does not imply any long continuance of grief).

The king was sorrry; nevertheless for the oath's sake, and then which with him at that, he commanded the Baptist's head to be given her. — Matthew, xiv. 9.

O, forget What we are sorrry for ourselves in thee. Shakespeare, Timon of Athens, v. 2.

I'm sorrry for thee, friend; 'tis the duke's pleasure. — Id., King Lear, ii. 2.

We are sorrry for the satire interspersed in some of these pieces, upon a few people, from whom the highest provocations have been received. — Swift.

2. Melancholy; dismal.

They exide A sorrry sight as ever seen with eye; A heedless ladie lying him beside, In her own blood all wallow'd wofully.

Spenser, Faerie Queene.

3. Worthless; vexatious.

How now, why do you keep alone? Of sorrried fancies your companions making. Using those thoughts which should, indeed, have died With them they think on.

Shakespeare, Macbeth, iii. 2.

If the union of the parts consist only in rest, it would seem that a bag of dust would be of as firm a consistence as that of marble; and Ajax's cage had been but a sorrry prison. — Glaucille.

Course complexion, And cheeks of sorrry grain, will serve to ply The sawyer, and to tense the housewife's wheel.

Milton, Comus, 740.

How vain were all the engines of his power, that could not support him against one slighting look of a sorrry slave! — Sir L. L. Estrange.

If this innocent had any relation to his Theban, the poet might have found some sorrry excuse for detaining the reader. — Dryden.

If such a slight and sorrry business as that could produce one organismal body, one might reasonably expect, that now and then a dead lump of dough might be leavened into an animal. — Bentley, Sermons.

Sort. s. [Fr. sorte; Lat. sors, sortis = lot.]

1. Kind; species.

[He] on the Assyrian mount Saw him disfigured more than could befall Spirit of happy sort.

Milton, Paradise Lost, iv. 126.

A substantial and unaffected piety not only gives a man a credit among the sober and virtuous, but even among the various sort of men. — Archbishop Tillotson.

These three sorts of poems should differ in their numbers, designs, and every thought. — Watts.

Endeavouring to make the signification of specific names clear, they made their specific ideas of the sorts of substances of a few of those simple ideas found in them. — Locke.

With sizes.

Mistresses of all sorts and sizes. Messinger, A New Way to Pay Old Debts, l. 1.

2. Manner; form of being or acting.

Flowers, in such sort worn, can neither be smelt nor seen well by those that wear them. — Hooker, Ecclesiastical Polity.

That I may laugh at her in equal sort As she doth laugh at me, and makes my pain her sport.

Milton, Paradise Lost, ix. 816.

3. Degree of any quality.

I have written the more boldly unto you, in many sort, as putting you in mind. — Romans, xv. 16.

I shall not be wholly without pain, if in some sort I have copied his style. — Dr. Ken.

4. Class, or order of persons.

The one being a thing that belongeth generally unto all; the other, such as none but the wise and more judicious sort can perform. — Hooker, Ecclesiastical Polity.

I have bought Golden opinions from all sorts of people.

Shakespeare, Macbeth, i. 7.

The first sort by their own suggestion fell. Milton, Paradise Lost, iii. 129.

Hospitality to the better sort, and charity to the poor, two virtues that are never exercised so well as when they accompany each other. — Bishop Atterbury, Sermons.

5. Company; knot of people.

Mine eyes are full of tears: I cannot see; And yet salt water blinds them not so much, But they can see a sort of truth here.

Shakespeare, Richard II., iv. 1.

A sort of lusty shepherd's drive. — Waller.

6. Rank; condition above the vulgar. Obsolete.

A signior Montanto returned from the wars? — I know none of that name, truly; there was none such in the army of my sort. — Shakespeare, Much Ado about Nothing, i. 1.

7. Lot. Latinism.

Make a lottry, And by decree let blockish Ajax Draw the sort to fight with Hector.

Shakespeare, Troilus and Cressida, i. 3.

Sort. v. n.

1. Separate into distinct and proper classes. I come to thee for charitable services, To sort our nobles from our common men.

Shakespeare, Henry V., iv. 7.

A piece of cloth made of white and black threads, though the whole appear neither white nor black, but grey; yet each remains what it was before, if the threads were pulled asunder, and sorted each colour by itself. — Boyle.

Shall-did have been, by some of the ancients, compared and sorted with the insects. — Bacon, Natural and Experimental History.

With this desire, she hath a native might To find out every truth, if she had time; The innumerable efforts to sort right, And by degrees from cause to cause to climb.

Sir J. Davis, Immortality of the Soul.

The rays which differ in refrangibility may be parted and sorted from one another, and that either by refraction, or by reflection. — Sir I. Newton, On Opticks.

But grant that actions best discover man, Take the most strong, and sort them as you can: The few that glare, each character must mark: You balance not the many in the dark.

Pope, Moral Essays, l. 110.

2. Reduce to order from a state of confusion. These they sorted into their several times and places; none to begin the service of God with, and none to end; none to be interposed between the divine remains of the law and prophets. — Hooker, Ecclesiastical Polity.

Let me not be light; For a light wife doth make a heavy husband; And never be Bassanio so from me; But God sort all!

Shakespeare, Merchant of Venice, v. 1.

3. Conjoin; put together in distribution. For, when she sorts things present with things past, And thereby things to come doth oft foresee; When she doth doubt at first, and chuse at last, These acts her own, without her body be.

Sir J. Davis, Immortality of the Soul.

(With out). Cull; choose; select. Send his mother to his father's house, That he may sort her out a worthy spouse.

Chapman.

Sort. v. n.

1. Be joined with others of the same species. Nor do metals only sort and herd with metals in the earth, and minerals with minerals; but both in common together. — Woodward.

2. Consort; join. The illiberality of parents towards their children makes them base, and sort with any company. — Bacon.

3. Suit; fit. A man cannot speak to a son but as a father; whereas a friend may speak as the case requires, and not as it sorteth with the person. — Bacon.

They are happy whose nature sort with their vocations. — Id.

Among unequals, what society Can sort, what harmony, or true delight? Which must be mutual, in proportion due, Given and received. Milton, Paradise Lost, viii. 383.

The Creator calling forth by name His mighty angels, gave them several charge, As sorted best with present things. — Id., s. 619.

For different styles with different subjects sort, As several garbs with country, town, and court.

Pope, Essay on Criticism, ii. 322.

4. Terminate; issue. Obsolete.

It sorted not to any light, but to a retreat. — Bacon.

Princes cannot gather this fruit, except they raise some persons to be companions; which many times sorteth to inconvenience. — Id.

5. Have success; terminate in the effect desired. Obsolete.

The slips of their vines have been brought into Spain, but they have not sorted to the same purpose as in their native country. — Abbot, Description of the World.

It was tried in a blown bladder, whereunto flesh and a flower were put, and it sorted not; for dry bladders will not blow, and new bladders further putrefaction. — Bacon.

6. Fall out. Obsolete.

And so far as I find it did so sort, As thou their jangling I could not a sport.

Shakespeare, A Midsummer Night's Dream, iii. 2.

Sortable. adj. Suitable; befitting. Rare.

The flourishing state of learning, sortable to so excellent a princess. — Bacon, Advancement of Learning, b. i.

Nothing sortable either to his disposition or breeding. — South, Letters, ii. 6.

Sortal. adj. A coined word with the sense as suggested in the extract. It has not gained currency.

As things are ranked under names, into sorts or species, only as they agree to certain abstract ideas, the essence of each sort comes to be nothing, but the idea which the sort, if I may so call it, sort, as I do general from 'genus,' name stands for. — Locke.

Sórtance. s. Suitableness; agreement. Rare.
Here doth he wish his person, with such power
As might hold sórtances with his quality,
The which he hold not levy.

Shakespeare, Henry IV. Part II. iv. 1.
Sórtilege. s. [Fr.; Lat. sortilegium.] Act or practice of drawing lots.

Sórtilegious. adj. Relating to sortilege.
Rare.

Horrace makes the blood of frogs an ingredient in sortilegious charms.—Daubuz, On the Revelations edited by P. Lancaster, p. 46.

Nor were they made to decide horrid questions, or sortilegious demands.—Swan, Speculum Mundi, 313. (Ord MS.)

Sórtilegy. s. Sortilege.

Even in sortilegy, and matters of greatest uncertainty, there is a settled and provided course of effect.—Sir T. Browne, Religio Medici, § 18.

Sórtling. verbal use. Arrangement.

The number of simple ideas, that make the nominal essence of the lowest species, or first sorting of individuals, depends on the mind of man.—
Locke.

Sórtition. s. [Lat. sortitio.] Selection or appointment by lot.

The soldiers have parted thy garments, and cast lots upon thy seamless coat: those poor spoils cannot so much enrich them as glorify thee, whose Scriptures are fulfilled by their barbarous sortitions.
—Bishop Hall, Contemplations, v. iv.

Soss. v. n. [see Souse.] Sit lazily on a chair; fall at once into a chair.

The winter sky began to frown,
Poor Stella must pack off to town;
From wholesome exercise and air,
To nursing in an easy chair. Swift.

Soss. s. See Souse.

Sot. s. [A.S.; Provincial German solt, zol;
Fr. sot, m.; sotte, f.]

1. Fool; foolish fellow; blockhead; dull ignorant stupid fellow; dolt.

Of the loyal service of his son
When I inform'd him, then he'll call me sot,
And told me I had turn'd the wrong side out.
Shakespeare, King Lear, iv. 2.

Either our brains
Were crack'd of kitchen trails, or his description
Proved us unspaking sots. Id., Cymbeline, v. 5.
Sot-blinded sots, that creep
In dirt, and never saw the wonders of the deep.

Tell him no history or antiquity can match his comet; and presently the sot, because he knows neither history nor antiquity, shall begin to measure himself by himself, which is the only sure way for him not to fall short.—South, Sermons.

Were you the son of some rich tester,
Thirst starved and dammed himself to make his heir,
Left nought to do, but to lute the sot,
And spend with ease what he with pains had got;
'Twere easy to advise how you might live,
Nor would there need instruction then to give.
Oldham, A Satire addressed to a Friend.

2. One stupified by drinking.

Every sign
That calls the staring sot to nasty wine.
Lord Roscommon.

A early ill-bred lord,
That chides and scolds her up at every word:
A brutal sot; who, while she holds his head,
With drunken filth belabours the nuptial bed.
Granville.

Sot. v. n. Besot: (this latter the common word).

I am besotted.
Utterly lost; my virgin's faith has fled me,
Ben Jonson and Fletcher, Two Noble Kinsmen.
I hate to see a brave bold fellow besotted,
Made sour and senseless, turn'd to whey by love;
A drizzling hero, fit for a romance.
Dryden, Spanish Friar.

Sot. v. n. Tiptle to stupidity. Rare.

He continued to dose and sot, and tell a tedious story, as most other landlords usually do.—Goldsmith, Envy, xix.

Sótted. part. adj. Besotted; stupified.

The potion works not on the part design'd
But turns his brain and stupifies his mind;
'The sótted mom'-eaf pages.
Dryden, Translation of Juvenal, vi. 707.

Sóttish. adj.

1. Dull; stupid; senseless; infatuate; dolt-ish.

All's but naught:
Patience is sóttish, and impatience does
Become a dog that's mad.

Shakespeare, Antony and Cleopatra, iv. 13.
Upon the report of his approach, more than half fell away and dispersed; the residue, being more desperate or more sóttish, did abide in the field, of whom many were slain.—Sir J. Hayward.

He gain'd a king,
Ahas his sóttish conqueror.

Milton, Paradise Lost, l. 471.
'Tis sóttish to offer at things that cannot be brought about.—Sir R. L. Estrange.

The inhabitants of Soudania, in Africk, are no sóttish and grossly ignorant, that they differ very little from brutes.—Bishop Wilkins.
How ignorant are sóttish pretenders to astrology!
—Swift.

2. Dull with intemperance.

Sóttishly. adv. In a sóttish manner; dully; senselessly.

Northumberland, sóttishly mad with over-great fortune, procured the king, by his letters patent under the great seal, to appoint the lady Jane to succeed him in the inheritance of the crown.—*Sir J.
Hayward.*

Atheism is impudent in pretending to philosophy, and superstitious sóttishly ignorant in fancying that the knowledge of nature tends to irreligion.— Glauville.

No sóttishly to lose the purest pleasures and comforts of this world, and forego the expectation of immortality in another; and so desperately to run the risk of dwelling with everlasting burnings, plainly discovers itself to be the most pernicious
folly and deplorable madness in the world.—Bentley.

Sóttishness. s. Attribute suggested by Sóttish.

1. Dullness; stupidity; insensibility.

Sometimes plégu putrifies into sóttishness, sottishness into an ignorance or neglect of all religion.
Hulph.

Few consider what a degree of sóttishness and confirmed ignorance men may sin themselves into.
—South, Sermons.

The first part of the text, the folly and sóttishness of atheism, will come home to their case; since they make such a noisy pretence to wit and sagacity.—
Bentley.

2. Drunken stupidity.

No sober temperate person can look with any complacency upon the drunkenness and sóttishness of his neighbour.—South, Sermons.

Sóttweed. s. Name for tobacco.

I scarce had fill'd a pipe of sóttweed,
And by the candle made it hot-weed,
Milfordus Reluctans. (Nares by H. and W.)

Sóuchy. s. [Dutch, zoutje, zoo, sie, sóle—a boiling, from root of souden.] Generally, in English, preceded by water; water-souchy being a dish consisting of fish (flounders, perch, &c.) stewed in their own liquor, and flavoured with herbs (marshy-root, &c.)

Sough. s. [see Suck.]

1. Subterraneous drain.

Yet could not such mines, without great pains and charges, if at all, be wrought: the dells would be so flow'd with waters, it being impossible to make any cuts or soughs to drain them, that no gins or machines could suffice to lay and keep them dry.—
Key, On the Wisdom of God manifested in the Works of the Creation.

As the first element in a compound.

Another was found in sinking a sough-pit.—Woodward.

2. Sound.

The well-greased wherry now had got between,
And bade her farewell sough unto the burden.
H. Jonson, Epigrams.

Sough. v. n. [see Suck.] Whistle: (applied to the wind).

Soughing. part. adj. Sounding; sighing.

A noise like that of a great soughing wind.—History of the Royal Society, iv. 225.

The wavy swell of the soughing reeds.
Keats, The Dying Swan.

Sóújee. s. Variety of Senolina used as food for infants.

Soul. s. [A S. saoul, sawel.]

1. Immaterial and immortal spirit of man.

When death was overcome, he opened heaven as well to the believing Gentiles as Jews; heaven till then was no receptacle to the souls of either.—
Hooker, Ecclesiastical Polity.

Perhaps for want of food the soul may pine;
But that were strange, since all things had and good.

Since all God's creatures, mortal and divine,
Since God himself, is her eternal food.
Sir J. Davies, Immortality of the Soul.

He remembered that of the promises, words, and on this which by public authority had passed for concluding this marriage, that these being religious bonds betwixt God and their souls, could not by any public act of state be dissolved.—Sir J. Hayward.
So natural is the knowledge of the soul's immortality, and of some 'ubi' for the future reception of it, that we find some tract or other of it in almost barbarous nations.—Hogbin.

2. Intellectual principle.

Eloquence the soul, song charms the sense.
Milton, Paradise Lost, ii. 586.

The eyes of our souls only then begin to see, when our bodily eyes are closing.—Law.

3. Vital principle.

Thou almost mak'st me waver in my faith,
To hold opinion with Pythagoras,
That souls of animals infuse themselves
Into the trunks of men.

Shakespeare, Merchant of Venice, iv. 1.
Thou sun, of this great world both eye and soul.
Milton, Paradise Lost, v. 171.

Join voices, all ye living souls! ye birds,
That singing up to heaven-gate ascend,
Bear on your wings, and in your notes, his praise.
Id., v. 197.

In common discourse and writing, we leave out the words vegetative, sensitive, and rational; and make the word soul serve for all these principles.—
Watts.

4. Spirit; essence; quintessence; principal part.

He is the very soul of bounty.—Shakespeare, Timon of Athens, i. 2.

Charity, the soul of all the rest.
Milton, Paradise Lost, xii. 584.

5. Interior power.

There is some soul of goodness in things evil,
Would men observingly disc it out.
Shakespeare, Henry V., iv. 1.

6. Familiar appellation expressing the qualities of the mind.

Three wenchers where I stood cried 'Alas, good soul!'—Shakespeare, Julius Caesar, i. 2.
This is a poor mad soul; and she says up and down the town, that her eldest son is like you.—*Id.,
Henry IV. Part II.*, ii. 1.

The poor mad soul shuning by a yew-tree,
King all a green willow:
Her hand on her bosom, her head on her knee.

Id., Othello, iv. 3, song.
Keep the poor soul no longer in suspense,
Your charge is such as does not need defence.

Dryden.
Unenlarged souls are disgusted with the wonders of the microscope, discovering animals which equal not a pepper-corn.—Watts.

My dear Bantam, said the Downy Lady Simpson, exclaiming, 'find us some new creature to make up this table; there's a good soul.' Mr. Pickwick happened to be looking another way at the moment, so her ladyship nodded her head towards him, and frowned expressively.—Dickens, Pickwick Papers, ch. xxv.

7. Human being.

The moral is the case of every soul of us.—*Sir E.
L'Estrange.*

It is a republic; there are in it a hundred bur-geois, and about a thousand souls. *Adrian, Traviata
in Italy.*

My state of health none care to learn;
My life is here no soul's concern. Swift.

8. Active power.

Earth, air, and seas, through empty space would roll,
And heaven would fly before the driving soul.
Dryden, Translation of the Kueich, l. 88.

9. Spirit; fire; grandeur of mind.

That he wants alcohol, he must confess;
But not a soul, to give our arms success.
Young, Love of Fame, iii. 140.

10. Intelligent being in general.

Every soul in heaven shall bend the knee.
Milton, Paradise Lost, v. 816.

Soul. v. n. Afford suitable sustenance.

I have, sweet wench, a piece of cheese, as good as both my cheese,
And bread and widdings souling well.

Warner, Allion's England.
Soul-bell. s. Passing-bell. Obsolete.

We call them soul-bells, for that they signify the departure of the soul, not for that they help the passage of the soul.—Bishop Hall, Apology against the Brownists.

Soul-diseased. adj. Diseased in mind;
soul-sick.

[He] had great insight
In that disease of grievous conscience,
And well could cure the same; his name was Peterence;
Who, coming to that soul-diseased knight,
Could hardly him intreat to tell his grief.
Spenser, Faerie Queen.

Sóúled. adj. Furnished with mind.

Griphus, and still tenacious of thy hold, Wouldst thou the Grecian chiefs, though largely sóú'd.

Should give the prizes they had gain'd before?
Dryden, Translation of the First Book of the Iliad, 166.

SOUL

Soul-shot. s. [shot, from A.S. seal.] Something paid for a soul's requiem among the Roman Catholics.

In the Roman times there was a funeral duty to be paid, called 'pennia sepulchralis et symbolum anime,' and in Saxon soul-shot. — Agliffe, Parergon Juris Canonici.

Soul-sick. adj. Diseased in mind.

Man kind is mortally soul-sick. — Bishop Hall, Select Thoughts, § 61.

I am soul-sick,
And wither with the fear of one condemn'd,
Till I have got your pardon.

Beaumont and Fletcher, Maid's Tragedy.

Soulless. adj. [the l sounded twice, as well as doubled in the spelling.]

1. Without soul; without life.

Their bodies in the very outward work itself, being a lifeless head and soulless body. — Sir E. Stanley, State of Religion, X. 4; ed. 1605.

Clay, not dead but soulless,
Though no man would choose thee;
An immortal no less

Desires not to refuse thee,
Clay thou art, but unto spirit
All clay is of equal merit.

Byron, The Deformed Transformed, l. 1.

2. Mean; low; spiritless.

Slave, soulless villain, dog, O rarely base!
Shakey ear, Antony and Cleopatra, v. 2.

Sound. adj. [A.S. sund, genend.]

1. Healthy; hearty; not morbid; not diseased; not hurt.

He hath received him safe and sound. — Luke, xv. 27.

I am fall'n out with my more headier will,
To take the indisposed and sickly fit
For the sound man. — Shakespeare, King Lear, ii. 1.

A heart as sound as a bell, and his
Is the clapper; for what his heart thinks, his tongue speaks. — Id., Much Ado about Nothing, iii. 2.

We can preserve
Unhurt our minds, and understanding sound,
Milton, Paradise Lost, vi. 443.

The king in person visits all around Comforts the sick, congratulates the sound;
Honours the fettered chiefs.

Dryden, Palamon and Arcite, iii. 720.

But Cajs and the rest of sounder mind,
The fatal present to the flames design'd,
Or to the deep.

Id., Translation of the Æneid, ii. 461.

When a word, which originally signifies any particular object, is attributed to several other objects, on account of some evident reference or relation to the original idea, this is peculiarly called a sonorous word; so a sound or healthy pulse, a sound digestion, sound sleep, are all so called with reference to a sound and healthy constitution; but if you speak of sound doctrine, or sound speech, it is by way of resemblance to health, and the words are metaphorical. — Watts, Logic.

2. Right; not erroneous; orthodox.

Whom although to know his life, and joy to make mention of his name; yet our soundest knowledge is to know that we know him not as indeed he is, neither can know him; and our safest eloquence conveying him is silence. — Hooker, Ecclesiastical Polity.

Let my heart be sound in thy statutes. — Psalms, cxix. 30.

Sound, and yet not trivial, catechetick institution. — Bilton.

The rules are sound and useful, and may serve your devotion. — A rebishop Wake.

Their old theory, sound or unsound, was at least complete and coherent. — Marsden, History of Eng- land, ch. 2.

3. Stout; strong; lusty.

The men are very strong and able of body; and therefore either give sound strokes with their clubs whenever they fight, or else shoot strong shots with their bows. — Abbot.

4. Valid; not failing.

They reserved their titles, tenures, and dignities whole and sound to the selves. — Spenser, View of the State of Ireland.

5. Fast; hearty; (applied to sleep).

New waked from soundest sleep,
Soft on the flow'ry herb I found me laid
In balmy sweat. — Milton, Paradise Lost, viii. 253.

Used adverbially. Soundly; heartily; completely fast.

The messenger approaching to him spake,
But his waste words return'd to him in vain;
No sound he slept that nought might him awake.

Spenser, Faerie Queene.

Sound. s. [A.S. sund = 1. swimming; 2.

water that can be crossed by swimming.]
Narrow arm of the sea.

The Sound of Denmark, where ships pay toll. — Camden.

S'OUN

Behold I come, sent from the Stygian sound,
As a dire vapour that had cleft the ground,
To invader with the night, and blast the day.
B. Jonson, Catiline's Conspiracy, l. 1.

In the plural. Swimming-bladder: (us, con- sounds).

Sound. s. [Fr. sonde.] Probe; instrument used by chirurgeons to feel what is out of reach of the fingers.

The patient being laid on a table, pass the sound
till it meet with some resistance. — Sharp, Surgery.

Sound. v. a.

1. Search with a plummet; try depth.

In this secret there's a gulph, which while we live we shall never sound. — Hooker, Ecclesiastical Polity.

You are, Hastings, much too shallow
To sound the bottom of the after-times.
Shakespeare, Henry IV. Part II. iv. 2.

2. Try; examine: (in Surgery, with a sound or probe).

Has he never before sounded you in this business?
— Shakespeare, King Lear, i. 2.

Invite these lords, and these he meant to sound,
Daniel.

I was in jest,
And by that offer meant to sound your breast.
Dryden.

I've sounded my Numidian, man by man,
And find 'm ripe for a revolt. — Addison, Cato.

3. Try with the sounding-line.

The shipmen deemed that they drew near to some country, and sounded, and found it near twenty fathoms. — Acts, xxvii. 27.

Sound. s. [Fr. son; Lat. sonus.]

1. Anything audible; noise; that which is perceived by the ear.

Heaps of huge words upreared hideously
With horrid sound, though having little sense,
And thereby wanting due measure,
Have marr'd the ears of woody pious,
And made a monster of their fantasy. — Spenser.

Once, sister, cheer we up his spirits,
And show the best of our delights;
I'll charm the air to give a sound,
While you perform your antick round.

Shakespeare, Macbeth, iv. 1.

Dash a stone against a stone in the bottom of the water, and it maketh a sound: so a long pole struck upon gravel in the bottom of the water maketh a sound. — Bacon, Natural and Experimental History.

The warlike sound of trumpet's tone.
Milton, Paradise Lost, l. 351.

Save yourself, there breathes not on the ground
One like your father for a silver sound.

Dryden, The Cuck and the Fox.

That which is conveyed into the brain by the ear is called sound; though, till it affect the perceptive part, it is nothing but motion. — Locke.

2. Mere empty noise opposed to meaning.

He contented himself with dispirited and generous, which might make no ill sound in m ans. — Locke.

Let us consider this proposition as to its meaning;
for it is the sense and not sound that must be the principle. — Id.

O I wish I had it for sound at such expense?
But then, she saves it in her bills for sense. — Young.

3. In Surgery. Examine with a sound or probe.

Sound. v. n.

1. Make a noise; emit a noise.

His trumpet, heard in Orbi since perhaps
When that descended, and perhaps once more
To sound at general down. — Milton, Paradise Lost, xi. 73.

2. Exhibit by sound, or likeness of sound.

Why do you start and seem to fear
Things that do sound so fair?

Shakespeare, Macbeth, l. 3.

This relation sounds rather like a cynical dream than a philosophical truth. — Bishop Wilkins, Math- ematical Magick.

3. Be conveyed in sound.

From you sounded out the word of the Lord. —
1 Thessalonians, i. 8.

Sound. v. a.

1. Cause to make a noise; play on.

And many nymphs among them flocking round,
And many tribuns, which their horns did sound,
Spenser.

Michael bid sound
The archangel trumpet.
Milton, Paradise Lost, vi. 202.

Mimnus lay extended on the shore —
Son of the god of wind; none so renew'd
The warrior trumpet in the field to sound;
With breathing brass to kindle fires alarm,
And rouse to dare their fate in honourable arms.
Dryden, Translation of the Æneid, vi. 242.

SOUN

{ SOUL-SHOT SOUNDNESS

2. Deceived or direct by a sound.

They being told there was small hope of
To be expected to their evils from hence,
Were willing at the first to give an ear
To any thing that sounded liberty.

B. Jonson, Catiline's Conspiracy.

Once Jove from Ida did both hosts survey,
And, when he pleased to thunder, part the fray;
Here heav'n in vain that kind retreat should sound,
The louder cannon had the thunder drown'd.

Waller.

3. Celebrate by sound.

Thou art, of this great world both eye and sail,
Acknowledge him thy greater, sound his praise.
Milton, Paradise Lost, v. 171.

Soundboard. s. Board which propagates
the sound in organs.

Try it without any soundboard along, only harp-wise at one end of the string. — Bacon, Natural and Experimental History.

As in an organ, from one blast of wind,
To many a row of pipes the soundboard breathes.
Milton, Paradise Lost, i. 708.

Sounding. part. adj. Sonorous; having a magnificent sound.

Obsolete words may then be revived, when more sounding or more significant than those in practice.
— Dryden.

Sounding. verb. abs.

1. Act of trying the depth of the water with a plummet.

2. Act of emitting a sound; sound emitted.

The sounding again of the mountains [in the margin, the echo]. — Eschiel, vii. 7.

Sounding-line. s. Line used to take soundings.

Beyond this we have no more a positive distinct notion of infinite space; than a mariner has of the depth of the sea, where having let down a large portion of his sounding-line, he reaches no bottom. —
Locke.

Soundings. s. pl. Those parts of the ocean lying near land, where a sounding line will reach the bottom.

Soundless. adj.

1. Too deep to be reached by the plummet;
not to be fathomed.

Your shallows help will hold me up ahead,
While he upon your soundless deep doth ride.
Shakespeare, Sonnets, lxxx.

You could make shift to paint an eye,
An ear, or nose, or soundless pit.

B. Jonson, Underwoods.

2. Without sound.

They rob the Hybla bees,
And leave them honeyless. — Not stungless too? —
O yes, and soundless too;
For you have stopt their buzzing.

Shakespeare, Julius Caesar, v. 1.

Soundly. adv. In a sound manner.

1. Healthily; heartily; stoutly; strongly.

When Duncan is asleep,
Will he rather shall this hard day's journey
Soundly invite him. — Shakespeare, Macbeth, i. 7.

They did play,
My feet and hands with cords, and to the mast
With other halbers made me soundly fast.

Chapman, Translation of the Odyssey.

Who had so often in your aid
So many ways been soundly paid.

Butler, Hudibras.

Have no concern,
Provided Punch, for there's the jest,
Be soundly maul'd, and plague the rest.

Swift.

2. Truly; rightly.

The wisest are always the readiest to acknowledge, that soundly to judge of a law is the weight-iest thing which any man can take upon him. —
Hooker, Ecclesiastical Polity.

The doctrine of the church of England, expressed in the thirty-nine articles, is so soundly and orthodoxly settled, as cannot be questioned without extreme danger to our religion. — Bacon.

3. Fast; closely; (used of sleeping).

Now when that idle dream was to him brought,
Unto that often sought he had him fly,
Where he slept soundly, void of evil thought.

Spenser, Faerie Queene.

When the succession of ideas ceases, our perception of duration ceases with it, which every one experiences whilst he sleeps soundly. — Locke.

Soundness. s. Attribute suggested by Sound.

1. Health; heartiness.

I would I had that corporal soundness now,
As when thy father and myself in friendship
First tried our soldiership.

Shakespeare, All's well that ends well, i. 2.

2. Truth; rectitude; incorrupt state.

In the end, very few excepted, all became subject to the way of time; other odds there was none amongst them, having only that some fell sooner away, and some later from the soundness of belief.—Hunter, Ecclesiastical Polity.

Early is injudicious in his politics; but he hath given proof of his soundness in religion.—Swift.

As the health and strength, or weakness of our bodies, is very much owing to their methods of treating us when we were young; so the soundness or folly of our minds are not less owing to those first tempers and ways of thinking, which we eagerly received from the love, tenderness, authority, and constant conversation of our mothers.—Locke.

3. Strength; solidity.

This presupposed, it may stand then very well with strength and soundness of reason, even thus to answer.—Hunter, Ecclesiastical Polity.

Soup. v. a. [sup.] Breathe out; draw out.

We pronounce, by the confession of strangers, as sweetly, smoothly and moderately, as any of the northern nations of the world, who are noted to soup their words out of the throat with fat and full spirits.—Camden, Remains.

Soup. v. n. Sweep; pass with pomp.

He vaults his voice upon an hired stage, With high-set steps and princely carriage, Now souping in side robes of royalty.

Bishop Hall, Satires, l. 3.

methinks I hear sweet Martines cry, Souping along in war's foreign muskerie, By Lais starrie front he'll forthwith die!

Murston, Scourge of Villany, iii. 8: 1539.

Soup. s. [Fr. soupe.] Strong decoction of flesh for the table.

Soupy morsels in strong ragouts are found, And in the soup the ally snail is drowned.

Gay, Trivia, li. 201.

Let the cook dash the back of the footman's new livery, or, when he is going up with a dish of soup, let her follow him softly with a ladle full. Swift, Directions to Servants, Advice to the Cook.

In whatever vessel soup is ladled, we that it is perfectly clean, and let the inside of the cover and the rim be equally so. Wash the meat and prepare the vegetables with great nicety before they are laid into it; and be careful to keep it always closely shut when it is on the fire. Never on any account set the soup by in it, but strain it off at once into a clean pan, and fill the stock-pot immediately with water; pursue the same plan with all soups and sauces; and directly they are emptied.—Miss Acton, Modern Cookery, p. 33: 1865.

Soup-plate. s. [the p double in sound as well as in spelling.] Plate for holding soup.

The dessert was splendid. . . . Quarts of almonds; dozens of cran-ies; pounds of raisins; stacks of biscuits; soup-plates full of nuts.—Dickens, Martin Chuzzlewit, ch. ix.

Sour. adj. [A S. sur.]

1. Acid; austere; pungent on the palate with astringency, as vinegar, or unripe fruit.

Their drink is sour.—Horace, iv. 18.
All sour things, as vinegar, provoke appetite.—Bacon.

But let the brands of leucures be fixed, Not things of disagreeing natures mixed, Not sweet with sour, nor birds with serpents join'd.

Dryden.

2. Harsh of temper; crabbed; peevish; morose; severe.

He was a scholar, Lofly and sour to them that loved him not.

Shakespeare, Henry VIII, iv. 2.

A man of pleasant and popular conversation, rather free than sour and reserved.—Sir H. Wallon, Life of the Duke of Buckingham.

3. Afflictive; painful.

Let me embrace these sour adversities; For wise men say it is the wisest course.

Shakespeare, Henry VI, Part III, iii. 1.

4. Expressing discontent.

He said a sour thing to Laura the other day.—Talbot.

Sullen and sour, with discontented men Jordan frown'd.—Pope.

The lord treasurer often looked on me with a sour countenance.—Swift.

Sour. s. Acid substance.

A thousand sours to temper with one sweet, To make it seem more dear and dainty. Spenser.

Sour. s. 4.

1. Make acid.

His angelic nature had none of that carnal leaven which ferments to the souring of ours.—Dr. H. More, Ideas of Christian Philosophy.

Thus kneaded up with milk, the new made man A kingdom o'er his kindred world began;

Till knowledge misapply'd, misunderstood, And pride of empire, sour'd his balmy blood.

Dryden.

One passion, with a different turn, Makes wit inflame or anger burn; So the sun's heat, with different powers, Ripens the grape, the liquor sours.

Swift.

2. Make harsh, or unkindly.

Tufts of grass sour land.—Mortimer, Husbandry.

3. Make uneasy; make less pleasing.

Hail, great king!

To sour your happiness, I must report

The queen is dead. Shakespeare, Cymbeline, v. 3.

He brought envy, malice, and ambition into Paradise, which soured to him the sweetness of the place.—Dryden.

4. Make discontented.

Not my own disgrace

Hath ever made me sour my patient cheek,

Or bend one wrinkle on my sovereign's face.

Shakespeare, Richard II, li. 1.

Three crabbed months had sour'd themselves to that

Ere I could make thee open thy white hand.

Id., Winter's Tale, l. 2.

Sour. v. n.

1. Become acid.

Asses' milk, when it sours in the stomach, and when turned sour, will purge strongly.—Arbuthnot, On Diet.

2. Grow peevish or crabbed.

They keep out melancholy from the virtuous, and hinder the hatred of vice from souring into severity.

—Addison.

If I turn my eyes from them, or seem displeased, they sour upon it.—Spektator.

Source. s. [Fr.]

1. Spring; fountain; head.

Knows that rim

Behind the hidden sources of the Nile.

Addison, Cato.

2. Original; first cause.

This second source of men, while yet but few,

With some regard to what is just and right,

Shall lead their lives.

Milton, Paradise Lost, xii. 13.

This is the true source and original of this mischief.—South, Sermons.

Of himself is none;

But that eternal Infinite, and One,

Who never did begin, who never can end,

On him all beings, as their source, depend.

Dryden, State of Innocence, li. 1.

3. First producer.

Famous Greece,

That source of art and cultivated thought,

Which they to Rome, and Romans thither brought.

Wallar.

Souring. verbal abs. Turning sour.

Looking at me with a double squeeze of souring

in his aspect, 'if the old definition be true,' said he,

'that acidity is the distinguishing characteristic of a rational creature, the English are the most distinguished for rationality of any people I ever knew.'

—Smollett, Description of Humphrey Clinker.

Sourish. adj. Somewhat sour.

By distillation we obtain a sourish spirit, which will dissolve coral.—Boyle.

Sourkrout. s. [German, sauerkrout.] Cabbage, cut up, salted, and allowed to ferment.

You give me a dish of a different description.—

'Umph! What is it?—Sourkrout, you old crab.—G.

Colman the younger, The Poor Gentleman, iii. 1.

Sourly. adv. In a sour manner.

1. With acidity; with austerity.

To this replied the stern Athenian prince,

And sourly smiled.

Deplan, Palamon and Arcite, li. 302.

2. Painfully; discontentedly.

As bad dispositions run into worse habits, the evening doth not crown but sourly conclude the day.

Sir T. Browne, Christian Morals, ii. 4.

Sourness. s. Attribute suggested by Sour.

1. Acidity; austerity of taste.

Sourness consisteth in some grossness of the body, and incorporation both make the mixture of the body more equal, which induceth a milder taste.—

Bacon, Natural and Experimental History.

'Tis spring, like youth, it yields an acid taste;

But summer doth, like age, the sourness waste.

Sir J. Denham, Of Old Age, pt. iii.

He knew to rank his luck in even rows,

And tane to plumb the sourness of the sloes.

Dryden, Translation of the Georgics, iv. 213.

Of acid or sour, one has a notion from taste, sour-

ness being one of those simple ideas which one cannot describe.—Arbuthnot.

Has life no sourness, drawn so near its end?

Pope.

2. Asperity; harshness of temper.

Pelagius carped at the curious neatness of men's apparel in those days, and, through the sourness of his disposition, spoke somewhat too hardly thereof.—Hunter, Ecclesiastical Polity.

Her religion is equally free from the weakness of superstition and the sourness of enthusiasm: it is not of an uncomfortable melancholy nature.—Addison, Freeholder.

Take care that no sourness and moroseness mingle with our serious frame of mind.—Nelson.

Sourrop. s. West Indian fruit so called, of the apple kind.

The sourrop grows in several parts of the Spanish West-Indies, where it is cultivated for its fruits.—Miller, Gardener's Dictionary.

Sous. s. French coin so called, of the value of an English halfpenny.

Ah! Hocus, Hocus! I know thee; not a sous to save me from gail, I trow.—Arbuthnot, History of John Bull, xvi. 1. (Ord MS.)

Souze. s. [entered in Wedgwood as Source, Souze; showing that the connection of the word is with sauce, from salsus = salt.]

1. Pickle made of salt.

2. Anything kept parboiled in salt-pickle.

And he that can rear up a pig in his house,

Hath cheaper his bacon, and sweeter his souze.

Tusser, Five Hundred Points of good Husbandry.

They were seething of puddings and souze.

Old Ballad, King and Miller of Mansfield.

I am sent to lay

An imposition upon souze and puddings,

Pasties and penny custards!

Beaumont and Fletcher, Tamer Tamed.

3. Ear; (most properly that of a hog, from its being frequently pickled or souzed.)

Souze. v. a. Parboil; steep in pickle.

If I be not ashamed of my soldiers, I am a souzed

gurnet!—Shakespeare, Henry IV, Part I, iv. 2.

Kill swine and souze 'em,

And eat 'em when we have bread.

Beaumont and Fletcher, The Prophetess.

Oil, though it stink, they drop by drop impart;

But souze the cabbage with a headless heart.

Pope, Imitations of Horace, b. ii. sat. 1.

Souze. v. a. [entered in Wedgwood as Sox, Souze. Souze, or soxs, is used to represent the sound either of a dull blow, or of dabbling in water. To souze or souze down is to sit suddenly down.] Throw into water.

They souzed me into the Thames with as little remorse as they draw blind puppies.—Shakespeare, Merry Wives of Windsor, iii. 5.

Who those were that run away,

And yet gave out 'twas had won the day;

Although the rabble souzed them for 't,

O'er head and ears in mud and dirt.

Butler, Hudibras.

They souzed me over head and ears in water when a boy, so that I am now one of the most care-lardined of the Ironsides.—Addison, Guediana.

Souze. v. n. Fall as a bird on its prey; fall with violence.

Both together unite,

And souze no more, that they the leviathan fry.

Spenser, Faerie Queene.

Thus on some silver swan, or timorous lure,

Jove's bird comes souzing down from upper air;

Her crooked talons trace the fearful prey,

Then out of sight she wars.

Dryden, Translation of the Æneid, ix. 761.

Jove's bird will souze upon the timorous lure,

And tender kids with his sharp talons tear.

J. Dryden, Jun. Translation of Juvenal, xiv. 104.

Through the lowest region I flew,

Souzing through falling laws of dew.

Shipman, Fragments of Henry III. of France: 1578.

Souze. v. a. Strike with sudden violence, as a bird strikes his prey.

The gallant monarch is in arms;

And like an eagle o'er his airy towers,

To souze annoyances that comes near his nest.

Shakespeare, King John, v. 2.

Souze. s. Violent attack, as of a bird striking his prey.

His fierce returning as a falcon fyre,

That once hath failed of her souze full measure,

Remounts again into the open ayre.

Spenser, Faerie Queene, li. 11. 36.

With that his murderous move he up did rear,

That seemed nought the souze thereof could bear,

And therewith smote at him with all his might.

Ibid. iv. 4. 44.

Her conscience and her fears creeping upon her,

Dead, as a fowl at souze, she'll sink.

Beaumont and Fletcher, Chances.

I escaped the souze of his contracted list.

Dr. H. More, Song of the Swail, l. 2. 56.

Souse. adv. With sudden violence.

Such make a private study of the green,
And looking full at every man they meet,
Run souse against his cheek, who stands amazed
To find they did not see, but only gaze. — Young.

Souter. s. [Fr. souffier = maker of sabots, i.e. clogs, shoes.] Shoemaker; cobbler.

I should be at least a souter. — A souter,
For that's a place more fitted to the nature.

Beaumont and Fletcher, Prothelaus.
A conqueror? a cobbler; hang him, souter.

[The resemblance to Latin sutor is a curious accident, made more curious that we are brought round to the same designation from other quarters. Fin, susari; Lat. sutor, are supposed by some to be corruptions of the German schuster. — Wedgwood, Dictionary of English Etymology.]

Souterly. adj. Like a cobbler; low; vulgar.

You souterly knives, show you all your manners at once? — Like will to like; 1687.

The hurb'n-bearing porter, souterly cobbler, and tollful labourer. — Florio, Translation of Montaigne,
p. 483.

Soterrain. s. [Fr.] Grotto or cavern in the ground.

Defence against extenuates of heat, as shade, grottoes, or soterrains, are necessary preservatives of health. — Arbuthnot.

South. s. [A.S. sūð] Part where the sun is to us at noon: (opposed to north).

East and west have no certain points of heaven, but north and south are fixed; and seldom the far southern people have invaded the northern, but contrariwise. — Bacon.

a. With the. Southern regions of the globe.

The queen of the south shall rise up in the judgment with this generation, and shall condemn it. — Matthew, x. 42.

From the north to call
Decreed winter, from the south to bring Solstitial summer's heat.

Milton, Paradise Lost, x. 654.

b. Wind that blows from the south.

All the contagion of the south light on you,
You slaves of Rome, you!

Shakespeare, Coriolanus, I. 4.

South. adj. Southern; meridional.

How thy arguments are warm, when he quieteth
the earth by the south wind. — Job, xxvii. 17.

One meal of delay more is a south sea discovery.
Shakespeare, As you like it, II. 2.

Meanwhile the south wind rose, and with black wings

Wide hovering, all the clouds together drove.

Milton, Paradise Lost, xi. 753.

South. adv.

His reclining lies half a mile at least,
South from the mighty power of the king.

Shakespeare, Richard III., v. 3.

2. From the south.

Such fruits as you appoint for long keeping, gather in a fair and dry day, and when the wind bloweth not south. — Bacon.

Southeast. s. Point between the east and south; point of winter sunrise.

The planting of trees warm upon a wall against the south, or southeast sun, doth hasten their ripening. — Jacobs.

The three seats of Italy, the Inferiour towards the south, the Iouian towards the south, and the Adriatic on the northern side, were commanded by three different nations. — Arbuthnot.

Southerly. *adj.1. Belonging to any of the points denominated from the south; not absolutely southern; lying towards the south.

Unto such as live under the Pole that is only north which is above them, that is only southerly which is below them. — Sir T. Browne.

Two other country bills give us a view of the most easterly, westerly, and southerly parts of England.
— Grant.

2. Coming from about the south.

I am but mad north northwest: when the wind is southerly, I know a hawk from a handsaw. — Shakespeare, Hamlet, II. 2.

Southern. *adj.1. Belonging to the south; meridional.

Frowning Aster seeks the southern sphere,
And rots with endless rain th' unwholesome year.

Dryden.

2. Lying towards the south.

Why mourn I not for thee,
And with th' southern clouds contend in tears?

Shakespeare, Henry VI. Part II., III. 2.

3. Coming from the south.

Men's bodies are heavier when southern winds blow thim when northern. — Jacobs, Natural and Experimental History.

Southerly. adv. Toward the south.

The sun cannot go more southerly from us, nor come more northerly towards us, in this than in former ages. — Hakewill, Apology, p. 162.

Southernmost. adj. Furthest towards the south.

Shenstone had resolution enough to take a journey of near seventy miles across the country, to visit his friend in the southernmost part of Oxfordshire.
— Graces, Recollections of Shenstone, p. 144.

Southernwood. s. Plant akin to the worm-woods, of the genus Artemisia.

Wine and water, in which are used southernwood, mulled, &c. — Barbier, Anatomy of Melancholy, p. 404.
Southernwood, a fragrant plant, used on the Continent for making beer, is the A. absinthium. — Linley, Vegetable Kingdom.

Southing. adj. Going towards the south.

I will conduct thee on thy way,
When next the southing sun illumines the day.

Dryden, Translation of the Georgics, IV. 576.

Southing. s. Tendency to the south.

Not far from hence, if I observed right
Thou'lt find the stars and polar light.
Nebulae. — Dryden, Translation of the Ecceid, v. 32.

Southmost. adj. Furthest toward the south.

Next Chemus, the obscure dædal of Moab's sons,
From Armo to Neha, and the wild
Of southmost Abarrim. — Milton, Paradise Lost, I. 401.

Southsay. s. Soothsay.

Glaucus, that was southsay understood.
Spenser, Faerie Queene, IV. 11, 13.

Southsaying. verbal abs. Soothsaying.

Young men, hovering between hope and fear, might easily be carried into the superstition of southsaying by names. — Caunders.

Southward. s. Southern direction.

Countries are more fruitful to the southward than in the northern parts. — Sir W. Raleigh, History of the World.

Southward, and Southwards. adv. Towards the south.

A prisoner in a room twenty foot square, is at liberty to walk twenty foot southward, but not northward. — Locke.

Southwest. s. Point between the south and west; winter sunset.

Phœbe . . . which is an haven of Crite, and lieth toward the southwest. — Ast., xxvii. 12.

The planting of trees warm upon a wall against the south, or southwest sun, doth hasten their coming on and ripening; and the southwest is found to be better than the south-east, though the southwest be the hotter coast. — Bacon, Natural and Experimental History.

Souvenance. s. [Fr.] Remembrance; me-memory.

If thou wilt renounce thy misdeance,
Life will I grant thee for thy valiance,
And all thy wrongs will wipe out of my souvenance.

Spenser

Gave wondrous great countenance to the knight,
That of his way he had no souvenance,
Nor care of vow'd revenge. — Id.

Souvenance. s. Souvenance.

To dwell in darkness without souvenance.

Spenser, Tracts of the Muses.

Sovereign. adj. [Fr. souverain; Italian, sovrano.]1. Supreme in power; having no superior.

An teaching bringeth us to know that God is supreme truth; so prayer testifieth that we acknowledge him our sovereign good. — Hooker, Ecclesiastical Polity.

You, my sovereign lady,

Causeless have had discourses on my head,

Shakespeare, Henry VI. Part II., III. 1.

None of us who use thy grace implure,
But hold the rank of sovereign queen before,
Till gibby chance, whose notice never bears
That mortal bliss should last for length of years,
Cast us down headlong from our high estate.

Dryden, Palamon and Arcite, I. 65.

Whether Esau, then, were a vassal to Jacob, and Jacob his sovereign prince by birthright, I leave the reader to judge. — Locke.

The Tuscan League, the Lombard League, renewed their approaches to more intimate relations with the Pope; but to the Tuscan the language of Innocent was that of a master. Their demands to choose their own rectors with a sovereign Prior to preside over their League, he answered by a summons to unqualified submission to him, as heir to the Countess Matilda, and sovereign of the whole Duchy of Tuscany. — Milman, History of Latin Christianity, II. c. 41.

2. Supremely efficacious; predominant over diseases.

A memorial of fidelity and zeal, a sovereign preservative of God's people from the venemous infection of heresy. — Hooker, Ecclesiastical Polity.

The most sovereign preservative in Gabon is hot emulck; and, to this preservative, of no better result than a horse-drench. — Shakespeare, Coriolanus,
II. 1.

Love-wounded Proteus.

Poor wounded name! My bowen, as a bed,
Shall lodge thee, till thy wound be thoroughly heal'd,
And thus I search it with a sovereign kiss.

Id., Two Gentlemen of Verona, I. 2.

A water we call water of paradise, by thim we do to it, is made very sovereign for health. — Baron.

Take the sunn starved men did draw
From parboill'd shoes and boots, and all the rest
Which were with any sovereign fatness blest.

Id.

Be cool, my friend, and hear my muse dispense
Some sovereign comforts drawn from common sense.
Greec, Translation of Juvenal, xiii. 154.

Sovereign. *s.1. Supreme lord. See Suzerain.

O, let my sovereign turn away his face,
And bid his ears a little while be deaf.

Shakespeare, Richard II., I. 1.

By my sovereign, and his fate, I swear,
Remember'd for faith in peace, for force in war,
Oft our alliance other lands desired.

Dryden, Translation of the Ecceid, vii. 321.

2. Formerly, a gold coin, called also a rose-noble and double rose-noble: first coined by Henry VII, and continued till the time of James I. inclusive. Now a new gold coin, of twenty shillings value.

Surrounding kings coined rose-nobles and double rose-golden, the great sovereign, with the said inscription Comden, Remains.

I gave him four sovereigns for his pains. — R. Jounson, Every Man out of his Humour.

Sovereignize. v. n. Exercise supreme power. Rare.

Her royalties were spacious, as sovereignizing over many towns and provinces. — Sir T. Herbert, Relation of some Years Travels in Africa and the Great Asia, p. 84.

Stured was the first that sovereignized over men.
— Id., p. 224.

Sovereignly. adv. In a sovereign manner; supremely; in the highest degree.

He was sovereignly lovely in himself. — Boyle.

Sovereignty. s. [Fr. souveraineté.] Supremacy; highest place; supreme power;

highest degree of excellence.

Give me pardon,

That I, your vassal, have rumply'd and pain'd
Your unknown sovereignty.

Shakespeare, Measure for Measure, v. 1.

Happy were England, would this virtuous prince Take on himself the sovereignty thereof.

Id., Richard III., III. 7.

To give laws unto a people, to institute magistrates and officers over them; to punish and pardon malefactors; to have the sole authority of making war and peace, are the true marks of sovereignty. — Sir J. Bacon.

A mighty hunter thence he shall be styled
Before the Lord; as in despite of heaven,
Or from heaven claiming second sovereignty.

Milton, Paradise Lost, xii. 33.

Nothing does so greatly envenom humour, as this piece of sovereignty over our brethren. —
Dr. H. More, Quinquagesima of the Tongue.

Jacob's own tree.

That holds the woods in awful sovereignty,
Requires a depth of lodging in the ground,
And next the lower skies a bed profound;
High as his topmost boughs to heaven ascend,
So low his roots to hell's dominion tend.

Dryden, Translation of the Georgics, II. 307.

I well foresee, whene'er thy suit I grant,
That I my much-loved sovereignty shall want,
Or like myself some other may be much;
And her new beauty may thy heart invade.

Id., State of Innocence, II. 3.

Let us above all things possess our souls with awful apprehensions of the majesty and sovereignty of God. — Reynolds.

Alexander's Grecian colonies in the Indies were almost exterminated by Sandrocottus; Seleucus recovered the sovereignty in some degree, but was forced to abandon to him the country about the Indus. — Arbuthnot, Tables of ancient Coins, Weights, and Measures.

Sow. s. [see Swine.]1. Female pig; female of a boar.

Boars have great fancies, sows much less. — Bacon,
Natural and Experimental History.

A sow beneath an oak shall lie along,
All white herself, and white her thirty young.

Dryden, Translation of the Ecceid, viii. 61.

As the first element in a compound.

For which they scorn and hate them worse
Than dogs and cats do sow-gelders.

Butler, Hudibras.

The sow-gelder's horn has something musical in it, but this is seldom heard.—Addison, Spectator.

2. Oblong mass of lead.

With clothes upon her head,
That they weigh a sow of lead.

Shelton, Poems, p. 125.

Sow. s. [?] Movable shed for the protection of miners or soldiers plying the butter-gum in medieval strategy.

Sow. v. n. [A.S. sæwan.] Scatter seed in order to a harvest.

The one belongeth unto them that seek, the other unto them that have found happiness; they that pray do but yet sow, they that give thanks declare they have reaped.—Hauker, Ecclesiastical Polity.

They that sow in tears, shall reap in joy.—Psalm, cxxvi. 5.

Sow to yourselves in righteousness, and reap in mercy.—Thom. i. 12.

He that soweth to his flesh, shall of the flesh reap corruption; but he that soweth to the spirit, shall of the spirit reap life everlasting.—Galatians, vi. 8.

Sow. v. n. past part. sown.

1. Sower in the ground in order to growth; propagate by seed.

Like was not to be found.

Say in that soil where all good things did grow
And freely spring out of the fruitful ground
As uncorrupted nature did them sow.

Spenser, Faerie Queen.

I sow my law in you, and it shall bring fruit in you.—Exodus, x. 31.

From Ireland come I with my strength,
And reap the harvest which that reaper sow'd.

Shakespeare, Henry VI. Part II. iii. 1.

Many plants which grow in the hotter countries, being set in the colder, will, being sown of seeds late in the spring, come up and abide most part of the summer.—Bacon.

The proud mother views her precious brood,
And happier branches, which she never sow'd.

Dryden.

What makes a plentiful harvest, when to turn
The fruitful soil, and when to sow the corn ...

I sing, Mervius.

H. Translation of the Georgics, i. 1.

2. Spread; propagate.

Forwardness is in his heart: he deviseth mischief continually; he soweth discord.—Proverbs, vi. 14.

To sow a jangling noise of words unknown.
Milton, Paradise Lost, xii. 55.

Since then they stand secured by being join'd:
It were worthy a king's head, to sow division,
And seeds of jealousy, to loose those bonds.

Rome.

Born to afflict my Mare's family,
And sow discord in the hearts of brothers.

Addison, Cato.

3. Impreguate or stock with seed.

He soweth the rule of it, that thou shalt sow the ground with seed.—Isaiah, xxi. 23.

The intellectual faculty is a quality field, capable of great improvement; and it is the worst husbandry in the world to sow it with trifles or impurities.—Sir J. Hale, Origin of Mankind.

4. Besprinkle.

All sow'd with clustering stars, more thick than grass.
Spenser, Faerie Queen, i. 1.

[He] sow'd with stars the heaven thick as a field.
Milton, Paradise Lost, vii. 32.

Now men her rays set in the eastern chime
Advancing, sow'd the earth with orient pearl.

Idid. v. 1

Sowbread. s. [see extract.] Plant akin to the primroses, of the genus Cyclamen.

The sowbread does afford rich food for swine, Physick for man, and garland for the shrine.

Tate, Translation of Cowley.

Cyclamen are called sowbreads, because the favourite food of the wild boars of Sicily; they are very merid plants, especially the root, whose acrimony is not much perceived at the first tasting, but soon becomes intolerable. It has been used in medicine, its action being that of a drastic purgative; and formerly it was much esteemed as an emmenagogue; but whether its reputation was owing to its actual powers, or to its pleasant form is doubtful. Siddhup tells us that the modern Greeks use the turned root of Cyclamen persicum as a means of driving the Sepia octopoda out of its holes. It is said that these roots, notwithstanding their acridity, are eatable or innocuous when dried or roasted.

Linnaeus, The Vegetable Kingdom.

Sóweo. v. n. Souse.

He sow'd me up to the middle in the pond.—Sir R. L. Estynog.

Sówer. s.

1. One who sprinkles the seed.

A sower went forth to sow.—Matthew, xiii. 3.

It is thrown round, as grain by a skilful sower.—Sir J. Denham.

2. Scatterer.

Turning Paul and his doctrine a sower of words, a very babbler or trifler.—Hakewill, Apology.

3. Breeder; promoter.

They are sowers of suits, which make the court swell, and the country dim.—Bacon.

Sówins. s. [?] Flummery, made of oatmeal somewhat soured.

These sowins that is, flummery, being blended together, produce good yeast.—Mortimer, Husbandry.

See where Norah with the sowins comes.—Swift.

Sowle. v. n. [?] Pull by the ears.

He'll go, he says, and sowle the porter at Rome gates by the ears.—Shakespeare, Coriolanus, iv. 5.

Sówthistle. s. Native plant of the genus Sonchus.

Sonchitella though conceals eat, yet sheep and cattle will not touch; the milk of which rubbed on warts weareth them away, which sheweth it corrosive.—Bacon.

Soy. s. [Chinese.] See second extract.

Some provinces [of Japan] furnish better soy than others; but, exclusively of this, it grows better and clearer through age. Its colour is invariably brown, and its chief excellence consists in the agreeable salt taste which it possesses.—Translation of Thunberg's Travels, vol. iv. p. 121: 1793.

Soy is a liquid condiment, or sauce, imported chiefly from China. It is prepared with a species of white haricots, wheat flour, common salt, and water; in the proportions respectively of 50, 60, 50, and 250 pounds. This dough is next spread on a lath or an inch and a half thick, upon the flat vessel (made of thin staves of bamboo); and when it becomes hot and mouldy, in two or three days, the cover is raised upon bits of stick, to give free access of air. When it has become as hard as stone, it is cut into small fragments, thrown into an earthen vessel, and covered with the 250 pounds of water having the salt dissolved in it. The whole is stirred together, and the height at which the water stands is noted. The vessel being placed in the sun, its contents are stirred up every morning and evening, and a cover is applied at night, to keep it warm and exclude rain. As the mass diminishes by evaporation, well-water is added; and the digestion is continued till the salt water has dissolved the whole of the flour and the haricots; after which the vessel is left in the sun for a few days, as the good quality of the soy depends on the completeness of the solution, which is promoted by regular stirring. When it has at length assumed an oily appearance, it is poured into bags and strained. —Encyclopaedia of Arts, Manufactures, and Mines.

Spaad. s. [see Spar.] Native sulphate of lime.

English tale, of which the coarser sort is called plaster; the finer, spail, earth-flax, or salamander's hair.—Woodward.

Space. s. [Lat. spatium.]

1. Room; local extension.

Oh, unobtain'd! space of woman's will!

Shakespeare, King Lear, iv. 6.

This which yields or fills all space.

Milton, Paradise Lost, vii. 84.

Space is the relation of distance between any two bodies or points.—Locke.

Pure space is capable neither of resistance nor motion. Id.

To thee whose temple is all space,

Whose altar, earth, sea, skies,

One eternal let all beings raise,

All Nature's incense rise.

Pope, Universal Prayer.

2. Any quantity of place.

I would not be the villain that thou think'st

For the whole space that's in the tyrant's grasp.

Shakespeare, Macbeth, iv. 3.

There was but two ways to escape the one through the woods, about two miles space to Walpo. Knolly, History of the Turle.

In such a great ruin, where the fragments are great and hard, it is not possible they should be so adjusted in their fall, but that they would lie hollow, and many nullified spaces would be interposed amongst them. T. Harriot, Theory of the Earth.

Unsurprised, first with careful eyes

The space his spear could reach, aloud he cries.

Drayton, Translation of the Æneid, x. 1033.

3. Quantity of time.

There is a competent time allowed every man, and as it is certain death is the conclusion of it, 'tis possible some space before death. Hammond.

Nine times the space that measures day and night
To mortal men, he with his horrid crew
Lay vanquish'd, rolling in the fiery gulph, Confound'd, though immortal.

Milton, Paradise Lost, i. 56.

In a lever the motion can be continued only for so short a space, as may be answerable to that little distance betwixt the fulcrum and the weight.—Bishop Wilkins, Mathematical Magick.

God may defer his judgments for a time, and give a people a longer space of repentance: he may stay till the iniquities of a nation be full; but sooner or later they have reason to expect his vengeance.—Archbishop Tillotson.

The lives of great men cannot be writ with any tolerable degree of elegance or exactness, within a short space after their decease.—Addison, Freeholder.

4. Small period of time; short while.

Sith for me ye fight, to me this space

Both yield, to stay your deadly strife a space.

Spenser, Faerie Queen.

Compassion quell'd

His heat of man, and gave him up to tears

A space, till druse thoughts restor'd excess.

Milton, Paradise Lost, xi. 406.

5. As an object of thought, space, like time, has been the subject of extreme opinions, chiefly in respect to the extent to which our conceptions of it are derived from experience and a posteriori, or are independent of experience and a priori.

Space and motion can never be actually infinite: they have a power only and a capacity of being increased without end; so that no space can be assigned so vast, but still a larger may be imagined; no motion so swift or languid, but a greater velocity or slowness may still be conceived. —Beattie.

Space, like time, is only the intuition or the concept of a certain correlation of existence—of existence therefore, 'pro tanto' as conditioned. It is thus itself only a form of the conditional. But, apart from this, thought is equally powerless in realizing a notion either of the absolute totality, or of the infinite humanness of space. And while time and space, as wholes, can thus neither be conceived as absolutely limited, nor as infinitely unlimited; so their parts can be represented to the mind neither as absolutely individual nor as divisible to infinity. The universe cannot be imagined as a whole which may not also be imagined as a part; nor an atom be imagined as a part which may not also be imagined as a whole.—Sir W. Hamilton, Discussions on Philosophy, &c., Philosophy of the Unconditional, p. 30: 1853.

I assert . . . that space is not a notion obtained by experience. Experience gives us information concerning things without us; taken for granted their existence in space. Experience acquints us what are the form, position, magnitude of particular objects; but that they have form, position, magnitude, presupposes that they are in space. We cannot derive from appearances by the way of observation, the habit of representing things to ourselves as in space; for no single act of observation is possible any of otherwise than by beginning with such a representation, and conceiving objects as already existing in space. —Whewell, Philosophy of Inductive Sciences, pt. i. h. ii. ch. ii. § 1.

The fact on which Kant bases his assertion, that space is a subjective form and not an objective reality—the fact, namely, that we can conceive the annihilation of bodies, but cannot conceive the annihilation of space—is a fact quite comprehensible on the hypothesis that all knowledge is from without. Making no attempt to analyse the notion of space, which, even if here practically, would entail too long a discussion, it will suffice for present purposes to say that we know space as an ability to contain bodies. I am aware that this is no definition properly so-called; seeing that as the words 'contain' and 'bodies' both imply ideas of space, the definition involves the thing to be defined. But leaving out, as irrelevant, all consideration of the mode in which we come by our ideas of space, and of bodies as containing space, it will, I think, be admitted, that the antithesis between bodies and an ability to contain bodies, truly represents the contrast in our conceptions of the sensible Non-ego (matter) and the insensible Non-ego (space). And if we know space as an ability to contain bodies, the fact that we cannot conceive its annihilation, is quite accountable on the experience-hypothesis. Bodies we can conceive annihilated, because, by evaporation, and by burning, we have seen them annihilated—annihilated, that is, to the senses. But the ability to contain bodies we cannot conceive annihilated, because we have never known it absent. In all our experience that ability has remained constant; and hence the conception of it is similarly constant in our minds. Evidently, then, our powerlessness to conceive the non-existence of space requires no such hypothesis as that of Kant for its explanation.—Herbert Spencer, Principles of Psychology.

Space. v. n. [Lat. spatior.] Ruve; spatiate.

But she, as fays are wont in privie place
Did spend her dayes, and loved in forest wyld to space.

Spenser, Faerie Queen, iv. 2. 44.

Space-line. s. In Printing. See extract.

Space-lines [are] thin pieces of type metal, cast to various thicknesses and different lengths, and not so high as type, to put between and increase the width between the lines. They are generally called leads.—R. J. Chorley, in Brande and Cox, Dictionary of Science, Literature, and Art.

Space-rule. s. In Printing. See extract.

Space-rules [are] fine lines, cast type high, . . .

and to any length required. They are used for setting-up tabular matter.—R. J. Courtney, in Brando and Cox, Dictionary of Science, Literature, and Art.

Spacious. adj. [Fr. spacieux; Lat. spatiosus.] Wide; extensive; wide. Rare.

The ship, in those profound
And spacious seas, stuck as on dry ground.
Baudy, Translation of Ovid's Metamorphoses, l. iii.

Spacing. s. In Printing. See extract.

Spacing [is] the adjustment of the distance between the words in a line, so that there shall not be any glaring disproportion.—R. J. Courtney, in Brando and Cox, Dictionary of Science, Literature, and Art.

Spacious. adj. [Fr. spacieux; Lat. spatiosus.] Wide; extensive; roomy; not narrow.

The former buildings, which were but mean, confronted them not a spacious and ample church they erected throughout every city.—Hooker, Ecclesiastical Polity.

Convey your pleasures in a spacious plenty;
And yet seem cold. Shakespeare, Macbeth, iv. 3.
Merab with spacious beauty fills the sight,
But too much awe chastised the bold delight.
Cowley, Davila.

Like an English general will I die,
And all the ocean make my spacious grave;
Women and cowards on the land may live;
The sea's a tomb that's proper for the brave.
Dryden, Anna Maria, cl.

At present every country, every large town, contains of some spacious places in which the poorest labourer who has fractured a limb may find an excellent bed, an able medical attendant, a careful nurse, medicines of the best quality, and nourishment such as an invalid requires. But there was not then, in the whole realm, a single military supported by voluntary contribution.—Maccarty, History of England, ch. xviii.

Spaciousness. s. Attribute suggested by Spacious; roominess; wide extension.

The spaciousness of the house was such, that it had three galleries, each of them a mile long.—Hakewell, Apology, p. 400.

Here is visible an elegant taste of architecture, painting, and gardening, but more remarkable for the spaciousness of its prospect.—Ashmole, Antiquities of Berkshire, iii. 200.

Spaddle. s. Little spade.

Others destroy moles with a spaddle, waiting in the mornings and evenings for them.—Mortimer, Husbandry.

Spade. s. [A.S. spad, spudu.]

1. Instrument of digging.

His next advance was to the soldier's trade,
Where if he did not nimbly ply the spade,
His surly officer ne'er fail'd to crack
His knotty enginel on his tumber back.
Stepney, Translation of Juvenal, viii. 449.

Here nature never difference made Between the sceptre and the spade. Swift.

2. Suit of cards.

The skilful nymph reviews her force with care,
'Let spades be trump!' she said, and trumps they were.
Pope, Rape of the Lock, canto iii.

Call a spade a spade. Cull things by their right name, even if that be coarse: (from spado - enouch).

Spadebone. s. Shoulder-blade.

By th' shoulder of a ram from off the right side
pared,
Which usually they boil, the spade-bone being barrel.
Drayton.

Spadaceous. adj. [Lat. spadicus.] See Spadix.

1. Having a light red, or bay, colour.

Of those five Scalliger beheld, though one was spadaceous, or of a light red, and two inclining to red, yet was there not of this complexion among them.—Sir T. Browne, Vulgar Errors.

2. In Botany. Having a spadix.

Spadilla. s. [Fr.] Ace of spades in the game of quatrille.

For the trump suit the order of value is as follows.—First, counts the ace of spades, which, whatever be the trump suit, is always ranked as the best trump card, and is called spadilla. Second in rank comes what would be the lowest card if the suit were not trump, i.e. the seven if red, and the two if black; this is called Manille. Third comes the ace of clubs, which, whatever be the trump suit, is always ranked as the third best trump card, and is called Basta. Fourth, if the trump suit be red, comes the ace of the trump, called Baro; if black, there is no Baro.—Brando and Cox, Dictionary of Science, Literature, and Art.

Spadix. s. [Lat. = palm-branch with the fruit on it, the colour being light red or bay.] In Botany. Form of inflorescence in which the flowers are arranged round a fleshy rachis; often enclosed by a spathe.
Vol. II.

When the flowers are closely arranged around a fleshy rachis, which is enclosed in a kind of bract called a spathe, the inflorescence is termed a spadix. This is chiefly found in the Aral and Palmales. It is frequently terminated by a soft club-shaped mass of cellular substance which extends far beyond the flowers, and is itself entirely naked; this is an instance of a growing point analogous to what forms the spine of a branch, except that it is soft and blunt, instead of being hard and sharp-pointed. Loudley, Introduction to Botany, vol. I. p. 320: 1845.

Spado. s. [Lat.] Eunuch. Rare.

This is true, not only in eunuchs by nature, but apud by art.—Sir T. Browne, Vulgar Errors.

Spagyric. adj. [not found either in Facciolati for the Classical, or in Dürange for the Low Latin. Said to have been invented by Paracelsus, from spao = I draw + ayric = I excite, congregate.] Chemical.

It was a huge difference and care of the divine mercy that discovered to men the secrets of spagyric medicines... and the strange effects of medicinal mixtures. Jeremy Taylor, Miracles of Divine Mercy, (Ord 184.)

He is distributing spagyric food, medicine for the poor. . . . The spagyric food is found amongst . . . milt for a dog.—Curly, Critical and Miscellaneous Essays, Count Gagliardi.

Spagyric. s. Spagyrist.

Those only know how to want, that have learnt to frame their mind to their estate: like to a skilful musician, that can let down his strings a peg lower when the time requires it; or like to some cunning spagyric, that can intend or remit the heat of his furnace according to occasion.—Bishop Hall, Of Content, § 4.

Spagyric. adj. Chemical.

Paracelsus . . . brought to light in these parts of the world the use of hermetical, spagyric, or chymical physics, as they term it.—Hakewell, Apology, p. 214.

They all cried out fire, when spagyric preparations came first into use.—Dr. Harris, Description of Lon, p. 65: 1680.

Spagyrist. s. Chemist.

This change is so unexampled, that though among the more curious spagyrics it be very well known, yet many naturalists cannot easily believe it.—Boyle.

Spahi. s. [Persian.] a eunuch-form with sepy. Turkish cavalry soldier.

He said, there were certain looks in their language paved to a great spade of that city [Damascus].
The spades would not part with them under 200 dollars.—Letters to Archbishop Usher, p. 323.

Spall. s. [see Spill.] Chip. Rare.

Assault . . . Retaliation, requiesces. Spalls, or broken pieces of stones, that come off in lowering and graving.—Nonneculator. (Sares by H. and W.)

Spall. s. [N.Fr. spaulle; Modern Fr. spaulle; L.Lat. spulla, spulula.] Shoulder. Obsolete.

Their mighty strokes their habergeons dismayed,
And naked made each other's manly spalls.
Spenser, Faerie Queen.

Spalt. adj. ? Splitting; splintery. Rare.

Of all oak growing in England, the park oak is the softest, and far more spalt and brittle than the hedge oak.—Holingshead, Description of England, b. ii. ch. xvii. (Rich.)

Span. s. [A.S.]

1. Space from the end of the thumb to the end of the little finger extended; nine inches.

Will you with counters sum
The vast proportion of his infinite?
And buckle in a waste most fatiousness
With spans and inches no diminutive
As fairs and reasons?
Shakespeare, Troilus and Cressida, ii. 2.
Sum how brief the life of man
Runs his erring pilgrimage,
That the stretching of a span
Buckles in his sum of age.
Id., As you like it, iii. 2.

Our lives are but our marches to our graves.—
Faith, 'tis true, sir:

We are but spans and candle-ends.
Beaumont and Fletcher, Humorous Lieutenant.

A foot, the length of it, is a sixth part of the fathom; a span, one eleventh; a palm, or hand's breadth, one twenty-fourth; a thumb's breadth, one inch, one seventy-second; and a forefinger's breadth one ninety-sixth.—Holder, On Time.

2. Short duration.

You have scarce time
To steal from spiritual leisure a brief span,
To keep your earthly audit.
Shakespeare, Henry VIII, iii. 2.

8 L

Then conscience, untroubled by fears, began
To stretch her limbs, and extend the span.

Dryden.

Life's but a span, I'll every inch enjoy.
Farquhar.

Span. v. a.

1. Measure by the hand extended.

His hand hath also laid the foundations of the earth, and my right hand hath spanned the heavens.
—Isaiah, xlviii. 13.

On the well-known spot I fix my eyes,
And span the distance that between us lies.
Tickell, Epistle from a Lady to a Gentleman at Aiglon.

2. Measure generally.

My surveyor is false; the o'er great cardinal
Hath shew'd him gold; my life is spanned already.
Shakespeare, Henry VIII, i. 1.

This soul doth span the world, and hang content
From either pole unto the centre;
Where in each room of the well-furnished tent
He lies warm, and without adventure. G. Herbert.

Harry, whose tuneful and well-measured song
First taught our English musick how to span Words with just note and accent, not to scan
With Midas' ears, committing short and long.
Milton, Sonnets, xii. 1.

3. Measure with the wrist raised, so as to form a kind of arch over the object, whence such expressions as 'the river is spanned by a single arch.'

Our thoughts . . . not only stride all the sea and land, but span the sea and firmament at once. Booke, Devotions, p. 67.

Span-new. adj. [Two words; the n doubled in sound as well as in meaning.] Quite new.
Am I not totally a span-new gallant,
Fit for the choicest eyes?
Beaumont and Fletcher, False One.

Span-long. adj. Having the length only of a span.

There, in the stocks of trees, white boys do dwell.
And span-long elves that dance about a pool,
With each a little changing in their arms.
R. Jonson, Sad Shepherd.

Spancel. s. [?] Rope to tie a cow's legs.

Spancel. v. a. Tie with a spancel.

Spancounter. s. Play at which money is thrown within a span or mark.

Tell the king, that for his father's sake, Henry V., in whose time boys went to spancounter for French crowns,
I am content he shall rogan.—Shakespeare, Henry VI, Part II, iv. 2.

Boys shall not play
At spancounter or blowpoint, but shall pay
Till to some earler.
Doune.

Spandrel. s. [N.Fr.] In Architecture. Space above the flanks, or the haunches, of an arch or vault, above the intrados, and not higher than the crown of the arch.

Spandrel [is] the triangular space included between the arch of a doorway, &c. and a rectangle formed by the outer mouldings over it; the term is also applied to other similar spaces included between arches, &c. and straight-sided figures surrounding them; they are usually ornamented with tracery, foliate, arabesque, or other conventional designs. In the perpendicular style, the doorways most commonly have the outer mouldings arranged in a square over the head, so as to form a spandrel above the arch. In the earlier styles this arrangement is very seldom found in the doorway, but spandrels are sometimes used in other parts of buildings, especially in decorated work in which they are frequent. In the entrance to the cloisters and the chapel of Maudslowe College, Oxford, the spandrels of the outer arch which stand considerably in front of the inner doorway, so as to form a shallow porch, are cut quite round and left open. The spandrels of a door were sometimes termed the 'haunch of the door.'—Glossary of Architecture.

Spanemic. adj. [Gr. σπανος - scanty, thin, + αἷμα - blood.] In Medicine. Having the real or supposed power of impoverishing the blood.

Spanemy, or Spanemia. s. In Medicine. Poverty of blood.

Spanemia.—Term for a form of diseased blood, in which it is deficient in solid constituents; poverty of blood; spanemy.—Magye, Repertory Laricon of Terms in Medical and General Science.

Spanfarthing. s. Spancounter played with farthings.

His chief solace is to steal down, and play at spanfarthing with the page.—Swift.

Spang. s. [?] Thin piece of gold, or silver, or other shining materials; spangled ornament: (Spangle the commoner form).

A venture . . . sprinkled here and there
With glittering spangle that did like stars appear.
Spenser, Faerie Queen.
In that day shall the Lord take away the surroundings of their apparel, and spangle, chains, par-tletails, and cullets.—Knight, Triumph of Truth, fol. 7:
1880.

The colours that shew best by candlelight are white, carnation, and a kind of sea-water green; and oes or spangle, as they are of no great cost, so they are of most glory.—Bacon, Essays, Of Masques and Triumphs.

Spang. v. a. Spangle. Rare.
Juno's bird,
Whom train is spangled with Argus' hundred eyes.
Three Lords of London. (Nares by H. and W.)

Spangle. s.
1. Small plate or boss of shining metal.
Ear-rings and spangles.—Numbers, xxi. 50. (Matthew's Translation.)

But besides the shield, the warrior of the Bronze period had for protection a coat of mail. This was made of leather or strong linen, sewed together, and strengthened by a kind of button-formed scale cast in bronze. These scales or spangles are rather hollow, either round or oval, and measure from half to one inch in diameter.—Kemble, Horsa Period,
p. 88.

2. Anything sparkling and shining.
As hoary frock with spangles doth attire
The mossy-branches of an oak half dead.

Spenser, Faerie Queen.
The twinkling spangles, the ornaments of the upper world, lose their beauty and magnificence; vulgar spectators see them but as a confused huddle of petty illuminants.—Glasville.

That now the dew with spangles deck'd the
ground,
A sweeter spot of earth was never found.
Dryden, The Flower and the Leaf, 92.
The spangle dances in light and lay.
Trunyan, The Sea-Fairies.

Spangle. v. a. Besprinkle with spangles or shining bodies.

What stars do spangle heaven with such beauty,
As those two eyes become that heavenly face,
Id., Taming of the Shrew, iv. 5.
Four faces each

Had, like a double Janus; all their shape Spangled with eyes, more numerous than those Of Argus.
Milton, Paradise Lost, xi. 128.

Then appear'd
Spangling the hemisphere, then first adorn'd
With the bright luminaries, that set and rose.
Id., ibid., vii. 383.

He cuts out a silk mantle from the skies,
Where the first brightly nature pleased the eyes;
This he with sturvy vapours spangles all,
Took in their prime, ere they grow, rise, and fall.
Chaucer.

Spangled. part. adj. Showing, displaying, adorned or beset with, spangles.

They never meet in grove or green,
By fountain clear, or spangled starlight shewn,
Shakespeare, Midsummer-Night's Dream, ii. 1.
Unpin that spangled breastplate which you wear,
That the eyes of busy fools may be slept there.
Donne.

The spacious firmament on high,
With all the blue ethereal sky,
And spangled heavens, a shining frame,
Their great Original proclaim.—Abraham, Spectator.

Spaniel. s. [Fr. espagnol, from Hispania = Spain.]

1. Variety of dog akin to the setter and springer.

Divers days I followed his steps till I found him, having newly met with an excellent spaniel belonging to his dead companion.—Sir P. Sidney.

There are arts to reclaim the wildest men, as there are to make spaniels fetch and carry; children often, and foxes seldom.—Dryden, Spanish Friar.

The beautiful breed called King Charles's spaniel was black and white, and is supposed to have been the original race of the little black cocker; but it would appear, judging of the proportions by the dogs introduced by Van Dyke into his pictures of that illustrious monarch, that they must have been larger dogs.—Bell, History of British Quadrupeds, including the Celceus.

2. Over-obsequious man or woman.
I am your spaniel; and, Demetrius,
The more you hunt me I will follow you.
Shakespeare, Midsummer-Night's Dream, ii. 2.

Used adjectively.
I mean sweet words,
Low, crooked courtesies, and base spaniel fawning.
Shakespeare, Julius Caesar, iii. 1.

Spaniel. v. n. Fawn; play the spaniel.

Spaniel. v. a. Follow like a spaniel.
The hounds that spaniel me at heels, is no happy a conjecture [in place of spaniel] that I think we ought to acquire in it.—Tollet, Note on Shakspere, Antony and Cleopatra.

Spanish fly. s. [two words.] Blistering beetle; Meloe vesicatoria.

Spanish fly is the only thing to draw this nonsense out of you; and if anybody wanted to do you a kindness, they'd clap a blister of 'em on you head.—Dickens, Martin Chuzzlewit, ch. xlv.

Spanish juice. s. Liquorice.

Spank. v. a. Strike with the open hand; slap.
Colloquial.

Spanker. s.
1. Small coin.
Your cure too costs you but a spanker.
Sir J. Denham.

2. Person who takes long steps with agility:
(applied to a stout or tall person).
Spanking. adj. Dashing; free-going.

If you are not much by entry, there are four spanking boys ready harrowed in Cropland Park, here, that shall whisk us to town in a minute.—
G. Colman the younger, The Poor Gentleman, iv. 2.

Spanner. s.
1. Lock of a fusée or carbine.

My prince's court is now full of nothing but buff-coats, spanners, and musket-rests.—Howell.

2. Fusée or carbine itself.

This day, as his majesty sat at dinner, there came a tall man with his spanner and scarf; whereby every man in the presence supposed him some officer in the army.—*Sir J. Horring, Trial of King Charles
I., Lord Halifax's Miscellaneous*, p. 164.

Spar. s. [A.S. spærn = plaster, spærstan = gypsum; the German form is spath; in English, Spauld; Spalt seems to be the same word.] In Mineralogy. General mineral name for crystallized minerals with a shining lustre.

Some stones, as spar of lead, dissolved in proper menstruums, become salts.—Sir I. Newton, On Optics.

Spar is a mixed body, consisting of crystal incorporated sometimes with 'lime juice,' and sometimes with other mineral, stony, earthy, or metallic matter.—Woodward.

Spar. v. a. Shut; close; bar.

When the stable is stolen, spar the stable door.
Skelton, Poems, p. 54.
Calk your windows, spar up all your doors.
B. Jonson, Staple of News.

Spelt spar.
And, if he chance come when I am abroad,
Sperre the yate fast for fear of fraud;
No for all his worst, nor for his best,
Open the door at his request.

Spenser, Shepherd's Calendar.
The other, which was entered, labour'd fast
To sperre the gate.
Id., Faerie Queen.

Spar. s. Small beam; piece of sawed timber;
bar of a gate.

He unpropitieth it with an olde broken sparre.
—Bale, A Course at the Runyshaw Fox, &c., fol. 71. b.

The prince staid not his answer to devise,
But opening straight the sparre forth to him came,
Full nobly mounted in right warlike wise.
Spenser, Faerie Queen, v. 11. 4.

Trees sprout not cross like dry and sapless beams, nor the sparre and tiles spring with a natural uniformity into a roof.—Bishop Pearson, Exposition of the Creed, art. i.

Spar. v. n. Fight.
Now ladies slune from phantoms afar,
And very soon perhaps may learn to spar!
Prologue to the Dramatist.

Sparable. s. [? sparrow-bill.]
1. Cobbler's nail.

2. Crystal of tin resembling such a nail.

Sparadrap. s. [Fr., referred to the Latin sparadrappum, or sparadrappus; but the word appears neither in Faccioli nor DuRoi.] Cerecloth.

With application of the common sparadrap for issues, this ulcer was by a fountain kept open.— Wicam, Surgery.

Sparagus. s. Asparagus. Vulgarism.
An argument that like Jonas's gourd, or sparagus, is in season only at some times.—Jeramy Taylor, Against Transubstantiation.

Spare. v. a. [A.S. spærjan.]
1. Use frugally; not waste; not consume.

Thy father's dreadful thunder dith not spare.
Milton, Paradise Lost, iii. 302.

2. Have unemployed; save from any particular use.
All the time he could spare from the necessary cares of his weighty charge he bestowed on prayer, and serving of God: he oftentimes spent the night alone in church, praying, his head-pierce, nose, and gauntlets lying by him.—Knollys, History of the Turks.

He had no bread to spare.—Sir R. L'Estrange.
Only the foolish virgins entertained this foolish conceit, that there might be an overplus of grace sufficient to supply their want; but the wise knew not of any that they had to spare, but supposed all that they had little enough.—Archbishop Tillotson.

Let a pamphlet come in a proper juncture, and every one who can spare a shilling shall be a subscriber.—Swift.

3. Do without; lose willingly.
Poor Jack, farewell!
I could have better spared a better man.
Shakespeare, Henry IV. Part I. v. 4.

For his mind, I do not care,
That's a toy that I could spare;
Let his title be but great,
His clothes rich, and land sit neat.
B. Jonson.

Sceme of pleasure we may well
Spare out of life perhaps, and not repine;
But pain is perfect misery.
Milton, Paradise Lost, vi. 420.

Now she might spare the ocean, and oppose
Your conduct to the breast of her foes.
The fair blessing we vouchsafe to send;
Nor can we spare you long, tho' often we may lend.
Dryden, Epistles, To the Duchess of Ormond, &c.

4. Omit; forbear.
We might have spared our coming.
Milton, Paradise Lost, ix. 447.

Be pleased your politicks to spare;
I'm old enough, and can myself take care.
Dryden, Aurengzebe, ll. 1.

5. Use tenderly; forbear; treat with pity; not afflict; not destroy; use with mercy.

Spare us, good Lord.—Book of Common Prayer, Liturgy.
Who will set the discipline of wisdom over mine heart, that they spare me not for mine ignorance?
—Revelations, xxi. 2.

Both not each lack a flash of lightning fire!
Which sparcs the body's breath, but melts the steel.
Cleveland.

Dim sadness did not spare
That time celestial visage.
Milton, Paradise Lost, x. 24.

Less pleasure take brave minds in battles won
Than in restoring such as are undone:
There have courage, and the rugged bear;
But man alone can win his conquerors spare.
Waller.

6. Forbear to inflict or impose.
Spare my remembrance; 'twas a guilty day;
And still the blush hangs here.
Dryden, All for Love.

O spare this great, this good, this great king,
And spare your soul the crime!
Id., Spanish Friar, iii. 3.

Spare my sight the j...
Of seeing what a world of tears it costs you.
Id., ibid., v. 1.

7. Grant; allow; indulge.
Set me in the remotest place,
That Neptune's frozen arms embrace;
Where angry Jove did never spare;
One breath of kind and temperate air.
Lord Roscommon.

Spare. v. n.
1. Live frugally; be parsimonious; be not liberal.

Now a reservoir to keep and spare,
The next a fountain spouting through his helm.
Pope, Moral Essays, iii. 174.

No statute in his favour says
How free or frugal I shall pass my days;
I, who at sometimes spend, at others spare,
Divided between carelessness and care.
Id., Imitations of Horace, b. ii. ep. ii.

2. Forbear; be scrupulous.
His soldiers spared not to say that they should be unkindly dealt with, if they were defrauded of the spoil.—Knollys, History of the Turks.

To pluck and eat my ill I spared not.
Milton, Paradise Lost, ix. 506.

Spare. adj.
1. Scanty; not abundant; parsimonious;
frugal.

He was spare, but discreet of speech; better conceiving than delivering; equally stout and kind.—
Carew, Survey of Cornwall.

Join with these calm peace and quiet;
Spare fast, that oft with gods doth diet.
Milton, Il Penseroso, 45.

The masters of the world were hired up with spare diet; and the young gentlemen of Rome felt no want of strength, because they ate but once a day.—
Locke.

2. Superfluous; unwanted.
If that no spare clothes he had to give,
His own coat he would cut, and it distribute glad.
Spenser.

As any of our sleek waxed well, he might be removed; for which purpose there were set forth ten sparre chambers.—Bacon.

Learning seems more adapted to the female world than to the male, because they have more sparre time upon their hands, and lead a more sedentary life.—Addison, Spectator.

In my sparre hours you've had your part; Ev'n now my servile hand your sovereign will obey.—Norris.

3. Lean; wanting flesh; macilent.

O give me your sparre men, and spare me the great ones.—Shakespeare, Henry IV. Part II. III. 2.
If my name were fables to fear,
I do not know the man I should avoid
So soon as that sparre Cassius.

Id., Julius Caesar, I. 2.

His visage drawn he felt to sharp and sparre,
His arms clung to his ribs.
Milton, Paradise Lost, x. 511.

Spare. s. Parsimony; frugal use; husbandry. Rare.

Since Anheek'd they may,
They therefore will make still his goods their prey,
Without all sparre or end.
Our virtuous failed us, though we made good sparre
of them.—Bacon.

Sparely. adv. In a spare manner; sparingly.

Ye valleys low, where the mild whispers use
Of shades, and wanton winds, and gushing brooks,
On whose fresh lap the swart star sparely looks!

Milton, Lycidas.

Spareness. s. Attribute suggested by spare; state of being spare; leanness.

A spareness and slenderness of stature.—Hammond, Works, iv. 178.

Sparer. s. One who, that which, spares.

By nature far from profusion, and yet a greater sparer than a savor; for though he had such means to accumulate, yet his forts, garbisons, and his festivities, wherein he was only sumptuous, could not but make his exchequer.—Sir H. Wotton.

Sparerib. s. Ribs cut away from the body, and having on them spare or little flesh: (as, 'A sparerib of pork').

Brandish no words but swords of bacon; trail no spears but spareribs of pork!—Drayton, Comedy of Lingua, II. 1: 1657.

Sparfæction. s. Act of sprinkling. Rare.

The operation was performed by sparfæction, in a proper time of the moon.—Swift, Tale of a Tub, sect. iv.

Sparing. verbal abs. Parsimony.

He was wherewithal; in him
Sparing would show a worse sin than ill doctrine.
Shakespeare, Henry VIII. I. 3.

Those wants, which they rather feared than felt, would well enough be overcome by sparing and patience.—Knutson, History of the Turks.
Our labours late and early every morning,
Midst winter frosts, then clad and fed with sparing.
Rise to our toils.
Owen.

Sparing. part. adj.

1. Scarce; little.

Of this there is with you sparing memory or none;
but we have large knowledge thereof.—Bacon.

2. Scanty; not plentiful.

If much exercise, then use a plentiful diet; and if sparing diet, then little exercise.—Bacon.
Cool air, solitary groves, and sparing diet, sufficient to make you fancy yourself one of the fathers of the desert.—Pope.

3. Parsimonious; not liberal.

In these relations, although he be more sparing, his predecessors were very numerous.—Sir P. Brown, vulgar Recruits.
Virgil being so very sparing of his words, and leaving so much to be imagined by the reader, he translated as he ought in any modern tongue.—Dryden.

Though sparing of his grace, to mischief bent,
He seldom loses a good with good intent.
Id.

God has not been sparing to men to make them barely two-legged creatures, and left it to Aristotle to make them rational.—Locke.

When they discover the insatiable desire of fame in the ambitious man, they become sparing and saving in their commendations; they envy him the satisfaction of an applause.—Addison.

4. Merciful.

Their king, out of a princely feeling, was sparing
and compassionate towards his subjects.—Baron.

Sparingly. adv. In a sparing manner.

1. Not abundantly.

Give us leave freely to render what we have in charge;
I shall we sparingly shew you far off
he Danphul's meaning?
Shakespeare, Henry V. I. 2.

The borders whereon you plant fruit-trees should be old, and large, and low, and not steep; and set with fine flowers; but thin and sparingly, lest they destitute the trees.—Bacon, Essays, Of Gardens.

2. Frugally; parsimoniously; not lavishly.

High titles of honour were in the king's authority sparingly granted, because dignity then waited on desert.—Sir J. Hayward.
Condemn but sparingly whom thou dost love;
But less condemn whom thou dost not approve.
Sir J. Denham, Of Prudence.

3. With abstinence.

Christians are obliged to taste even the innocent pleasures of life not sparingly.—Bishop Atterbury.

4. Not with great frequency.

The morality of a grave sentence, affected by Juvenal, is more sparingly used by Virgil.—Dryden.
Our sacraments, which had been frequented with so much zeal, were approached more sparingly.—
Bishop Atterbury.

5. Cautiously; tenderly.

Speech of touch towards others should be sparingly used; for discourse ought to be as a field, without coming home to any man.—Bacon, Essays, Of Discourse.

Sparingly. s. Attribute suggested by Sparing.

1. Parsimony; want of liberality.

The same folly it will be in us, if, by the sparingly
ness of our aims, we make ourselves a lank harvest hereafter.—Dr. H. More, Whole Duty of Man, Sunday xvii. § 11.

2. Caution.

The silence or *sparingly*ness of trivial eloquence is of more consideration.—Barrow, On the Pope's Supremacy.

This opinion Mr. Hobbes mentions as possible;
but he does it with hesitancy, diffidence, and sparingly.—Clarke, On the Attributes.

Spark. s. [A.S. spere, spæra.]

1. Small particle of fire, or kindled matter.

If any marvel how a thing, in itself so weak, could import any great danger, they must consider not so much how small the spark is that doth set it on fire, as how apt things about it are to take fire.—Hooker, Ecclesiastical Polity.

I am about to weep; but thinking that
We are a queen, my drops of tears I'll turn
To sparks of fire.—Shakespeare, Henry VIII. II. 2.

In this deep quiet, from what source unknown
These seeds of fire that fatal birth disclose:
And first few scintillating sparks about were blown,
Big with the flames that to our ruin rose.
Dryden, Anna Mirabilis, cxxvii.

Oh, may some spark of your celestial fire
The last, the meanest, of your sons inspire!
Pope, Essay on Criticism, l. 135.

When everything was ready for explosion, the news of the American Revolution fell like a spark on the inflammatory mass, and ignited a flame which never ceased its ravages until it had destroyed all that Frenchmen once held dear, and had left for the instruction of mankind an awful lesson of the crimes into which continued oppression may hurry a generous and long-suffering people.—Buckle, History of Civilization in England, vol. I. ch. xiv.

2. Anything shining.

We have, here and there, a little clear light, some sparks of bright knowledge.—Locke.

3. Anything vivid or active.

If any spark of life be yet remaining,
Down, down to hell, and say I sent thee thither.
Shakespeare, Henry VI. Part III. v. 6.

4. Lively, showy, splendid, gay man: (commonly used in contempt).

How many huddling sparks have we seen, that in the same day have been both the idols and the scorn of the mob!

A spark, like thee, of the mankilling trade,
Fell sick.—Dryden, Translation of Persius, III. 102.
As for the disputes of sharpers, we don't read of any provisions made for the honors of such sparks.
—Collier.

I who have been the poet's spark to-day,
Will now become the champion of his play.
Gransville.

Unlucky as Fungus in the play,
These sparks with awkward vanity display
What the fine gentleman was yesterday.
Pope, Essay on Criticism, II. 328.

Spark. v. n. Emit particles of fire; sparkle.

Fair is my love.

When the rose in her cheek appears,
Or in her eyes the fire of love doth spark.
Delight upon her face and sweetness shined;
Her eyes do spark as stars.
P. Mather, Pincatory Elegies, vi. 10.

Sparkful. adj. Lively; brisk; airy.

Hitherto will our sparkful youth laugh at their great grandfather's English, who had more care to do well than to speak mindlessly.—Camden, Remains.

Sparkish. adj.

1. Airy; gay.

Is any thing more sparkish and better-mannered than Venus? according her son in the dowries of Libya!—Walt.

2. Showy; well-dressed; fine.

A daw, to be sparkish, tricked himself up with all the gay feathers he could muster.—Sir E. L'Estrange.

Sparkle. s.

1. Spark; small particle of fire.

First, good Achilles, with repeated strokes
Of clashing flints, their hidden fires provokes;
Short flame succeeds, a bed of wither'd leaves
The dying sparkles in their fall revive:
Caught into life, in fiery fumes they rise.
And, fed with stronger food, invade the skies.
Dryden, Translation of the Æneid, l. 245.

2. Any luminous particle.

To detract from the dignity thereof, were to injure even God himself, who being that light which none can approach unto, hath sent out these lights whereof we are capable, even as so many sparkles resembling the bright fountain from which they rise.—Hooker, Ecclesiastical Polity.
When reason's lamp, which, like the sun in sky,
Throughout man's little world her beams did spread,
Is now become a sparkle, which doth lie
Under the ash, half extinct and dead.
Sir J. Denham, Immortality of the Soul.

See from my cheek the transient roses die,
See the last sparkle languish in my eye.
Pope, Eloisa to Abelard.

3. Lustre.

I hold my beauty,
Wash out these wrinkles from it, of a sparkle
As right and rich as hers.
Beaumont and Fletcher, Love's Pilgrimage.

Sparkle. v. n.

1. Emit sparks.

['Twill] glow with shame of your proceedings,
Hubert;
Nay, it perchance will sparkle in your eyes.
Shakespeare, King John, IV. 1.

2. Issue in sparks.

The bold design
Pleased highly these infernal states, and joy
Sparkled in all their eyes.
Milton, Paradise Lost, II. 386.

3. Shine; glitter.

Politulus is a fine young gentleman, who sparkles in all the shining things of dress and equipage.—
Watts.

4. Emit little bubbles, as liquor in a glass.

Sparkle. v. a. Disperse; scatter; throw about.

Cousands yet there saw how I they haled
From Falles' house, with sparkled dress yndone.
Suckville, Induction to Mirror for Magistrals.

What's become
Of my lieutenant?—Beaumont, an 't please your grace,
And all his forces sparkled.

March close, and sudden like a tempest; all execution
Done without sparkling of the body; keep your plant
Sure lined and piced together.
Id., Bonduca.

Sparkler. s. One who, that which, sparkles.

What would you say, should you see a sparkler shaking her elbow for a whole night together, and champing the table with a dicebox?—Addison, Guardian, no. 122.

Sparklet. s. Small spark. Rare.

Night, spread o'er earth thy sable veil,
Heaven's twinkling sparklets to conceal.
Cotton, Ode to Night.

Sparkliness. s. ? Attribute suggested by rare or non-existent sparkly, or used for Sparklingness.

Sir John [Suckling] threw his requettes about the table with much sparkliness, and gentleness of wit, to the admiration of them all.—Aubrey, Anecdotes, II. 551.

Sparkling. part. adj. Bright as a spark.

A hair seen in a microscope is a former colour, and is in a great measure jetted, with a mixture of some bright sparkling colours, such as appear from the refraction of diamonds.—Locke.
What happy moments did I count
Blest was I then all bliss above;
Now, for that consecrated fount
Of murmuring, sparkling, living love
What have I? shall I dare to tell?
A comfortless and hidden well.
Wordsworth, The Complaint.

Sparkling. verbal abs. Appearance or act of that which sparkles.

Wit procured by wine, is, for the most part, like the sparklings in the cup, when 'tis filling; they wick it for a moment, but die immediately.—
Pittam, Recreations, (Ord. 18.)

Sparklingly. adv. In a sparkling manner; with vivid and twinkling lustre.

Diamonds sometimes would look more sparklingly than they were wont, and sometimes far more dull than ordinary.—Boyle.

Sparklingness. s. Attribute suggested by sparkling; vivid and twinkling lustre.

I have observed a manifestly greater clearness and sparklingness at some times than at others, though I could not refer it to the superficial clearness or fullness of the stone.—Boyle.

Sparrow. s. [A.S. spearwa.] In Ornithology. Common British bird of the genus Passer, or Pyrgita (species, domesticus and montanus).

Dismay'd not this Macbeth and Banquo?—Yes, An sparrow eagle, or the hare the lion.

There is great probability that a thousand sparrows will fly away at the sight of a hawk among them.—Watts.

As the second element in a compound.

The tree-sparrow is a rare species in most of the extreme southern counties of England, and is not included in some county catalogues of Sussex, Dorsetshire, Devonshire, or Cornwall; but Mr. E. H. Leach of Penzance, mentions in a private communication, that the Falmouth Museum contains a single specimen. It is not uncommon in Shropshire, as I learn from Messrs. Robert Mearns and Thomas Kyton. In Lancashire it has been observed about Clitheroes. On the eastern side of England this bird appears to be a winter visitor at Southchurch in Essex, according to the observations of Mr. Parsons. It is found in Surrey, Suffolk, Norfolk, Cambridgeshire, Rutland, Lincolnshire, about Wainfleet, in Yorkshire at various localities; in Durham, and also in Northumberland, but I am unable to trace it much farther north than Newcastle, and it does not appear to have been noticed in Scotland.—Jarrell, History of British Birds.

Sparrowgrass. s. Catichrestic for Asparagus.

Your infant pease to sparrowgrass prefer, Which to the supper you may best defer. King.

Sparrowhawk. s. [A.S. spearhafoc.] In Ornithology. Native hawk of the genus Falco (nisus).

The difference between the size of the male and female sparrow-hawks is more disproportionate than in most of other birds of prey; the former sometimes scarcely weighing five ounces, the latter nine ounces. The length of the male is about twelve inches, the breadth twenty-three; the female is fifteen inches long, in breadth twenty-six.—Pennant, British Zoology.

[1] once took a partridge with a sparrow-hawk of [my] own breaking ten days after he had been taken wild from a wood. These hawks must be kept in a high condition, and cannot fly when there is the least wind; they are upon the whole more difficult to manage than strong birds. The flight of the sparrow-hawk is rapid for a short distance; he will take partridges at the beginning of the season, and is the best of all the hawks for landrails.—Sir J. Schlegel, in Jarrell, History of British Birds.

The sparrow-hawk is another short-winged hawk, but of small comparative size; in its habits very similar to the goshawk last described, and has been aptly termed a goshawk in miniature. It has, however, been separated from the goshawk generally, on account of the tarsal and toes being long and slender; and the term scutiger originally bestowed upon it by our countryman and naturalist May has been restored to it.—Jarrell, History of British Birds.

Sparry. adj. Consisting of spar.

In which manner spar is usually found herein, and other minerals; or such as are of some observable figure; of which sort are the sparry strata, or icicles called stalactites.—Hoodward.

Sparsely. adj. Thinly scattered: (often applied to population). The word passes for an Americanism; but the editor saw it full five-and-thirty years ago recommended by an English writer as a good opposite to dense).

Sparse. v. a. Disperse. Rare.

They began to sparse pretty rumours in the north.—Romney for Sedition, sig. F. 1: 1536. Making way through sparse sirs.

The sparse sire.—Fairfax, Translation of Tasso, xii. 2.

Sparsedly. adv. Dispersedly.

There are doubtless many such soils sparsedly throughout this nation.—Erlyn, Pomona, preface.

Spasm. s. [Fr. spasme; Gr. σπασμα.] Convulsion; violent and involuntary contraction of any part. See Tonic.

All the maladies Of almost spasm, or rocking torture, quails Of heart-sick agony. Milton, Paradise Lost, xi. 480.

Wounds are subject to pain, inflammation, spasm.—Wiersem, Surgery. Carnitative things dilute and relax; because wind occasions a spasm or convulsion in some part.—Arbuthnot.

Spasmodic. adj. [spasmodic, the better form.]

Having the character of a spasm.

The spasm of the bronchi, so often occurring in spasmodic asthma, can sometimes arise from tubercular irritation.—Dr. C. B. Williams, Principles of Medicine, § 152.

Spaw. s. [see Spawn.] Spawn of shell-fish.

A reticulated film found upon sea-shells, and usually supposed to be the remains of the web of the spaw of some sort of shell-fish.—Woodward, On Fossils.

In the month of May, the oysters cast their spaw, which the dredgers call their spaw: it is like to a drop of candle, and about the ligament of an halibut. The spaw cleaves to stones, old oyster-shells, pieces of wood, and such like things, at the bottom of the sea, which they call cullies. It is probably conjectured that the spaw in twenty-four hours begins to have a shell. In the month of May, the dredgers, by the law of the Admiralty Court, have liberty to catch all manner of oysters of what size soever. When they have taken them, with a knife they gently raise the small brood from the cullies, and then they throw the cullies in again to preserve the ground for the future, unless they be so newly spaw that they cannot be safely severed from the cullies: in that case they are permitted to take the stone or shell, &c., that the spaw is upon, one shell having many times twenty spaws.—Bishop Spaw, in Transactions of the Royal Society.

Spathe. s. [Lat. spatha.] In Botany. Leaf, or leaflike, envelope of spadix; well shown in the native flower called Lords and Ladies (Arum maculatum).

(For example see under Spadix.)

Spátiate. v. n. Rove; range; runble at large: (Expatiate the commover form).

Wonder rameth astonishment, or an immovable posture of the body, caused by the fixing of the mind upon one cogitation, whereby it doth not spátiate and transient.—Bacon.

Confined to a narrow chamber, he could spátiate at large through the whole universe.—Deatley.

Spátter. v. a. [Provincial German, bespatten.]

1. Sprinkle with dirt; or anything offensive. The pavement swam in blood, the walls around Were spattered o'er with blood.

2. Throw out anything offensive.

His forward voice now is to speak well of his friend; his backward voice is to spátter foul speeches and to detract.—Shakespeare, Tempus, ii. 2.

3. Asperse; defame.

Spátter. v. n. Spit; sputter as at anything nauseous taken into the mouth.

Spátterdashes. s. pl. Coverings for the legs by which the wet is kept off.

Spáttering. part. adj. Sputtering.

They, fondly thinking to allay Their appetite with gust, instead of fruit Chew'd latter adax, which the offended taste With spáttering noise reject.

Milton, Paradise Lost, i. 564.

Spátte. s. Spittle. Oxalete. The spatte of their tongue.—Bale, On the Revelations, pt. iii. B. 4: 1540.

Spátte. v. a. Foul with, or as with, spittle.

But Sylvius, as a stinking snake, Thy breast is foul within; Thy mind is spotted, spátte, spilt. Thy soul is sealed with sin. Kendall, Fl. of Epigrams: 15 (Nares by H. and W.).

Spátula. s. [Lat. spatha, spatula.] Sputtle or slice.

Spatula is an instrument used by apothecaries and surgeons in spreading plasters or stirring medicines together.—Quincy.

In raising up the hairy scalp smooth with my spátula, I could discover no fault in the bone.—Wiersem, Surgery.

Spávin. s. [Fr. éparvin.] In Farriery. See last extract.

They've all new legs and lame ones: one would take it, That never saw them pace before, the spávin And springhalt reign'd nigher than.

Shakespeare, Henry VIII. i. 3.

This disease (the spávin) in horses is a bony excrescence or crust as hard as a bone, that grows on the middle of the hough, not far from the elbow, and is generated of the same matter by which the bones or ligaments are nourished: it is at first like a temple-gristle, but by degrees comes to hardness.—Farrier's Dictionary.

Spávined. adj. Diseased with spavin.

A fifth wonder'd what a plague I could do at the fair with a blind, spávined, called back, that was only fit to be cut up for a dog-kennel.—Goldsmith, Vicar of Wakefield, ch. xiv.

Spawl. v. n. Throw moisture out of the mouth.

He spits, and spawls, and turns like a man from one elbow to another.—Sir T. Overbury, Characters, G. 4. li. 1027.

What mischief can the dean have done him, That Traulus calls for vengeance on him? Why must he spittle, spawl, and slaver it, In vain against the people's favourite? Swift.

Spawl. s. Spittle; moisture ejected from the mouth.

Of spittle [sic] instruction makes; Then in the spawl her nibble finger dips, Anoints the temple, forehead, and the lips.

Dryden, Translation of Persius, li. 62.

Spáwling. s. Moisture thrown out of the mouth.

[His] marble flows with drunken spáwling shine.

Congreve, Translation of Juvenal, xi. 290.

Spawn. s. [? form of spawl, spittle: these words, with spaw, are all connected by Wedgwood.]

1. Eggs of fish, or of frogs.

Master of the people, Your multiplying spawns how can he flatter That's thousand to one good one? Shakespeare, Coriolanus, ii. 2.

God said, Let the waters generate Reptile, with spawns abundant, living soul! Milton, Paradise Lost, vii. 387.

These ponds, in spawning time, abounded with frogs, and a great deal of spawn.—Ray, On the Wisdom of God manifested in the Works of the Creation.

2. Any product or offspring.

'Twas not the spawn of such as these That dyed with Purick blood the conquer'd seas, And quash'd the stern Academes. Lord Roushammon. This atheistical humour was the spawn of the gross superstitions of the Romish church and court. Archbishop Tillotson.

Spawn. v. a.

1. Produce as fishes, and certain other aquatic animals do, eggs.

Some report a sea-mabl spaw'd him.—Shakespeare, Measure for Measure, ii. 2.

2. Generate; bring forth: (as applied to animals which do not spawn, or are not spawned naturally, contemptions).

What practices such principles as these may spaw, when they are laid out to the sun, you may determine.—Swift.

Spawn. v. n.

1. Produce eggs as fish and certain other aquatic animals do.

The fish having spaw'd before, the fry that goes down hath had about three month's growth under ground, when they are brought up again.—Dr. E. Browne, Travels in Europe.

2. Generally, issue; proceed. Contemptions.

It is so all a quality, and the mother of so many ill ones that spaw from it, that a child should be brought up in the greatest abhorrence of it.—Locke.

Spáwner. s. Female fish.

The larbel, for the preservation of their seed, both the spawner and the mother, cover their spawn with mud.—J. Walton, Complete Angler.

Spay. v. a. [Lat. spado.] Castrate female animal.

The males must be gill, and the spayed; the spayed they esteem as the most profitable, because of the great quantity of fat upon the inward.—Mortimer, Husbandry.

Spoken. v. a. pret. spake, or spoke; past part. spoken. [A.S. sprecan; and the r being lost during the subsequent stages of our language.]

1. Utter articulate sounds; express thoughts by words.

Hannah . . . spoke in her heart, only her lips moved, but her voice was not heard.—1 Samuel i. 12.

2. Harangue; make a speech.

Many of the nobility made themselves popular by speaking in parliament against those things which were most grateful to his majesty, and which still passed, notwithstanding their contradiction.—Lord Clarendon, History of the Great Rebellion. Therefore, though the most presumptuous Greek, Yet durst not for Achilles' armour spoke. Congreve, Translation of Juvenal, xi. 60.

3. Talk for or against; dispute.

A knave should have some countenance at his friend's request. An honest man, sir, is able to spoke for himself when a knave is not.—Shakespeare Henry IV. Part II. v. 1.

The general and his wife are talking of it;
And she speaks for you stoutly.

Shakespeare, Othello, iii. 1.

When he had no power,
He was your enemy; ever spoke against
Your liberties and charters. Id., Coriolanus, ii. 3.

4. Discourse; make mention.

Let went out and spoke unto his sons-in-law.—
Genesis, xix. 11.

Were much things here as we do spoke about?
Or have we eaten of the human root,
That takes the reason prisoner? Id., Macbeth, i. 3.

The fire you speak of,
If any flames of it approach my fortunes,
I'll quench it not with water, but with ruin.

R. Johnson.

The Scripture speaks only of those to whom it speaks.—Hammond.

They could never be lost, but by an universal deluge, which has been spoken to already.—Archbishop Tillotson.

Lucius speaks of a part of Caesar's army that came to him, from the Lemn-lake, in the beginning of the civil war.—Addison.

Had Luther spoken up to this accusation, yet Chrys-ostom's example would have been his defence.—
Bishop Atterbury.

5. Give sound.

Make all your trumpets speak, give them all breath,
Those clam'rous harbingers of blood and death.

Shakespeare, Macbeth, v. 6.

Speak with. Address; converse with.

Thou canst not fear us, Pompey, with thy sails;
We'll speak with thee at sea.

Shakespeare, Antony and Cleopatra, ii. 6.

I spoke with one, my lord, that came from thence,
That freely render'd us these news for true.

Id., Henry IV. Part II. i. 1.

Nicholas was by a herald sent for to come into the great house; Solyman declining to speak with him himself.—Knutson, History of the Turks.

Speak. v. a.

1. Utter with the mouth; pronounce.

Mordecai who had spoken good for the king.—
Ezra, vi. 9.

Consider of it, take advice, and speak your minds.
—Judges, xix. 30.

They sat down with him upon the ground seven days and seven nights, and spoke not a word unto him.—Job, ii. 13.

When divers were hardened, and believed not, but spoke evil of that way before the multitude, he departed.—Acts, xix. 9.

You, from my youth,
Have known and try'd me; speak I more than truth?

Shakespeare, Hamlet, i. 3.

What you keep by you, you may change and mend,
But words once spoken can never be recall'd.

Waller.

Under the tropic in our language spoke,
And part of Flanders hath received our yoke. Id.
He nowhere spoke it out, or in direct terms calls them sustinances. Locke.

Courts speak all languages, but words are understood only by such a people or nation.—Spectator.

2. Proclaim; celebrate; bespeak.

It is my father's music
To speak your deeds, not little of his care
To have them recompens'd.

Shakespeare, Winter's Tale, iv. 3.

3. Address; need; bespeak.

If he have need of thee, he will deceive thee, and smile upon thee, and put thee in hope; he will speak thee fair, and say, What wantest thou?—Ecclesi-astica, xiii. 6.

4. Exhibit; make known.

For the heaven's wide circuit, let it speak
The Maker's high magnificence.

Milton, Paradise Lost, viii. 106.

Speákable. adj. Possible to be, capable of being, spoken; less correctly, as in the extract, having the power of speech.

Ray.

How comest thou speákable of unto?
Milton, Paradise Lost, ix. 563.

Speaker. s.

1. One who speaks.

These fables grow so general, as the authors were lost in the generality of speakers.—Bacon, History of the Reign of Henry VII.

In conversation or reading, find out the true sense, or idea, which the speaker or writer alludes to his words.—Watts, Logic.

Common speakers have only one set of ideas, and one set of words to clothe them in; and these are always ready at the mouth.—Swift.

2. One who speaks in any particular man- ner.

Horace's phrase is 'torret jeour,'
And happy was that curious speaker.
Prior, Alma, i. 361.

3. One who celebrates, claims, or mentions.

After my death, I wish no other herald,

No other speaker of my living actions,

To keep mine honour from corruption.

Shakespeare, Henry VIII. iv. 2.

4. Prolocutor of the Commons; chairman of the House of Commons.

I have disabled myself like an elected speaker of the house.—Drayton.

Speaking. verbal abs. Act of expressing in words; address to an audience.

Let all intercessors, and wrath, and anger, and clamour, and evil speaking, be put away from you.—
Ephesians, iv. 31.

Laying aside all malice, and all guile, and hypocrites, and envy, and evil speaking:—1 Peter, ii. 1.

Speaking is nothing else than a sensible expression of the notions of the mind, by several discriminations of utterance of voice, used as signs, having by consent several determinate significances.
—Hobbes.

Speaking-trumpet. s. Stentoraphonic instrument; trumpet by which the voice may be propagated to a great distance.

That with one blast through the whole house does
sound,
And first taught speaking-trumpet how to sound.

Dryden.

Spear. v. n. Shoot or sprout.

Let them not lie, lest they should spear, and the air dry and spoil the shoot.—Mortimer, Habsburg.

Spear. s. [A.S. speare, spere.]

1. Long weapon with a sharp point, used in thrusting (or less properly, throwing, for which dart and javelin are the better words); lance.

Those brandishers of spears,
From many cities drawn, are they that are our hindlers.

The Egyptian, like a bill, himself did rear,
Like some tall tree; upon it seem'd a spear.

Conley.

Nor upon in his grasp
What seem'd both shield and spear.

Milton, Paradise Lost, iv. 990.

The rous'd-up lion, resolute and slow,
Advances full on the pretended spear. Thomson.

2. Lance, generally with prongs, to kill fish; (generally specified in respect to its use by a prefix, as elspear, or, as in the extract, the first element in a compound).

The borderers watching, until they be past up into some narrow creek, below them, cast a strong corded net athwart the stream, with which, and their hand shouting, they stop them from retiring, until the ebb have abandoned them to the hunter's mercy, who by an old custom, share those with such indifference, as if a woman with child be present, the tale in her womb is gratified with a portion;
a point also observed by the spears in taking of salmon.—Crooke, Survey of the Spear. v. a. Kill or pierce with a spear.

Speárer. s. One who spears. Obsolete.

A pensive [is] a gentleman about his prince,
always redde with his spear; a spearer.—Barret, Alvaric, in vice Penitencer.

Speágrass. s. Long stiff grass.

Tickle our noses with speargrass to make them bleed; and then beslobber our parents with it.—
Shakespeare, Henry IV. Part I. ii. 4.

Speármán. s. One who uses a lance in fight; one who carries a spear.

Rebuke the company of spear-men.—Psalms, lxxviii. 30.

The spearman's arm by thee, great god, directed,
Sends forth a certain wound.

Prior, Second Hymn of Calanachus, 23.

Speármint. s. Species of mint.

Spearmint . . . is indigenous, but is cultivated like peppermint, and subjected to distillation for its essential oil.—Fraser (by E. Phillips) of the Pharmacopoeia: 1831.

Speárwort. s. Species of Ranunculus (flam- mula).

Spearwort is like the other crow-feet in facultie.
—Crayke, Herbal, p. 302; 1053.

Spec. s. Speculation. slang.

'The attorneys for the plaintiff,' said Mr. Serjeant Bunsby. 'Well! They spoke in high praise of the honourable conduct of Messrs. Dodson and Egg, the attorneys for the plaintiff, did they?' 'Yes,' said Sam, 'they said what a very generous thing it was of them to have taken up the case on spec, and to charge nothing at all for costs, unless they got 'em out of Mr. Pickwick.'—Dickens, Pickwick Papers, ch. xxiv.

Speácial. adj. [Fr.; Lat. specialis.]

1. Noting a species.

A special idea is called by the schools a species.—
Watts.

2. Particular; peculiar.

Most commonly with a certain special grace of her own, waving her lips, and grinning instead of smiling.—Sir P. Sidney.

The several books of Scripture having had each some several occasion and particular purpose which caused them to be written, the contents thereof are according to the exigency of that special end whereunto they are intended.—Hunker, Ecclesiastical Polity.

Of all men alive
I never yet beheld that special face,
Which I could fancy more than any other.

Shakespeare, Twelfth Night, ii. 1.

Nought so vile that on the earth doth live,
But to the earth some special weed doth give.

Id., Romeo and Juliet, ii. 3.

Our Saviour is recommended every where in Scripture as the special patron of the poor and the afflicted, and as laying their interest to heart more nearly than those of any other of his members.—
Bishop Atterbury.

The narrative of some of these great crises, of the epoch v. t. 9, when Germany took up arms for her special independence against Roman invasion, has for us this special attraction—that it forms part of our own national history.—Sir R. S. Cross, Fifth Decisive Battles of the World, Victory of Arminius.

3. Appropriate; designed for a particular purpose.

O'Neil, upon his marriage with a daughter of Kildare, was made denizen by a special act of Parliament.—Sir J. Davies, Discourses on the State of Ireland.

Such things are evident by natural light, which men of a mature age, in the ordinary use of their faculties, with the common help of natural science, may know and be sufficiently assured of, without the help of any special revelation.—Bishop Wilkins.

4. Extraordinary; uncommon.

That which in ity of some special time doth cause to be enjoined, dureth no longer than during that time, but doth afterwards become free.—Hunker, Ecclesiastical Polity.

The other scheme taken special care to attribute all the work of conversion to grace.—Hammond.

Though our charity should be universal, yet as it cannot be actually exercised, but on particular times, so it should be chiefly on special opportunities.—
Bishop Sprat, Sermons.

He bore

A paunch of the same bulk before;
Which still he had a special care
To keep well cramm'd with thrifty fare.

Butler, Hudibras, i. 1. 295.

5. Chief in excellence.

The king hath drawn
The special head of all the land together.
Shakespeare, Henry IV. Part I. iv. 4.

Special. s. Particular act, thing, or person.

Promises of long life annexed to some special of his service.—Hammond, Works, iv. 579.

Speciality. s. Particularity.

When men were sure, that in case they rested upon a bare contract without speciality, the other party might waive his law, they would not rest upon such contracts without reserving the debt into a speciality which accorded many suits.—*Sir M.
Hale.*

Specialization. s. Special determination.

It is proved experimentally, that every bundle of nerve-fibres and every ganglion, has a special duty; and that each part of every such bundle and every such ganglion, has a duty still more special. Can it be, then, that in the great hemispherical ganglia alone, this specialization of duty does not hold? If it be urged that there are no marked divisions among the fibres of the cerebrum, I reply, neither are there among those contained in one of the bundles proceeding from the spinal chord to any part of the body, yet each of the fibres in such bundle has a function more or less special; though a function included in that of the bundle considered as a whole.
And this is just the kind of specialization which may be presumed to exist in different parts of the cerebrum.—Herbert Spencer, Principles of Psychology, p. 507.

Specialize. v. a. Particularize; mention specially; differentiate or determine in a special manner.

Our Saviour specializing and nominating the places.—Sheldon, Miracles of Antichrist, p. 261.

The next general fact to be noted, is, that these cells whose union constitutes the essential act of gaugingness . . . though they are not, as many cells are, nullified for growth and metamorphosis by being highly specialized, yet they have lost the power of growth and metamorphosis. They have severally reached a state of equilibrium.—Herbert Spencer, Inductions of Biology, pt. ii. ch. vii.

Specially. adv. In a special manner.

1. Particularly above others.

Specially the day that thou stoodst before the Lord thy God, in Horeb.—Deuteronomy, ix. 19.
A brother beloved, specialy to me.—Philimon, ii.

2. Not in a common way; peculiarly.

If there be matter of law that carries any difficulty, the jury may, to deliver themselves from an attendant, find it specially.—Sir M. Hale.

Specialty. s. Speciality; particularity.

On these two general heads all other specialities are dependent.—Hooker, Ecclesiastical Polity.

The pocket is not count.

Where that and other specialties are bound.

Shakespeare, Love's Labour's Lost, ii. 1.

Specialty of rule hath been neglected.

Id., Troilus and Cressida, ii. 3.

Spécie. s. [Lat. ablative of species.] Term applied to coin, as opposed to paper-money or debased coinage; (often with in, as 'Paid in specie'). For the form Species see under that word.

Spécies. s. [Lat.]

1. Sort; subdivision of a general term.

A special class is called by the schools a species; it is one common nature that serves to several singular individual beings; so horses is a special form or species, as it agrees to Hircapulus, Trot, and Snowball.—Watts.

2. In Logic. See extract.

It is evident from what has been said that the genus and difference put together make up the species; e.g. 'rational' and 'animal' constitute 'man'; so that, in reality, the species contains the genus [i.e. implies it]; and when the genus is called a whole, and is said to contain the species, this is only a metaphorical expression, signifying that it comprehends the species, and its own more extensive subdivision.—Archbishop Whately, Elements of Logic, ii. 1, ch. v. § 4.

3. Class of nature; single order of beings.

He intended the cure of species or common nature, but letch loose the guard of individuals or single existences.—Sir T. Browne.

The Phoenix kind is a whole species alone.—Cowley.

If animal, both of us may,

As judly pass for bears as they;

For we are animals no less,

Although of different species.

Butler, Hudibras, l. 1, 841.

Thou wast a race which must proceed from me,

Yet my whole species in myself I see.

Dryden, State of Innocence, ll. 1.

Species, when applied to organized beings is always applied (when we are speaking strictly, as naturalists) to such individuals as are supposed to be descended from a common stock, or which might have so descended; viz. a high reasonable one another (to use M. Cuvier's expression) as much as those of the same stock do. Now this being a point on which all

(not merely naturalists) are agreed, and since it is a fact (whether an ascertained fact or not) that certain individuals are, or are not, thus connected, it follows that every question whether a certain individual or plant, belongs to a certain species or not, is a question not of mere arrangement, but of fact. But in the case of questions respecting genus, it is otherwise. If, e.g. two naturalists differed in the one placing (as Linnaeus) all the species of bee under one genus, which the other subdivided (as Latr. writers have done into several genera) it would be evident that there was no question of fact debated between them, and that it was only to be considered which was the more convenient arrangement. If, on the other hand, it were disputed whether the African and the Asiatic elephant are distinct species, or merely varieties, it would be equally manifest that the question is one of fact, since both allow that if they are descended (or might have descended) from the same stock, they are of the same species; and if otherwise, of two: this is the fact, which they endeavour to ascertain, by such indications as are to be found.—Archbishop Whately, Elements of Logic, ii. 1, ch. v. § 1.

A mind of superior or meaner capacities than human would constitute a different species, though united to a human body in the same laws of connexion; and a mind of human capacities would make another species, if united to a different body in different laws of connexion.—Hentley, Sermons.

The meaning attached to the term species in natural history is very definite and intelligible. It includes only the following conditions, namely separate origin and distinctness of race, evinced by the constant transmission of some characteristic peculiarity of organization. A race of animals or of plants marked by any peculiar character which has always been constant and undeviating, constitutes a species; and two races are considered as specifically different, if they are distinguished from each other by some characteristic which the one cannot be supposed to have acquired, or the other to have lost, through any known operation of physics.

For we are hence led to conclude that the tribes thus distinguished have not descended from the same original stock.—Priestley, Researches into the Physical History of Mankind, ii. 1, ch. 1, sect. 1.

When it can be shown that two races have had a separate origin, they are to be regarded as of different species, and, in the absence of proof, this is inferred, when we see some peculiarity of organization characteristic of each, so constantly transmitted from parent to offspring, that the one cannot be supposed to have lost, or the other to have acquired it, through any known operation of physical causes.—Dr. Carpenter, Principles of Physiology, General and Comparative, § 737: 1861.

It will ... be seen ... that the terms 'genus' and 'species' not only differ very considerably in importance, but in significance also. Whilst the former is merely suggestive of a particular position which a creature occupies in a systematic scale (a position, however, which depends upon the various structural peculiarities which it possesses in common with other beings, which thus more or less resemble it), the latter expresses the actual creature itself; so that while one applies to several animals (or distinct races and origins though bound together by a certain bond of imitation), the other belongs to a single race alone, which it therefore exclusively indicates.—T. Vernon Wallaston, On the Variation of Species, p. vi.

In considering the origin of species it is quite conceivable that a naturalist, reflecting on the mutual affinities of organic beings, on their embryological relations, their geographical distribution, geological succession, and other such facts, might come to the conclusion that each species had not been independently created, but had descended like varieties from other species. Nevertheless such a conclusion, even if well founded, would be unsatisfactory until it could be shown how the innumerable species inhabiting this world have been modified, so as to acquire that perfection of structure and coadaptation which most justly excites our admiration.—C. Darwin, On the Origin of Species.

One main aim of his [Cuvier's] successors is, and long will be, to determine that point; or whether there be, indeed, any such at which the mutation of a species necessarily stops. The observed grades of departure from specific type are termed varieties, and the degree of variation in the offspring from the parent appears to be greatest in the lowest organisms. Consequently the definition or recognition of a species of Foraminifer, or Brachiopod, &c. is much less easy than of a bird or a mammal. Therea, in Brande and Cox, Dictionary of Science, Literature, and Art.

It is obvious that the names species and genus are merely relative; and that the same common terms may, in one case, be the species which is predicated of an individual, and in another case the individual of which a species is predicated: e.g. the individual, Caesar, belongs to the species man; but man, again, may be said to belong to the species animal, &c., as we contemplate higher and more comprehensive terms. A species, in short, when predicated of individuals, stands in the same relation to them as the genus to the species, and when predicated of other lower species, it is then, in respect of these, a genus, while it is a species in respect of a higher genus. Such a term is called a subaltern species or genus; while the highest term of all, of which nothing can be predicated, is the summum genus, the lowest of all, which can be predicated of nothing, the infima species. The difference which, together with the genus, makes up the species, is termed the specific difference.—Brande and Cox, Dictionary of Science, Literature, and Art.

3. Appearance to the senses; any visible or sensible representation.

An apparent diversity between the species visible and audible is, that the visible doth not mingle in the medium, but the audible doth.—Bacon.

It is a most certain rule, how much any body hath of colour, so much hath it of speech, and by so much the more unfit it is to transmit the species. Ray, On the Wisdom of God manifested in the Works of the Creation.

The species of the letters illuminated with blue were nearer to the lens than those illuminated with deep red; by about three inches; ... but the species of the letters illuminated with indigo and violet appeared so confused and indistinct, that I could not read them.—Sir L. Newton, On Opticks.

4. Representation to the mind.

With in the poet, or wit-writing, is no other than the faculty of imagination in the writer, which searches over all the memory for the species or ideas of those things which it designs to represent.—Dryden.

5. Show; visible exhibition.

Shows and species serve best with the people.—Bacon.

6. Circulating money. Rare.

As there was in the splendour of the Roman empire a less quantity of current species in European there is now, it one possessed a much greater proportion of the circulating species of its time than any European city.—Arbuthnot.

7. Simples that have place in a compound medicine.

Specific. adj.

1. Quality which makes a thing of the species of which it is.

That them to truth the perfect way mayst know,

To thee all her specific forms I'll show.

Sir J. Doukhan, Of Prudence

The understanding, as to the exercise of this power, is subject to the command of the will, though, as to the specific nature of its acts, it is determined by the object.—South, Sermons.

By whose direction is the nutriment so regularly distributed into the respective parts, and how are they kept to their specific uniformities?—Glanville, Sermons Scientific.

Three principles I consider not as occult qualities supposed to result from the specific forms of things, but as general laws of nature by which the things themselves are formed; their truth appearing to us by phenomena, though their causes be not yet discovered.—Sir I. Newton, On Opticks.

Specific gravity is the appropriate and peculiar gravity or weight which any species of natural bodies have, and by which they are plainly distinguishable from all other bodies of different kinds.—Quincy.

The specific qualities of plants reside in their native spirit, oil, and essential salt; for the water, fixt salt, and earth appear to be the same in all plants.—Arbuthnot.

Specific difference is that primary attribute which distinguishes each species from one another, while they stand ranked under the same general nature or genus. Though wine differs from other liquids, in that it is the juice of a certain fruit, yet this is but a general or generic difference; for it does not distinguish wine from cyder or perry; the specific difference of wine therefore is its pressure from the grape; as cyder is pressed from apples, and perry from pears.—Watts.

The writer of the volume in question meets me upon my own ground. He acknowledges there is no statute, by which the specific disability we speak of is created, but he affirms, that the custom of parliament has been referred to, and that a case strictly in point has been produced, with the decision of the court upon it.—Letters of Junius, letter 2.

2. In Medicine. Appropriated to the cure of some particular distemper; (originally applied to the arcana, or medicines that work by occult qualities).

Specifico. s. Specific medicine.

If she would drink a cool decoction of rose, with the usual specifics, she might enjoy a good health.—Wiccan, Surgery.

Specifically. adj. Specific.

The operation of purging medicines have been referred to a hidden property, a specific virtue, and the like shifts of ignorance.—Bacon, Natural and Experimental History.

As all things were formed according to their specific platforms, so their truth must be measured from their conformity to them.—Norris.

Specifically. adv. In a specific manner; according to the nature of the species.

This faith must be not only living, but lively too; it must be put into a posture by a particular exercise of those several virtues that are specifically requisite to a due performance of this duty.—South, Sermons.

Human reason doth not only gradually, but specifically, differ from the instinctive reason of brutes, which have to conceit of truth, as an unregulate of divers simple concepts, nor of any other universal.—Grew.

We must allow that bodies were endowed with the same affections then as ever now; and that, if an axe head be supposed to float upon water which is specifically lighter, it had been supernatural.—Haley.

Specificate. v. a. Mark by notation of distinguishing particularities.

Man, by the instituted law of his creation, and the common influence of the divine goodness, is enabled to act as a reasonable creature, without any particular, specificating, or universal, new imperia act of the divine special providence.—Sir M. Hale.

Specification. s.

1. Distinct notation; determination by a peculiar mark.

This specification or limitation of the question hinders the disparters from wandering away from the precise point of enquiry.—Watts.

2. Particular mention.

The constitution here speaks generally without the specification of any place.—Ayliffe, Parvulus Juris Canonici.

3. In Patent Law. Declaration, or exposition, of the point on which the claim for the patent is founded.

Specificness. s. Attribute suggested by Specific; particular mark of distinction.

A spirit is one simple specific essence or substance; and that true specificness in its essence is the real and intimate form thereof.—A annotations on Glanville, p. 232: 1692.

Specify. v. a. Mention; show by some particular marks of distinction.

As the change of such laws as have been specified is necessary, so the evidence that they are such must be given. — Monker, Ecclesiastical Polity.
He has there given us an exact geography of Greece, where the countries, and the uses of their soils, are specified. — Pope.

Specimen. s. [Lat.] Sample; part of anything exhibited, that the rest may be known.

Several persons have exhibited specimens of this art before multitudes of beholders. — Addison, Spectator.

Specious. adj. [Fr. spécieux; Lat. speciosus] 1. Showy; pleasing to the view.

Divers sorts are of them [serpents:] speciosa, and beautiful to the eye. — Bishop Richardau, On Genesis, iii. 1: 1653.

The rest, far greater part, Will deem in outward rites and specious forms, Religious working. — Milton, Paradise Lost, xi. 533.

She next I took to wife,
O that I never had I found with too late!
Was to the vale of Sore, Dublin,
That specious monster, my accomplish'd snare.

Milton, Samson Agonistes, 227.

2. Plausible; superficially, not solidly right; striking at first view.

But men boast
Their specious deeds on earth which glory excites,
Or close ambition varnish'd o'er with zeal.

Milton, Paradise Lost, ii. 4-3.
Somehow of specious they must have to recommend themselves to princes; for fully will not easily go down in its natural form. — Dryden.

Temptation is of greater danger, because it is covered with the specious names of good nature and good manners. — Rogers.

This is the only specious objection which our British adversaries upon against the doctrine of this church in the point of celibacy. — Bishop Atterbury.

Speciously. adv. In a specious manner; with fair appearance.

Pity is opposed to hypocrisy and insincerity; especially . . . that pernicious devotion under which any kind of impiety is to be disguised, and put off more speciously. — Hannand.

Speciousness. s. Attribute suggested by specious; state or quality of being specious.

Speciosity. s. Specious show.

Open soundrels rode triumphant, bedimmed, becom'd d. bendred; or the still fallster species of secret soundrels, in their fair-sounding formulas, speciosities, respectabilities, hollow within: the race of quacks was crown'd many as the sands of the sea.
Carlyle, History of the French Revolution, b. v. ch. 1.

Speck. s. [A.S. spic; German, speck; Danish, spæk.] Bacon: (such at least is the ordinary name for that viand at present).

Stuff the guts
With speck and barley-pudding; for digestion,
Drink wine and some milk.

Heywood, English Traveller. (Nares by H. and W.)

Speck. s. [A.S. specca.] Small discoloration; spot.

Every speck does not blind a man. — Dr. H. More, Government of the Tongue.

Then are they happy, when . . .
No speck is left of their habitual stains;
But the pure ether of the soul remains.

Dryden, Translation of the Kueid, vi. 1009.
The Arabs say there is a black speck, were it no bigger than a hen's eye, in every soul; which once set a-working, will overcloud the whole man into darkness, and quasi-madness, and hurry him blindly into night. — Carlyle, Critical and Miscellaneous Essays, Sir W. Scott.

Speck. r. n. Spot; stain in drops.

Each flower of slender stalk, whose head, though gay,
Crimson, purple, azure, or speck'd with gold,
Hung drooping, unsustained.

Milton, Paradise Lost, ix. 424.

Speckle. s. Small speck; little spot.

Speckle. v. a. Mark with small spots.

Speckled. part. adj. Murked with speckles.

No dreadfully he towards him did pass,
Forbidding up aloft his speck'd breast,
And often bounding on the bruised grass,
As for great joy of his new comen guest.

Spenser, Faerie Queen.
Will sicken soon and die,
And leprous sin will melt from earthly mould.

Milton, Ode on the Nativity, 130.
Saw'st thou not late a speckled serpent rear,
His gilded spires to climb on yon fair tree?
Before this happy minute I was he.

Dryden, State of Innocence, iv. 2.

The smiling infant in his hand shall take
The crested basilisk and speckled snake.

Pope, Messiah, 81.

The tortoise here and elephant unite,
Transformed to combs, the speckled and the white,
Id., Rape of the Lock, canto 1.

Spectacle. s. [Fr.; Lat. spectaculum.]

1. Show; gazing stock; anything exhibited to the view as eminently remarkable.

We are made a spectacle unto the world, and to angels and to men. — 1 Corinthians, iv. 9.

In open place presented they are,
To be a public spectacle to all.

Shakespeare, Henry VI. Part I. i. 4.

2. Anything perceived by the sight.
Forth riding underneath the castle wall,
A churchful of dead carresses in app'l,
The dreadful spectacle of that sad house of pride.

Spenser, Faerie Queen.

When pronouncing sentence, seem not sad;
Such spectacles, though they are just, are sad.

Sir J. Denham, Of Justice.

3. Plural. Glasses to assist the sight.

The sixth new shift
Into the lean and slipper'd pantaloons,
With spectacles on nose and pouch on side.

Shakespeare, As you like it, ii. 7.
Shakespeare was naturally learned; he needed not the spectacles of books to read nature; he looked forward, and found her there. — Dryden, Essay on Dramatick Poesy.

This is the reason of the decay of sight in old men, and shows why their sight is aided by spectacles. — Sir J. Newton.

This day, then, let us not be told,
That you are sick and I grown old;
Nor think on our approaching ill,
And talk of spectacles and pills.

Swift.

Spectacle-maker. s. One who makes spectacles; optician.

The first spectacle-maker did not think that he was leading the way to the discovery of new planets. — Grew.

Spectacled. adj. Furnished with spectacles.

All tongues speak of him, and the bleared sights
Are spectacled to see him.

Shakespeare, Coriolanus, ii. 1.

Spectacular. adj. Relating to spectacles or shows.

The spectacular sports were concluded. — Dr. Hicken, Sermon on the 30th of January, p. 1: 1681-2.

Spectation. s. [Lat. spectatio.] In Medicine. Post-mortem examination; autopsy.

(visio = self + opsis = seeing, the two words approximately translating each other).
Rare, or obsolete.

This simple spectation of the lines is different from that which concatenates a ploury. — Harvey.

Spectator. s. [Lat.; Fr. spectateur.] Looker-on; beholder.

More
Than history can pattern, though devised
And play'd, to take spectators.

Shakespeare, Winter's Tale, iii. 2.

If it proves a good request to the spectators, the dish pays the shot. — Id., Cymbeline, v. 3.

An old gentleman mounting on horseback, and up heavily; but desired the spectators that they would count fourscore and eight before they judged him. — Dryden.

He mourns his former vigour lost so far,
To make him now spectator of a war.

Id., Aurengzebe, i. 1.

And there he stood with such angroid, that greater

Could not be shewn even by a mere spectator.

Dryden, Don Juan, v. 11.

Spectatorship. s.

1. Art of beholding.

Thou stand'st i' th' state of hanging, or of some death more long in spectatorship, and crueler in suffering. — Shakespeare, Coriolanus, v. 2.

2. Office or quality of a spectator.

Your first rudimental essays in spectatorship were made in my shop, where you often practised for hours. — Spectator.

Spectatress. s. Female spectator, looker-on, or beholder.

Amid the general wreck see where she stands,
Like Helen, in the night when Troy was sack'd, Spectatress of the mischiefs which she made.

Rome, Fair Penitent.

Did reason reassume its shatter'd throne
But as spectatress of this list of horrors!

Walpole, Mysterious Mother.

Spectral. adj. Spectre-like.

'Hem! I' said Mr. Aberton, thrusting his large hand through his lank light hair. 'Hem—could one do anything, do you think, in that quarter?'—I should think one might, with a tolerable person!

answered the spectral aristocrat, looking down at a pair of small window squinters. — Lord Lytton, Pelham, ch. xviii.

In Optics. See under Spectrum.

Spectre. s. [Lat. spectrum.]

1. Apparition; appearance of persons dead. The ghosts of traitors from the bridge descend,
With bold fanatic spectres to rejoin.

Dryden, Annus Mirabilis, cxxxii.

The very poetical use of the word for a spectra doth imply an exact resemblance to some real being it represents. — Bishop Stillingfleet.

2. Zoology. See extract.

Spectre . . . [is] a species of four-handed mammal (Leone spectrum, Linnaeus), so called on account of its nocturnal habits, attenuated frame, long and skeleton-like limbs, and the gliding, stealthy, noiseless motion, by which it surprises a sleeping prey. — Thom, in Brander and Cox, Dictionary of Science, Literature, and Art.

Spectroscope. s. Instrument for the observation of the spectrum.

Some of the most important astronomical discoveries of the last few years have resulted from the application of the spectroscope to the telescope, the end of the latter being ruled in to collect the light emanating from the distant stars and nebulae. . . .

Wheeler, Secoy and Browning have also announced a modification of the spectroscope for use with the microscope. — Lockyer, in Brander and Cox, Dictionary of Science, Literature, and Art.

Spectrum. s. [Lat.] Display of prismatic colours, resulting from the decomposition of light.

This prism had some veins running along within the glass, from the one end to the other, which scattered some of the sun's light irregularly, but had no sensible effect in increasing the length of the coloured spectrum. — Sir I. Newton, On Opticks.

Mr. Huggins and Dr. Miller devised a method of seeking in the spectra of the fixed stars that evidence of the existence in them of known elementary substances, which had been obtained in the case of the sun by Bunsen and Kirchhoff. . . . The spectra of the stars were compared by a method of simultaneous observation with the spectra of many of the terrestrial elements. . . . On extending these researches to the Sun, Mr. Huggins made the most unexpected discovery that the spectra of certain of these bodies are discontinuous, consisting of bright lines only. . . . During the last two years Mr. Huggins has examined the spectra of more than sixty nebulae and clusters. This examination shows that these remarkable bodies may be divided into two great groups: viz. 1st, True or genuine nebulae, which furnish a discontinuous spectrum, consisting of two or three bright lines only; and 2nd, what we may distinguish as spurious nebulae, or nebulous matter with clusters, which give a spectrum apparently continuous. . . . In the present year also Mr. Huggins has made a remarkable observation upon the small comet, known as comet No. 1, 1861. He ascertained that the minute nucleus gave a caseous or discontinuous spectrum; whilst the spectrum of the coma, as though formed by suspended particles which reflected solar light, gave a continuous spectrum. — President's (General Sabine's) Anniversary Address, Royal Society: 1863.

The most magnificent spectrum that we are acquainted with, a combination, so to speak, of innumerable spectral bands placed side by side, in that which occurs when rain-drops are the reflecting and refracting media: the familiar but ever-glorious rainbow. — Lockyer, in Brander and Cox, Dictionary of Science, Literature, and Art.

Used adjectivally, or as the first element in a compound.

Thus, then, a prism has the power of analysing light, showing what are its constituent rays; the latter being termed a spectrum. The operation is that of spectrum analysis. . . . Four new metals have been discovered by spectrum analysis. Bunsen and Kirchhoff, in examining the spectra of certain residues of the evaporation of water from a spring (Dürkheim), detected rays of a colour and position in the spectrum hitherto unobserved. Following up the research, they succeeded in isolating the two metallic elements cesium and rubidium. Soon afterwards Mr. Crookes discovered thallium; Indiana being the last added to the list in this way. — Lockyer, in Brander and Cox, Dictionary of Science, Literature and Art.

Spectral. adj. [Lat. specularis.]

1. Having the qualities of a mirror or looking-glass.

It were but madness now t' impart
The skill of spectral stone.

Quicksilver may, by the fire alone, in glass vessels, be turned into a red body; and from this red body may be obtained a mercury, bright and spectral as before. — Boyle.

2. Assisting sight.

The hidden way
Of nature would'st thou know, how first she frames
All things in miniature? thy spectator orb

999

Apply to well-thoested kernels; let
In each observe the slender threads
Of first beginning trees. J. Phillips, Cyder, l. 351.

3. Affording view.

Look once more, ere we leave this specular mount.
Milton, Paradise Regained, iv. 324.

Speculate, v. n. Meditate; contemplate; take a view of anything with the mind.

Consider the quantity, and not speculate upon an intrinsical relation.—Sir K. Digby, Treatise on the Nature of Politics.

As news-writers record facts which afford great matter of speculation, their readers speculate accordingly, and, by their variety of conjectures, become consummate statement.—Addison.

And writers of weight will speculate
On the Cabinet's design.

And much that was done in twenty-eight
Will be done in twenty-nine. W. M. Praed.

Speculate, v. n. Consider attentively; look through with the mind. Rare.

Man was not meant to gaze, or look upward, but to have his thoughts sublime; and not only behold, but speculate their nature with the eye of the understanding.—Sir T. Browne.

Speculation, s.

1. Examination by the eye; view.

Here, as from a turret of speculation, you may look down upon the vulgar.—Coltrington, Mirror of History, 153.

Let us descend now therefore from this top
Of speculation. Milton, Paradise Lost, xii. 539.

2. Examiner; spy; (probably misprinted for speculator).

They who have, as who have not, whom their great stars
Thence and set high? servants
Which are to France the spies and speculations, Intelligent of our state.
Shakespeare, King Lear, iii. 1.

3. Mental view; intellectual examination; contemplation.

Thenceforth to speculations high or deep,
I turn'd my thoughts; and with capacious mind
Consider'd all things visible.

Milton, Paradise Lost, ix. 602.

4. Train of thoughts formed by meditation.

From him Socrates derived the principles of morality, and most part of his natural speculations.
—Sir W. Temple.

5. Mental scheme not reduced to practice.

This terrestrial globe, which before was only round in speculation, has since been surrounded by the fortune and boldness of many navigators.—*Sir W.
Temple.*

• This is a consideration not to be neglected, or thought an indifferent matter of mere speculation.
—Lealie.

6. Power of sight.

Thy loines are marrowless; thy blood is cold;
There is no speculation in those eyes
That thou dost glare withal.

Shakespeare, Macbeth, iii. 1.

7. In Commerce. Term applied to a pur- chase, or risk, made on the expectation of a rise in prices, or a development of the article from which the remuneration is ex- pected.

The establishment of any new manufacture, of any new branch of commerce, or of any new practice in agriculture, is always a speculation, from which the projector promises himself extraordinary profits.—A. Smith, Wealth of Nations, b. i. ch. x.

8. Game at cards, the leading principle of which is the purchase of an unknown card, on the calculation of its probable value when known; or of a known one, on the chance of no better appearing in the course of the game; a portion of the pack being retained, i. e. not dealt.

Speculatist, s. Speculator.

Let the profoundest speculatist, or curious practitioner, turn the edge of his wit which way he will to find some new thing; yet sure it is, the same things have been.—Granger, Commentary on Ecce-nasus, p. 21: 1631.

The observation of a few retired speculatists.—
Cheney, Philomel to Hyde, conv. ii.

The perplexity which has entangled the speculatists of all ages.—Johnson, Review of Young's Essay Enquiry.

It would seem impossible to a solitary speculatist, that a human being can want employment. *Id.,
Remember, no. 124.*

Such are the conceits of speculatists, who strain their faculties to find in a mine what lies upon the surface.—Id., Lives of the Poets, Prior.

Speculative, adj.

1. Given to speculation; contemplative.

If all other men were utterly taken away, yet the mind of man being by nature speculative, and delighted with contemplation in itself, they were to be known even for mere knowledge sake.—Hooker, Ecclesiastical Polity.

The great Mirabaut used to say always that his father had the greater gifts of the two. . . . So far as were speculative head powers, Mirabaut is probably right. Looking at the old marquis as a speculative thinker, and utterer of his thought. . . . you perceive him to be superior, or even supreme, in his time.—Curlye, Critical and Miscellaneous Essays, Mirabaut.

2. Theoretical; notional; ideal; not prac- ticial.

Some take it for a speculative platform, that reason and nature would that the best should govern, but no wise to create a right.—Bacon, Advertisement touching a Holy War.

These are not speculative flights, or imaginary notions, but are plain and undeniable laws, that are founded in the nature of rational beings.—Law.

The speculative merchant exercises no regular, established, or well-known branch of business; he is a corn-merchant this year, and a wine-merchant the next, and a sugar, tobacco, or tea-merchant the year after.—*A. Smith, Wealth of Nations, b. i. ch.
xiii. (Ord MS.)*

3. Belonging to view.

My speculative and active instruments.

Shakespeare, Othello, i. 3.

Speculative glasses.—Hooker, History of the Royal Society, iv. 30.

4. Prying.

Councillors should not be too speculative into their sovereign's person.—Bacon.

Speculatively, adv. In a speculative man- ner.

1. Contemplatively; with meditation.

They were with Mary to be speculatively affected; mean time those Martians, who were troubled about many things, were not for their provided care in domestick affairs altogether condemned.—
Commentary on Chaucer, p. 70: 1635.

2. Ideally; notionally; theoretically; not practically.

It is possible that a man may, speculatively, prefer the constitution of another country, or an Utopian of his own, before that of the nation where he is born and lives. Swift, Examiner, no. 20.

Speculator, s.

1. One who forms theories.

He is dextrous in puzzling others, if they be not through-paced speculators in those great theories. —
Dr. H. More.

2. Observer; contemplator.

Although lapidaries and questuary enquirers affirm it, yet the writers of minerals, and natural speculators, conceive the stones which bear this name to be a mineral concretion.—Sir T. Browne.

3. Spy; watcher.

All the boats had one speculator, to give notice when the fish approached.—Browne, Notes on the Odyssey.

Speculutory, adj.

1. Exercising speculation.

2. Calculated for spying or viewing.

Both these were nothing more than speculutory out posts to the Akeman-street.—T. Warton, History of the Parish of Kiddington, p. 58.

Speculum, s. [Lat.]

1. Mirror; looking-glass; that in which re- presentations are formed by reflection.

A rough and coloured object may serve for a specu-lum, to reflect the artificial rainbow.—Boyle, Experiments and Considerations touching Colours.

2. Instrument in surgery used for clearing and dilating any passage (the ear, or parts about the uterus), with a reflecting body at the end, upon which, a light being thrown, the condition of the parts is shown.

Speech, s. [A.S. spræc; see Speak.]

1. Power of articulate utterance; power of expressing thoughts by vocal words.

There is now comparable to the variety of instructive expressions by speech, wherewith man alone is endowed, for the communication of his thoughts.—
Holder, Elements of Speech.

Though our ideas are first acquired by various sensations and reflections, yet we convey them to each other by the means of certain sounds, or written marks, which we call words; and a great part of our knowledge is both obtained and communicated by these means, which are called speech.—
Watts.

2. Language; words considered as express- ing thoughts.

In speech be right parts.—Accidence.

The acts of God to human ears
Cannot without process of speech be told.

Milton, Paradise Lost, vii. 177.

3. Particular language as distinct from others.

There is neither speech nor language, but their voices are heard among them.—Book of Common Prayer, Pauline, xii. 3.

4. Anything spoken.

A plague upon your epileptick vintage!
Smile you my speeches as I were a fool?

Shakespeare, King Lear, ii. 2.
Smile you my speeches as I were a fool?

5. Talk; mention.

The duke did of me demand
What was the speech among the Londoners, Concerning the French journey.

Shakespeare, Henry VIII, i. 2.
Speech of a man's self ought to be seldom.—Bacon, Essays, Of Dignities.

6. Oration; harangue.

The constant design of these orators, in all their speeches, was to drive some one particular point.— Knight.

7. Declaration of thoughts.

I, with leave of speech implored, replied.

Milton, Paradise Lost, viii. 577.

Speech, v. n. Harangue; make a speech.

He raved continually of the merlin: he stood upon the bulks in Westminster hall, and speech'd against him from morning till night.—Account of T. W. Higby, Esq. p. 8: 1710.

And were you supposed to have the tongues of angels and archangels to speech it in your behalf, their words would have no weight!—Pyle, Sermons, ii. 435.

Speechify, v. n. Make a speech; make speeches. Colloquial and contemptuous.

Speechless, adj.

1. Deprived of the power of speaking; made mute or dumb.

He fell down, foam'd at mouth, and was speechless.—Shakespeare, Julius Caesar, i. 2.

The great god Pan hath broken his pipes, and Apollo's priests are become speechless.—*Sir W.
Raleigh.*

A single vision transports them: it finds them in the sweetness and height of their devotion; they are speechless for the time that it continues, and prostrate when it departs.—Dryden.

Speechless with wonder, and half dead with fear.
Addison.

2. Mute; dumb.

I kneel'd before him;
'Twas very faintly he said, Rise: dismount me
Thus, with his speechless hand.

Shakespeare, Coriolanus, v. 1.

From her eyes
I did receive fair speechless messages.

Id., Merchant of Venice, i. 1.

He that never hears a word spoken, it is no wonder he remain speechless; as any one must do, who from an infant should be bred up among mutes.—Holth, Elements of Speech.

Speechlessness, s. Attribute suggested by Speechless; state of being speechless.

Immediate preceding signs of death are great inquietness, . . . the memory confused, speechlessness, cold sweats.—Bacon, History of Life and Death.

Speed, v. n. [spēdun.]

1. Make haste; move with celerity.

So well they sped, that they be come at length
Unto the place whereas the Paynim lay,
Devoid of outward sense and native strength,
Covered with charmed cloud from view of day.

Spenser, Faerie Queere.

Do you think me a swallow, an arrow, or a bullet?
Have I, in my poor and cold motion, the expedition of thought? I sped hither with the very extremest reach of possibility.—Shakespeare, Henry IV, Part II, iv. 3.

If prayers
Could alter high decrees, I to that place
Would speed before thee, and be louder heard.

Milton, Paradise Lost, x. 652.

See where I dwell speeds! a trusty soldier.
A. Phillips.

2. Have good success.

Timon is shrunk, indeed;
And he that's cure denied will hardly speed.

Shakespeare, Timon of Athens, iii. 2.
When first this tempter crown'd the gulf from hell,
I told you then he should prevail, and speed
In his bad errand. Milton, Paradise Lost, x. 53.

3. Succeed well or ill.

Make me not sighted like the basilisk:
I've look'd on thousands, who have sped the better
By my regard, but kill'd no one.

Shakespeare, Winter's Tale, i. 2.

Maclean showed them what an offence it was falsely to depart out of the city, which might be unto them dangerous, although they should speed never so well.—Knull, History of the Turks.

These were volunteers of the first temple, and those that profaned and abused the second, speed no better.
—South, Sermon.

4. Have any condition good or bad.
Sails heretofore in seas like fishes speed,
The mightiest still upon the smallest fed. Waller.

Speed. v. a.

1. Dispatch in haste; send away quickly.
The tyrant's self, a thing unused, began
To feel his heart relent with meek compassion;
But not disposed to ruth or mercy then,
He sped him thence home to his habitation. Railfar.

2. Hasten; put into quick motion.

She,
Hearing so much, will speed her foot again,
Led hither by pure love.
Shakespeare, All's well that ends well, iii. 1.

Satan, toward the coast of earth beneath,
Down from the celestial speed with hinged success,
Throws his steep flight in many an airy wheel.
Milton, Paradise Lost, iii. 730.

The helpless priest reply'd no more,
But sped his steps along the house resounding shore.
*Dryden, Translation of the First Book of
the Iliad.*

3. Dispatch; destroy; kill; mischief; ruin.

A dire dilemma either way I'm sped;
If foes, they write; if friends, they read me dead.
Pope, Epistle to Arbuthnot.

4. Execute; dispatch.

Judicial acts are all those writings and matters which relate to judicial proceedings, and are sped out at the instance of one or both of the parties.—Aglye, Parergon Juris Canonici.

5. Assist; help forward.

Lavinia ...
Reached her midwife hands to speed the throes,
And took the powerful spells that bates to birth disclose.
Dryden, Translation from Ovid, Cinyras and Myrrha.

Speed the soft intercourse from soul to soul,
And wait a sigh from Indus to the Pole.
Pope, Episto to Abetard.

6. Make prosperous; make to succeed.

If there come any unto you, and bring not this doctrine, receive him not into your house, neither bid him God speed.—2 John, 10.

He was chosen, though he stood low upon the roll, by a very unusual concurrence of providential events, which happened to be sped.—Bishop Fell.
Which, if it be your opinion, the beauty you have will be withered before you be wedded, and your woes and good old gentlemen before they be speeded.—Lyle, Euphuus and his England. (Sares by H. and W.)

Speed. s. [A.S. spēd.]

1. Quickness; celerity.

Earth receives
As tribute, such a sunless journey brought
Of immaterial speed, her warmth and light;
Speed! to describe whose swiftness number fails.
Milton, Paradise Lost, viii. 35.

We observe the horse's patient service at the plough, his speed upon the highway, his docility, and desire of glory.—Dr. H. More.

2. Haste; hurry; dispatch.

When they strain to their utmost speed, there is still the wanted distance between them and their aim: all their eager pursuits bring them no acquiescence.—Dr. H. More, Discourse of Christian Piety.

3. Course or pace of a horse.

He that rides at high speed, and with a pistol kills a sparrow flying.—Shakespeare, Henry IV. Part I.

4. Success; event of any action or incident:
(most commonly with good, as, 'We wish you good speed').

O Lord God of my master Abrah. m. 1 pray thee send me good speed this day.—Genesis, xxiv. 12.
The prince your son, with more conceit and fear
Of the queen's speed, is gone.
Shakespeare, Winter's Tale, iii. 2.

Speedful. adj. Successful; having good speed.
And this thing he saith shall be more speedful and effective in the matter.—Sir T. More. (Sares by H. and W.)

Speedily. adv. In a speedy manner; with haste; quickly.

Post speedily to my lord your husband,
Shew him this letter.
Shakespeare, King Lear, iii. 7.

Send speedily to Bortran, charge him strictly
Not to proceed.
Dryden, Spanish Friar, iii. 3.

Speedwell. s. In Botany. Native name of several species of the genus Veronica.

Vol. II.

In a scarcity in Silesia a rumour was spread of its rainine millet-seed; but 'twas found to be only the seeds of the ivy-leaved speedwell, or small heath.—
Derham, Physico-Theology.

Speedy. adj. [A.S. spēdig.] Quick; swift; nimble; quick of dispatch.

How near's the other army?—
Near, and on speedy foot: the main desert Stands on the hourly thought.

Shakespeare, King Lear, iv. 6.
Back with speediest sail
Zophiel, of cherubim the swiftest wing,
Came flying. Milton, Paradise Lost, vi. 534.

Let it be enough what thou hast done,
When spotted deaths ran arund through every shew.

With poison'd darts, which not the good could shun,
The speedy could outfly, or valiant meet.

Dryden, Annals Mirabilis, cclxvii.

Speed. v. n. Spit; stab. Rare.
If he came, [he] had not stick to speed hym.
Comedy of Gimmur Garlon's Nettle: 1551.

Spell. s. Spill; splinter.
The spews in spels and sundry peeces flow
As if they had been little sticks or cane.

Harrington, Translation of Orlando Furioso, xix. 61. (Sares by H. and W.)

Spell. s. [A.S. spellum = take the place of any one.] Turn of work; vicissitude of labour.

Their toil is so extreme as they cannot endure it above four hours in a day, but are succeeded by spells; the residue of the time they wear out at caytes and kayles.—Curtius.

Spell. s. [A.S. = history, speech, tidings, charm.] Charm consisting of some words of occult power.

Start not; her actions shall be holy:
You hear my spell is lawful: do not shun her.

Shakespeare, Winter's Tale, v. 3.
Some have delivered the potency of spirits, that they stand in awe of charms, spells, and conjurations, letters, characters, notes, and dashes.—Sir T. Browne, Vulgar Errors.

Thou durst not thus disparage glorious arms,
Which pretest in rows have in battle worn,
Their crannies of and safety, and not spells
And black enchantments, some magician's art,
Arund thee or charmed thee strong.

Milton, Samson Agonistes, 1130.
Yourself you so excel,
When you vouchsafe to breathe my thought,
That, like a spirit, with this spell
Of my own breathing I am charmed.

Waller.
The true name of Rome was kept concealed
To shun the spells and sorceries of those Who durst her infant majesty oppose.

Dryden, Britannia's Rediviva, 199.

Spell. v. a. pret. and past part. spelled or spelt. [A.S. spellian = declare, teach.]

1. Write with the proper letters.
In the criticism of spelling, the word 'entire' ought to be with 't'; and not with 'y'; and if this is then it is false spelled throughout.—Dryden, Translation of Juvenal, dedication.

2. Read by naming letters singly.
I never yet saw in
How wise, how noble, young, how rarely featured,
But she would spell him backward: if false faced,
She'd swear the gentleman should be her sister.

Shakespeare, Much Ado about Nothing, iii. 1.

3. Read; discover by characters or marks.
In this manner to sit spelling and observing divine justice upon every accident, and slight disturbance, that may happen in immensity to the affairs of men, is but another fragment of his broken revenge.
—Milton, Comus, l. 26.

4. Charm.
For a time he was much spelled with Elinor Tahot, daughter of John Tahot, earl of Shrewsbury.—Sir G. D. Brock, Life of Richard III. p. 116.

This entered in the planetary hour,
With various words, and spelled with words of power,
Dire step-dances in the magic bowl infuse.

Dryden, Translation of the Georgics, iii. 411.

5. Relate; teach.
Might I that holy legend find,
By fables spelt in mystic rhymes,
To teach enquiring later times,
What open force, or secret guile,
Dash'd into dust the solemn pile. Warton, Odes, xi.

Spell. v. n.
1. Form words of letters.

When what small knowledge was, in them did dwell,
And he a god, who could but read or spell,
Then mother church did mightily prevail.

Dryden, Religio Laici, 374.
By pasting on the vowels and consonants on the sides of four dice, he has made this a play for his children, whereby his eldest son in costs has played himself into spelling.—Locke.

6 M

Another cause, which hath maimed our language,
Is a foolish opinion that we ought to spell exactly as we speak.—Swift.

2. Read.
If I read aught in heaven,
Or heaven wrote aught of late, by what the stars,
Voluminous or single characters,
In their conjunction met, give me to spell,
Sorrows and labours, opposition, hate,
Attend thee. Milton, Paradise Regained, iv. 2-2.

When powers, not arms, spelled it
The fierce Epirote, and the African bold,
Whether to settle peace, or to unfold
The drift of hollow state, hard to be spelled.

Id., Sonnets, xvii. 3.
And may at last my weary age
Find out the peaceful hermitage,
Where I may sit, and rightly spell
Of every star that heaven doth shew,
And every herb that sips the dew.

Id., Il Penseroso, 104.

3. Read unskillfully.
As to his understanding, they bring him in void of all notion, a rude unwritten blank, sent into the world only to read and spell out a God in the works of nature.—South, Sermons.

Spelling. part. adj. Acting as a spell.
I have you fast!
Unchain your spirits now with spelling charms,
And try if you can gain your liberty.

Shakespeare, Henry VI. Part I. v. 2.

Spelling-book. s. Primer; book from which a child learns to spell.

The Latin, being written of the same character with the mother-tongue, by the assistance of a spelling-book, it is legible. Spencer.

Spelt. v. n. Split; break.
Feed geese with oats, spelt beans, barley meal or ground malt mixed with beer.—Mortimer, Hasbundry.

Spelt. s. [A.S. spelte.] Kind of corn; Tritium spelte.

Lentils, and millet, and fitches [in the margin
spelt].—Ezekiel, iv. 9.

Spelter. s. [German, spialter = pewter.]
Zinc.

Metals in fusion do not flame for want of a copious fume, except spelter, which fumes copiously, and thereby flames.—Sir I. Newton.

Spence. s. [N.Fr. despence.] Buttery; larder; store-room; place where any provisions are kept: (in some parts of the north, it is used for a kind of little parlour or inner room of a country-house).

Spence. s. Expense.
Better is cost upon somewhat worth, than spence upon nothing worth.—Anthem. (Ord MS.)

Spencer. s. Overcoat so named from the person who first brought it into use.

His hat was fastened tight on his brow, by a blue silk-handkerchief; he wore a spencer of a light brown shagreen, a world too loose, above a leather jerkin.—Lord Lytton, Eugeu Aram, h. iii. ch. iv.

Spent. v. a. [A.S. spendan.]

1. Consume; exhaust; waste.
There is treasure to be desired and oil in the dwelling of the wise, but a foolish man spends it up.—Proverbs, xxi. 20.

I will very gladly spend and be spent for you.—
2 Corinthians, xii. 15.

Our enemies' malice vainly shall be spent
Against the invulnerable clouds.

Shakespeare, King John, ii. 1.
We must exasperate
The almighty Victor to spend all his rage.

Milton, Paradise Lost, ii. 113.
Money is brought into England by nothing but spending here less of foreign commodities than what we carry to market can pay for.—Locke.

2. Bestow as expence; expend as cost.
Wherefore do ye spend money for that which is not bread?—Isaiah, lv. 2.

3. Bestow for any purpose: (often with upon).
When we can intrust an hour to serve,
Would spend it in some works upon that business,
If you would grant the time.

Shakespeare, Macbeth, ii. 1.
Eleutherius, perceiving that he was unwilling to spend any more time upon the debate, thought not fit to make any mention to him of the proposed opinion.—Bayle.

4. Effuse.
Coward does
Most spend their mouths, when what they seem to threaten Runs far before them. Shakespeare, Henry V. ii. 4.

5. Squander; lavish.
The whole of our reflections terminate in this, what course we are to take to pass our time; some to get, and others to spend their estates.—Archbishop Wake.

1001

6. Pass; suffer to pass away.

They spend their days in wealth, and in a moment go down to the graves.—Job, xxi. 13.

He stoebeth not to spend his life with his wife, nor remembereth neither father, nor mother, nor country.—1 Esdras, iv. 21.

In those pastoral pastures, a great many days were spent, to follow their flying predecessors.—Sir P. Sidney.

Say, for you saw us, ye immortal fields, How oft unwearied have we spent the nights, Till the Jewish stars, so famed for love, Wonder'd at us from above. —Corb. g.

When he was of riper years, for his farther account, he spent a considerable part of his time in travelling. —Pope.

7. Waste; wear out; exhaust of force.

The waves ascended and descended, till their violence being spent by degrees, they settled at last.—Dr. T. Burnet, Theory of the Earth.

The winds are raised, the storm blows high; He it your cure, my friends, to be In its full fury, and direct it rich Till it has spent itself on Cato's! —Addison, Cato.

8. Fatigue; harass.

Nothing but only the hope of spend did relieve them, leaving scarce aches to power their nakedness, and their bodies spent with long labour and thirst. —Kneller, History of the Turks.

Or come your shipping in our ports to lay, Spent and disabled in so long a way? —Drayton, Translation of the Æneid, vii. 270.

Some spent with toil, some with despair oppress'd, Leap'd headlong from the heights; the flames consumed the rest. —Id., ii. 772.

Our walls are thinly mann'd, our best men slain, The rest, a heartless number, spent with watching, And harass'd out with duty. —Id., Spanish Letter, l. 1.

Then oft last seen me, Wrestling with vice and faction; now thou seest me Spent, overpowered, despairing of success. —Addison, Cato.

Spend, v. n.

1. Make expense.

He spends as a person who knows that he must come to a reckoning.—South, Sermons.

2. Prove in the use.

Butter spent as if it came from the richer soil.—Sir W. Raleigh.

3. Be lost or wasted.

The sound spendeth and is dissipated in the open air; but in such conceals it is converted and contracted. —Bacon.

On mountains, it may be, many dews fall, that spend before they come to the valleys.—Id.

4. Be employed to my use.

There have been cups and an image of Jupiter made of wild vines; for the vines that they use for wine are so often cut, that their sap spendeth into the grapes.—Bacon.

Spend-all, s. Spendthrift.

Nay, thy wife shall be enamoured of some spend-all, when shall waste all as licentious as thou hast, expect neither laboriously.—Milton in the Monarch, l. 603. (Nares, by H. and W.)

Spendér, s.

1. One who spends.

Let not your recreations be lavish spenders of our time; but healthful, short, and apt to refresh us. —Jeremy Taylor.

2. Prodigal; lavish.

Bishop Morton told the commissioners, who were to levy the benevolence, if they met with any that were spendér, to let them that they must needs have, because they had up; and if they were spendér, they must needs have, because it was seen in their port and manner of living.—Bacon, History of the Reign of Henry VII.

spending, s. [A.S. spendung.] Act of consuming, expending, or bestowing for any purpose.

The Great Mogul's wealth and revenues, treasure, spendings. —Wells, Observations on the present Manners of the English, p. 203.

Spendthrift, s. Prodigal.

Bitter cold weather starved both the bird and the spendthrift. —Sir R. B. Kesteven.

Some fasting insurer does feed With prose of aims fit inward spendthrift's need. —Dryden.

The son, bred in cloth, becomes a spendthrift, a prodigal, and goes out of the world a beggar.—Swift.

Used adjectively.

Most men, like spendthrift heirs, judge a little in hand better than a great deal to come.—Locke.

Spent, part. adj. Exhausted.

They bend their bows, they whirl their slings around; —Id.

Heaps of spent arrows fall, and strew the ground. —Dryden.

Spérable, adj. [Lat. sperabilis.] Capable of being hoped. Rare.

We may cast it away, if it be found but a bladder, and discontinue it of so much as is vain and not sperable. —Bacon.

Spérage, s. ? Asparagus; ? spurge; ? spur-rey.

And unites so well, Sargons and galls, the spérage and the rush. —Sylvestre, Translation of Du Bartas, Parais, (Nares by H. and W.)

Spérate, adj. [Lat. speratus.] Hoped to be not irrecoverable: (opposed to desperate). Latinism; rare.

We have spent much time in distinguishing between the sperate and desperate debts of the clergy. —Reynolds, Relation to Queen Anne, in Estlin's State of Queen Anne's Bounty, p. 105: 1721.

Sporm, s. [Fr. sperm; Lat. sperma; Gr. σπέρμα, -σπορ.] Seed; that by which the species is continued.

Some creatures bring forth many young ones at a birth, and some but one; this may be caused by the quantity of sperma required, or by the partition of the womb which may sever the sperma. —Bacon.

There is required to the preparation of the sperma of animals a great apparatus of vessels, many secretions, concoctions, reflections, and circulations. —Ray.

Spérm-cell, s. Cell which impregnates: (as opposed to germ-cell, or cell which is impregnated).Spermaceti, s. [Gr. σπέρμα = seed, semen; κίτος = whale, large fish in general.] See extract: (corruptly pronounced parma-silly).

A particular sort of whale affords the oil whence this is made; and that is very improperly called sperma, because it is only the oil which comes from the head of which it can be made. It is changed from what it is naturally, the oil itself being very brown and rank. The peculiar property of it is to shed into flakes, and much unlike the crystallization of salts; but in this state 'tis yellow, and has a certain rankness, from which it is freed by squeezing it between warm metalline plates; at length it becomes perfectly pure, inodorous, flaky, smooth, white, and in some measure transparent. —Quincy.

Spermatic, adj. Spermatic.

Two different sexes must concur to their generation: there is in both a great apparatus of spermatic vessels, wherein the most spirituous part of the blood is by many diastoles and circulations carried into sperma. —Ray, On the Wisdom of God manifested in the Works of the Creation.

Spermatical, adj. Spermatic.

The primordialists of the world are not, however, but spermatical or vital. —Dr. H. More, Divine Dialogues.

Metals and sundry meteors rule shapes have no need of any particular principle of life, or spermatical form, distinct from the rest or motion of the particles of the matter. —Id.

The moisture of the body, which did before irrigate the parts, is drawn down to the spermatical vessels. —Bacon.

Spermize, v. n. Yield, or become, seed. Rare.

Aristotle affirming that women do not spermize, and confer a receptacle rather than essential principles of generation, deductively includes both sexes in mankind. —Sir T. Browne.

Spermatozoon, s. [Gr. σπέρμα + ζωον = living being, animal, animalcule.] In Biology. Filamentary body existing in the semen, or its equivalents, of organized bodies.

Spermatozoa . . . are essential to impregnation. —Queen, in Browne and Cur, Dictionary of Science, Literature, and Art.

Sperso, v. a. [Lat. sparsus.] Disperse. Rare.

The wrathful wind, Which blows cold storms, burst out of Scythian mow That spersed those clouds. —Spenser.

Spet, v. a. [A.S.] Eject from the mouth; throw out; spit. Rare, or provincial.

To spet out his poison; to speak the worst that he can. —Robert, Abnerie, 1550.

Mysterious theme, That ne'er art could, but when the dragon womb Of Stygian darkness spet her thickest gloom, And makes our blot of all the air. —Milton, Comus, 120.

Spet, s. Matter ejected from the mouth; spit. Rare, or provincial.

The speckled toad . . .

Defies his foe with a full spet. —Lucifer, Lucasta Posthuma, p. 43.

Spew, v. a. [A.S. spioan.]

1. Vomit; eject from the stomach.

A swordfish small him from the rest did sunder, That in his throat him pricking softly under His wide abyss, him forced forth spew, That all the sea did roar like heaven's thunder, And all the waves were stain'd with filthy hue. —Spenser.

2. Eject; cast forth.

When yellow sands are sifted from below, The glittering billows give a golden show; And when the fouler bottom spews the black, The Stygian dyes the tainted waters take. —Dryden.
When earth with slime and mud is cover'd o'er, Or hollow places spew their watery store. —Id., Translation of the Georgics, l. 175.

3. Eject with loathing.

Keep my statutes . . . commit not any of these abominations . . . that the land spew not you out also as it spewed out the nations that were before you. —Leviticus, xviii. 24.
Contentious suits ought to be spewed out, as the surfeit of courts. —Bacon, Essays.

Spew, v. n. Vomit; ease the stomach.

He could have haul'd in The drunkards, and noises of the inn; But better 'twas that they should sleep or spew, Than in the scene to offend or him or you. —R. Jonson, The New Inn, epilogue.

Spéwiness, s. Attribute suggested by Spewy; moistness; dampness.

These would in good time bear good fruits, if the coldness and spéwiness of the soil did not make them dwindle. —Bishop Gardiner, Hieronymus, p. 551: 1653.

Spéwing, s. [A.S. spiwung.] Act of vomiting.

Shameful spéwing shall be upon thy glory. —Habakkuk, ii. 16.

Spéwy, adj. Wet; foggy. Provincial.

The lower valleys in wet winters are so spéwy, that they know not how to feed them. —Mortimer, Husbandry.

Sphacelate, v. a. Affect with a gangrene.

The long retention of matter sphacelates the brain. —Sharp.

Sphacelate, v. n. Mortify; suffer the gangrene.

The skin, by the great distention, having been rendered very thin, will, if not taken away, sphacelate, and the rest degenerate into a cancerous ulcer. —Sharp.

Sphacelus, s. [Gr. σφακελος.] Gangrene; mortification.

It is the ground of inflammation, gangrene, sphacelus. —W. Johnson, Surgery.

Sphénoid, s. [Gr. σφαινοειδής, from σφαίρα = wedge + εἶδος = shape, form.] In Anatomy. Bone so called from its shape. See extract.

The sphénoid, a single bone, is placed transversely at the base of the skull; it enters into the formation of the cavity of the skull, of both orbits, of the nose, and may be said to contribute in a small degree to the hard palate. —J. Quain, Elements of Anatomy.

Sphere, s. [Fr.; Lat. sphæra; Gr. σφαῖρα.]

1. Globe; orbicular body; body of which the centre is at the same distance from every point of the circumference.

First the sun, a mighty sphere, he framed. —Milton, Paradise Lost, vii. 353.

2. Globe of the mundane system.

What if within the moon's fair shining sphere, What if in every other star unseen, Of other worlds he happily should hear? —Spenser, Faerie Queen.

And then mortal ears Had heard the music of the spheres. —Dryden.

3. Globe representing the earth or sky.

Two figures on the sides embosom'd appear; Cimon, and wint's his name who made the sphere, And shew'd the seasons of the shining year? —Dryden, Translation of Virgil, Eclogues, iii. 60.

4. Orb; circuit of motion.

Half unsung, but narrower bound Within the visible diurnal sphere. —Milton, Paradise Lost, vii. 23.

5. Province; compass of knowledge or action; employment.

To be call'd into a huge sphere, and not to be seen to move in 't. —Shakespeare, Antony and Cleopatra, ii. 7.

Every man, versed in any particular business, finds fault with those authors, so far as they treat of matters within his sphere. —Addison, Freeholder.

Ye know the spheres and various tasks assign'd
By laws eternal to the æthereal kind.

Pope, Rape of the Lock, canto ii.

Sphere. n. n.

1. Place in a sphere.

The glorious planet, Sol,
In noble eminence enthron'd and spher'd
Amidst the rest, whose mild'ning eye
Corrects the ill aspects of planets evil.
Shakespeare, Titus and Crenida, i. 3.

2. Form into roundness.

Light from her native east
To journey through the airy gnom began,
Spher'd in a radiant cloud; for yet the sun
Was not. Milton, Paradise Lost, vii. 213.

Sphero. adj. Spherical.

When the central nodule was globular, the inner surface of the first crust would be spherick; and if the crust was in all parts of the same thickness, that whole crust would be spherical.—Woodward, On Fossils.

Sphèrical. adj.

1. Round; orbicular; globular.

What descent of waters could there be in a sphèrical and round body, wherein there is no high nor low.—Sir W. Raleigh.

2. Planetary; relating to orbs of the planets.

We make guilty of our disasters the sun, the moon and stars, as if we were villains by spherical predominance.—Shakespeare, King Lear, i. 2.

Spherically. adv. In a spherical manner; in form of a sphere.

Birds build their nests spherically.—Sir H. Watson, Reynolds, p. 14.

Sphèricity. s. Attribute suggested by Spherical; roundness; rotundity; glob- osity.

Such bodies receive their figure and limits from such lets as hinder them from attaining to that sphèricity they aim at.—Sir K. Digby.

Sphèricity. s. Spherical character of any- thing.

Water consists of small, smooth, spherical particles: their smoothness makes 'em slip easily upon one another; the sphèricity keeps 'em from touching one another in more points than one.—Chyne, Philosophical Principles of Natural Religion.

Sphèroid. s. [Gr. sphaîra + ôvê; Fr. sphé- roïde.] Body oblong or oblate, approach- ing to the form of a sphere.

They are not solid particles, by the necessity they are under to change their figures into oblong sphé-roids, in the capillary vessels.—Chyne.

Sphèroidal. adj. Having the form of a spheroid.

If the surface of the earth was covered with water, it would put on a sphèroidal, or egg-like figure.—
Adams, On the Globe.

Sphèroidal. adj. Spheroidal. Rare.

If these corpuscles be sphèroidal, or oval, their shortest diameter must not be much greater than those of light.—Chy-
ne.

Sphèroidity. s. Spheroidal character.

The orbit of the earth has an eccentricity more than double in proportion to the sphèroidity of its globe.—Adams.

Sphèrule. s. [Lat. sphærule.] Little globe. Mercury is a collection of exceeding small, vastly heavy sphèrules.—Chy- ne.

Sphèry. adj.

1. Spherical; round. Rare.

What wicked and dissembling class of mine
Made you compare with Hermin's sphèry eye?
Shakespeare, Midsummer-Night's Dream, ii. 3.

2. Belonging to the spheres. Rare.

Mortals that would follow me,
Love Virtue; she alone is free:
She can teach you how to climb
Higher than the sphèry clime.

Milton, Comus, 1021.

Sphincter. s. [Gr. sphynktēr = binder.] Cir- cular muscle of the human body.

In their state of moderate excitement, the expul-sors and sphincters may be regarded as balancing one another, so far as their reflex action is concerned; the latter having rather the predominance, so as to restrain the operation of the former.—Dr.
Carpenter, Principles of Human Physiology, § 77.

Sphinx. s.

1. Egyptian statue, with the body of a lion (coucheant), and the upper part of the body that of a human female: (as such a proper rather than a common name).

His wandering step,
Obedient to high thoughts has visited

The awful ruins of the days of old; . . .
Memphis and Thebes, and whatsoever of strange Sculptured on alabaster obelisk,
Or jasper tomb, or mutilated sphinx,
Dark Ethiopia on her desert hills Conceals. Shelley, Alastor.

2. Mythological female of the same form as the statue, who propounded riddles and devoured those who failed to answer them: (as such, also, a proper rather than a com- mon name).

3. Out of these, however, common names have been evolved, e.g.

a. A 'sphinx's riddle' is a riddle hard to be guessed.

b. In Entomology. An attitude like that of the sphinx has given the name to a class of moths, from the attitude of the caterpillars. See extract.

The caterpillars of the typical sphinxes . . . when at rest . . . usually elevate the anterior part of the body, and retract the head under the second or third segment, thus assuming a peculiar attitude, in which they have been thought to bear some resemblance to the fabled sphinx of antiquity, which let himself be distinguished from his namesake, *J.
Dunlop*, in Naturalist's Library, British Moths, Sphinxes, &c.

Sphygmograph. s. [Gr. σφύγξ = pulse + γράφω = I write; describe.] In Physiology. Instrument for registering the character of the pulse.

In every case in which I have examined [the pulse-indicated] tracings, it gives a tracing, by the use of Marx's sphygmograph, in which the form of the pulse-wave closely resembles that which is observed in fevers, a modification of a typical type.—
Dr. R. Good, System of Medicine, vol. ii. p. 77:
1849.

Sphygmographic. adj. Connected with, re- lating to, resulting from, a sphygmograph. Sphygmographic tracing of the cardiac move- ment; of the arterial pulse.—Dr. Carpenter, Principles of Human Physiology, Index.

Spial. s. [Fr. espion.] Spy; scout; watcher. Obsolete.

His ears be as spials, alarm to give,
Tasso, Five Hundred Points of good Household.

He prying spial placed in all his way,
To watch what course he takes, and how he fares.
Spenser.

For he by faithful spial was assured
That Egypt's king was forward on his way.
Bischoff.

Their trust towards them hath rather been as to good spials and good whisperers, than good magis-ters.—Bacon.

Spice. s. [Fr. épice.]

1. Vegetable production, fragrant to the smell and pungent to the palate; aromatic substance used in sauces.

Which touching but my gentle vessel's side,
Would scatter off her spices on the stream.
Shakespeare, Macbeth, i. 1.

Is not mouth-bait, bearing, gentleness, and virtue,
the spice and salt that seasons a man?—Id., Titus and Cybele, i. 2.

Garlick, the northern spice, is in mighty request
among the Indians.—Sir W. Temple.

2. Small quantity, as of spice, to the thing seasoned.

Taste what they have done,
And the deed, stark mad; for all
Thy bygone fonderies were but spices of it.
Shakespeare, Winter's Tale, iii. 2.

It containeth similitude of reason, and without some spice or sprinkling of all learning.—Sir T. Browne, Vulgar Errors.

So in the wicked there's no vice,
Of which the saints have not a spice.
Bacon, Advancement of Learning, ii. 2, p. 1.

My father was a gentleman of many virtues, but he had a strong spice of that in his temper which might, or might not, add to the number.—Sharpe, Testament Shandy, vol. i. ch. xvii.

Spice. v. a.

1. Season with spice; mix with aromatic bodies.

With a festival
She'll first receive thee; but will spice thy bread
With flower-poisons.
Chapman.

These hymns may work on future wits, and so
May grow grand-children of thy praises grow;
And so, though not revive, maintain and spice
The world, which else would putrify with vice.
Donne.

What though some have a freight
Of clothes and nutmegs, and in cinnamon sail,
If thou hast when-will to spice a draught,
When griefs prevail?
H. Herbert.

2. Render nice; season with scruples.

Spiced. part. adj.

1. Seasoned with spice; rendered aromatic.

His mother was a widow of my order
And in the spiced India air by night
Full often she hath gossiped by my side.
Shakespeare, Midsummer-Night's Dream, ii. 2.

2. Scrupulous; rendered nice. Obsolete.

They dabbled out the matter like spiced . . .
at the first, under pretence of a spiced fineness.—
Questions of Profitable Conversation, p. 132, 133.
You have such a spiced civility,
Such qualms upon your worship's conscience!
Bacon, Advancement of Learning, The Character.

Spicer. s. One who deals in spices.

Names have been derived from occupations, as Salters and Spicers.—Cassan.

Spicery. s. [Fr. épicerie.]

1. Commodity of spices.

Their canals were laden with spices, and balm, and myrra. See W. B. Hall, History of the World,
p. 100, where he says

The western treasure, eastern spices,
Europe and Africa, and the unknown west,
Were easily found. Donne.

2. Repository of spices.

The spices, the cedar, and its furniture, are too well known to be here insisted upon.—Addison, Travels in Italy.

Spick and Span. [Dutch, spickspeller.] Quite new; now first used; fire-new; brand-new.

I keep no antiquated stuff;
I keep . . . I have chosen.

Swift, On the Death of Dr. Swift.

Yonder comes Captain Bulb, spick and span, tight and trim.—Thackeray, Book of Snobs, ch. xxi.

With new.

While the honour then he set out,
Is spick and span new, spick and span.
Strike her my love.—Bacon, Advancement, i. 3, 367.

They would have these related to modern, and then others related spick and span out of modern.—T. Bar, of the Earth.

Spicknell, or Spégnell. s. In Botany. Native umbelliferous plant, akin to the genus Mentha.

It is called of the Greeks pinos, or spice; Propense of the Latins pinus . . . also it is called in English, spicknell or spicknell, of some now and here.—T. Bar, of the Earth, p. 162: 166.

Spiculate. v. a. [Lat. spiculatus, pass. part. of spiculare: spiculum = javelin, dart.] Make sharp at the point.

Plant thy thick row of thorns, and, to defend Thy infant sheds, beneath, on oaken staves,
Extend a rail of elm, securely guard
With spiculated points, in such art
As, round some citadel, the cunning Directs his sharp steel.

Milton, English Garden, b. ii.

Spicy. adj.

1. Producing spice; abounding with aro- matics.

Off at sea north-east winds blow
Sabian odour, from the spicy shore
Of Araby the blest; . . . and many a league,
Cheer'd with the grateful smell, of spicy woods.
Milton, Paradise Lost, ii. 2, 100.

For then the Indian land did swart,
And in hot spicy forests grew.
Bacon, Advancement of Learning, iii.

2. Aromatic; having the qualities of spice

The reinner in this disease ought to be spicy and cephalic vegetables, to dispel the viscosity.—
A. B. Hall, On the.

Under's others skills exact their sails,
Led by new stars, and borne by spicy winds.
Pope, Windsor Forest.

Holy water will I rear
Into every spicy flower
Of the laurel shrubs that hedge it round.
Bacon, The Poet's Mind.

3. Piquant. Colloquial.

He entertained them on this occasion by Christ-ianizing the lighted candle into his mouth, and exhibiting his face in a state of transparency; after the performance of which feat, he went on with his professional duties: brightening every knife as he laid it on the table, by breathing on the blade and afterwards polishing the same on the upon already mentioned. When he had completed his preparations, he turned to the sisters, and expressed his belief that the approaching collation would be of "rather a spicy work."—Dickens, Martin Chuzzlewit, ch. ix.

Spider. s. [spinner.] In Zoology, Animal of the class Arachnidae.

More direful hap betide that hated wretch,
Than I can wish to address, spiders, toads.
Shakespeare, Richard III. l. 2.

The spider's web to watch we'll stand,
And when it takes the bee,
We'll help out of the tyrant's hand
The innocent to free. Drayton.

Insiduous, restless, watchful spider,
Fear no illudious damsel's brow;
Extend thy artful salsick winder,
And spread thy banners round my room:
While I thy envious salsick stare at,
And think on hapless poet's fate,
Like thee confined to museum garret,
And rudely banish'd rooms of state.
The spider's touch how exquisitely fine!
Feels at each thread, and lives along the line.
Pope, Essay on Man, l. 217.

Where half-starved spiders feed on half-starved flies.
Prophesy of Eusebius.

Spiderlike. adj. Resembling a spider in shape or quality.

Spider-like.
Out of his self-drawn web, he gives us note.
Shakespeare, Henry VIII. l. 1.

I can bend my body no further than it is bent by nature. For this reason, when ladies drop a fan or glove, I am not the first to take them up; and often restrain my inclination to perform these little services, rather than expose my spider-like shape.
Hay, Essay on Deformity, p. 18.

Spiderwort. s. In Botany. Plant of the genus Commelina.

The spiderworts are plants which exhibit a true transition from the first runners out of the regions of the sedge-like plants to the true lilies.—Lindley, Vegetable Kingdom.

Spigot. s. Pin or peg put into the faucet to keep in the liquor

These Hungarian wight, wilt thou the spigot wield?
Shakespeare, Henry V. l. 3.

Take out the spigot, and clap the point in your mouth.—Swift, Advice to a Servant.

Spikes. s. [Lat. spica.]

1. Ear of corn.

Drawn up in ranks and files, the bearded spikes
Guard it from birds as with a stand of pikes.
Sir J. Denham.

Suffering not the yellow beads to rear,
He tramples down the spikes, and intercepts the year.
Drayton.

The gleaners,
Spikes after spikes, their spurring harvest pick.
Thomson, Seasons, Autumn, 163.

2. Long nail of iron or wood; long rod of iron sharpened: (so called from its similitude to an ear of corn).

For the body of the ships, no nation equals England for the oaken timber: and we need not borrow of any other iron for spikes, or nails to fasten them.
Rivron.

The head of your medal would be seen to more advantage, if it were placed on a spike of the tower.
Drayton, Epistle to the Whigs.

He wears at his head the 'coccinea radiata,' another type of his divinity; the spikes that shoot out represent the rays of the sun.—Addison.

3. In Botany.

a. Smaller species of lavender.

The oil of spike is much used by our artificers in their varnishes; but it is generally adulterated.
Sir J. Hill, Materia Medica.

b. See extract.

If flowers are sessile along a common axis, as in Plantago, the inflorescence is called a spike. Lindley, Introduction to Botany, vol. i. p. 319.

If a spike consists of flowers destitute of calyx and corolla, the place of which is occupied by bracts, supported by other bracts which enclose no flowers, and when with such a formation the rachis, which is flexuose and toothed, does not fall off with the flowers, as in grasses, each part of the inflorescence so arranged is called a spikelet or locusta.—Link.

Spikes. c. a.

1. Fasten with long nails.

Lay long planks upon them, pinned or spiked down to the pieces of oak on which they lie.—Mason, Mechanical Exercises.

Lay long planks upon them, spiking or pinning them down fast.—Mortimer, Husbandry.

2. Make sharp at the end.

3. Drive a nail into the touchhole of a cannon.

Their officers are left standing alone; could not so much as succeed in 'spiking the gun.'—Cartley, The French Revolution, pt. i. b. v. ch. v.

Spiked. part. adj.

1. Having ears, or those parts which contain seeds.

The clever white,
That in a spiked ball collects its sweets.
Mason, English Garden, b. ii.

2. Set with spikes.

A youth, leaping over the spiked pales, was suddenly frightened down, and in his falling he was caught by these spikes.—Wierman, Surgery.

Spikelet. s. Small spike.

(For example see under Spike, s. 3. b.)

Spikenard. s. [Lat. spica nardi.] Plant, and the oil or balsam produced from the plant.

A woman having an alabaster box of ointment of spikenard brake and poured it on his head.—Mark, xiv. 3.

He cast into the pile bundles of myrrh, and sheaves of spikenard, enriching it with every spicy shrub.—Spenser.

The Nardostachys Jatamansi, or true spikenard of the ancients, is valued in India not only for its scent, but also as a remedy in hysteria and epilepsy.—Lindley, Vegetable Kingdom.

Spiky. adj. Having a sharp point.

The tapering pyramid, the Egyptian's pride,
And wonder of the world; whose spiky top
Has wounded the thick cloud.
R. Blair, The Grave.

Leaves trian fleeces, which the sinery arm
Cours through the spiky steel in leaden flakes.
Butt, The Flacc.

Spilo. c. a. Supply with facet and spigot.

You must not suppose, your highness, that I neglected to avail myself (unknown to the rest of the peculiar properties of the wine which those racks contained, I had them spiked underneath, and constantly running off the wine from them, filled them up afresh.—Horryat, The Pacha of Many Tubs, The Greek Slave.

Spill. s.

1. Small shiver of wood, or thin bar of iron; splinter.

The oysters, in sides gathering by hand, have a peculiar dredge, which is a thick strong net, fastened to three spiles of iron, and drawn at the boat's stern.—Carew, Survey of Cornwall.

The smallest spill, or mode, is restless among to the eye; it never leaves to force out tears.—Alfred, Sermons, part. ii. p. 75: 1684.

Have near the luncheon a little venthole, stopped with a spill.—Mortimer, Husbandry.

2. Small quantity of money.

The lads, who conspired this ground, were wont to have a spill or sportule from the credulous lady.—Aylmer, Paragonia Juris Comici.

3. Small slip of paper.

Spill. c. a. [A.S. spillan.]

1. Shed; lose by shedding.

Be satisfied, dear God, with our true blood,
Which, as thou know'st, unjustly must be spill.
Shakespeare, Richard III. iii. 3.

Friend or brother,

He forfeits his own blood that spills his mother's.
Il. Thomas of Alcaniz, iii. 5.

Themselves exact their cruelty,

And I constrained my blood to spill.
David, Civil Wars of York and Lancaster.

They having spilled much blood, and done much waste,

Subduing nations and achieved thereby
Fame in the world, high titles, and rich prey,
Shall change their course to pleasure, ease, and sloth.
Milton, Paradise Lost, xl. 701.

Medea must not draw her murdering knife,
And spill her children's blood upon the stone.
Lord Beaumont.

Orbellan did disagree

With tracheous deeds our mother's race;
And to revenge his blood, so justly spill,
What is it less than to partake his guilt?
Drayton, Indivia Emperor, iv. 2.

Nor the Countess's tale

Be here repeated; how, with lust and wine
Inflamed, they fought and spill their drunken souls
At feasting hour.
J. Phillips, Cyder, bk. 476.

2. Destroy; injure.

This is our throat with pain of thistle filled,
Thus be our weakest parts dressed up with sorrow;
Thus is our mind with too much winding spiked.
Sir P. Sidney.

Why are you so fierce and cruel?

Is it because your eyes have power to kill?
Then know that mercy is the Slight's jewel,
And greater glory think to save than spill.
Spenser.

Then all-shaking thunder,

Crack nature's womb, and certain spill at once
That make ingrateful um.

Shakespeare, King Lear, iii. 2.

Be not angry with these fires;

For then their threats will kill me;

Nor look too kind on my desires;

For then my hopes will spill me.

All bodies are with other bodies filled;
But she receives both heav'n and earth together:
B. Jonson.

7. Move round as a spindle.

Whether the sun, predominant in heaven,
Rise on the earth, or earth rise on the sun,
He from the east his flaming road begin,
Or she from west her silent course advance
With indissoluble pure, that spinning sleep
On her soft axle, while she paces even,
And bears thee soft with the smooth air along,
Solicit not thy thoughts.

Milton, Paradise Lost, vii. 106.

Spinach. s. [Lat. spinachia.] Vegetable

of the genus Spinachia (species, oleracea).

See extracts.

Nor are their forms by rash encounters spilled;
For there they stand, and neither touch the other.
Sir J. Davies, Immortality of the Soul.

3. Throw away.

This sight shall damp the raging ruffian's breast,
The poison spill, and half-drawn sword were I.
Tickell.

Spill. v. n.

1. Waste; be lavish.

Thy father bids thee spare, and chides for spilling.—Sir P. Sidney.

2. Be shed; be lost by being shed.

He was so topfull of himself, that he let it spill on all the company; he spoke well indeed, but he spoke too long.—Watts.

Spiller. s. [German, spiel—play; indicating a line which can be run out, i.e. one which allows the angler to play with the fish.] Kind of fishing line.

In harbor they are taken by spillers made of a cord, to which divers shorter are tied at a little distance, and to each of these a hook is fastened with a bait; this spiller they sink in the sea where those fishes have their accustomed haunt.—Carew, Survey of Cornwall.

Spillikens. s. Game so called; pushpin.

Spill. part. adj. Variegated.

Though all the pillars of the one were rill,
And all the other's pavement were with ivory spill.
Spenser, Faerie Queene, iv. 10, 5.

Spillth. s. Anything poured out or wasted.

Our vaults have wept with drunken spillth of wine.
Shakespeare, Troilus and Cressida, ii. 2.

Spin. c. a. preter. spun or spun; past part. spun. [A.S. spinnan.]

1. Draw out into threads.

All the women whose heart stirred them up in wisdom spun goats' hair. Kavades, xxv. 26.

2. Form threads by drawing out and twisting any filamentous matter.

You would be another Penelope; yet all the yarn she spun in Ulysses' absence, did but fill the loom of woe. Shakespeare, Twelfth Night, i. 2.

The fates but only spin the coarse runcle;
The finest of the web is left for you. Dryden.

3. Protract; draw out.

By one delay after another they spin out their whole lives, till there's no more future left behind.—Sir K. Temple.

Why should I leave a moment ere I die
No, let us draw her term of freedom out
In its full length, and spin it to the last.
Addison, Cato.

4. Form by degrees; draw out gradually.

I passed lightly over many particulars, on which learned and witty men might have spent three hours.—Sir K. Temple.

Men of large thoughts and quick apprehensions are not to expect any thing to be, but what, being spun out of my own course, thoughts, is fitted to men of my own size. Locke.

The lines are weak, and mother's pleased to say;
Lord Emmy spins a thousand such a day.
Pope, Imitations of Horace, bk. ii. sat. 1.

5. Put into a turning motion: (as, 'to spin a top'.)

Spin. c. n.

1. Exercise the art of spinning, or drawing threads.

We can fine our legs and arms upwards and downwards, backward, forward, and round, as they that spin.—Dr. H. More.

Yet thousand stalks their various blossoms spread;
Useful and lowly in their native soil,
They neither know to spin, nor care to toil.
Prior, Solomon, l. 91.

For this Achilles learn'd to spin;
His club laid down, and lion's skin—
Tit. On Beauty.

2. Stream out in a thread or small current.

Together furiously they run,
That to the ground came horse and man;
The blood out of their helms is spun,
So sharp were their encounters.
Drayton, Nymphidia.

3. Move round as a spindle.

Whether the sun, predominant in heaven,
Rise on the earth, or earth rise on the sun,
He from the east his flaming road begin,
Or she from west her silent course advance
With indissoluble pure, that spinning sleep
On her soft axle, while she paces even,
And bears thee soft with the smooth air along,
Solicit not thy thoughts.

Milton, Paradise Lost, vii. 106.

Spinach. s. [Lat. spinachia.] Vegetable

of the genus Spinachia (species, oleracea).

See extracts.

Spinage is an excellent herb crude, or boiled.—Mortimer, Husbandry.
[Spinage] hath an apetalous flower, consisting of many stamens included in the flower-cup, which are produced in spikes upon the male plants which are barren; but the embryos are produced from the wings of the leaves in the female plants, which afterward become roundish or angular seeds, which, in some sorts, have thorns adhering to them.—Miller, Gardener's Dictionary.

The common spinach is a hardy annual, whose native country is unknown, though generally supposed to be Western Asia. It has been cultivated in this country for more than 300 years, and is noticed in Turner's Herbals of 1548 as 'an herb lately found and not much in use.' The plant has large thick succulent deep-green leaves, for the sake of which alone it is cultivated, and which are considered wholesome; when properly dressed, and thoroughly deprived of all moisture before being washed with butter or rich gravy, they make an excellent dish, which may be eaten with any kind of meat. The seeds of one of the species are spiny, whence it is commonly called, botanically, Prickly spinach. It is a singular fact that the water drained from spinach after being boiled is capable of making as good match-paper as that made by a solution of nitre.—Moore, in Brande and Cox, Dictionary of Science, Literature, and Art.

Spinal. adj. [Lat. spina.] Belonging to, constituted by, the spine or backbone.

All spinal, or such as have no ribs, but only a backbone, are somewhat analogous thereto.—Sir T. Browne, Vulgar Errors.

These medulla are entirely nervous, and proceed from the brain and spinal marrow, which by their bulk appear sufficient to furnish all the stamina or threads of the solid parts.—Arbuthnot.

Descending careless from his couch, the fall Lux'd his joint neck, and spinal marrow bruised, J. Phillips, Cyder, li. 45.

Spindle. s. [A.S. spindell.]

1. Pin by which the thread is formed, and on which it is conglomerated.

Below fibrous by moisture incorporates with other threads, especially if there be a little writhing; an apparatus by the twisting of thread, and twisting about of spindles.—Bacon.

Sing to those that hold the vital shivers,
And turn the adamantine spindle round
On which the fate of gods and men is wound.

Upon a true repentance, God is not so fatally tied to the spindle of absolute reprobation as not to keep his promise, and seal merciful judgments.—J. Milton, Muses, 65.

No falls from the dusty field withdrew,
And when Imperial Jove appear'd in view,
Resumed her female arts, the spindle and the clew;
Pore'd the sceptre so well had away'd,
And with that midwife, she had ruled, obey'd.

Do you take me for a Roman matron,
Bred tenderly to the spindle and the loom?

Were the speed of the bobbin equal to that of the spindles, that is, did the bobbin and spindles make the same number of turns in the same time, the process would be limited to mere twisting. But the bobbin multiplies the flyers a little, that is, it makes in a given time a somewhat greater number of revolutions than the spindle, and thereby effects the continuous winding of the cord upon itself. Suppose the bobbin to make forty revolutions, while the spindle completes thirty; thirty of these revolutions of the bobbin will be ineffectual towards the winding-on, because the flyers follow at that rate, so that the cord, or twisted silver, will only be rolled ten times round the bobbin, and the result as if the winding-on will be the same as if the spindle had stood still, and the bobbin had made forty—thirty—ten turns. The thirty turns of the spindle serve, therefore, merely the purpose of communicating twist.—Ure, Dictionary of Arts, Manufactures, and Mines.

2. Long slender stalk.

The spindles must be tied up, and, as they grow in height, rods set by them, lest by their bending they should break.—Mortimer, Husbandry.

Used adjectively. Slender.

Repose yourself, if those spindly legs of yours will carry you to the next chair.—Dryden, Spanish Friar, ii. 3.

The marriage of one of our heroines with an eminent courtier gave us spindly slanks and cramps.—Tatler.

Spindle. v. n. Shoot into a long small stalk.

When the flowers begin to spindle, all but one or two of the biggest, at each root, should be nipped off.—Mortimer, Husbandry.

Spindle-legged. adj. Having small legs.

Many great families are insensibly fallen off from the stilted constitution of their progenitors, and are dwindled away into a pale, sickly, spindle-legged generation of vacillarians.—Tatler, no. 143.

Spindle-shanked. adj. Having small shanks.

Her lawyer is a little rivedel, spindle-shanked gentleman.—Addison.

Spindletree. s. Native tree of the genus Eucalyptus (species, eucalyptus).

There is a shrub called the spindle-tree, commonly growing in our hedges, which bears a very hard wood.—Reyn.

Spindling. verbal abs. [? spire.] Sprouting.

Another ill accident in drought is the spindling of the corn, which with us is rare, but in hotter countries common; inasmuch as the word stammy was first derived from stammy, when the corn could not get out of the stalk.—Bacon.

Spine. s. [Lat. spina.]

1. Backbone.

The spider entered his right side, reaching within a finger's breadth of the spine.—W. Smith, Surgery.
There are who think the marrow of a man, which in the spine, while he was living, ran. When dead, the pith corrupted was become A snake, and hiss within the hollow spine.—Dryden, Translation from Ovid, The Pythagorean Philosophy.

2. Thorn (for the botanical explanation see extract).

Some leaves, which do not freely develop in the usual manner, assume a dry harsh appearance, and pass into spines, as in the cactus or fig; just as some thorny branches have been called to assume the character of thorns.—Huxley, Principles of Descriptive and Physiological Botany, § 78.

Spinel. s. [Fr. spinnelle.] In Mineralogy.

Aluminate of magnesia; oriental ruby.

Spinel ruby is of a bright rose red; it is softer than the rock or basalt ruby. W. H. H. H.

It is of various tints of red, violet, and yellow, sometimes black, as at the copper mine, Mischbacher, in the valley of Tyne in Prussia; occasionally nearly white. It occurs in octahedrons, the edges of which are occasionally replaced, and sometimes in rhombic dodecahedrons; also in masses. The finest specimens are brought from Ceylon, Siam, Pegu, and other eastern countries. Spinel constitutes a beautiful gem, which is often sold for oriental ruby. The scarlet spinel is called spinel ruby by lapidaries; the rose-red, black, ruby; the yellow or orange-red, rubicelle; the violet-colored, almandine ruby.—Brande and Cox, Dictionary of Science, Literature, and Art.

Spindle ruby is [?] called dodecahedral corundum by some mineralogists, and Bala ruby by others. Phenacite is a variety which yields a deep green globe with heat. Crystals of spinnelle from Ceylon have been observed imbedded in fine stone, mixed with mica, or in rocks containing mica, which seem to have belonged to a primitive district. When the weight of a good spinnelle exceeds four carats, it is said to be valued at half the price of a diamond of the same weight. M. Brand has seen one at Paris which weighed two hundred and fifty grains.—Ure, Dictionary of Arts, Manufactures, and Mines, Lapidary.

Spinett. s. [Italian, spinetta; Fr. épinette.]

Small harpsichord.

When miss delights in her spinett,
A fiddler may his fortune feel.

By an ancient list of the domestic establishments of Edward III, it appears that he had in his service a musician called a cytteler, or cyttellor; the cyttellor, derived from ciastella, a little chest, is probably an old instrument resembling a box, strings on the top or belly, which by the application of the tastatura, or key board, borrowed from organ and jacks, been a spinett; but as to the harpsichord, the earliest description of it which, after a careful research, could be found, is that of Ottomarius Lascinius, in his Musurgia, published at Strasburg in 1596. Sir J. Hawkins, A General History of Music, vol. i. b. iv. ch. ix. p. 179.

[Proposition LXXIX.] treats of the spinett, or as Merseus terms it, the clavichordium; the figure which he has given of it resembles exactly the old Russian original, in shape a parallelogram, its width being to its depth in nearly the proportion of two to one; from whence it may be inferred that the triangular spinett now in use is somewhat less ancient than the time of Merseus. He makes it to consist of thirteen chords and keys, including twelve intervals; that being the number contained in an octave divided according to the modern system into seven tones and five semitones. He says that

... tuning of this instrument is by many persons held a great secret, nevertheless he reveals it by explaining the method of tuning the spinett according to the practice of the present times. From the spinett he proceeds in Prop. XL, to show the construction of the organochordium, in French called the clavichord, and English the harpsichord, an instrument well known at this day to need a description. But it seems that in the time of Merseus there were two kinds of harpsichord, the one of the French above spoken of, and the other of the Italians, called by him manichordium. Of this he treats at large in Prop. XLII.—Ibid., vol. iv. b. i. ch. i. p. 103.

Spinet. s. [Lat. spinetum; from spina = thorn.] Small wood; place where briars and bushes grow; spiny.

The invention was to have a satyr lodged in a little spinet,... who advanced his head above the top of the wood, &c.—B. Jonson, Entertainments at Althorpe.

Spink. s. [? finch, pinket.] Finch; bird.

Want sharpens poetry, and wretches adorn;

The spink chants sweetest in a hedge of thorns.

Harte.

As a name in its simple form its application is doubtful, it being uncertain whether, standing alone, it is the ordinary name of any native bird. Preceded, however, by some other word, it may be found, as in goldspink = goldfinch. In this it agrees with finch.

Spinnaret. s. In Entomology. Spinning organ of spiders. See extract.

Lyonesse... it that the so each of the spinnarets is provided by an infinite number of minute holes, from each of which there escapes as many little drops of a liquid which, when it dries the moment it is in contact with the air, forms so many delicate threads. Immediately after the filaments have passed out of the pores of the spinnaret, they unite first together and then with those of the neighbouring spinnarets, to form a common thread, so that the thread of the spider, as it is employed in the manufacture of the web, or such as the creature suspends itself by when hanging from one's finger, is composed of an immense number of minute filaments, perhaps many thousands, of such extreme fineness that the eye cannot detect them until they are twisted together into the working thread.—Victor Audouin, Arachnide.

Spinner. s. One who spins.

1. As an artisan in spinning.

A practised spinner will spin a pound of wool worth two shillings for sixpence.—Gent.

One spinner has many, which feed one another, so that he needs never turn round in the spind where he stands, to find himself in the proper position for the other mule. For this reason, the rim-wheel and handle, by which he operates, are not placed in the middle of the length of the machine, but about two-thirds of the spindles are to the right, and three to the left; the rim wheel being towards his right hand. The carriage of the mule is in the act of going out and spinning, while that of the other is finishing its twist, and being put up by the spinner. The quantity of yarn manufactured by a mule in a given time, depends directly upon the number of the spindles, and upon the time taken to complete every stretch of the carriage. Many circumstances have an indirect influence upon that quantity, and particularly the degree of skill possessed by the spinner.—Ure, Dictionary of Arts, Manufactures, and Mines.

2. Spider.

Spinnarets bear tokens of disjunction, and of knowing what water shall fall. Translation of Arthurobus de Proprietatibus Rerum, fol. 316.

Where the bee gathereth honey, even there the spinner gathereth venome.—Isaiah, in Fox's Acts and Monuments.

Weaving spiders name not.

Hence, you long-legg'd spinnars, hence!

Shake your, spinnars, spinnars, hence!

Shake your, spinnars, spinnars, hence!

Shake your, spinnars, spinnars, hence!

Shake your, spinnars, spinnars, hence!

Shake your, spinnars, spinnars, hence!

Shake your, spinnars, spinnars, hence!

Shake your, spinnars, spinnars, hence!

Shake your, spinnars, spinnars, hence!

Shake your, spinnars, spinnars, hence!

Shake your, spinnars, spinnars, hence!

Shake your, spinnars, spinnars, hence!

Shake your, spinnars, spinnars, hence!

Shake your, spinnars, spinnars, hence!

Shake your, spinnars, spinnars, hence!

Shake your, spinnars, spinnars, hence!

Shake your, spinnars, spinnars, hence!

Shake your, spinnars, spinnars, hence!

Shake your, spinnars, spinnars, hence!

Shake your, spinnars, spinnars, hence!

Shake your, spinnars, spinnars, hence!

Shake your, spinnars, spinnars, hence!

Shake your, spinnars, spinnars, hence!

Shake your, spinnars, spinnars, hence!

Shake your, spinnars, spinnars, hence!

Shake your, spinnars, spinnars, hence!

Spinny. adj. Thin; slender.

The Italian proportion of [beauty] big and plump; the Spaniards, agrace and lank; and amongst us, one would have her white, and her brown.—Florida, Translation of Montaigne, p. 260: 1613.
They plow it early in the year, and then there will come some spinny grass that will keep it from scalding.—Mortimer, Husbandry.

Spinosity. s. [Lat. spinosis.] Thorny or briary perpendicular. Rare.

The spinosity of harsh and dry opinions.—Mure, Mystery of Thalassia, p. 276.
Philosophy consisted of thought but dry spinosity, lean notions, and useless alterations about things of nothing.—Glauville.

Spinous. adj. Thorny; full of thorns.

Our senses are pricked and wounded with this spinous or thorny matter.—W. Montagu, Devout Essay, Part I, p. 72: 1618.

Spinster. s. [That the -str- was, by itself, a sign of the feminine gender, has long been known; of which import the present word is the only current instance, being simply the feminine form of Spinner. Hence, etymologically, all forms in -ster are fundamentally female; songsster being a female singer. Hence, too, the forms giving us -str- succeeded by -ess (as songsster-ess) are feminines with a second feminine element superadded to the primary one, the true power of which had become obsolete.]

1. Woman who spins.

The spinners and knitters in the sun,
And the free maids that weave their thread with beams,
Do use to chaunt it.

Shakespeare, Twelfth Night, ii. 4.

One Michael Cusick,

That never set a squabble in the field,
Nor the division of a battle knows
More than a spinster.

Id., On the, l. 1.

2. Legal term for an unmarried woman.

If a gentleman be termed spinster, she may state the writ.—Sir E. Coke.
I desire that a yearly annuity of twenty pounds should be paid to Rebecca Duncley of the city of Dublin, spinster, during her life.—Swift.

Used adjectivally.

"I have forgotten my flowers," said the spinster aunt. "Water them now," said Mr. Tuppman in accents of persuasion. "You will take cold in the evening air," urged the spinster aunt, affectionately. "No, no," said Mr. Tuppman rising; "it will do me good. Let me accompany you." The spinster aunt took up a large watering-pot which lay in one corner, and was about to leave the parlour. Mr. Tuppman detained her, and drew her to a seat beside him. "Miss Wardle!" said he. The spinster aunt trembled, till some pailful which had accidentally found their way into the large watering-pot shook like an infant's rattle. "Miss Wardle," said Mr. Tuppman, "you are an angel."—Dickens, Pickwick Papers, ch. vii.
"Get on your bonnet," repeated Wardle. "Do nothing of the kind," said Jingle. "Leave this air—no ladies here—lady's free to act as she pleases—more than one-and-twenty." "More than one-and-twenty!" ejaculated Wardle, contemptuously. "More than one-and-forty!" "I said," said the spinster aunt, her indignation getting the better of her determination to faint. "You are," replied Wardle, "you're fifty if you're an hour." Here the spinster aunt uttered a loud shriek, and became senseless. Id., ch. 1.

Spinstry. s. Work of spinning. Rare.

What new discovery can then be added to this by your spinstry?—Milton, Reason of Church Government urged against Prelacy, b. ii. ch. ii.

Spiny. adj. Thorny; briary; perplexed; difficult; troublesome.

The first attempts are always imperfect; much more so in difficult and spiny an affair as so nice a subject. Sir H. Dugby.
The spiny descents of scholastic philosophy.—Bishop Warburton, On Prophecy, p. 61.
The true anti-spiny, the truly anti-spiny, and the spiny nonconformations anti-spiny, are examples of truly scholastic mammals.—Owen, Anatomy of Ferretaria, ch. xix.

Spiracle. s. [Lat. spiraculum.] Breathing hole; vent; small aperture.

1. Generally.
Most of these spiracles perpetually send forth fire, more or less. Woodward.
When I entered, I found to my surprise that there was plenty of light, which was supplied from windows composed of small panes of whinbone, ground down very thin; and at the further end the head and skull of the animal formed a kitchen, the smoke from the fire escaping through the spiracles or breathing-holes above.—Marrat, The Fuchs of Many Tides, Hackback.

2. In Entomology. See extract.

We shall divide the respiratory organs [of insects] into external and internal. The external are of three kinds, spiracles, tracheae, and tracheolae. The internal are either simply tracheal, or tracheal and vesicular. The spiracles are apertures situated along the sides of the body communicating directly with the internal respiratory organs. They are usually nine in number on each side. In hymenopterous larvae there are ten.—Newport (Lewy), in Tait's Cyclopaedia of Anatomy and Physiology.

Spiral. adj. Curved; winding; circularly involved, like a screw.

The process of the fibres in the ventricles, running in spiral lines from the tip to the base of the heart, shows that the systole of the heart is a muscular contraction, as a purse is shut by drawing the strings contrary ways. Rap.
Why earth or sun diurnal stages keep?
In spiral tracts why through the zodiac creep?

Sir R. Blackmore.

The intestinal tube affects a straight, instead of a spiral cylinder.—Arbuthnot, On the Nature and Choice of Aliments.
Similar effects are produced by a tight lincture; and most persons have eyed the appearance which a woollen comb he branches of trees by twisting round them. A spiral prominence is formed immediately above and below the stricture, but more especially above it, and in process of time, these swellings often become so large as to meet completely over the woolline and cut it in the substance of the tree. Hendou, Principles of Descriptive and Physiological Botany, pt. ii. ch. iii. § 190.

Spiral. s. That which has a spiral form.

1. In Geometry. Curve circulating round a point or pole.

The spirals receive different names according to their properties or their discoverers. Some of the principal are noticed under the titles of Spiral of Archimedes, Hyperbolic Spiral, Logarithmic Spiral, Parabolic Spiral, &c. Hirst, in Grange and Cox, Dictionary of Science, Art, Culture, and Art.
2. In Botany. Applied in the extract to the arrangement of leaves, but also applied to certain 'spiral vessels.'

The symmetry with which the leaves are really disposed is now manifested by the appearance of several secondary spirals, which may be traced in various directions. Hendou, Principles of Descriptive and Physiological Botany, § 125.

Spirally. adv. In a spiral manner.

The sides are composed of two orders of fibres or spirally from base to tip—of that manifested in the Wicks

Ray, On the Wicks of the Crust.

Spiration. s. [Lat. spiratio.] Breathing.

To other substances, food of corporeal bulk or emotion, the name of spirit is assigned to map the manner of their origin, because God did, by kind of spiration, produce them.—Barrow, Sermons, vol. ii. serm. xxvii.

Spiro. s. [Lat. spiro.]

1. Curve line; anything wreathed or contorted, every wreath being in a different plane; curl; twist; wreath.

His head crested aloft, and carmine'd his eyes;
With burnish'd neck of verdant gold, erect Amidst his circling spiro, that on the grass Placed redundant. Milton, Paradise Lost, ix. 502.

A dragon's fiery form behind the pool,
Sublime on radiant spiro he rode. Id.

Air seems to consist of spiro contained in small spheres, through the interstices of which the particles of light may freely pass; it is light, the solid substance of the spiro being very small in proportion to the spaces they take up.—Chegar.

2. Anything growing up taper; round pyramidal, so called perhaps because a line drawn round and round in less and less circles, would be a spiro. See also under Steeple.

The gradual prospect of some foreign land
First seen, or some renowned metropolis,
With glistening spiro and pinnacles adorn'd. Id.

He cannot make one spiro of grass more or less than he hath made.—Sir M. Hale, Origination of Man.

These pointed spiro that wound the ambient sky,
Inferious change! shall in destruction lie. Id.

3. Top or uppermost point.

'Tis no less than a truncheonment,
To hide your dunes, and to silence that,
Which, to the spiro and top of jubilee vouch'd,
Would seem but modest. Shakespeare, Coriolanus, l. 9.

Spiro. v. n. Shoot up pyramidically.

In gentle ladies' heads, and bounteous race
Of woman-kind, it farest flower doth spiro,
And beareth fruit of honour and all chest decaye. Spenser, Florio Queen, iii. 8. 52.

It is not so apt to spiro up as the other sorts, being more inclined to branch into arms.—Mortimer, Husbandry.

Spiring. part. adj. Shooting up in a spire.

The silth sheers up the spiring grass.

Drayton, Polygraphon, song xvi.

The spiring tarrets glit through the skins.

Shakespeare, Judgment of Hercules.

Spirit. s. [Lat. spiritus.]

1. Breath; wind.

All jannes have in them a raw spirit or wind, which is the principal cause of tension in the stomach.—Barrow.

All bodies have spirits and pneumatical parts within them, but the main difference between animate and inanimate are, that the spirits of things animate are all contained within themselves, and branched in veins as blood is; and the spirits have also certain souls where the principal do reside, and whereunto the rest do resort; but the spirits in things inanimate are shut in and cut off by the tangible parts, as air in snow.—Id., Natural and Experimental History.

2. Immaterial substance; intellectual being.

Spirit is a substance wherein thinking, knowing, doubting, and a power of moving do subsist.—Locke.

She is a spirit; yet not like air, or wind,

Nor like the spirits about the heart or brain;

Nor like those spirits which physicians do find,

When they in every thing seek gold in vain;

For she allures under heav'n's doth pass,

Being like those spirits which God's bright face do see;

Or like him self, whose image once she was,

Though now, alas! she scarce his shadow be;

For of all forms she holds the first degree,

That are to gross material bodies knit;

Yet she herself is bodiless and free,

And though confined is almost infinite.

Sir J. Daria, Immortality of the Soul.

I shall depend upon your constant friendship;

like the trust we have in benevolent spirits, who,

though we never see or hear them, we think are constantly praying for us.—Bope.

If we seek him spare, there will remain in the world but matter and mind, or body and spirit.—Watts, Logic.

You are all of you pure spirits. I don't mean that you have not bodies that want meat and drink, and sleep and clothing; but that all that deserves to be called you, is nothing else but spirit.—Law.

3. Soul of man.

The spirit shall return unto God who gave it.—Each other, xi. 7.

Look, who comes here! a grave unto a soul, thence the eternal spirit must her will in the vile prison of allotted breath. Shakespeare, King John, iii. 1.

Every thing that you call yours, besides this spirit, is but like your shadow; sometimes that is only to be used for a while, and then to end, and die, and wear away.—Law.

4. Apparition.

They were terrified, and supposed that they had seen a spirit. Lake, xiv. 57.

Perhaps you might see the image, and not the glass; the former appearing like a spirit in the air.—Law.

Whilst young, preserve his tender mind from all impressions of spirits and goblins in the dark.—Locke.

5. Temper; habitual disposition of mind.

He sets

Upon their tongues a various spirit, to raise

Quite out their native language. Milton, Paradise Lost, xii. 52.

That peculiar law of christianity which forbids revenge, no man can think it grievous who considers the restless torment of a malicious and revengeful spirit.—Archbishop Tillotson.

She and all her fellow gals

Sit idling in their high attitudes...

Nor once disturb their heavenly spirits

With Scapula's clients, or Caesar's merits. Prior, Alma, l. 317.

Let them consider how far they are from that spirit, which prays for its most unjust enemies, if they have not kindness enough to pray for those, by whose labours and service they live in ease themselves.—Law.

It is the devout man, who lives no longer on his own will, or the way and spirit of the world, but to the will of God.—Id.

6. Ardour; courage; elevation; vehemence of mind.

'Tis well blown, lads;

This morning, like the spirit of a youth

That means to be of note, begins betwix.

Shakespeare, Antony and Cleopatra, iv. 4.

The king's party, called the cavaliers, began to recover their spirits.—Swift.

7. Genius; vigour of mind.

More ample spirit than hitherto was wont,
Here needs me, while the famous ancestors
Of my most doted sovereign I recount,
By which all earthly princes she doth far surmount.

Spenser, Faerie Queene.
To a mighty work thou goest, O king,
Thine equal spirits and equal powers shall bring.

A wild Tartar, when he spies
A man that's handsome, valiant, wise,
If he can kill him, thinks 't is his spirit
His wit, his beauty, and his spirit.

Butler, Hudibras, l. 2, 23.
The noblest spirit or genius cannot deserve enough
Of mankind, to pretend to the esteem of heroic virtue.—Sir W. Temple.

8. Turn of mind; power of mind moral or intellectual.

You were used
To my extremity was the trice of spirit,
That common chance common men could bear.

Shakespeare, Coriolanus, iv. 1.
I ask but half thy mighty spirit for me. Caesar.
A perfect judge will read each work of wit
With the same spirit that its author writ:

Survey the whole, nor seek slight fault to find,
Where nature moves, and nature warms the mind.
Pope, Essay on Criticism, ii. 233.

9. Intellectual powers distinct from the body.

These discourses made so deep impression upon the mind and spirit of the prince, whose nature was inclined to adventures, that he was transported with the thought of it.—Lord Clarendon, History of the Grand Rebellion.

In spirit perhaps he also saw
Rich Mexico, the seat of Mo
Milton, Paradise Lost, xi. 406.

10. Sentiment; perception.

You are too great to be by me restrained:
Your spirit is too true, your fears too certain.

Shakespeare, Henry IV, Part II, i. 1.
'So be it,' replied Mr. Maule, 'please Providence, No. . . . Group: I'll tell you why it is. It's because the lying out of money with a well-conducted establishment, where the thing is performed upon the very best scale, binds the broken heart, and sheds balm upon the wounded spirit. Hearts want healing, and spirits want balm when people die: not when people are born. Look at this gentleman today; look at him.' Dickens, Martin Chuzzlewit,
ch. xix.

11. Eagerness; desire.

God has changed men's tempers with the times, and made a spirit of building succeed a spirit of pulling down.—South, Sermons.

12. Man of activity; man of life, fire, and enterprise.

The wat'ry kingdom . . . is no bar
To stop the foreign spirit, but they come.
Shakespeare, Merchant of Venice, ii. 7.

13. Persons distinguished by qualities of the mind.

Romish adversaries, from the rising up of some schismatical spirits amongst us, conclude that the main body of our church is schismatical, because some but . . . embers thereof were such White.

Of pitying God did well-form'd spirits raise,
Fit for the toilsome business of their days,
To free the greening nation, and to give Peace first, and then the rules in peace to live.

On Such spirits as he desired to please, such would I choose for my judges.—Dryden.

14. That which gives vigour or cheerfulness to the mind; purest part of the body, bordering on immateriality.

Though thou didst not last,
With my vex'd spirit I cannot take a truce,
But they will quake. Shakespeare, King John, iii. 1.

When I sat and tell
The warlike feats I've done, his spirit fly out into my story. Id., Cymbeline, iii. 3.

Alas! when all our lamps are burn'd,
Our bodies wasted, and our spirits spent,
When we have all the learned volumes turn'd,
Which yield men's wits both help and ornament;

What can we know, or what can we discern?
Sir J. Davies, Immortality of the Soul.

It was the time when gentle night began
To indrench with sleep the busy spirits of man.
Cowley.

To sing thy praise, would heav'n my breath prolong,
Infusing spirits worthy such a song,
Not Thracian Orpheus should transcend my lays.

Dryden, Translation of Virgil, Eclogues, iv. 61.
In some fair body thus th' informing soul
With spirits feeds, with vigour fills the whole;
Each motion guides, and every nerve sustains,
Itself unseen, but in the effects remains.

Pope, Essay on Criticism, l. 70.

He is always forced to drink a hearty glass, to drive thoughts of business out of his head, and make his spirits drowsy enough for sleep.—Law.

15. Characteristical likeness; essential qualities.

Italian pieces will appear best in a room where the windows are high, because they are commonly made in a descending light, which of all other doth set off men's faces in their truest spirit.—*Sir H.
Wotton.*

16. Anything eminently pure and refined.

Nor doth the eye itself,
That most pure spirit of sense, behold itself,
Shakespeare, Troilus and Cressida, iii. 3.

17. That which hath power or energy.

There is in wine a mighty spirit, that will not be caged.—South, Sermons.

18. Inflammable liquor raised by distillation, as brandy, rum; (common in the plural).

What the chymists call spirit, they apply the name to so many different things, that they seem to have no settled notion of the thing. In general, they give the name of spirit to any distilled volatile liquor.—Boyle.

All spirits, by frequent use, destroy, and at last extinguish, the natural heat of the stomach.—*Sir
W. Temple.*

In distillations, what trickles down the sides of the receiver, if it will not mix with water, is oil; if it will, it is spirit. Arbuthnot, On the Nature and Choice of Aliments.

19. Mark to denote an aspirated pronunciation.

That the press should have stripped these broken ends of verses [Homer's] of the unnecessary and troublesome ligatures of spirilla and accents, is evidently the composition's nor the corrector's fault.—
Dalrymple, Deaf and Dumb Man's Tutor, p. 126; 1694.

In the poets, spirit was a mono-syllable, and therefore was often written spirite, or,
less properly, spirit.

The charge thereof unto a courteous spirit Committed was, Spenser.

Spirit, s. a.

1. Excite; animate; encourage; invigorate to action.

He will be faint in any execution of such a command, unless spirited by the unanimous decrees of a general diet.—Sir W. Temple.
Civil dissensions never fail of introducing and spiriting the addition of private men.—Swift.
Many officers and private men spirit up and assist those obstinate people to continue in their rebellion.
—Id.

2. Make away with, remove, mysteriously.

In the southern coast of America, the southern point of the needle varied toward the land, as being disposed and spirited that way by the meridional and proper hemisphere. Sir T. Browne.

The ministry had him spirited away, and carried abroad as a dangerous person.—Arbuthnot and Pope.

Spirit-rapper. s. One who believes in spi-rit-rapping.

I have said that the deluded spirit-rappers are on the right track; they have the spirit and the method of the grand time when those jades were cut through the nuclear forest in which it is now the daily routine to walk. What was that spirit? It was the spirit of universal examination wholly unchecked by fear of being detected in the investigation of nonsense.—*From Matter to Spirit, by C. D., Preface by
A. B.*

Spirit-rapping. s. System of belief founded upon statements, or personal evidence, as to certain manifestations of the action, or ministry, of beings believed to be spirits; spiritualism (second sense): (in the extract used adjectivally).

The spirit-rapping mania, which has invaded this country from the United States, is only another form of the same delusion. Brooks and Cox, Dictionary of Science, Literature, and Art.

Spiritually. adv. Spiritually. Rare.

Conceive one of each pronounced spiritually, the other vocally.—Hobler, Elements of Speech.

Spirited. adj. Lively; vivacious; full of fire.

So talk'd the spirited sly snake.
Milton, Paradise Lost, ix. 613.
Dryden's translation of Virgil is noble and spirited.—Pope.

The Gallican church made for some time a spirited, though unavailing struggle against this rising despotism.—Hallam, View of the State of Europe during the Middle Ages, pt. i. ch. vii.

'Why shouldst thou' asked Martin, turning his eyes upon the speaker.—'In search,' replied John West-lock, shrugging his shoulders, 'of the livelihood I couldn't have earned at home. There would have been something spirited in that. But, come! I'll your glass, and let us forget him.'—Dickens, Martin Chuzzlewit, ch. xii.

Spiritedness. s. Attribute suggested by Spirited; disposition or make of mind.

To leave the world, and live in wilderness, was not counted by [the] ancients an act of perfection, but of cowardice and poor spiritedness; of flight to shade and shelter, not of flight in dust and blood, and heat of the day.—Ohg, Life of G. Herbert,
den. N. 5: 1871.

Spiritfulness. s. Sprightliness; liveliness.

A cock's crowing is a tone that corresponds to singing, attesting his mirth and spiritfulness.— Harvey.

Spiritless. adj.

1. Dejected; low; deprived of vigour; wanting courage; depressed.

A man so faint, so spiritless,
So dull, so dead in look, so woe begone,
Drew Prima's curtain.

Shakespeare, Henry IV, Part II, i. 1.
Of their wonted vigour left them drained,
Exhausted, spiritless, afflicted, full.

Milton, Paradise Lost, vi. 821.

Much more is it needful now, against all the casualties of this life, to have an intimate and speaking help, a ready and reviving associate in marriage; whereof who misses, by chancing on a mute and spiritless mate, remains more alone than before. Milton, Doctrines and Disciplines of Divorce, b. i. ch. iv.

Nor did all Rome, grown spiritless, supply
A man that for bold truth durst bravely die.

Dryden.
Art thou so base, so spiritless as a slave?
Not so be here the fate to which you don't him.

2. Having no breath; extinct.

The very condition of human nature admonishes us, that the spiritless body should be restored to the earth from whence it was derived.—Greenhill,
Art of Embalming, p. 5.

Spiritlessly. adv. In a spiritless manner; without exertion.

The same 'external' profession [will this church of Laodicea hold on spiritlessly and lazily, with little life or zeal. Dr. H. Moore, Exposition of the Epistles as set to the Seven Churches, ch. ix.

Spiritous. adj.

1. Refined; defecated; advanced near to spirit.

More refined, more spiritous and pure,
As nearer to him placed, or nearer tending.
Milton, Paradise Lost, v. 375.

2. Fine; ardent; active.

The spiritous and benign most apt for generation.—South, Portrait of Old Age, p. 112.

Spiritousness. s. Attribute suggested by Spiritous; fineness and activity of part.

They, notwithstanding the great thinness and spiritousness of the liquor, did lift up the upper surface, and for a moment form a thin film like a small hemisphere.—Boyle.

Spiritual. adj. [Fr. spirituel.]

1. Distinct from matter; immaterial; incorporeal.

Echo is a good argument of the spiritual essence of sounds; for if it were corporeal, the repercussion should be created by like instruments with the original sound.—Boyer.

Both visibles and invisibles in their working emit no corporeal substance into their mediums, but only carry certain spiritual species. Id.

All creatures, as well spiritual as corporeal, declare their absolute dependence upon the first Author of all beings, the only self-existent God.—
Boyle.

From these same materials are constructed those crystalline substances which seem to stand as portals to the intellectual and spiritual world—channels of direct communication by which reason and revelation may tell the frail tenants of a few mouldering atoms, of that more glorious condition which will certainly be their heritage hereafter, as their hopes and yearnings after immortality are within the actual experience of their present state.—Huxton, Principles of Descriptive and Physiological Botany, § 189.

2. Mental; intellectual.

Spiritual armour, able to resist
Satan's assaults. Milton, Paradise Lost, xii. 431.

The same disaster has invaded his spiritual; the passions rebel; and there are so many governors, that there can be no government.—South, Sermons.
Wherefore these faint studies of thine, Spiritual Adeline? Trwynn.

3. Not gross; refined from external things; relative only to the mind.

Someone who pretend to be of a more spiritual and refined religion, spend their time in contemplation, and talk much of communion with God.—Calamy, Sermons.

4. Not temporal or civil; relating to the things of heaven; ecclesiastical.

Place him in some public society, civil or spiritual.—Hooker, Ecclesiastical Polity.

Thou art reverend,
Touching thy spiritual function, not thy life.

Shakespeare, Henry VI. Part I. li. 1.

I have made an offer to his majesty,
Upon our spiritual convocation,
As touching France, to give a greater sum
Than ever at one time the clergy did.

Id., Henry V. l. 1.

These servants, who have believing masters, are forbid to withdraw anything of their worldly respect, as presuming upon their spiritual kindred; or to honour them less, because they are become their brethren in being believers.—Kitt, worth.

The clergy's business lies among the laity; nor is there a more effectual way to forward the salvation of men's souls, than for spiritual persons to make themselves as accessible as they can in the conversations of the world.—Sieff.

She loves them as her spiritual children, and they reverence her as their spiritual mother, with an affection far above that of the fondest friends.—Lear.

For these reasons the Prince... had resolved, in compliance with the request of many lords spiritual and temporal, and of many other persons of all ranks, to go over at the head of a force sufficient to repel violence.—Manning, History of England, ch. ix.

It was natural... to withstand the interference of the clergy announced to parliament in legislation, as much as that of the spiritual court in temporal jurisdiction. With the ordinary subjects, indeed, of legislation they had little concern. Hallam, View of the State of Europe during the Middle Ages, ch. viii. pt. iii.

For example of its use as connected with spirit-rapping, see under Spiritualist.

Spiritualism. s.

1. Spiritual character: (chiefly as opposed to material).

FRANCISCO is the mystic of painting, the contemplative mystic, living in another world, having transmuted all that he remembers of this world into a purer, higher being. But that which was his excellence was likewise his defect. It was spiritualism, exalted and exalting spiritualism, but it was too spiritual.—Milman, History of Latin Christianity, li. xiv. ch. x.

2. System of spirit-rapping, and its allied manifestations.

Before entering on an explanation of the manner in which, as asserted by themselves, the "unseen powers" influence the mediums, it is necessary to say a few words on that which preceded "spiritualism" in the world, namely "Mesmerism."—From Matter to Spirit, by C. D. ch. iv.

Spiritualist. s.

1. One who professes regard to spiritual things only; one whose employment is spiritual.

These high-flown spiritualists, the quakers, are of the same mind.—Mallirell, Account of Familism, p. 19: 1673.

May not he that lives in a small thatched house... preach as loud, and to as much purpose, as one of those high and mighty spiritualists?—Richard, Grounds and Reasons of the Contempt of the Clergy inquired into, p. 140: 1620.

2. One who believes in spirit-rapping.

The followers of a theory are of two kinds; both equally apt to use it with effect. There are those who hold it tentatively, as consolidating existing knowledge and suggesting the direction of enquiry; there are those who believe in it as representing the true cause. The first may be the wiser; but the second are likely to be the more energetic. Now the spiritualists, so called, meaning all who receive the facts, or some of them, as facts, may be divided into those who believe that the communications are spiritual, those who do not see what else they can be, and those who do not see what they can be. All who enquire further, let them think what they may will, if they shape their inquiries upon the spiritual hypothesis, be sound imitators of those who led the way in physical science in the old time.—From Matter to Spirit, by C. D., preface by A. B.

Spirituality. s.

1. Incorporeity; immateriality; essence distinct from matter.

If this light be not spiritual, yet it approacheth nearest unto spirituality; and if it have any corporality, then of all other the most subtle and pure.—Sir W. Raleigh.

2. Intellectual nature.

A pleasure made for the soul, suitable to its spirituality, and equal to its capacities.—South, Sermons.

3. Acts independent of the body; pure acts of the soul; mental refinement.

Many secret indignations and aversions to duty will steal upon the soul, and it will require both time and close application of mind to recover it to such a frame, as shall dispose it for the spirituality of religion.—South, Sermons.

4. That which belongs to any one as an ecclesiastic.

Of common right, the dean and chapter are guardians of the spirituality, during the vacancy of a bishoprick.—Aspliffe, Parergon Juris Canonici.

Spiritualization. s.

1. Act of spiritualizing.

2. Action of extracting spirits from natural bodies.

Spiritualize. v. a. [Fr. spiritualiser.]

1. Refine the intellect; purify from the feculencies of the world.

This would take it much out of the care of the soul, to spiritualize and replenish it with good works.—Hammoud.

We begin our survey from the lowest degrees of sense, and so ascend to our more spiritualized selves.—Glanville.

As to the future glory in which the body is to partake, that land of earth, which now engages to corruption, must be calcined and spiritualized, and thus be clothed upon with glory.—Dr. H. More, Devout Christian Piety.

If man will act rationally, he cannot admit any competition between a momentary satisfaction, and an everlasting happiness, as great as God can give, and our spiritualized capacities receive.—Rogers.

2. Extract spirits from natural bodies.

Spirit of wine is sometimes spiritualized to that degree, that, upon throwing a quantity into the air, not a drop shall fall down, but the whole evaporate, and be lost.—Chambers.

Spiritually. adv. In a spiritual manner; without corporeal grossness; with attention to things purely intellectual.

In the same degree that virgins live more spiritually than other persons, in the same degree is their virginity a more excellent state.—Jeremy Taylor, Rule and Exercise of Living Holy.

Spirituality. s. Ecclesiastical body.

We of the spirituality
Will raise your idleness such a mighty sum,
As never did the clergy at one time.
Shakespeare, Henry V. l. 2.

Spirituous. adj. [Fr. spiritueux.]

1. Having the quality of spirit, tenuity, and activity of parts.

The most spirituous and most fragrant part of the plant exhales by the action of the sun.—Arbuthnot.

2. Lively; gay; vivid; airy: (applied both to persons and things).

It may appear airy and spirituous, and fit for the welcome of cheerful guests.—Sir H. Wotton, Elements of Architecture.

What, my good spirituous spark?

He was to the last but of a thin and spare constitution; yet otherwise exceeding lively and spirituous with it.—Vard, Life of Dr. Henry More, p. 98.

3. Ardent; alcoholic: (as, spirituous liquors).

Spirometer. s. [Lat. spiro = I breathe + Gr. métron = measure.] Instrument for determining the respiratory capacity of the chest.

The most extensive experiments by far, made with the view of ascertaining the quantity of air which can be thrown out of the lungs by forced expiration, after the deepest inspiration, are those of Mr. Hutchinson. These experiments were performed upon 1325 males, and they were made to breathe into an instrument constructed for the purpose, and which he has called a spirometer.—J. Reid, Respiration, in Todd, Cyclopaedia of Anatomy and Physiology.

Spirit, or Spurt. v. n. [In the previous editions there is a double entry (1) for the spelling with spi-, and (2) the spelling with spu-. As both can scarcely be right, and as the spelling is likely to be finally fixed by the preponderance of instances either way, the editor has made them uniform; preferring the present entry, chiefly because it gives the most instances. In Wedgwood, spurt is the leading form; inasmuch as it is connected with sprout = shoot forth; but spirit, &c., have the same affinities. It is scarcely necessary to remark that, phonetically, the words, whether spelt with i, or with u, are sounded alike. The case is repeated under Spunge.] Spring out in a sudden stream; stream out by intervals.

Bottling of beer, while new and full of spirit, so that it spiriteth when the stopple is taken forth, maketh the drink more quick and windy.—Bacon, Natural and Experimental History.

Thus the small jet, which hasty hands unlock,
Spirts in the gard'ner's eyes who turns the cock.
Pope, Dunciad, li. 177.

Spirit, or Spurt. v. a. Throw out in a jet.

When weary brooms from the briny waves
Retired for shelter to his wounded cave,
His thinny flock about their shepherd play,
And rowling round him, spirt the bitter sea.

Dryden, Translation of the Georgics, iv. 619.

Off the loose storm spirt up a muddy tide
Beneath thy careless foot.
Gay, Trivia, li. 263.

Spirit, or Spurt. s. Sudden ejection; figuratively, sudden and short effort; fit.

What, old hooson, art thou a chiding?
I will play a spurt, why should I not?
What hast thou to do, and if I lose my rote?
I will till the bones while I have one prote.

Lady Jarenton.

That happiness is so exceeding great, that at present they may very well be glad to hear of the way to attain it, and for a spurt not cheerfully about it.—Brugge, On the Parables, vol. i. p. 172.

We are ashamed of our rough voice, of our little spouts of temper, of our hard busy life, of our commonplace aspirations.—Saturday Review, p. 253, August 22, 1864.

Spiriting, or Spürting. verbal abs. Spirit.

If from a puncture of a lance, the manner of the spurring out of the blood will shew it.—H. Wotton, Surgery.

Spirtle, or Spürtle. v. a. Shoot scatteringly.

The leahs and mingled blood were spirted off on the wall.
Dryden.

The torquous globe would, by the centrifugal force of that motion, be soon dissipated and spirted into the circumambient space, was it not kept together by this noble contrivance of the Creator.—Berham, Physico-Theology.

Spiry. adj. [spire.]

1. Pyramidal.

Waste sandy vallies, once perplex'd with thorn,
The spiry fir and shapely box adorn.
Pope, Messiah.

In these lone walls, their days' eternal bound,
These moss-grown domes with spiry turret-crown'd,
Where awful groves make a moon-day night,
And the dim windows shed a solemn light,
Thy eyes diffus'd a re-creating ray,
And gleams of glory brighten'd all the day.
Id., Elvina to Abelsair.

2. Wreathed; curled.

hid in the spiry volumes of the snake,
I lurk'd within the covert of a brake.

Dryden, State of Innocence, iv. 2.

Spiss. adj. [Lat. spissus.] Close; firm; thick. Rare.

From his modest and humble charity, virtues which rarely exhibit with the swelling windiness of much knowledge, issued the spiss and dense yet polished, this copious yet concise, treatise of the variety of languages.—Herwood.

Spissitude. s. Grossness; thickness. Rare.

Drawing wine or beer from the lees, called racking, it will clarify the soaker; for though the lees keep the drink in heat, and make it lasting, yet they cast up some spissitude.—Bacon.

Spissitude is subdued by acid things, and armony by insipiating.—Arbuthnot, On the Nature and Choice of Aliments.

Spit. s. [A.S.; Dutch, spit; German, spieß.]

1. Long prong on which meat is driven to be turned before the fire.

A goodly city is this Antium;
'Tis I that made thy widows: then know too not,
That that thy wives with spits, and boys with stones,
In puny battle slay me.

Shakespeare, Coriolanus, iv. 4.
They may be contrived to the moving of sails in a chimney-carrier, the motion of which may be applied to the turning of a spit.—Bishop Wilkins, Mathematical Magic.

With Peggy Dixon thoughtful sit,
Contriving for the pot and spit.

The smaller sorts of wild-fowl, of which there was abundance, were not served up in platters, but brought in upon small wooden spits or branches, and offered by the pages and domestics who bore them, to each guest in succession, who cut from them such a portion as he pleased.—Sir W. Scott, Ivanhoe, ch. iv.

A cook, my Athenian—a cook sacrificing the trophies of his skill on the altar of Virtue, with a beautiful murena (taken from the life) on a spit at a distance—there is some invention there!—Lord Lytton, The Last Days of Pompeii, b. i. ch. iii.

Philotas, a physician, who was following his studies at Alexandria, told Plutarch's grandfather that he was once invited to see Antony's dinner cooked, and, among other meats, were eight wild boars roasted whole; and the cook explained to him that, though there were only twelve guests, yet as each dish had to be roasted to a single turn of the spit, and Antony did not know at what hour he should dine, it was necessary to cook at least eight dinners. —Sharpe, History of Egypt, ch. x.

2. Such a depth of earth as is pierced by one action of the spade.

Where the earth is washed from the quick, free it with the first spit of earth dug out of the ditch. —Mortimer, Husbandry.

3. Obolisk (†), corresponding, in extract, with star (†) or asterisk.

Either your starra, or your spita (that I may use Origin's notes) shall be welcome to my margin. —Bishop Hall, To Hugh Cholmeley. (Ord MS.)

Spit, v. a.

1. Put upon a spit.

I see my cousin's ghost,
Seeking out Romeo, that did spit his body
Upon a rapier's point.

Shakespeare, Romeo and Juliet, iv. 3.

I'll strow him on the waves, his men first kill'd
And spitted upon swords. Fletcher, Poems, p. 295.

2. Thrust through.

I spitted frogs, I crush'd a heap of emmets.
Dryden, Don Sebastian, l. 1.

Spit, v. a. pret. spit, archaic, spat. [A.S. spetan.] Eject from the mouth.

A large mouth, indeed,
That spits forth death and mountains.

Shakespeare, King John, ii. 2.

Commissions which compel from such
The sixth part of his splendour, makes bold mouths,
That spit their duties out, and roll hearts freeze Allegiances in them. Id., Henry VIII. l. 2.

The sea thrusts up her waves,
One after other, thick and high, upon the groaning shores.

First in herself loud, but opposed with banks and rocks she roars,
And all her back in bristles set, spits every way her foam. Chapman.

Spit, v. n.

1. Throw out spittle or moisture of the mouth.

He spat on the ground, and made clay of the spittle, and anointed the eyes of the blind man. —John, ix. 6.

Very good doctors, when they are out, will spit. —Shakespeare, As you like it, iv. 1.

I dare meet Surry,
And spit upon him, whilst I say he lies.

Id., Richard II. iv. 1.

The wat'ry kingdom, whose middlest head
Spits in the face of heaven, is no far
To stop the foreign spirits; but they come.

Id., Merchant of Venice, ii. 7.

A maid came from her father's house to one of the triumphs of the Gentiles, and declaring herself a Christian, spit in the judge's face. —South, Sermons.

A drunkard men abuse, and would even spit at him, were it not for fear he should something more than spit at them. —Id.

Spit on your finger and thumb, and pinch the snuff till the candle goes out. —Swift, Advice to Sir Isaac.

2. Muzzle; ruin slightly.

Spital, s. Hospital.

Prayers made only for a shew or colour; and that to the basest and most degenerate sort of villainy; even the robbing the spital, and devouring the houses of poor, helpless, forlorn widows. —South, Sermons, pp. 138.

He declares he will sooner visit a house infected with the plague than trust himself in such a numerous spital for the future. —Smollett, Expedition of Humphrey Clinker.

Mr. Gifford, the recent editor of Ben Jonson's works, declares that spital means generally an hospital or almshouse; and says that, with our ancestors, it had an appropriate signification, viz. a leper-house, a receptacle for wretches in the leprosy, and other loathsome diseases, the consequence of debauchery and vice. (B. Jonson, l. 17. And see Manning's Works, iv. 13.) Mr. Gifford, therefore, opposes the use of spital or spital in this sense. Our ancestors, however, were not uniformly thus scrupulous:

Ryland Lyle, lord of Abersevery, having two sons both leprous, built for them a leper-house or spital.
(The Younger Brother's Apology, Oxford, 1635, p. 54.)
But the distinction is observed at a later period:
"He should rather pity such, as knowing in himself the misery of poverty, than oppress them and rob the hospital and spital." (Bishop Richardson on the Old Testament, 1688, p. 301.) —Zadd.

Spitchecock, v. a. [?] In Cookery. Dress an eel by splitting it longwise, and having laid on it the yolk of an egg with crumbs of bread, spice, sweet herbs, and parsley, broiling it.

If you chance to be partial to eels,
Then—erle expert, trust, eels who has tried—
Have them spitchecock'd or stob'd, they're too oily when frisd. *Barham, Ingoldsby Legends,
The Knight and the Lady*.

Spitchecock, s. Eel spitchecocked.
Will you have some rayfish and a spitchecock?
Decker, Northward Hoe: 1607.

Spitchecocked, part. adj. In Cookery.
Dressed as under Spitchecock.

No man lends salt pork with orange peel,
Or garnishes his lanch with spitchecocked eel. King.

Spite, s. [N.Fr. depit; Modern Fr. dépité; Italian, dispetto.] Malice; rancour; hate;
malignity; malevolence.

This breeding rather spite than shame in her, or, if it were a shame, a shame not of the fault, but of the remorse, she did thirst for a revenge. —*Sir P.
Sidney*.

Hewny they did their inward boiling spite,
Each stirring others to revenge their cause. Daniel,
Done all to spite

The great Creator; but their spite still serves
His glory to augment. Milton, Paradise Lost, li. 538.

'Tis best sometimes your course to restrain,
And charitably let the dull be vain;
Your silence there is better than your spite,
For who can rail as long as they can write?

Pope, Essay on Criticism, iii. 237.

Spite of, or In spite of. Notwithstanding;
in defiance of: (often without any malignity of meaning).

I'll guard thee free,
And save thee in her spite. Chapman.

Blessed be such a preacher, whom God made use of to speak a word in season, and saved me in spite of the world, the devil, and myself. —South, Sermons.

In spite of me I love, and see too late
My mother's pride must find my mother's fate.

Dryden, Indian Emperor, iv. 1.

For thy loved sake, spite of my leading fears,
I'll meet the danger which mutation brings. Rowe.

My father's fate,
In spite of all the fortune that shines
Before my face in Cato's great example,
Subdues my soul, and fills my eyes with tears.

Adams, Cato.

The treatise of Ecklon against ergane; itself is only worth nothing from the circumstance of the author being himself one of the most inveterate gamblers; he wrote this work to convince himself of this folly. But in spite of all his solemn vows, the prayers of his friends, and his own book perpetually quoted before his face, he was a great gambler to his last hour! The same circumstance happened to Sir John Denham. —L. Disraeli, Caricatures of Literature, Gaming.

Spite, v. a.

1. Treat maliciously; vex; thwart malignantly.

Beuiled, divorced, wrong'd, spited, slain,
Most detestable death, by thee.

Shakespeare, Romeo and Juliet, iv. 5.

I'll sacrifice the lamb that I do love,
To spite a raven's heart within a dove.

Id., Twelfth Night, v. 1.

2. Fill with spite; offend.

So with play did he a good while fight against the flight of Zeluane, who, more spited with that courtesy, that one that did nothing should be able to resist her, burned away with elder any motions which might grow out of her own sweet disposition.
—Sir P. Sidney.

Spiteful, adj. Malicious; malignant.

The Jews were the deadliest and spitefullest enemies of Christianity that were in the world, and in this respect their orders to be slained. —Hosier, Ecce quidam Polity.

All you have done
Hath been but for a wayward son.

Shakespeare, Macbeth, iii. 5.

Our publick form of divine service and worship is in every part thereof religious and holy, unange the unline of spiteful wretches, who have depraved
it. —White.

Contempt is a thing made up of an undervaluing of a man, upon a belief of his utter uselessness, and a spiteful endeavour to engage the rest of the world in the same slight esteem of him. —South, Sermons.

Spitefully, adv. In a spiteful manner; maliciously; malignantly.

Twice false Evadne, spitefully forsworn!
That fatal boast like this I would have torn.

Waller.

Vanessa sat,
Source listening to their idle chat,

6 N

Further than sometimes by a few men,
When they grew part, to part in a down;
At last she spitefully was bent
To try their wisdom's full extent.

Swift, Poems on a Fair.

Spitefulness, s. Attributed suggested by Spiteful; malice; malignity; desire of vexing.

It looks more like spitefulness as an ill-nature, than a diligent search after truth. Kril, Against Barnet.

Spitfire, s. Term applied to persons of a fiery, passionate temper; with physical propriety, used as the name of a non-of-war and frigates.

Spitfrog, s. Contemptuous name for a sword. Rare.

I would not see thy spiritfrol spit-frog drawn.
Taylor (the Water poet), 1699.
(Quoted by H. and W.)

Spitted, adj. Shot and into length, as the horns of a deer (to which the name of spit-ter is sometimes given).

Whether the head of a deer, that by age is more spitted, may be brought again to be more branched.
—Hosier.

Spitter, s.

1. One who spits.

2. Deer with spitted horns: (see under Spitted).

Spittle, s. See extract from Told under Spital.

To the spittle we,
And from the powder-ring-tail of infancy
Fetch forth the lazar kile of Crossid's kind.

Shakespeare, Henry V. ii. 1.

As the first element in a compound.

This is it
That makes the waned widow weal again;
She whom the spittle-hoars, and silver sons sorrow,
Would cast the gorge at, this embalm and spices
Till 't April-day again.

Shakespeare, Titus of Athens, iv. 3.

Cure the spittle-world of involution. Chambers.

Spittle, s. Moisture of the mouth.

Menas and Atys in the mouth were bred,
And never hatch'd within the labouring head;
No blood from barren mists these joys drew,
But churn'd like a spittle from the lips they flow.

Dryden, Translation of Persius, l. 70.

His heart too great, though fortune little,
To link a rascal statesman's spittle. Swift.

Spittoon, s. Small stand for smokers to void their saliva in.

8 vintage himself in a rocking chair, bann'd a large gentleman with his hat on, who mumbled himself by spitting abruptly into the spittoon on the right hand of the stove and the spittoon on the left.
—Dickens, Martin Chuzzlewit, ch. vi.

Spitvenom, s. Poison ejected from the mouth.

The spitvenom of their poisoned hearts breaketh out to the annoyance of others. —*Hosier, Ecce
quidam Polity*.

Spitanechnic, adj. [Gr. σπιν, your bowel.]
In Anatomy. Connected with the intestinal viscera.

The right spitanechnic (nerve) starts out of the thorax . . . at a point internal, superior, and anterior to the sympathetic . . . C. Brown, Physiognomy in Todd's Cyclopaedia of Anatomy and Physiology.

Spitanechnology, s. [Gr. σπιν, word, principle, reason, doctrine.] In Anatomy.

Doctrine, or department of investigation, connected with the viscera: (more usually found as a title to a book, or the division of one, than as part of a context).

Spitash, v. a. Daub with dirt in great quantities.

Then answer'd squire Morley, Pray set a calash,
That in summer may burn, and in winter may splash.

Prior, Songs and Ballads, Down Hall.

Spish, s.

1. Wet or dirt thrown up from a puddle, mire, or the like.

2. Blot.

Half a . . . very mode of writing . . . complex, nay, careless, incoherent; with dashes as in: Spish, . . .
with involutions, abruptness, whirled, and fortitudities; so that even the grammatical and logical is sometimes burdensome to write. —Carlyle, Critical and Miscellaneous Essays, Varnhagen von Ense's Memoirs.

1009

Splashboard. s. Part of a gig for keeping off the splashers. When very lightly made, and placed, as a curved piece of wood or leather, just over the highest part of the wheel, it is called a splashwing.

Splashwing. s. See Splashboard.

Splashy. adj. Full of dirty water; apt to splash.

Splay. v. a. Display.

Each lish a bar, each spray a banner splayed,
Each house a furt, our passage to have stayed.

Mirror for Magistrates, p. 414.

Splay. adj. Displayed; spread; turned outwards.

Her face and her splay foot have made her accused for a witch.—Sir P. Sidney, Arcadia, b. 1.
He hath a splay foot.—Barret, Alvarado, 1690.

Splay-footed. adj. Splay-footed.

Though still some traces of our rustic vein
And splay-foot were remain'd, and will remain.

Pope, Imitations of Horace, b. ii. ep. 1.

Splay-footed. adj. Having a splay foot.

Sure I met no splay-footed lacker.

Machin, Dutch Knight, 1633.

Splayed. adj. Displayed; (used, in Architecture, to denote an angle cut off).

Splaymouth. s. Mouth widened by design.

All authors to their own defects are blind;
Held that but, James-like, a face behind,
To see the people when splaymouths they make,
To mark their fingers painted at thy back,
Their tongues held out a foot.

Dryden, Translation of Persius, l. 114.

Spleen. s. [Lat. splen; Gr. σπλήν.]

1. In Anatomy. Vascular gland without a duct for carrying off its secretion, and (as such) one having its function imperfectly understood.

If the wound be on the left hypochondrium, under the short ribs, you may conclude the spleen wounded.
—Winston, Surgery.

There is reason to believe that the office performed by certain bodies connected with the sanguiferous system, which possess the essential elements of the glandular structure without any efferent ducts, is to restore to the circulating current any subst. which they may withdraw from it; and there seems adequate ground therefore for the conclusion that their action, whatever it may be, is subsidiary to the process of sanguification; being exercised, perhaps upon that portion of the nutrient materials more especially which did not traverse the absorbent system when first introduced, but which was directly taken up by the blood-vessels. The organs in question are the spleen and the thymus, thyroid, and suprarenal bodies. . . . The results then of all the recent investigations on these organs tend to prove that, equally with the absorbent glands, they supply the germs of those cells which are ultimately to become blood-corpuscles. Such it is well known was the doctrine of Brown, in regard to the spleen and thymus gland; and there are many facts which lend it a considerable probability. Dr. Carpenter, Principles of Human Physiology, §§ 129, 130; 1850.

Anger; spite; ill-humour.
If she must mourn,
Create her child of spleen, that it may live
And be a thwart disordered torment to her.

Shakespeare, King Lear, i. 4.
Kind pity cheeks my spleen; have seen forbide
Those tears to issue, which swell my eye-lids.

Donne.
All envied; but the Theban brethren shew'd Thy least respect; and thus they vent their spleen abroad;

'Lay down those honour'd spoils.'
Dryden, Translation from Ovid, Melaeger and Atalanta.

3. Fit of anger.

'Charge not in your spleen a noble person,
And spoil your nobler soul.

Shakespeare, Henry VIII. l. 2.

4. Inconstancy; caprice.

A bare-brain'd Hunspar, govern'd by a spleen.
Shakespeare, Henry IV. Part I. v. 2.
A mad-brain rudely, full of spleen.

Id., Taming of the Shrew, iii. 2.

5. Sudden motion; fit.

Bri-f as the lightning in the collied night,
That in a spleen, unfolds both heaven and earth;
And ere a man hath power to say, Behold!
The jaws of darkness do devour it up.

Shakespeare, Macbeth, Night's Dream, l. 1.

6. Melancholy; hypochondriacal vapours.

The spleen with sullen vapours clouds the brain,
And lends the spirits in its heavy chain,
He sees the cause fantastick may appear,
Za! effect is real, and the pain sin

Sir R. Blackmore.

Spleen, vapours, and small-pox above them all.

Pope, Moral Essays, ii. 267.
Whether ill-nature be the mother or the daughter of spleen!—Bishop Berkeley, Querist, § 302.

7. Immoderate merriment; (the derangement of the spleen having been thought to give rise to immoderate merriment. That it has been credited with the same potency in causing the opposite state of hypochondriacism has already been seen. Instability, or inconstancy, of temper is, perhaps, the general expression of its influence).

As you desire the spleen, and would die with laughing.—Shakespeare, Twelfth Night, iii. 2.

Spleen. v. a. Deprive of spleen.

Spleen'd. adj. Deprived of the spleen.

Animals spleen'd grow salubrious.—Arbuthnot.

Spleenful. adj. Peevish; fretful; melancholy.

The commons, like an angry hive of bees
That want their leader, scatter up and down;
Myself have enlaid their spleenful noting.

Shakespeare, Henry VI. Part II. iii. 2.

The cheerful soldiers, with new stores supplied,
Now long to execute their spleenful will.

Dryden, Anna Mirabilis, cxviii.

If you drink tea upon a promontory that overhangs the sea, the whistling of the wind is better music to contented minds than the opera to the spleenful.—Pope.

Spleenish. adj. Fretful; peevish.

Luxury, pride, ambition, rebellion, murder, the common and known fruits of fiery and spleenish
tempers.—Archdeacon Annesley, Table of Moderni-tation, p. 8; 1601.

Spleenless. adj. Kind; gentle; mild.

Mean time flew our ships, and straight we fetch'd
The syren's isle; a spleenless wind so stretch'd
Her wings to wait us, and so urg'd our keel.

Chapman.

Spleenwort. s. [Gr. σπλήν.] Fern of the genus Asplenium.

Safe pass'd the gnome through this fantastick
land.

A branch of healing spleenwort in his hand.

Pope, Rape of the Lock, canto iv.

Spleeny. adj. Angry; peevish; humorous.

What though I know her virtuous,
And well deserving; yet I know her for A spleeny Lutheran, and not wholesome to Our cause.

Shakespeare, Henry VIII. iii. 2.

The heart and harbour'd thoughts of ill, unkind traitors,

Not spleeny speeches.

Beaumont and Fletcher, Valentinian.

Splendent. adj. [Lat. splendens, -entis, pres. part. of splendeo = I shine.]

1. Shining; glossy; having lustre.

They assigned them names from some remarkable qualities, that is very observable in their red and splendent planets.—Sir P. Browne, Vulgar Errors.

Metallic substances may, by reason of their great density, reflect all the light incident upon them, and so be as opaque and splendent as it is possible for any body to be.—Sir I. Newton.

2. Eminently conspicuous.

In comparison of his own free contemplations, he did think divers great and splendent fortunes of his time little more than common-place caprices.—*Sir
H. Wotton, Remarks*, p. 66.

I'm third attitudinal his goodness; and this is splendent in two respects; first, in that he is the cause efficient of things; and next, the cause appetible.—Shelford, Learned Discourses, p. 181; 1655.

Splendid. adj. [Fr. splendide; Lat. splendidus.] Shiny; magnificent; dazzling; gorgeous.

Unreceptable, though in heaven, our state
Of splendid vassalage.

Milton, Paradise Lost, ii. 225.

Splendidly. adv. Magnificently; sumptuously; pompously.

Their condition, though it look splendidly, yet when you handle it on all sides, it will prick your fingers.—Jerome Taylor.

You will not admit you live splendidly, yet it cannot be denied but that you live neatly and elegantly.

Dr. H. More.

How he lives and eats,

How largely gives, how splendidly he treats.

Dryden.

He, of the royal store

Splendidly frugal, sits whole nights devoid
Of sweet repose.

A. Phillips.

Splendour. s. [Fr. splendeur; Lat. splendor.]

1. Lustre; power of shining.

Splendour hath a degree of whiteness, especially if there be a little reprobation; for a looking-glass, with the steel behind, looketh whiter than glass simple.—Bacon, Natural and Experimental History.

The first symptoms are a chilliness, a certain splen-dour or shining in the eyes, with a little moisture.—
Arbuthnot.

2. Magnificence; pomp.

Romulus, being to give laws to his new Romans, found no better way to procure an esteem and reverence to them, than by first procuring it to himself by splendour of habit and reclus.—South, Sermons.

'Tis use alone that mortifies expense,
And splendour borrows all her rays from sense.

Pope, Moral Essays, iv. 170.

Splendrous. adj. Having splendour.

Whose splendrous arms shone like a mighty flame.

Drayton, David and Goliath.

Splénétique, or Splénétique. adj. [Fr. splénétique.]

—That splénétique is a common pronunciation is a matter of experience; and that, as far as authority goes, so influential an authority as Pope wrote splénétique, may be seen from the extracts. Which is right is difficult to say. That the length of the vowel has little to do with the matter is plain from words like theatre (thea-trum), orator (orator), and numerous others. The question turns upon the extent to which the English habit of throwing the accent back has over-ridden the influence of the length of the vowel thus shortened. Treating é and i (both long), whether Greek or Latin, followed by -icus or -icus, and converted into English, as the same, the result is that we get two extreme words, linnetic and lymphatic; the question then arising being which of the two determines the less definite instances? The word under notice is one of them; and the extent to which sound is doubtful is implied in the present remarks. Fanatic is another; and, although the editor says fanitic, as he says splénétique, (also lymphatic) he has more than once heard fanitic defended. It is probable that the linnetics will beat the lymphatics.] Troubled with spleen; fretful; peevish.

Horace purged himself from these splénétique reflections in odes and epodes, before he undertook his satyrs.—Dryden.

You humour me when I am sick;
Why not when I am splénétique?

Pope, Imitations of Horace, ep. vii.

Splénétique, or Splénétique. s. Splénétique person.

This daughter shew'dly hours; the other stands a kind look at you; a third is exactly well behaved;
and a fourth a splénétique.—Tatler.

Splénétique. adj. Splénétique

I have received much benefit touching my splénetic infirmity.—Sir H. Wotton, Remarks, p. 368.

Splénétique. adj. [Fr. splénétique.] Belonging to the spleen.

Suppose the spleen obstructed in its lower parts and splénétique branch, a potent heat causeth the organs to boil.—Harve.

The splénétique vein hath divers cells opening into it near its extremities in human bodies; but in quad-rups the cells open into the trunk of the splénétique vein.—Ray, On the Wisdom of God manifested in the Works of the Creation.

Splénétique. adj. Splénétique.

Yourselves you must engage,
Somewhat to cool your splénétique rage,
Your grievous thirst; and to assuage
That first, you drink this liquor.

Drayton, Nymphidia.

Splénétique. adj. Hot; fiery; passionate.

Take thy fingers from my throat;
For though I am not splénétique and rash,
Yet I have in me something dangerous.

Shakespeare, Hamlet, v. 1.

Splénétique. v. a. See Splint.

Splénétique. v. a. Join the two ends of a rope without a knot, by binding over, or overlaying them.

And now, my good friends, I've a fine opportunity
To oblige you all by sea terms with impunity,
And talking of caulking,
And quarter-deck walking . . .

Of lower-deck grime, and of broadsides and chase,
Of affairs and to-polls and splénétique main-braces.

Barham, Ungodly Legends, The Bagman's Dog.

Splice. s. Joining of a rope.

An eye splice forms an eye or circle at the end of a rope. A short splice in the joining of two ends not intended to pass through a block. A long splice is used to unite two ends which have to pass through a block. It is formed by untwisting the two ends, and interweaving the strands of one in the alternate strands of the other. The strands must be hauled well through, and beaten with a mallet to render them firm.—Brande and Cox, Dictionary of Science, Literature, and Art.

Splint. s. [from root of splice, split.]

1. Fragment of wood in general.

The splints and spavins too.

Cleaveland, Poems, p. 144: 1653.

2. Thin piece of wood or other matter used by surgeons to hold the bone newly set in its place.

The ancients, after the seventh day, used splints, which not only kept the members steady, but straight; and of these some are made of tin, others of snailshell and wood, sewed up in linen cloth.—Winman, Surgery.

3. See extract.

A splint is a callous hard substance, or an insensate swelling, which grows on or adheres to the shank-bone of a horse; and when it grows big, spoils the shape of the leg. When there is but one, it is called a single splint; but when there is another opposite to it on the outside of the shank-bone, it is called a pegged or pinned splint.—Farrier's Dictionary.

4. Coal.

Splint or splint coal [is] a hard laminated kind of coal, less bituminous than caking coal, and intermediate between Cannel and common pit-coal. It burns free and open, without caking, and furnishes a good house-coal. Splint coal is produced by the Glasgow coal-field, as well as by those of Shropshire, Warwickshire, Derbyshire, and Nottinghamshire, and constitutes the bulk of the coal from North and South Staffordshire.—Brande and Cox, Dictionary of Science, Literature, and Art.

Splint. v. a. In Surgery. Join together, or support, by means of a splint or splinters.

The broken rancour of your high swollen hearts,
But lately splinted, knit, and join'd together,
Must gently be preserved, cherish'd, and kept.

Shakespeare, Richard III. ii. 2.

Splinter. s.

1. Fragment of anything broken, cracked, or snapped, more or less in the direction of its length, with violence.

He was slain upon a course at tilt, one of the splinters of Montgomery's staff going in at his breast.—Lucan.

Amidst whole heaps of squire lights a ball,
And now their odours swirl'd against them fle;
Some previously by shatter'd porcelain fall,
And some by aromatic splinters die.

Dryden, Annus Mirabilis, xxix.

2. Thin piece of wood: (used adjectively in the extract).

A plain Indian fan, used by the meaner sort, made of the small stringy parts of roots, spread out in a round flat form, and so bound together with a splinter hoop, and strengthened with small bars on both sides.—Greve, Museum.

Splinter. v. a.

1. Break into splinters.

'The eastern gale shakes,' continued Rebecca: 'it crackles—it is splintered by his blows—they rush in—the network is woe—Oh, God!—they hurl the defenders from the battlements—they throw them into the moat.'—Sir W. Scott, Ivanhoe, ch. xxx.

2. Secure by splints; support.

This broken joint entreat her to splinter, and this crack of your love shall grow stronger than it was before.—Shakespeare, Othello, II. 3.

Those men have broken credits,
Lone and dismember'd faiths, my dear Antonio,
Thine splinter them with vows.

Shakespeare, Merchant of Venice, II. 1.

That place I find so strangely shattered, that it will be very hard for me to splinter up the broken confused pieces of it.—Bishop Wren, Monarchy Ascertained, p. 148.

Splinter. v. n. Be broken into fragments; be shivered.

Oak-timber is fitted for ship-building by the property of not readily splintering.—Woodland Companion, p. 5.

Splintered. part. adj. Broken into splinters.

The splintered aperture
Of attic pines demolish'd.

Horrid, Favourite Village: 1800.

Split. v. a. pret. and past part. split.

1. Cleave; rive; divide longitudinally in two.

Do't, and then hast the one half of my heart;
Do't not, thou split'st at thine own.

Shakespeare, Winter's Tale, I. 2.

That self-laud

Hath, with the courage which the heart did lend it,
Split the heart. Id., Antony and Cleopatra, v. 1.

Wert thou served up two in one dish, the rather
To split thy sire into a double father? Cleaveland.

Cold Winter split the rocks in train. Dryden.

A skull so hard, that it is almost as easy to split a helmet of iron as to make a fracture in it. Id., On the Wisdom of God manifested in the Works of the Creation.

This effort is in some earthquakes so vehement, that it splits and tears the earth, making cracks or chasms in it some miles.—Woodward.

2. Divide; part.

One and the same ray is by refraction disturbed, shattered, dilated, and split, and spread into many diverging rays. Nis. J. Newton.

Oh! would it pierce the gods to split
Thy beauty, size, and years, and wit,
No age would turnish out a pair
Of nymphs so graceful, wise, and fair. Swift.

3. Dash and break on a rock.

God's desertion, as a full and violent wind, drives him in an instant, not to the harbour, but on the rock where he will be irrecoverably split.—Dr. H.
More, Decay of Christian Piety.

Those who live by shores, with joy behold
Some wealthy vessel split or stranded nigh;
And from the rocks leap down for shipwreck'd gold,
And seek the tempests which the others fly. Dryden, Annus Mirabilis, cell.

4. Divide; break into discord.

In states notoriously irreligious, a secret and irresistible power splits their councils, and smites their most refined policies with frustration and a curse.—South, Sermons.

Split. v. n. [A.S. splitan.]

1. Burst in sunder; crack; suffer disruption.

A huge vessel of exceeding hard marble split
sunder by congested water.—Boyle.
What is 't to me,
Who never sail on her unfaithful sea,
If storms arise and clouds grow black,
If the mast split, and threaten wreck? Dryden, Translation from Horace, b. i. ode xxix.

2. Burst with laughter.

Each had a gravity would make you split,
And shook his head at Murray as a wit.

Pope, Imitations of Horace, b. ii. ep. ii.

3. Be broken against rocks.

After our ship split,
When you, and the poor number sav'd with you,
Hung on our driving boat.

Shakespeare, Twelfth Night, I. 2.

These are the rocks on which the sanguine tribe of lovers daily split, and on which the politician, the alchemist, and projector, are cast away.—Addison,
Spectator.

The waves split a rock, and the wind was so strong that we were driven directly upon it, and immediately split.—Swift.

4. Divulge a secret: (as, 'Don't split,' or, with upon, 'Don't split upon me').Splitter. s. One who splits.

How should we rejoice, if like Judas the first,
Those *split*ers of persons in sunder should burst! Swift.

Splitting. verbal abs. Act of one who splits or divides.

Their back has appeared the mere art of wrangling, and their metaphysics the skill of splitting an hair, of distinguishing without a difference.—Watts,
On the Mind.

Splootch. s. Dub.

The leaves were crumpled, and smeared with dew and splootch of grease. . . . There were splootch engravings scattered here and there through the pages of Monsieur Féval's romance.—Eleanor's Victory, ch. v.

Splootchy. adj. Having splotches.

(For example see Splootch.)

Spłutter. s. Bustle; tumult.

Bill-headed M. de Malzelgne draws his sword; and will force across. Confused spłutter. M. de Malzelgne's sword breaks: he smashes Commandant Denonce's; the sentry is wounded.—Carlyle, The French Revolution, pt. II. b. ii. ch. v.

Spłutter. v. n. Speak hastily and confusedly.

A Dutchman came into the secretary's office,
spłuttering and making a great noise.—Carleton,
Memoirs, p. 83.

Spoil. v. a. [N.Fr.; Lat. spoliare; pret. part. spoliatus, from spolia = spoils.]

1. Seize by robbery; take away by force.

Ye took joyfully the spoiling of your goods, knowing in yourselves that ye have in heaven an enduring substance.—Hebrews, x. 34.

This mount

With all his verdure spoild, and trees adrift.
Milton, Paradise Lost, xl. 331.

2. Plunder; strip of goods.

Yielding themselves upon the Turks' faith, for the safeguard of their liberty and souls, they were most injuriously spoiled of all that they had.—
Kandah, History of the Turks.

Thou shalt not gain, what I dare to yield,
Nor reap the harvest, though thou spoild of the field.
Prior, Sol-moon, II. 201.

My sons their old unhappy sire despise,
Spoil'd of his kingdom, and deprived of eyes.
Pope, Translation of the First Book of the Thebais of Statius.

3. Corrupt; mar; make useless.

Beware lest any man spoil you, through philosophy and vain deceit.—Colossians, II. 8.
Spiritual pride spoils many graces.—Jeremy Taylor.

Women are not only spoiled by this education, but we spoil that part of the world which would otherwise furnish most instances of an eminent and exalted piety.—Law.

Spoil. v. n.

1. Practise robbery or plunder.

England was infested with robbers and outlaws, which, lurking in woods, used to break forth to rob and spoil.—Spenser.

They which hate us spoil for themselves.—Psalms,
xlv. 10.

2. Grow useless; be corrupted.

He that gathered a hundred bushels of acorns, or apples, had thereby a property in them: he was only to look that he used them before they spoiled, else
he robbed others.—Locke.

Spoil. s. [Lat. spolia = spoils.]

1. That which is taken by violence; that which is taken from an enemy; plunder; pillage; booty.

The cry of Talbot serves me for a sword;
For I have laden me with many spoils,
Using no other weapon but his name.
Shakespeare, Henry VI. Part I. II. 1.

2. That which is gained by strength or effort.

But grant our hero's hopes long told
And comprehensive genius crown'd,
Each science and each art his spoils,
Yet what reward, or what renown? Bentley.

3. That which is taken from another.

Gentle gales,
Fanning their odoriferous wings, disperse
Native perfumes, and whisper where they stole These balmy spoils. Milton, Paradise Lost, IV. 156.

4. Act of robbery; robbery; waste.

The man that hath not music in himself,
Nor is not moved with concord of sweet sounds,
Is fit for treasons, stratagems, and spoils.
Shakespeare, Merchant of Venice, v. 1.

Too late, ah! we find it

The softness of thy sword, continued through thy mail,

To be the only cause of unrecover'd spoils. Dryden.

Go and speed!

Harock, and spoils, and ruin, are my gain.
Milton, Paradise Lost, II. 1009.

5. Corruption; cause of corruption.

Company, villainous company, hath been the spoils of us.—Shakespeare, Henry IV. Part I. III. 3.

6. Slough; cast-off skin of a serpent.

Snakes, the rather for the casting of their spoils, live till they be old.—Bacon.

Spoiled. part. adj. Over-indulged.

Although she refused to accept of freedom, she was constantly suffered to be free: she went where she liked; no curb was put either on her words or her actions; they felt for one so darkly faded, and so susceptible of every wound, the same pitying and complaisant indulgence the mother feels for a spoiled and sickly child,—dreading to impose authority, even where they imagined it for her benefit.—Lord
Lyttelton, Last Days of Pompeii, b. iii. ch. iv.

Spoiler. s. One who spoils.

1. Looter; plunderer; pillager.

Such ruin of her manners Rome Dare suffer now, as she's become
But her own spoiler and own prey.

R. Johnson, Catiline's Conspiracy.

Providence, where it loves a nation, concerns itself to own and assert the interests of religion, by blasting the spoilers of religious persons and places.
—South, Sermons.

Came you then here, thus far, through waves, to conquer

To waste, to plunder, out of mere compassion?

Is it humanity that prompts you on?

Happy for us, and happy for you spoilers,
Had your humanity ne'er reach'd our world!

A. Phillips.

2. One who mars or corrupts anything

Spoilful. adj. Wasteful; rapacious.

Having off in battle vanquished
Those spoillful Picts, and swarming Easterlings, Long time in peace his realm established.

Spenser, Faerie Queen.

There all the host at towns Nise we past,
With spoillful hands laid all the country waste.
Mirror for Magistrates, p. 612.

Spoilsport. s. Murrer.

After all, he pays well that pays with gold—and Mike Lambourne was never a make-bate, or a spoilsport, or the like. Ken live and let others live, that is my motto. Sir W. Scott, Kenilworth, ch. xxviii.

Sponge. s. [A.S. spanc, spenc.]

1. Bar of a wheel that passes from the nave to the felly.

All you gods,
In general synod take away her power;
Break all the sponges and felines of her wheel,
And level the round ... the hill of heaven.
No heir e'er drove so fine a coach;
The sponges we are by (Ovid told),
Were silver, and the axle gold. Swift.

2. Spar of a ladder.

The sponges by which they ... so high.
... Posthumus, p. 71.

Spoken. part. adj. Oral, as opposed to written.

The original of these signs for communication is found in every voice, in spoken language. Hollier, Elements of Speech.

Spokenhave. s. Wheelwright's plane.

Spokesman. s. One who speaks for another.

'Tis you that have the reason.—To do what?
To be a spokesman ... Madam Sylva.
Shakespeare, Two Gentlemen of Verona, ii. 1.
Misery which, through long years, had no spokesman to help her, will now be its own helper and for itself. Carlyle, The French Revolution,
pt. 1, ch. 1.

Spoliator. v. a. Despoil.

but the other great white families who had obtained this honour, and who had done something more for it than spoliator their church and betray their king, set up their backs against this claim of the Ecclesiastics. B. Disraeli, Sybil, b. 1, ch. 11.

Spoliation. s. Act of robbery or privation.

An ecclesiastical benefice is sometimes void 'de jure
'facto' and sometimes 'de facto' and not 'de jure';
as when a man suffers a spoliation by his own act. Asiatick Researches in Canonic.

Of all the records of the foreign government he [Sumner] was, with the single exception of Jot-neys, the most odious to the nation. Few knew that Sumner's voice had in secret been given against the spoliation of Magdalen College and the pre-emption of the hospitals; but all knew ... he had turned or pretended to turn Papist, that he had, a few days after his apostasy, appeared in Westminster Hall as witness against the oppressed fathers of the church. Morant, History of England,
ch. xv.

The principle of a poor-law is, therefore, hallowable and beneficial. But if this principle be carried beyond a certain limit; if it be not carefully guarded by counter-balance forces; ... a poor law will become a system of legal spoliation, which will impoverish one part of the community in order to corrupt the remainder. Sir G. C. Lewis, On the Influence of Authority on Matters of Opinion, ch. vii.

Spoliatory. adj. Having the character of spoliation.

Sometimes not a whit more unjust or spoliatory measures. Quarterly Review, vol. xlvii, p. 416. (Ord MS.)

Spondæic. adj. Belonging to a spondee; like a spondee.

The measure of time in pronunciation may be varied, so as very strongly to represent and only the mood of external action, but the quick or slow succession of plosives, and consequently the passions of the mind. This at least was the power of the spon-dæic and dactylic harmony. Dr. Johnson, Boswell,
v. 1, p. 94.

Spondæical. adj. Spondaic.

Pythagoras caused the musician to change (Etoms); and so by a heavy, grave, spondæical music he presently appeased their fury. Chilweat, Translation of Virgil on Lano Melancholy, p. 315: 1694.

Spondal. s. Spondyle. Rare.

The circles of the divine providence turn themselves upon the affairs of the world so, that every spondal of the wheels may mark out their virtues which we are then to exercise. Jeremy Taylor, Doctor Dabitation, dedication. (Ord MS.)

Spondæus. s. [Gr. σπονδῖος, from σπένδω = I pour out as a libation; the metre founded on the preponderance of long syllables being supposed from its gravity, or majesty, to be suitable to the solemnity thereby implied; Lat. spondæus.] Foot of two long syllables.

We see in the choice of the words the weight of the stone, and the striving to heave it up the mountain: Homer closes the verse with spondæus, and leaves the vowels open. Rhodes.

Spondyle. s. [Lat. spondylus, from Gr. σπονδυλος.] Vertebra; joint of the spine.

At Trismegistus's banquet in Petronius was brought in the image of a dead man's bones, of silver, with spondyles exactly turning to every of the guests, and saying to every one, that you, and you must die. Jeremy Taylor, Holy Dying, ch. ii. § 1.

It hath for the spine or backbone a cartilaginous substance, without any spondyles, processes, or protuberances. Sir T. Browne.

Sponge. s. [Lat. spongia; Gr. σπόγγη.]

Two entries (sponge and spongy) in the previous editions. Etymologically, the form in o is right. Phonetically, both are sounded alike. There is no valid reason for the two forms, though it is evident that the form in u goes with the substantive; that in u with the verb. The word that is rarely, if ever, spelt with o, is spongying-house. The single entry, however, of the editor's, is a protest in favour of uniformity—even if it ended in sponge, the substantive, being spelt with u. But Spongiola is against this. Practice, which is but another name for the instincts of language, will settle the question.] In Commerce and Zoology. See last extract.

When he needs what you have planned, it is but squeezing you, and, sponge, you shall be dry again. Shakespeare, Hamlet, iv. 2.

Sponges are gathered from the sides of rocks, being as a large but touch mass. Bacon.

They opened and washed part of their sponges. Scot's.

Great officers are like sponges: they suck till they are full, and, when they come once to be squeezed, their very heart's blood comes away. Sir R. L. Estlin.

Considering the motion that was impressed by the painter's hand upon the sponge, compounded with the specific gravity of the sponge and the resistance of the air, the sponge did mechanically and unavoidably move in that particular line of motion. Dante.

Sponge, in natural history, [is] the name of a class of organisms (Porifera) which have not acquired the distinctive characters of plants or animals, but consist of saccule or reticulations, flesh, composed of an aggregate of unmediated bodies, connected and supported, in most of the species, by a spongy framework, which may be silicious, calcareous, or albuminous. The mass, which is commonly amorphous, is traversed by canals, of which those that terminate in the superficial pores are incurrent, and those that terminate in larger orifices or oscula are ecurrent. The main size of vitality is the course of currents of water entering by the pores, and escaping by the oscula. The incurrent streams are nutritive, the ecurrent carry out the waste particles and the spores. The latter are ciliate and locomotive, as in some alga. The movement of the currents is due to ciliary action. The most definitely shaped and beautiful sponges are those of the genus Euplectella; the most useful are the horny or keratose kinds, represented by the Spongia officinalis of commerce. Sponges belong to the sub-kingdom Protoczoa. Owen, in Grande and Cor, Dictionary of Science, Literature, and Art.

Sponge. v. a.

1. Blot; wipe away as with a sponge.

Except between the words of translation and the main picture itself there is introduction, very little of which should not ... an intolerable blench necessarily to be sponged out. Hooker, Reckonings of Poetry.

2. Cleanse with a sponge; (applied to the act of cleansing common).

3. Drain; squeeze; harass by extortion.

How rare such multitudes of our nation, at the beginning of that monstrous rebellion in the year 1641, to be sponged of their plate and money. South, Sermons, 1, 129.

Sponge. v. n. Suck in as a sponge; live by mean arts; hang on others for maintenance.

The ant lives upon her own industry; whereas the fly is an intruder, and a common snail-feast, that sponges upon other people's trenchers. Sir R. L. Estlin.

Bull passes the season in London, sponging for dinners, and sleeping in a garret near his club. Thackeray, Book of Snobs, ch. xxi.

Sponger. s. One who hangs for a maintenance on others.

A generous rich man, that kept a splendid and open table, would try which were friends, and which only trencher-fies and spongers. Sir R. L. Estlin.

Sponging. verbal abs. Act of one who sponges; living upon others.

This will maintain you, with the perquisite of sponging while you are young. Swift, Letter to Gay.

Sponginghouse. s. House to which debtors are taken before commitment to prison, where the bailiffs sponge upon them, or riot at their cost.

A bailiff kept you the whole evening in a sponginghouse. Swift.

Sponginess. s. Attribute suggested by Spongy; softness and fullness of cavities like a sponge.

The sponginess of it [wood] would suck up the blood. Fuller, Holy War, p. 130.

The lungs are exposed to receive all the droppings from the brain; a very fit cistern, because of their sponginess. Harvey.

Spongiola. s. In Botany. Portion of the root of plants, compared to a small sponge, by which the nutriment in its fluid form is sucked from the soil.

The most common position for the roots of plants, is at the base of the stem, from whence they descend into the ground, gradually tapering to a point, and giving off filamentous branches on all sides, in an irregular and indeterminate manner. These branches of the roots are termed 'filicils,' and are composed of ducts and cellular tissue, and covered by an epidermis, except at their extremities where the cellular tissue is exposed. It is here that the true absorbents of the root exist, termed its spongiola. Humboldt, Principles of Descriptive and Physiological Botany, pt. 1, § 33.

Spongious. adj. [Fr. spongieux.] Full of small cavities like a sponge.

All thick bones are hollow or spongious, and contain an oleaginous substance in little vesicles, which by the heat of the body is exhaled through these bones to supply their fibres. Cheyne.

Spongy. adj.

1. Soft and full of small interstitial holes.

The lungs are the most spongy part of the body, and therefore aptest to contract and dilate itself. Bacon, Natural and Experimental History.

A spongy excrescence, growth upon the roots of the insectree, and upon cedar, very white, light, and friable, called maric. Thun.

The body of the tree being very spongy within, though hard without, they easily exsolve into canoes. Dr. H. More.

Into earth's spongy veins the ocean slinks,

Those rivers to refresh which he drinks.

Sir J. Lubbock, Elements of Learning.

Some English wood, yea'd in a British beam,
And into cloth of spongy softness made,
Did into France or colder Denmark roam,
To ruin with worse wars our staple trade.

Drayton, Annus Mirabilis, revii.
Her bones are all very spongy, and more remarkably these of a wild bird, which dies much, and long together. Greville.

2. Wet; drenched; soaked; full like a sponge.

When their drench'd natures lie as in a death,
What cannot you and I perform upon
The unwarmed human? What not put upon His spongy officers, who shall bear the guilt.

Shakespeare, Macbeth, i. 7.

I saw Jove's bird, the Roman eagle, wing'd
From the spongy south to this part of the west,
There vanish'd in the sun-beams.

Shakespeare, Cymbeline, iv. 2.

3. Having the quality of imbibing.

There is no lady of more after bowels,
More spongy to suck in the sense of fear.

Shakespeare, Troilus and Cressida, ii. 2.

Sponsal. adj. [Lat. sponsalis.] Relating to marriage; nuptial; matrimonial; (a concurrent Latin form with sponsal, the latter being of French origin).

Sponsable. adj. Responsible. Colloquial Scotch.

Sponsion. s. [Lat. sponsio, -onis.] Act of becoming a surety.

A mockery, rather than a solemn sponsion, in too many. Bishop Burnet, History of his own Time conclusion.

Sponsor. s. [Lat.] Surety; one who makes a promise or gives security for another.

In the baptism of a male there ought to be two males and one woman, and in the baptism of a female child two women and one man; and these are called sponsors or sureties for their education in the true Christian faith.—Ayliffe, Parergon Juris Canonici.

Not only was affinity, or relationship by marriage, put upon the same footing as that by blood; but a fanciful connection, called spiritual affinity, was invented in order to prohibit marriage between a sponsor and godchild.—Hallam, View of the State of Europe during the Middle Ages, ch. vii. pt. ii.

Spontaneity. s. Voluntaryness; willingness; accord unimpelled.

Nervosity and spontaneity may sometimes meet together; so may spontaneity and liberty; but real nervousness and true liberty can never.—Branshall, Against Hobbes.

Strict necessity they simple call;
And her sort there is conditional.
The first so binds the will, that things foreknown
By spontaneity, not choice, are shown.

Dryden, The Cuck and the Fox, 620.

Spontaneous. adj. Voluntary; not compelled; acting without compulsion or restraint; acting of itself; acting of its own accord.

Many animal motions in animals, though I cannot call them voluntary, yet I see them spontaneous: I have reason to conclude, that these are not simply mechanical.—Sir M. Hale.

They now come forth
Spontaneous; for within their spirit moved Attendant on their lord.

Milton, Paradise Lost, vii. 201.

While John for nine-pins does declare,
And how he loves to pitch the bar,
Both less and arms spontaneous move,
Which was the thing I meant to prove.

Prior, Abbot, i. 311.

Still follow sense, if every art the soul,
Piercing unnumbered parts shall slide into a whole;
Spa "in us begets all around advance";
Start, ev'n from dullness, strikes from ignorance.

Pope, Moral Essays, l. 62.

Several writers on political economy have described the cause of a supposed race of savages, subsisting on the spontaneous productions of the earth, and the precarious supplies of food and clothing; and have then traced the steps by which the various arts of life would gradually have arisen, and advanced more and more towards perfection.—Archbishop Whately, Lectures on Political Economy, appendix C.

Spontaneous fission has now been observed to take place in almost every order of animals; and in all it takes place at nearly the same part, near the beginning of the posterior part of the body; but, the formation of the new animal is due to a process of germination of new segments, which proceeds from the last or penultimate joint. It is most common, or has been oftenest witnessed, in the little abdominal fresh water snails.—Owen, Comparative Anatomy.

The English, if it had been left to its own spontaneous and unassisted development, would probably have assumed a character resembling rather that of the Dutch or the Flemish than that of the German of the present day.—Crusk, History of English Literature, vol. i. p. 173.

"I told them I was sure the fire was purely accidental, and to go and see about it; and they came back, and avowed that it was purely accidental."—I dare say they did, said Egremont; "but no one has discovered the accident."—"For my part, I believe it was spontaneous combustion," said Lord Marney.—H. Disraeli, Spill, b. iii. ch. ii.

Spontaneously. adv. In a spontaneous manner; voluntarily; of its own accord.

This would be as impossible as that the head of an edifice should naturally and spontaneously mount up to the roof, while lighter materials employ themselves beneath it.—Buttley.

They turn spontaneously acid, and the eard into as hard as a stone.—Arbuthnot, On the Nature and Ch. of Aliments.

Spontaneousness. s. Attribute suggested by Spontaneous; voluntariness; freedom of will; accord unforced.

The sagacity and instincts of brutes, the spontaneousness of many of their animal motions, are not explicable without supposing some active determinate power annexed to and inherent in their spirits, of a higher extraction than the bare natural modification of matter.—Sir M. Hale, Origin of Mankind.

Spontoon. s. [Fr. esponton.] Military weapon; kind of half-pike, or halberd.

Says Johnson, in a tone of admiration, how the little fellow brandished his spontoon! There is nothing in it, replied Goldsmith, starting up with impetuosity, give me a spontoon; I can do it as well myself.—Murphy, Life of Johnson.

Spoel. s. [spill.] Small piece of cane or reed, with a knot at each end; piece of wood turned in that form to wind yarn upon; quill.

Spoem. v. n. [? spume.] ? Go on swiftly, as a vessel cutting her way with foam.

When virtue spoems before a prosperous gale,
My heaving sails help to fill the sail. Dryden.

Spoon. s. [A.S. spoon.]

1. Concave vessel with a handle, used in eating liquids.

Wouldst thou drown thyself,
Put but a little water in a spoon,
And it shall be as all the ocean,
Enough to stifle such a villain up.

Shakespeare, King John, iv. 3.

This is a devil, and no monster: I will leave him;
I have no long spoon.—Id., Tempest, ii. 2.

Or o'er cold coffee trifle with the spoon,
Count the slow clock, and dine exact at noon.

Pope, Epistles to Miss Mount, ep. ii. 17.

2. Simple follow.

The man that's fond of early stirring Must lose a spoon. T. Hood.
It's a very fine thing, on a fine day, in June
To ride through it
But you'll find very
In a carriage like this.

Lugoslavsky Legends, The Witches' Frolic.

Silver spoon. To be born with a silver spoon in one's mouth, is to be born to wealth, good-fortune, or success.

The tablecloth was a very old one, darned in a corner of purple. There was a silver fork in a ten-emp, a silver fork for Goldsmith all in silver. I was not born with a silver spoon in my mouth, says Gray, gravely. "That for is the only one we have. Fanny has it generally." Thackeray, Book of Nodes, ch. xxxv.

Wooden spoon. In Cambridge, the last on the list of mathematical honours.

This gentleman can never want matter for pride, if he finds it so easily. He may boast of an insupportable superiority to all the greatest men of all just ages. He can read and write; Homer probably did not know a better. . . . We submit, however, that this is not the way in which men are to be estimated. We submit that a wooden spoon of our day would not be justified in ending Galileo and Napier blockheads, because they never heard of the differential calculus. Mansel, Critical and Historical Essays, Sir J. Macintosh's History of the Revolution.

Spoon. v. a. Take up in, or as in, a spoon.
It then may be spooned up as it is wanted.—Anderson, On the Theory, (Ord. V.S.)

Spoon. v. n. Spoon.

To spoon before the winds and seas.
Old Surrey, Poems, p. 162: 1619.

Spoonbill. s. Duck of the genus Platula, so named from the shape of its bill.

The shoveller, or spoonbill: the former name the more proper, the end of the bill being broad like a shovel; but not convex like a spoon, but perfectly flat.—Grec, Manx.

Ducks and geese have such long broad bills to quail in water and mud; to which we may reckon the bill of the spoonbill.—Derham, Physico-Theology.

Spoonful. s.

1. As much as is generally taken at once in a spoon: (a medical spoonful is half an ounce). This is the entry of the previous editions; and it should have anticipated such common foolish questions as to the relative propriety of two spoons full, or two spoonfuls. A spoonful is as much a single word as spoon; and as much (at least, in Medicine) a definite measure as peck. Hence, two spoonfuls is one thing; two spoons full another. Two monthfuls of meat by no means mean two months full of meat, any more than two handfuls mean two hands full of corn or anything else. Prescribe him, before he do use the receipt, that he take such a pill or a spoonful of liquor.—Bacon.

2. Any small quantity of liquid.

Surely the choice and measure of the materials of which the whole body is composed, and what we take daily by pounds, is at least of as much importance as what we take seldom, and only by grains and spoonfuls.—Arbuthnot.

Spoonment. s. Liquid food; nourishment taken with a spoon.

Sort those silks well,
I'll take the air alone.—You air and air:
But . . . ever tuck but spoonment more?
Messenger, A New Way to Pay Old Debts, l. 2.
O wretch! and still more wretched every day;
Are mortals born to sleep their lives away!
Go back to what thy infancy began,
Eat pap and spoonment; for thy gewgaws cry,
Be silent, and refuse the lullaby.
Dryden, Translation of Persius, iii. 24.
Diet most upon spoonments, as veal or cock broth.

—Harvey.

Spoonwort. s. [approximate translation of the Latin Cochlearia, the name of a plant.] Scurvygrass.

Spoonwort was there, scorbutics to supply,
And contrary to clear the jaundiced eye. Harte.

Spony. adj.

1. Simple.

I should like very much to be a lay-lord, because I cannot afford to keep a yacht, and there, they say, are not sufficiently used, for the Admirals think it spony, and the land-lubbers are always sick.—H. Insult, The Young Duke.

Last of a tall, thin, spony midshipman, usually called "Lady Margaret," was cleaning a flute which he dared not attempt to play.—Hannay, Singleton's Footing.

2. Morbidly affectionate: (generally with on).

Sporadic. adj. Sporadic.

Sporadic. adj. [Gr. σποράδικος; Fr. sporadique.] In Medicine. Scattered irregularly: (opposed to epidemic).

A sporadic disease is . . . what in a particular season affects but few people.—Arbuthnot.

Spora. s. See extract.

Spora [are] the reproductive bodies of cryptogams. These bodies do not contain an embryo, but consist merely of one or more cells variously combined together; hence, they are called spores to distinguish them from true seeds. . . . In many cases, however, these bodies are generated within cells or asci, and they are then for distinction's sake termed sporidia. It is, however, desirable that the word spore should be used in the more general sense, as opposed to seed, the grand distinction between cryptogams and phanerogams consisting in the different nature of their mode of reproduction. . . . Spora or sporidia germinate either by elaboration of some particular part, and subsequent cell-division, or by cell-division without any protrusion of a thread or continuous expansion.—Brace and Cox, Dictionary of Science, Literature, and Art.

Sport. v.

1. Play; diversion; game; frolic and tumultuous merriment.

Her sports were such as carried riches of knowledge upon the stream of delight.—Sir P. Sidney.

When their hearts were merry they said, Call for Sanson, that he may make us sport; and they called for Sanson out of the prison house; and he made them sport.—Job, vi. 25.

As flies to wanton boys are we to the gods;
They kill us for their sport.

Shakespeare, King Lear, iv. 1.

We, that have personated in the scene
The ancient heroes and the fall of princes
With loud applause; being to act ourselves,
Must do it with unclouded confidence,
Whatever our sentence be, think it in sport;
And, though condemned, let's hear it without sorrow,
As if we were to live again to-morrow.

Mosses, The Roman Actor, i. 1.

2. Mock; contemptuous mirth.

They had his messengers in derision; and look, when the Lord spake unto them, they made a sport of his prophets.—1 Kings, i. 51.

If I suspect without cause, why then make sport at me; then let me be your jest.—Shakespeare, Merry Wives of Windsor, iii. 5.

To make sport with his word, and to endeavour
Or at rich men, by turning that holy book
ry, is a direct affront to God.—Archbishop Tillotson.

3. That with which one plays.

Each . . . translated, th' sport and prey
Of warring whirlwinds.

Milton, Paradise Lost, ii. 181.

Commit not thy prophetic mind
To thine leaves, the sport of every wind, lest they disperse in air.

Dryden, Translation of the Theod. vi. 116.

Some grave their wrongs on marble; he, more just,
Stoop'd down serene, and wrote them on the dust,
Trod under foot, the sport of every wind,
Swept from the earth, and blotted from his mind;
Their secret he could not scrape the Almighty's eye.

Dr. Maitland, On Bishop Bonner.

4. Play; idle jingle.

An author who should introduce such a sport of words upon our stage, would meet with small applause.—Brown.

SPORTSPOUSAL}

5. Diversion of the field: (as of fowling, hunting, or fishing).

Now for our mountain sport; up to yon hill;
Your legs are young. Shakespeare, Cymbeline, iii. 3.
The king, who was excessively affected to hunting, and the sports of the field, had a great desire to make a great park for red as well as fallow deer, between Richmond and Hampton-cour. — Lord Clarendon, History of the Grand Rebellion.

Sport. v. a.

1. Divert; make merry: (with the reciprocal pronoun).

The poor man wept and bled, cried and prayed, while they sported themselves in his pain, and delighted in his prayers as the argument of their victory. — Sir P. Sidney.

Against whom do ye sport yourselves? against whom make ye a wide mouth, and draw out the tongue? — Isaiah, lvii. 4.
Away with him, and let her sport herself
With that she's big with.

Shakespeare, Winter's Tale, ii. 1.
What pretty stories these are for a man of his seriousness to sport himself withal! — Bishop Atterbury.

Let such writers go on at their dearest peril, and sport themselves in their own deceivings. — Watts.

2. Represent by any kind of play.

Now sporting on thy lyre the lives of youth,
Now virtuous ages and venerable truth;
Expressing justly Sophocles's wanton art;
Of odes, and Pindar's more majestic part.

Dryden, Translation of Persius, vi. 9.

Sport. v. n. [disport.]

1. Play; frolic; gume; wanton.

[They] sporting with quick lance,
Shew to the sun their waved coats dropt with gold.

Milton, Paradise Lost, vii. 403.

2. Trifle.

If any man turn religion into rallery, by bold jests, he renders himself ridiculous, because he sports with his own life. — Archbishop Tillotson.

Sportful. adj.

1. Merry; frolic; wanton; acting in jest.

How with a sportful malice it was follow'd,
May rather pluck on laughter than revenge.

Shakespeare, Twelfth Night, v. 1.
Down he alights among the sportful herd
Of those four-footed kinds.

Milton, Paradise Lost, iv. 390.

2. Ludicrous; done in jest.

His highness, even in such a slight and sportful damage, had a noble sense of just dealing. — Sir H. Wotton.

Behold your own Ascanius, while he said,
He drew his glittering helmet from his head,
In which the youth to sportful arms he led.

Dryden, Translation of the Aeneid, v. 830.

Sportfully. adv. In a sportful manner; wantonly; merrily.

If he be unmarried, and sojourn, he never talks with any woman alone, but in the audience of others, and that seldom, and then also in a serious manner, never jestingly, or sportfully. — Herbert, Country Parson, ch. ix.

There's nothing more surprising in its own nature than to see or hear a serious thing sportfully represented. — Scott, Christian Life, pt. ii. ch. iii.

Sportfulness. s. Attribute suggested by Sportful; wantonness; play; merriment; frolic.

The otter got out of the river, and inwooded himself as, as the ladies lost the further marking of his sportfulness. — Sir P. Sidney.

When sadness dejects me, either I countermine it with another sadness, or I kindle squibs about me again, and fly into sportfulness and company. — Dunne, Letter to Sir G. H., Poems, p. 238.

Sporting. verbal abs. Practice, or pursuit, of a sportsman: (as, 'He is wholly given to sporting.' In some combinations, e.g. 'A sporting character,' it is difficult to say whether the word is a verbal abstract or a participial adjective.)

Sportingly. adv. In a sporting manner; in jest; in sport.

The question you there put, you do I suppose but sportingly. — Hammond, Works, i. 153.

Sportive. adj. Gay; merry; frolic; wanton; playful; ludicrous.

I am not in a sportive humour now;
Tell me, and daily not, where is the money?

Shakespeare, Comedy of Errors, i. 2.
Is it I?

That drive thee from the sportive court, where thou
Wast shot at with fair eyes, to be the mark
Of smoky muskets?

Id., All's well that ends well, iii. 2.
While thus the constant pair alternate said,
Joyful above them and around them play'd

Id., All's well that ends well, iii. 2.

Id., All's well that ends well, iii. 2.

Id., All's well that ends well, iii. 2.

Id., All's well that ends well, iii. 2.

Id., All's well that ends well, iii. 2.

Id., All's well that ends well, iii. 2.

Id., All's well that ends well, iii. 2.

Angels and sportive loves, a numerous crowd,
Smiling they clapt their wings, and low they bow'd.

Prior, Henry and Emma, 720.

We must not hope wholly to change their original tempers, nor make the gay pensive and grave, nor the melancholy sportive, without spoiling them. — Locke.

What wonder then a beast or subject slain
Were equal crimes in a despotic reign;
Both doom'd alike, for sportive tyrants bled,
But while the subject starved the beast was fed.

Pope, Windsor Forest.

Sportiveness. s. Attribute suggested by Sportive; gaiety; play; wantonness.

Shall I conclude her to be simple, that has her time to begin, or refuse sportiveness as freely as I have? — I. Wallis, Complete Angler.

Sportless. adj. Joyless; sad.

Her weeping eyes in pearled dew she steeps,
Casting what sportless nights she ever led.

Fletcher, Pious Eclogues, vii. 1.

Sportsman. s. One who pursues the recreations of the field.

Manlius lets us know the young hunters had McNeger for their patron, as the Christians have their St. Hubert: he speaks of the constellation which makes a good sportsman. — Addison.

Sportulary. adj. Subsisting on alms or charitable contributions. Latinism.

These sportulary preachers are fain to soothe up their many masters; and are so gazed with the fear of a starving displeasure, that they dare not be free in the reprehension of the daring sin of their uncertain benefactors. Bishop Hall, Cases of Conscience, iii. 7.

Sportule. s. [Lat. sportula = dole.] Alms; gift; present. Latinism.

The bishops, who converted the ground, had a spill or sportule from the credulous laity. — Aylife, Paragon Juris Consulti.

Spot. s. [Provincial German, spette.] 1. Blot; mark made by discoloration.

This three years day, the eye, though clear
To outward view of blunish or of spot,
Bereth of sight, their seeing have forgot.

Milton, Sonnets, xlii. 1.

A long series of ancestors shows the native lustre with advantage; but if he any way degenerates from his line, the least spot is visible on his crest. — Dryden.

2. Taint; disgrace; reproach; fault.

Yet 'thine sure was form'd without a spot —
Nature in her then err'd not, but forgot.

Pope, Moral Essays, ii. 157.

Let him take thee,
And hoist thee up to the shouting phibians;
Follow his chariot, like the greatest spot
Of all thy sex.

Shakespeare, Antony and Cleopatra, iv. 10.

3. Small extent of place.

That spot to which I point is paradise,
Adam's abode, these lofty shades his tower.

Milton, Paradise Lost, iii. 733.

He, who, with Plato, shall place beatitude in the knowledge of God, will have his thoughts raised to other contemplations than those who looked not beyond this spot of earth, and those perishing things in it. Locke.

About one of these breathing passages is a spot of myrtles, that flourish within the steam of these vapours. — Addison.

Abdallah converted the whole mountain into a kind of garden, and covered every part of it with plantations or spots of flowers. — Guarishin.

He that could make two ears of corn grow upon a spot of ground where only one grew before, would deserve better of mankind than the whole race of politicians. — Steuft.

4. Any particular place.

I would be busy in the world, and learn,
Not like a coarse and useless churchill weed,
Fix'd to one spot, and rot just as I grow.

Olway, The Orphan, i. 1.

As in this grove I took my last farewell,
As on this very spot of earth I fell,
As Friday saw me die, so she my prey
Became ev'n here, on this revolving day.

Dryden, The Duke and Honoria, 205.

The Dutch landscape are, I think, always a representation of an individual spot, and each in its kind a very faithful, but very confined portrait. — Sir J. Reynolds.

5. Kind of pigeon.

(For example see extract from Selby under Pigeon.)

Upon the spot. Immediately; without chang- ing place.

The lion did not chop him up immediately upon the spot; and yet he was resolved he should not escape. — Sir E. L. Estlin.

It was determined upon the spot, according as the oratory on either side prevailed. — Steuft.

Spot. v. a. Mark with discolorations; ma- culate.

Have you not seen a handkerchief,
Spotted with strawberries in your wife's hand?

Shakespeare, Othello, iii. 1.

2. Patch by way of ornament.

I counted the patches on both sides, and found the Tory patches to be about twenty stronger than the Whig; but next morning the whole puppet-show was filled with faces spotted after the Whiggish manner. — Addison, Spectator.

3. Corrupt; disgrace; taint.

The people of Armenia have retained the Christian faith from the time of the apostles; but at this day it is spotted with many absurdities. — Abbot, Description of the World.

Spotless. adj. Free from spots; chiefly as a figurative term (like stain) i.e. free from reproach or impurity; immaculate; pure; untainted.

No much fairer
And spotless shall mine innocence arise,
When the king knows my truth.

Shakespeare, Henry VIII, iii. 2.

I dare my life lay down, and will do it, Sir,
Please you to accept it, that the queen is spotless
In the eyes of Heaven. Id., Winter's Tale, ii. 1.

You grace'd the several parts of life,
A spotless virgin, and a faultless wife.

Waller.

We sometimes wish that it had been our lot to live and converse with Christ, to hear his divine discourses, and to observe his spotless behaviour; and we please ourselves perhaps with thinking how ready a reception we should have given to him and his doctrine. — Bishop Atterbury.

Eternal sunshine of the spotless mind,
Each pray'r accepted, and each wish resign'd.

Pope, Epistle to Abolard.

Spotlessness. s. Attribute suggested by Spotless; state or quality of being spot- less.

Lord, if that look for a spotlessness, whom wilt that look upon! — Doane, Devotions, p. 322.

Seek for a spotlessness above. — Bishop Hall, Works, ii. 205.

Spotted. part. adj. Marked with spots.

They are polluted offerings, more abhor'd
Than spotted livers in the sacrifice.

Shakespeare, Troilus and Cressida, v. 3.

But serpents with more unity maintain;
From spotted skins the leopard does refrain;
No weaker lion's by a stronger stain.

Tate, Translation of Juvenal, xv. 202.

Spotty. adj. Full of, characterized by, spots.

The moon, whose orb
Through optic glass the Tuscan artist views
At evening from the top of Frowd
Or in Valdarno, to descry new lands,
Rivers or mountains, in her spotted globe.

Milton, Paradise Lost, i. 257.

The interlaying of small pieces cannot altogether avoid a broken, stippled, spotted effect; it cannot be alive. As it is strong and hard, we can tread it under foot on a pavement, and it is still bright as ever; but in the church, the hall, or the chamber, it is an enameled wall—but it is a wall, splendid decoration, but aspiring to none of the loftier excel-lences of art. — Milman, History of Latin Chris- tianity, i. xiv. ch. x.

Spoudage. s. Act of espousing. Rare.

The glorious spoudage of the Lamb,
Jesus Christ is come.

Id., Discourse on the Revelations, P. tit. Co. 4.

In the old manual for the use of Salisbury, before the minister proceeds to the marriage, he is directed to ask the woman's dowry, viz. the tokens of spoudage;
and by these tokens of spoudage are to be understood rings, or money, or some other things to be given to the woman by the man; which said giving is called spoudage (i.e. wedding or covenanting), especially when it is done by the giving of a ring. — Whately, Rational Illustration of the Book of Com- mon Prayer, ch. x. § 5.

Spousal. adj. Nuptial; matrimonial; con- jugal; connubial; bridal.

There shall we consummate our spousal rites.

Shakespeare, Titus Andronicus, i. 2.

Hope's chaste kiss wrongs no more joy's maiden-hood.

Than spousal rites prejudice the marriage bed.

Crashaw.

This other, in her prime of love,
Spousal embraces violated with gold.

Milton, Samson Agonistes, 388.

Spousal. s. [N.Fr. espousailles; Lat. sponsalia.] Espousal.

An man and wife, being two, are one in love,
So be there 'twixt your kingdoms such a spousal,
That never may ill office, or fell jealousy,
Thrust in between the paction of these kingdoms,
To make divorce of their incorporate league.

Shakespeare, Henry V, 120.

The amorous bird of night
Sung spousal, and bid haste the evening star,
On his hill top to light the bridal lamp.

Milton, Paradise Lost, viii. 518.

The sponsals of Hippolyta the queen,
What tilts and tourneys at the feast were seen,
Dryden, Pseudo and Arcide, l. 21.
Ethereal music did her death prepare,
Like joyful sounds of sponsals in the air:
A radiant light did her exequial tapers glid.

Id., Tyrannick Love, v. 1.

Sponse. s. [N.Fr. épouse; Modern Fr. épouse; Lat. sponsa, sponsa.] One joined in marriage; husband or wife.

She is of good esteem;
Brides so qualified as may between
The sponse of any noble gentleman.

Shakespeare, Twelfth Night, iv. 3.
At once, Farewell, O faithful sponse! they said;
At once the encircling rinds their closing lips invade. Dryden, Translation from Ovid, Bavius and Philemon.

Sponse. v. n. Esponse.

Who being freed from Proteus cruel band
By Marinell, was unto him affix'd,
And by him brought again to her land,
Where he her sponse, and made his joyous bride.

Spenser, Faerie Queene, v. 3, 2.
In the happy cloister,
The sponse and sponsee have the foremost voice.

R. Jonson, Masques at Court,
They led the vine

To wed her elm; she, sponsee, about him twines
Her marriageable arms.

Milton, Paradise Lost, v. 215.

Sponsione. adj. Wanting a husband or wife.

To tempt the sponsione queen with am'rous wiles,
Resort the nobles from the neighbouring isles.

Pope, Translation of the Odyssey, i. 315.
The sponsione Adriatic morn'g her lord,
And annual marriage, now no more renewed,

The Buceantrian lies rolling unredoubled,
Neglected garment of her widowhood!

St. Mark yet seen in a lion where it stood,
Stand, but in mockery of its withered power,

Over the proud place where an emperor kneel.

Byron, Child Harold, iv. 11.

Spout. s. [Provincial German, spuyt.]

1. Pipe, or mouth of a pipe or vessel, out of which anything is poured.

She gasping to begin some speech, her eyes
Became two spouts.

Shakespeare, Winter's Tale, iii. 3.
In whales that breathe, lest the water should get into the lungs, an ejection thereof is contrived by a stomach or spout at the head.—Sir T. Browne, Vulgar Errors.

So it claret or sack,
I'll make this snout
To deal it about,
Or this to run out,
As it were from a spout.

R. Jonson,
As waters did in storms, now pitch run out,
As lead, when a fired church becomes one spout.

Donne,
In Gaza they couch vessels of earth in their walls to gather the wind from the top, and to pass it down in spouts into rooms.—Bacon.

Let this water be fed by some higher than the pool, and delivered into it by fair spouts, and then discharged by some equality of bore.—Id.

In this single cathedral the very spouts are loaded with ornaments.—Addison, Travels in Italy.

From silver spouts the grateful liquors glide,
And China's earth receives the smoking tide.

Pope, Rape of the Lock, canto iii.

2. Waterpout.

Not the dreadful spout
Which shipmen do the hurricane call,
Construed in mass by the slighly sun,
Shall dizzy with more clamour Neptune's ear
In his descent, than shall my prompted sword Falling on Dionea.

Shakespeare, Troilus and Cressida, v. 2.
The force of those molins pressing more in some places than in others, there would fall not showers, but great spouts or cascades of water.—T. Burnet, Theory of the Earth.

3. Lift, or shoot, in a pawnbroker's shop.

Slang.
This self-same clock had long been a bone
Of contention between this Welsh Dobby and Jon ..
Pryce would drop a cool hint,
With an ominous squint
At its case, of an uncle of his, who'd a spout.

Barham, Ingolf's Legends, Look at the Clock.
I wish I'd got the gift of the gab like you. As if I'd be up the spout so often then.—Dickens, Sketches by Boz, The Pawnbroker's Shop.

Spout. v. a.

1. Pour with violence, or in a collected body, as from a spout.

We will bear home that lusty blood again,
Which here we came to spout against your town.

Shakespeare, King John, ii. 1.
I intend two fountains, the one that sprinkles or spouts water, the other a fair receipt of water.—Bacon.

Next on his belly floats the mighty whale;
He twists his back, and rears his threatening tail:
He spouts the tide.

We have had enough of action and of motion we, Rolled to starboard, rolled to larboard, when the surge was swelling free,
When the wallowing monster spouted his foam-fountains in the sea.

Travels, The Lotus-Eaters.

2. Pour out words with affected grandeur; mouth; speechify.

Pray, spout some French, son.—Beaumont and Fletcher, Coxcomb.

Spout. v. n. Issue as from a spout.

They laid them down hard by
music of certain waters, which spouted out of the side of the hills.—Sir P. Sidney.

No lands could force it thence, so flat it stood,
Till out it rush'd, expell'd by streams of spouting
blood.

It spouts up out of deep wells, and flies forth at
the top of them, upon the face of the ground.—Watts.

Spouting. verbal abs. Speechifying; (used adjectivally).

Then there were the philosophical snobs, who used to ape statesmen at the spouting clubs, and who believed as a fact that government always had an eye on the university where to select orators for the House of Commons.—Thackeray, Book of Snobs,
ch. xv.

Spout. v. n. Issue as from a spout.

They laid them down hard by
music of certain waters, which spouted out of the
side of the hills.—Sir P. Sidney.

No lands could force it thence, so flat it stood,
Till out it rush'd, expell'd by streams of spouting
blood.

It spouts up out of deep wells, and flies forth at
the top of them, upon the face of the ground.—Watts.

Spout. v. n. Issue as from a spout.

They laid them down hard by
music of certain waters, which spouted out of the
side of the hills.—Sir P. Sidney.

No lands could force it thence, so flat it stood,
Till out it rush'd, expell'd by streams of spouting
blood.

It spouts up out of deep wells, and flies forth at
the top of them, upon the face of the ground.—Watts.

Spout. v. n. Issue as from a spout.

They laid them down hard by
music of certain waters, which spouted out of the
side of the hills.—Sir P. Sidney.

No lands could force it thence, so flat it stood,
Till out it rush'd, expell'd by streams of spouting
blood.

It spouts up out of deep wells, and flies forth at
the top of them, upon the face of the ground.—Watts.

Spout. v. n. Issue as from a spout.

They laid them down hard by
music of certain waters, which spouted out of the
side of the hills.—Sir P. Sidney.

No lands could force it thence, so flat it stood,
Till out it rush'd, expell'd by streams of spouting
blood.

It spouts up out of deep wells, and flies forth at
the top of them, upon the face of the ground.—Watts.

Spout. v. n. Issue as from a spout.

They laid them down hard by
music of certain waters, which spouted out of the
side of the hills.—Sir P. Sidney.

No lands could force it thence, so flat it stood,
Till out it rush'd, expell'd by streams of spouting
blood.

It spouts up out of deep wells, and flies forth at
the top of them, upon the face of the ground.—Watts.

Spout. v. n. Issue as from a spout.

They laid them down hard by
music of certain waters, which spouted out of the
side of the hills.—Sir P. Sidney.

No lands could force it thence, so flat it stood,
Till out it rush'd, expell'd by streams of spouting
blood.

It spouts up out of deep wells, and flies forth at
the top of them, upon the face of the ground.—Watts.

Spout. v. n. Issue as from a spout.

They laid them down hard by
music of certain waters, which spouted out of the
side of the hills.—Sir P. Sidney.

No lands could force it thence, so flat it stood,
Till out it rush'd, expell'd by streams of spouting
blood.

It spouts up out of deep wells, and flies forth at
the top of them, upon the face of the ground.—Watts.

Spout. v. n. Issue as from a spout.

They laid them down hard by
music of certain waters, which spouted out of the
side of the hills.—Sir P. Sidney.

No lands could force it thence, so flat it stood,
Till out it rush'd, expell'd by streams of spouting
blood.

It spouts up out of deep wells, and flies forth at
the top of them, upon the face of the ground.—Watts.

Spout. v. n. Issue as from a spout.

They laid them down hard by
music of certain waters, which spouted out of the
side of the hills.—Sir P. Sidney.

No lands could force it thence, so flat it stood,
Till out it rush'd, expell'd by streams of spouting
blood.

It spouts up out of deep wells, and flies forth at
the top of them, upon the face of the ground.—Watts.

Spout. v. n. Issue as from a spout.

They laid them down hard by
music of certain waters, which spouted out of the
side of the hills.—Sir P. Sidney.

No lands could force it thence, so flat it stood,
Till out it rush'd, expell'd by streams of spouting
blood.

It spouts up out of deep wells, and flies forth at
the top of them, upon the face of the ground.—Watts.

Spout. v. n. Issue as from a spout.

They laid them down hard by
music of certain waters, which spouted out of the
side of the hills.—Sir P. Sidney.

No lands could force it thence, so flat it stood,
Till out it rush'd, expell'd by streams of spouting
blood.

It spouts up out of deep wells, and flies forth at
the top of them, upon the face of the ground.—Watts.

Spout. v. n. Issue as from a spout.

They laid them down hard by
music of certain waters, which spouted out of the
side of the hills.—Sir P. Sidney.

No lands could force it thence, so flat it stood,
Till out it rush'd, expell'd by streams of spouting
blood.

It spouts up out of deep wells, and flies forth at
the top of them, upon the face of the ground.—Watts.

Spray. s. [from the root of sprout and sprig.]

1. Extremity of a branch.

At sight whereof each bird that sits on sprays,
And every beast that to his den was fled,
Came forth afresh out of their late slumber,
And to the light lift up their drooping head.

Spenser, Mother Hubbard's Tale.

Thus droops this lofty pine, and hangs his sprays;
Thus Eleanor's pride dies in her summer days.

Shakespeare, Henry VI. Part II. ii.
The wind that whistles through the sprays
Maintains the consort of the song;
And hidden birds with native lays
The golden sleep prolong.

Dryden, Translation from Horace, epodo.

2. Foam of the sea.

Winds raise some of the salt with the spray.—Arbuthnot.

Spread. v. a. [A.S. spreddan.]

1. Extend; expand; make to cover or fill a larger space than before.

He bought a parcel of a field where he had spread his tent.—Genesis, xxxiii. 19.

Repair the daughter of Aiah took sackcloth, and spread it for her upon the rock.—2 Samuel, xxi. 19.

Silver spread into plates is brought from Tarshish.
Jeremiah, x. 9.

Make the trees more tall, more spread, and more lusty than they used to be.—Bacon, Natural and Experimental History.

Shall funeral silence her colours spread,
And scatter roses on the wealthy dead? Young.

2. Cover by extension.

Her cheeks their freshness lose and wonted grace,
And an unusual paleness spreads her face.

Granville.

3. Cover over.

The workman melteth a graven image, and the goldsmith spreads it over with gold.—Isaiah, xl. 19.

4. Stretch; extend.

He arose from before the altar of the Lord, from kneeling on his knees with his hands spread up to heaven. 1 Kings, viii. 54.

Spread o'er the silver waves the golden hair.
Shakespeare, Comedy of Errors, iii. 2.

Rose, as in dance, the stately trees, and spread their branches, hung with copious fruit.

Milton, Paradise Lost, vii. 323.
Deep in a rich alcove the prince was laid,
And slept beneath the pompous colonnade;
Fast by his side Peisistratus lay spread,
In age his equal, on a splendid bed.

Pope, Translation of the Odyssey, iii. 510.

5. Publish; divulge; disseminate.

They, when departed, spread abroad his fame in all that country.—Matt. ix. 31.

6. Emit as effluvia or emanations; diffuse.

Their course through thickets and castles held,
Spreading their name, Milton, Paradise Lost, x. 410.

Spread. v. n. Extend or expand itself.

Plants, if they spread much, are seldom tall.—Bacon.

The valley opened at the further end, spreading forth into an immense ocean.—Addison, Spectator.

Spread. s.

1. Extent; compass.

Professions of Christianity that have any large spread in the world.—Archbishop Usher, Sermon, Answer to the Jesuit Malone, p. 21.

I have got a true spread of improvable lands, and am already plunging up sour, fencing others.—Addison.

2. Expansion of parts.

No flower hath spread like that of the woodbind.
—Bacon.

3. Repast for company. Colloquial.

To judge from the spread
On the board, you'd have said
That the 'partie quarré' had like soldiers fed.
Barham, Ingolf's Legends, The Lord of the Thimble.

Spreader. s.

1. One who spreads.

By confounding ourselves we should be spreaders of a worse infection than any we are likely to draw from Papists by our conformity with them in ceremonies.—Hooker, Ecclesiastical Polity.

2. Publisher; divulger; disseminator.

If it be a mistake, I desire I may not be accused for a spreader of false news.—Swift.

3. One who expends or extends.

If their child be not such a speedy spreader and brancher, like the vine, yet perchance he may yield, though with a little longer expectation, as useful and more sober fruit than the other.—W. Walton, On the Education of Children.

Spreading. part. adj. Stretching in several directions.

The princes of Germany had but a dull fear of the greatness of Spain, upon a general apprehension only of their spreading and ambitious designs.—Bacon.

Great I'an, who was wont to chase the fair,
And loved the spreading oak, was there.—Addison.

Spreading. verb. abs. Act of extending or expanding.

Can any understand the spreadings of the clouds,
Or the noise of his tabernacle?—Joh. xxvii. 26.

Spree. s. Frolic; game. Shang.

Spent. part. Sprinkled. Obsolete.

O lips, that kiss'd that hand with my tears spent.
Sir P. Sidney.

Sprig. s. [from the root of spry and sprout.]

1. Small branch; spray.

The substance is true ivy: after it is taken down,
The friends of the family are desirous to leave some sprig to keep.—Bacon.

Our chilling climate hardly bears
A sprig of bay in fifty years;

While every bud his claim alleges,
As if it grew on common herbs.—Swift, On Poetry.

Not the few sprigs of henth, but the thousand acres of it characterise the wilderness.—Cutright.

Critical and Miscellaneous Essays, German Playwrights.

2. Offspring; scion: (as, 'A sprig of nobility').

3. Bird or nail without a head.

Sprig-crystal. s. See extract.

In perpendicular fissures, crystal is found in form of an hexangular column, adhering at one end to the stone, and near the other becoming gradually, till it terminates in a point: this is called by lapidaries sprig or rock crystal.—Woodward.

Spright. s. [spirit; word for word, in respect to their origin, this, with its congeners, is sprite, &c.]

1. Spirit; shade; soul; incorporeal agent.

She doth display
The gate with pearls and rubies richly dight, Through which her words so wise do make their way.

To hear the message of her spright.
Spenser, Faerie Queen.

Forth he called out of deep darkness drear
Legions of sprights, the which, like little flies, Fluttering about his ever-damned head,
Awake where to his service he applies.—Ibid.

While with heavenly clarity she spoke,
A streaming blaze the silent shadows broke,
Shed from the skies, a cheerful azure light;
The lights obscure to forests whither'd their flight,
And gaping graves received the guilty spright.
Dryden, Hind and Panther, i. 619.

2. Walking spirit; apparition

The ideas of gold and sprights have no more to do with darkness than light: yet but a foolish mind haunts these often on the mind of a child, possibly he shall never be able to separate them again.—Locke, Thoughts on Education.

3. Power which gives courage; spirits.

O chastity, the chief of heavenly lights,
Which mak'st us most immortal shape to wear,
Hold thou my heart, establish thou my sprights;
To only thee my constant course I bear.
Sir P. Sidney.

4. Arrow. Obsolete.

We had in use for sea fight short arrows called sprights, without any other heads save wood sharpened, which were discharged out of muskets, and would pierce through the sides of ships where a bullet would not.—Bacon, Natural and Experimental History.

Spright. v. a. Haunt as a spright.

I am sprighted with a fool.
Shakespeare, Cymbeline, ii. 3.

Sprightful. adj. Lively; brisk; gay; vigorous.

The spirit of the time shall teach me speed.—
Spoke like a sprightful noble gentleman.
Shakespeare, King John, iv. 2.

Meeds sprightful as the light.
Cowley.

Happy my eyes when they behold thy face:
My heavy heart will have its doleful beating,
At sight of thee, and bound with sprightful joys.
Ottway, Venice Preserved, i. 1.

Sprightfully. adv. In a sprightful manner; briskly; vigorously.

Norfolk, sprightfully and bold,
Stays but the summons of the appellant's trumpet.
Shakespeare, Richard II. i. 3.

Sprightfulness. s. Attribute suggested by Sprightful; sprightliness; gaiety; vivacity.

Sharpness of apprehension is a sprightfulness of the mind, and is there liveliest where there be most spirits.—Hammond, Works, iv. 629.

Sprightless. adj. Spiritless; dull; enervated; sluggish.

Cholera, and humors of men,
But sprightless trunks.
Marton, Scourge of Villany, preface: 1260.

Benumb'd with fear, or virtue's sprightless cold?
Cowley.

I could not but reflect on the absurdity of parents who educate their children to spend their time in pursuit of such odd and sprightless endeavours to appear in public.—Teller, no. 107.

Sprightliness. s. Attribute suggested by Sprightly; liveliness; briskness; vigour; gaiety; vivacity.

The soul is elevated when she acts in conjunction with a companion so lively; but in dreams, observe with what a sprightliness and alacrity does she exert herself.—Addison.

Sprightly. adj. Gay; brisk; lively; vigorous; airy; vivacious.

Produce the wine that makes us bold,
And sprightly wit and love inspires.
Dryden, Translation from Horace, b. i. ode ix.

When now the sprightly trumpet from afar
Had giv'n the signal of approaching war.
Ibid., Translation of the Ecce, viii. 3.

Each morn they waked me with a sprightly lay:
Of opening heav'n they sung, and gladness day.
Prior, Solomon, ii. 80.

The sprightly Sylvia trips along the green;
She runs, but hopes she does not run unseen.
Pope, Pastoral, Spring.

Spring. v. n. pret. sprung or sprung, anciently sprung; past part. sprung. [A.S. springan.]

1. Arise out of the ground and grow by vegetative power.

All best secrets,
All you unpolish'd virtues of the earth,
Spring with my tears; be aidant and remediate
In the good man's distress.
Shakespeare, King Lear, iv. 4.

To his musick, plants and flowers
Ever spring, as sun and showers
There had made a last-time spring.
Ibid., Henry VIII. iii. 1, sonnet.

To satisfy the desolate and waste ground; and to cause the bud of the tender herb to spring forth.—
Job, xxxviii. 27.

Other fall on good ground, and did yield fruit that spring up and increased.—Mark, iv. 8.

Tell me, in what happy dells
The thistle springs, to which the lily yields?
Pope, Pastoral, Spring.

2. Begin to grow.

That the nighers should be made with such perforations as to admit passages to the milk, when drawn, otherwise to retain it; and the teeth of the young, not spring, are effects of Providence.—Rog.

3. Proceed as from seed.

We shall eat this year such things as grow of themselves;
and in the second year that which springeth of the same.—2 Kings, xix. 24.

Full of doubt I stand,
By me done and occasioned, or rejected Much more, that much more good thereof shall spring.—Milton, Paradise Lost, xii. 437.

4. Come into existence; issue forth.

Hast that way'd as kings should bid,
Giving no ground unto the house of York,
They never then had spring like summer flies.
Shakespeare, Henry VI. part III. ii. 4.

Ev'n thought meets thought, ere from the lips it
part,
And each warm wish springs mutual from the heart.
Pope, Rhina to Alford.

5. Arise; appear; begin to appear or to exist.

When the day began to spring, they let her go.—
Judges, xix. 25.

To them which sat in the region and shadow of death, light is springing up.—Matthew, iv. 16.

Fly, fly, prophane dogs! far hence fly away,
Tend not the jove streams of the springing day
With your dull influence: it is for you
To sit and scowl upon night's heavy brow.
Cranshaw.

6. Issue with effect or force.

Swift fly the years, and rise the expected morn!
Oh spring to light, suspicious babe, be born!
Pope, Messiah.

7. Proceed as from ancestors, or a country.

It is evident that our Lord sprang out of Juda.—
Hebraica, vii. 11.

How youngly he began to serve his country,
How long continued; and what stock he springs of;
The noble house of Marcius.
Shakespeare, Coriolanus, ii. 3.

Shall, like the brethren spring of dragons' teeth,
Ruin each other, and he all amongst 'em.
B. Jonson.

Heroes of old, by rapine, and by spoil,
In search of fame did all the world embroil;

Thus to their gods each then ally'd his name,
This sprang from Jove, and that from Titan came.
Granville.

8. Proceed as from a ground, cause, or reason.

They found new hope to spring
Out of despair.
Milton, Paradise Lost, xi. 134.

Some have been deceived into an opinion that the inheritance of rule over men, and property in things, sprang from the same original, and descend by the same rules.—Locke.

9. Grow; thrive.

What makes all this but Jupiter the king,
At whose command we perish and we spring?
Then 'tis our best, since thus ordain'd to die,
To make a virtue of necessity.
Dryden, Palamon and Arcite, iii. 1082.

10. Bound; leap; jump; rush hastily; appear suddenly.

He called for a light, and sprang in and came trembling, and fell down before Paul and Silas.—
Acts, xvi. 29.

Some strange commotion
Is in his brain; he bites his lip, and starts;
Stops on a sudden, looks upon the ground,
Then lays his finger on his temple; straight
Springs out into that gate, then stops again.
Shakespeare, Henry VIII. iii. 2.

I sprang not more in joy at first hearing he was a man child, than now in first seeing he had proved himself a man.—Id., Coriolanus, i. 3.

When Heaven was named, they loosed their hold again;

Then sprang she forth, they follow'd her again.
Dryden, Thoudy and Honoria, 117.

Nor lies she long; but, as her fate ordain,
Springs up to life; and, fresh in second pain,
Is saved to-day, to-morrow to be slain.
Ibid., 186.

Afraid to sleep;
Her blood all fever'd, with a furious leap
She sprang from bed.
Ibid., 368.

See, we'd by Heaven, the blooming Hebrew flies
Her artful tongue, and more persuasive eyes;
And, springing from her disappointed arms,
Presses a dagger to forbidden charms.
Sir R. Blackmore.

The mountain stag, that springs
From height to height, and bounds along the plains,
Nor has a master to restrain his course;
That mountain stag would value rather be,
Than be a slave.
A. Philips, Briton.

11. Fly with elastic power; start.

A link of horsehair, that will easily slip, fasten t of the stick that springs.—Mortimer, Un-bending.

12. Rise from a covert.

My doors are hush'd to my eyes,
Fill'd and damm'd up with gaping creditors,
Watchful as fowls, when their game will spring.
Gray, Venice Preserved, i. 1.

A covey of partridges springing in our front, put our infantry in disorder.—Addison.

13. Issue from a fountain.

Let the wide world his praises sing,
Where Thems and Ephraim spring;
And from the Danube's frosty banks to those Where from an unknown head great Nilus flows.
Lord Roscommon.

14. Proceed as from a source.

'Tis true from force the modest title springs,
The virtue hold from that which first made kings.
Dryden, Co. quest of Granada, Part I. l. 1

15. Shoot; issue with speed and violence.

'Then shook the sacred shrine, and sudden light Sprang through the vaulted roof, and made the temple bright;

The power, beclud'd the pow'r in glory shone,
By her bent bow and her keen arrows known.
Dryden, Palamon and Arcite, iii. 263.

Spring. v. a.

1. Start; rouse game

'Thus I reclin'd my inward love to fly'
At what, and when, and how, and where I chose:
Now negligent of sport I lie;
And now, as other few know us,
I spring a mistress, swear, write, sigh, and die;
And the same kill'd, or lost, go talk or lie.
Donne.

'That spring the game you were to set,
Before you'd time to draw the net.
Bentley, Hudibras, iii. 2, 1263.

A large cock-pheasant he spring in one of the neighbouring woods.—Addison, Spectator.

Here I use a great deal of diligence before I can spring any thing; whereas in town, whilst I am following one character, I am crossed by another, that they pursue the chase.—Ibid.

See how the well-taught printer leads the way!
The scent grows warm; he stops, he springs the prey.
Gay, Rural Sports, ii. 337.

2. Produce quickly or unexpectedly.

The nurse . . . surprised with fright,
She starts, and leaves her bed, and springs a light.
*Dryden, Translation from Ovid,
Cinyras and Myrrha.*

Thus man by his own strength to heav'n would soar,
And would not be oblig'd to God for more:

Pain, wretched creature, how art thou misled,
To think thy wit these godlike notions breed!
These truths are not the product of thy mind,
But dropt from heaven, and of a nobler kind:
Heaven'd religion first inform'd thy sight,
And reason saw not, till faith sprung the light.

Dryden, Religio Laici, 62.

He that has such a burning soul, and springs such mighty discoveries, must needs be an admirable patron. — Gulliver.

3. Make by starting; (applied to a ship).

People discharge themselves of burdensome re-fections, as of the cargo of a ship that has sprung a leak. — Sir R. L. Estrange.

No more accuse thy pen; but charge the crime
On native sloth, and indolence of time:
Beware the publick laughter of the town,
Thou spring'st a leak already in thy crown.

Dryden.

Whether she sprung a leak, I cannot find,
Or whether she was overtaken with wind,
Or that some rock below her bottom rent,
But down at once with all her crew she went.

Id., The Cuck and the Fox, 350.

4. Discharge: (applied to a mine).

Our miners discovered several of the enemies' mines, who have sprung divers others which did little execution. — Tales.

I sprung a mine, whereby the whole nest was overthrown. — Addison, Spectator.

5. Contrive on a sudden; produce hastily; offer unexpectedly.

The friends to the cause sprung a new project, and it was advertised that the crisis could not appear till the ladies had shown their seal against the pretender. — Swift.

6. Pass by leaping.

Unbemoaning skill

To spring the fence, to rein the prancing steed, Thomson, Seasons, Autumn, 57 b.

Spring. s.

1. Rising, growing, or revived part of the year; opposed to fall = autumn; season in which plants rise and vegetate; vernal season.

Orpheus with his lute made trees,
And the mountain-tops that freeze,
Baw themselves when he did sing:

To his music, plants and flowers
E'er sprung, as sun and showers
There had made a lasting spring.

Shakespeare, Henry VIII, iii. 1.

The spring visiteth not these quarters so timely as the eastern parts. — Garrick, Speech of Cornwall.
Come, gentle Spring, ethereal mildness come,
And from the bosom of yu dropping cloud
Upon our plains descend.

Thomson, Seasons, Spring, 1.

2. Elastic body; body which when distorted has the power of restoring itself to its former state.

This may be performed by the strength of some such spring as is used in watches; this spring may be applied to one wheel, which shall give an equal motion to both the wheels. — Bishop Wilkins.

The spring must be made of good steel, well tempered; and the wider the two ends of the spring stand asunder, the milder it throws the change of the vice open. — Johnson, Mechanical Exercises.

He that was sharp-sighted enough to see the configuration of the minute particles of the spring of a clock, and upon what peculiar impulse its elastic motion depends, would no doubt discover something very admirable. — Locke.

3. Elastic force.

How 'tis, what a spring was in his arm, to throw!
How high he held his shield, and rose at every blow!

Dryden.

Bodies which are absolutely hard, or so soft as to be void of elasticity, will not rebound from one another; impenetrability makes them only stop.
If two equal bodies meet directly 'in vacuo,' they will by the laws of motion stop where they meet, lose their motion, and remain in rest, unless they be elastic, and receive new motion from in their spring.
— Sir I. Newton.

The soul is gathered within herself, and removes that spring which is weakened, when she operates more in concert with the body. — Addison.

In adult persons, when the fibres cannot any more yield, they must break, or lose their spring. — Arbuthnot.

4. Active power; cause by which motion or action is produced or propagated.

My heart sinks in me while I hear him speak,
And every slacken'd fibre drops its hold,
Like nature letting down the springs of life;
So much the name of father awes me still.

Dryden, Spanish Friar, v. 2.

Nature is the same, and man is the same: has the same affections and passions, and the same springs that give them motion. — Egmont.

Our at-there shuns by vulgar springs to move
The hero's glory or the virgin's love.

Pope, Prologue to Addison's Cato.

5. Leap; bound; jump; violent effort; sud- den struggle.

The prisoner with a spring from prison broke;
Then stretch'd his feather'd fans with all his might,
And to the neighbouring maple wung'd his flight.

Dryden, The Cuck and the Fox, 760.

With what a spring his furious soul broke loose,
And left the limbs still quivering on the ground.

Addison, Cato.

6. Leuk; start of a plank.

Each petty hand
Can steer a ship beav'n'd; but he that will Govern, and carry her to her ends, must know
His tides, his currents; how to shift his sails;
Where her springs are, her leaks, and how to stop
'em.

B. Johnson, Catiline's Conspiracy.

7. Fountain; issue of water from the earth.

Now stays thy spring; my sea shall suck them dry.

And swell so much the higher by their ebb.

Shakespeare, Henry VI, Part III, iv. 4.

Springs on the top of hills pass through a great deal of pure earth, with less mixture of other waters.

Hutton, Natural and Experimental History.

When in the efforts she doth the causes know,
And seeing the stream, thinks where the spring
doth rise;

And seeing the branch, conceives the root below:
These things she views without the body's eyes.

Sir J. Davies, Immortality of the Soul.

He adds the running springs and standing lakes,
And bounding banks for winding rivers makes.

Dryden, Translation from Ovid,

Metamorphosis, b. 1.

She hears him knocking at his secret gates,
And seeks his hidden spring, and fears his upstarts' saves. — Id., Translation of the Æneid, vi. 1021.

The water that falls down from the clouds, sinking into beds of rock or clay, breaks out in springs, commonly at the bottom of hilly ground. — Locke.

Used adjectivally.

He bathed himself in old spring water in the midst of winter. — Locke.

8. Source; that by which anything is sup- plied.

To that great spring which cloth great kingdoms move,

The sacred spring, whence right and honour streams;

Distilling virtue, shodding peace and love
In every place, as Cynthia sheds her beams.

Sir J. Davies, Discourse on the State of Ireland.

Rolling down through so many barinuous acres, from the spring of Virel, it bears along with it the illth of the Gods and Vanities. — Dryden.

I move, I see, I speak, discourse and know,
Though now I am, I was not always so;

Then that from which I was, must be before,
Whom, as my spring of being, I adore.

Id., Statue of Innocence, ii. 1.

He has a secret spring of spiritual joy, and the continued feast of a good conscience within, that forbids him to be miserable. — Bentley.

9. Rise; beginning.

About the spring of the day Samuel called Saul to the top of the house. — 1 Samuel, ix. 24.

10. Cause; original.

The reason of the quicker or slower termination of this distemper arises from these three springs. — Sir R. Blackmore.

The first springs of great events, like those of great rivers, are often mean and little. — Swift.

11. Plant; shoot; young tree; coppice.

Birds, which in the lower spring
Did shroud in shady haues from sunny ray.

Spenser, Shepherd's Calendar.

Thy groves and pleasant springs
The painful labourer's hand shall stock, the roots to burn.

Deighton, Polydemon, song xiv.

The nightingale, among the thick-leaved springs
That sits alone in sorrow.

Fletcher, Faithful Shepherdess.

From haunted spring and dale,
Edged with poplar path.

Milton, Ode on Nativity, 184.

In yonder spring of roses underd'ail
With myrtle. — Id., Paradise Lost, ix. 218.

When the spring is of two years' growth, draw part of it for quick-seeds. — Evelyn, Sylva, b. iii. ch. vi.

12. Springal.

She pictured winged Love,
With his young brother Sport: . . .
The one his bow and shafts, the other spring
A burning lead about his head did move.

Spenser, Mispotamus.

13. Hand or shoulder of pork.

These springs of pork.

Beaumont and Fletcher, Prophetess.

Springal. s. Youth; active, nimble, young man.

Young springals in the flower of their youth. —
Martin, Marriage of Priests, Mm. 2. b. 1550.

Two springals of full tender years.

Spenser, Faerie Queene.

I do not rail against the hopeful springal,
That builds up monuments in brass.

Beaumont and Fletcher, Laws of Candy.

Springe. s. Gin; noose, which, fastened to any elastic body, catches by a spring or jerk.

As a woodcock to my own springe, Osrick,
I'm justly kill'd with mine own treachery.

Shakespeare, Hamlet, v. 2.

Let goats for food their bandied soldiers lead;
And sleep from winter cold thy sides defend;
But neither springe, net, nor snare employ.

Dryden, Translation from Ovid,

The Pythagorean Philosophy.

With hairy springs we the larks betray,
Slight lines of hair surprise the finny prey.

Pope, Rape of the Lock, canto ii.

Springe. v. a. Ensnare; catch in a trap.

We springe ourselves, we sink in our own toils,
Beaumont and Fletcher, Queens of Corinth.

Springer. s. One who, that which, springs.

1. Dog to put-up game, allied to the spaniel on one side, and to the setter (the name of which has a similar origin) on the other.

The springer is a small but elegant breed; it is generally red and white, with black nose and palate.
The smallness of the head and the length of the ears are essential points in dogs of this race. The true Marlborough breed is sometimes called the springer;
it is, however, a shorter dog with a less taper muzzle.
These spaniels are sometimes sold for an enormous price. Within the last few weeks a man was brought before a magistrate, charged with having stolen or lost one of these dogs; and on being asked the value of the dog, the owner deposed that it was worth seventy-five guineas, and that he had already refused seventy pounds for it. — Bell, History of British Quadrupeds including the Cat, &c.

2. Young plant.

The young men and maidens go out into the woods and coppices, and cut down and spoil young springers to dress up their May-booths. — Koelty,

Sylva, iv. § 4.

Springhalt. s. In Veterinary Surgery. See Strighhalt.

They're all new legs, and lame ones; one would take it.

That never saw them pace before, the spavin
And springhalt reign'd among them.

Shakespeare, Henry VIII, i. 3.

Springhead. s. Fountain; source.

The nearer the spring-head, the purer streams. —
Proceedings against Gurnel, 11. 3. 1c. 104.

The wolf, drinking at the spring-head, quarrelled with the lamb for troubling him in draught when he was quenching his thirst at the stream below. — Sir T. Herbert, Relation of some Years' Travel into Africa and the Great Asi, p. 139.

Now this spring-head of science is purely fantastical. — Hobbes, Letter to Pope.

Springiness. s. Attribute suggested by Springy; elasticity; power of restoring itself.

Where there is a continued endeavour of the parts of a body to put themselves into another state, the progress may be much more slow, since it was a great while before the texture of the corpuscles of the steel were so altered as to make them lose their former springiness. — Hooke.

The air is a thin fluid body endowed with elasticity and springiness, capable of condensation and rarefaction. — Hall, p.

Springing. part. adj. Gushing from, or as from, a spring.

Israel's servants digged in the valley, and found a well of springing water. — Genesis, xvi. 19.

The friendly gods a springing eye enlarged,
The fleet swift lifting o'er the surges dew,
Till Grecian cliffs appeared.

Pope, Translation of the Odyssey, iv. 796.

Springing. verbal abs.

1. Growth; increase.

Thou setteth the furrows thereof; thou maketh it soft with showers; thou bleaseth the springing thereof. — Isaiah, lxx. 10.

2. In Architecture. Side of an arch contig- uous to the part whereon it rests.

Springle. s. Springe; elastic noose. Rare.

Woodcocks arrive first on the north coast, where every phoebe-shoot serveth for springles to take them.

Cicero, Survey of Cornwall.

Springtide. s. Tide at the new and full moon: high tide.

Love, like springtides, full and high,
Fervid in every youthful vein;
But each tide soon less supply.

Till they quite shrink in again;
If a flow in age appear,
'Tis but ebb, and runs not clear.

Dryden, Tyrannick Love, iv. 1.

1017

Most people die when the moon chiefly reigns; that is, in the night, or upon or near a springtide.—Grew, Cosmologia Sacra.

Springy, adj.

1. Elastic; having the power of restoring itself.

Had not the Maker wrought the springy frame,
Such as it is to fan the vital flame,
The blood, defrauded of its nitrous food,
Had rold and languish'd in the arterial road;
While the tired heart had strove, with fruitless pain,
To push the lazy tide along the vein.

Sir R. Blackmore, Creation.
This vast contraction and expansion seems unintelligible, by leaving the particles of air to be springy and ramous, or rolled up like hoops, or by any other means than a repulsive power.—Sir I. Newton.

Though the bundle of fibres which constitute the muscles may be small, the fibres may be strong and springy.—Arbuthnot.

If our air had not been a springy body, no animal could have exercised the very function of respiration; and yet the ends of respiration are not served by that springiness, but by some other unknown quality.—R. Kelly, Sermons.

2. Full of springs and fountains.

Where the study or gravelly lands are springy or wet, rather murl them for grass than corn.—Mortimer, Husbandry.

Sprink, s. Sprinkle; stain. Rare.

The Talbot true that is,
And still hath so remaynde,
Lost never nobleness
By sprink of sad distaynde.
Heard, Arbor of Amitie, 1568. (Nares by H. and W.)

Sprinkle, v. n.

1. Scatter; disperse in small masses.
Take to you handfuls of ashes of the furnace, and let Moses sprinkle it toward the heaven.—Exodus, ix. 18.

2. Scatter in drops.

Sprinkle water of purifying upon them.—Numeri, viii. 7.

3. Besprinkle; wash, wet, or dust by scattering in small particles.

Let us draw near with a true heart, in full assurance of faith, having our hearts sprinkled from an evil conscience.—Hebrews, x. 22.

Wines he wore
Of many a colour'd plume sprinkled with gold.
Milton, Paradise Lost, iii. 612.

The prince, with living water sprinkled o'er
His limbs and body; then approach'd the door,
Possess'd the porch.

Deighton, Translation of the Æneid, vi. 523.

- Sprinkle, v. n. Perform the act of scattering in small drops.

The priest shall dip his right finger in the oil that is in his left hand, and shall sprinkle of the oil with his finger.—Leviticus, xiv. 10.

Baptism may well enough be performed by sprinkling, or effusion of water.—Ayliffe, Parergon Juris Civili.

Sprinkle, s.

1. Small quantity scattered.
2. Utensil to sprinkle with; espingoire.
She always say'd and in her hand did hold
An holy water sprinkle dip in dew,
With which she sprinkled favours manifold
On whom she list. Spenser, Faerie Queen, iii. 12, 13.

Sprinkling, verbal ubi.

1. Act of scattering in small drops.
Your clerical shavages, your rousades, sprinklings, your cozening miracles.—Bishop Hall, Epistles, D. i. E. 1.

2. Small quantity scattered.

In name of these languages [the Italian, French, and Spanish] is there more than a mere sprinkling of the modern element.—Craik, History of English Literature, vol. i. p. 46.

- Sprinkling, part. adj. Scattering in small drops.

When dirty waters from balconies drop,
And dextrous dunces twirl the sprinkling mop,
And renounce the spatter'd snail, and scrub the stairs,
Know Saturday's conclusive day appears.

Guy, Frestin, ii. 421.

- Sprit, v. a. [see under Spruce.] Throw; eject with force.

Treads sometimes exults or sprits out a dark and liquid matter behind, and a venomous condition there may be perhaps therein; but it cannot be called their urine.—Sir T. Browne.

- Sprit, v. n. Shoot; germinate; sprout.

Sprit, s.

1. Shoot; sprout; aeropire.

The barley, after it has been couched four days, will sweat a little, and shew the chit or sprit at the root-end of the corn.—Mortimer, Husbandry.

2. Bowsprit: (formerly spelt spret).

[He] set his course against our state and commonwealth, not, as they say, with spret nor care, with shoving or halting, that is, by way of doubtful or dark circumlocutions.—Holland, Translation of Ammianus Marcellianus. (Nares by H. and W.)

Sprite, s. Spirit.

Of those am I who thy protection claim,
A watchful sprite, and Ariel is my name.
Pope, Rape of the Lock, canto i.

The sprites of fiery torments in flame
Mount up, and take a salamander's name. Ibid.

Teach us, sprite or bird,
What secret thoughts are thine,
I have never heard
Praise of love or wine
That panted forth a flow of rapture so divine.
Shelley, Ode to a Skylark.

Spritleful, adj. Gay; lively; cheerful.

A spritleful wit that leaves no print,
And makes a feather of a flint.
Strout, in Wit Restored, 1658.

Spritlefully, adv. In a spritleful manner;

vigorously; with life and ardour.
The Grecians spritlefully drew from the starts the course,
And burst it, bearing it to fleet.
Chapman, Translation of the Iliad.

Sprittoliness, s. Sprightliness.

Wit and sprittoliness of conversation.—T. Warlen, History of English Poetry, iii. 350.

Spritley, adv. Gaily.

You have not some young buffets, highly kept;
Fill'd full of daises at the field, and driven Home to their hives; all so spritley given,
That no roose can contain them. Chapman.

- Spritsail, s. Sail which belongs to the bowsprit mast.

Our men quitted themselves of the fire-ship, by ruffing the spritsail tackle off with their short hatchets. Wickman, Surgery.

- Sprod, s. [?] Salmon in its second year's growth.

Sprout, v. n. [see under Spruce.]

1. Shoot by vegetation; germinate.

That leaf faded, but the young buds sprouted on, which afterwards opened into fair leaves.—Bacon, Natural and Experimental History.

We find no security to prevent germination, having made trial of grains, whose ends, cut off, have notwithstanding sprouted.—Sir T. Browne, Vulgar Errors.

Old Banels is by old Philemon seen Sprouting with sudden leaves of sprightly green.
Dryden, Translation from Ovid, Juvencius and Philemon.

Enrich'd Britannia, sturdy as the oak
Which on her mountain top she proudly bears,
Eludes the ax, and sprouts against the stroke.
Strong from her wounds, and greater by her wars.
Prior, Ode to Queen Anne, xxiv.

2. Shoot into ramifications; grow.
Vitrid is apt to sprout with moisture.—Bacon.

Sprout, s. Shoot of a vegetable.

Stumps of trees, lying out of the ground, will put forth sprouts for a time. Bacon.

Early ere the odoratus breath of morn
Awakes the shuddering leaves, or tassell'd horn Shakes the high thicket, haste I all about,
Number my ranks, and visit every sprout.
Milton, Arcades, 26.

To this kid, taken out of the womb, were brought in the tender sprouts of shrubs; and, after it had teed, began to eat of such as are the usual food of goats.—Rap, On the Wisdom of God manifested in the Works of the Creation.

Sproūting, part. adj. Germinating.

The sproūting leaves that saw you here,
And mid'd their fellows to the night.
Th' enlivening dust its head begins to rear,
And on the waves sproūting dances appear. Tickell.

Sproūting, verbal ubi. Art of that which sprouts; shooting; germination.

Try whether these things in the sproūting do increase weight, by weighing them before they are hanged up; and afterwards again, when they are sproūted.—Bacon.

Rub malt between your hands to get the crumb or sproūting clean away.—Mortimer, Husbandry.

Sprouts, s. pl. Young cow-worts. Brussels sprouts, over and above the fact of the best seed being got from Belgium, are so called from the leaf-buds being used as young plants.

Spruce, adj. [connected with sprung, which, itself, seems to belong to a class of words suggestive of activity, vigour, liveliness, neatness, and the like, sprunt, spruck, and others being in the list. Wedgwood, connecting these with each other, connects them also with sprout, and other words, beginning with spr, in which the notion of germination, shooting-out as a bud, budding, &c., is involved. That spruce is sometimes a corruption of Pruce, or Prussia, is likely; at the same time the doctrine that it is so in general is unsafe. See extracts from Johnson, Todd, and Wedgwood.] Nice; trim; neat without elegance: (formerly used of things with a serious meaning: now used only of persons, and with levity).

Another neat in clothes, spruce, full of courtesy.—Barton, Anatomy of Melancholy, preface, p. 33.

The two
That wraps that crystal in a washen tomb,
Shall be took up spruce, ill'd with diamond. Donne.

Thou wilt not have me in the middle street,
Tho' some more spruce companion thou dost meet. Ibid.

Along the crisp'd shades and bowers
Revels the spruce and jocund spring;
The groves, and the rosy-honour'd hours,
Thither all their bounties bring. Milton, Comus, 984.

I must not slip into too spruce a style for serious matters; and yet I approve not that dull insipid way of writing practised by many chymists.—Boyle.

He put his hand and head in order,
The sprucer to arrest and board her.

Batter, Hudibras, iii. 1, 123.
He is so spruce, that he can never be gentled.—Taylor.

This Tim makes a strange figure with that ragged coat under his livery: can't he go spruce and clean?—Arbuthnot.

[Skinner derives this word from spruce, French; but he proposes it with hesitation; Junius thinks it comes from sprout; Cosmopolitans trifles yet more contemptibly. I know not whence to deduce it, except from spruce. In ancient looks we find furniture of spruce, a thing rusty and elegant, and thence probably came spruce.—Johnson.

Servatius refers the word to the Swedish spruce, formosus; spruck et sprang, clarus et splendidus (de pumis). With this our provincial word spruce, or sprig, in great measure, accords; which in some places is used for smart, elegant, and also for lively or acute. Sprig; spruce; sprucious. Rasmuson dissent. (Gross). And so sprack, or sprag; which see. Dr. Johnson's conjecture of spruce, weighed with the following extract, at least will amuse the reader: 'Sir Edward Howard, then Admiral, and with him Sir Thomas Purser, in doubtless of crimson velvet, &c., were applauded after the fashion of Prussian spruce.' (Hollingshead's Chronicle, p. 26.) Prussia, it might hence be supposed, gave in old time, the law as to fashionable and costly apparel. Harlet describes Prussian leather under the simple name of spruce. (Alvares, 1524.) Thus, in reference to the habitments, a sprucado likewise became a term to denote our wim past great attention to dress. 'They put me in mind of the answer of that sprucado to a judge in this kingdom, a great censor of men's habits; who, seeing a neat fluid divine come before him in a cloak lined through with plush, encountered him.' (Commentary on Chaucer, p. 19: 16:5.—Tidd.)

[A derivation of the young shoots of spruce and silver fir, was much in use on the shores of the Baltic as a remedy in scurvy, gout, and rheumatic complaints. The sprouts from which it was made were called spruces in German, and spruce in Dutch, and the derivation itself spruce-spruce, or spruce-spruce, takes its name as the fir of which the sprouts are chiefly used for the foregoing purpose, and not from being brought from Prussia, as commonly supposed.—Wedgwood, Dictionary of English Etymology, p.]

Spruce, v. a. Trim; dress.

Then 'gan Don Quixote
To spruce his plumes.

Dr. H. More, Song of the Soul, i. 2, 30.

What is truth would, I hope, nevertheless be truth in it, however oddly spruced up by such an author.—Vindication of the Reasonableness of Christianity, p. 24: 1095.

Spruce, s. [see under Spruce, adj.] Species of fir; Pinus abies, or Abies excelsa.

Thence from Prussia (which we call spruce) and Norway are the best. The hemlock-tree (as they call it in New England) is a kind of spruce.—Keelyn.

As a species, the common spruce is distinguished by having the leaves scattered upon the branches, and quadrangular; cones terminal, cylindrical, and pendant; scales naked and flat, their summits truncate; cones from five to seven inches in length, and from one and a half to two inches broad; seeds winged, small; retyledons from seven to nine. . . . Though a native of northern countries, and found in similar parallels of latitude, the spruce fir is not considered indigenous to Britain, as no remains of ancient forests of this species are recorded as having existed in any of the mountainous districts of this island, nor have its remains been recognized amongst the other trees deposited in the peat masses, beneath whose surface the common pine is so frequently met with. Its introduction, however, must have taken place at an early period, as it is mentioned by some of our earliest writers on agriculture. Turner, who published his work entitled "Names of Herbs" in 1594, includes it in his list; Gerard also, and Parkinson, figures and speak of it in their works. Upon continental Europe it occupies a surface in some of the more northern countries scarcely inferior to that covered by the forests of the common pine.—Schub. History of British Forest Trees.

Spruce-beer. s. [Two words.] Beer tintured with branches of fir.

In ulcers of the kidneys spruce-beer is a good balsamick.—Arbuthnot.

Sprucey. adv. In a spruce manner.

'Under that fayne ruffe so sprucey set Appears a fall, a falling land furrowth!

Murdon, Satire, sat. iii. 1308.

Spruceness. s. Attribute suggested by Spruce; neatness; trimness.

Now, in the time of spruceness, our plays follow
The piveness of our garments.—Middleton, Roving Girl, prologue.

Polished periods, ready embellishments, artificial transitions; words that sound big, and signify little; formal figures; an affected spruceness, and excessive delicacy of style.—Hucknell, Sacred Classics, l. 251.

Sprug. v. a. Spruce.

They are the very ticklings of nature's heart, that make her sprug up herself in the season of the spring, to court the world with in her last array.—Parthenissa, Sonnet, p. 211: 1638.

Sprunk. s. P. Harlot. Rare.

My chiefest spite to chide is,
Who in these days bear away,
With fairs and munks, and their fine sprunks,
I, I, I, my chiefest prey.

Ballad of Robin Hood, The King's Disgrace.

Sprunt. v. n. [see under Spruce.] Spring up; germinate; spring forward.

See this sweet simpering babe,
Dear image of thyself; well how it sprunts
With joy at thy approach.

Sauveterre, Rural Graces, canto iii.

Sprunt. s.

1. Anything that is short, and will not easily bend.

2. Leap, or spring in leaping: (sprunt is so used in Derbyshire).

Sprunt. part. adj. Sprung; Spruce. Rare.

Spruntly. adv. In a sprunt manner. Rare.

How do I look to-day? am I not dress'd Spruntly! B. Junius, The Devil is an Ass.

Sprusado. s. See extract from Todd under Spruce, adj.

Spry. adj. See extract, and under Spruce.

[Spry; active, nimble, alert. A softened pronunciation of the spry means spry, sprack. Spry, a frolic is, probably, from the same root; signifying a spry, an exhibition of spirits. German, sprühn, to spurt.—Wegmann, Dictionary of Etymology.]

Spud. s. [spade.] Narrow spade, sometimes with a short handle; short thick thing, in contempt.

My love to Sheriah is more firmly fixt Than strongest weeds that grow these stones betwixt;

My spud these nettles from the stones can part
No knife so keen to weed thee from my heart.

Swift.

Spiddle. v. n. Poke, or grope, about. Rare.

He grobs and spiddles for his prey in murky holes and obscure caverns.—Taylor, the Water-poet:
1650. (Nares by H. and W.)

Spume. s. [Lat. spuma.] Foam; froth.

Materials dark and crude,
Of spirituous and fiery spume, till touch'd
With heaven's ray, and temper'd, they shoot forth
So beautiful, opening to the ambient light.

Milton, Paradise Lost, vi. 478.

Waters frozen in pans, after their dissolution, leave a froth and spume upon them, which are caused by the airy parts diffused by the congealable mixture.—Sir T. Browne, Vulgar Errors.

Spume. v. n. [Lat. spumo.] Foam.

Spumous. adj. [Lat. spumens.] Frothy; foamy.

The spumous and florid state of the blood, in passing through the lungs, arises from its own elasticity, and its violent motion, the aerial particles expanding themselves.—Arbuthnot.

Spūmy. adj. Foamy. Rare.

Not with more madness, rolling from afar,
The spūmy waves proclaim the watery war;
And mounting upwards with a mighty roar,
March onwards, and assault the rocky shore.

Dryden.

Sponge. For this and its congeners, see under Sponge.

Spunk. s. [one of the local meanings of this word is spark, as a spunk of flame. In this we find a connection with its second meaning; and also with the use of the touchwood for tinder. The notion of rottenness, however, especially when of a fungoid character, suggests a second root connected with spunge (σπύγγος) and (?) fungus.]

1. Touchwood; rotten wood.

To make white powder, the best way is by the powder of rotten willows; spunk, or touchwood prepared, might perhaps make it rused.—*Sir T.
Browne, Vulgar Errors.*

Spunk, Polyporus (formerly Boletus) ignitarius, a species of fungus called also touchwood. The plant, when cut into thin slices and beaten till soft, has been used as a styptic to check hemorrhage; it is also used, when soaked in a solution of nitre, for kindling matches and tobacco, under the name of Amadou or German tinder. Brande and Cox, Dictionary of Science, Literature, and Art.

2. Vivacity; spirit; activity.

Now you're my friend and my equal, and may at me again, if you have spunk enough for it.—Sword of Power.

If you han't spunk enough to quarrel with an Englishman, he deserves you. Id.

In future, get not quite so drunk!
Thy girl, perhaps, a lass of spunk,
May wish thy numerous pow'rs to prove.

Dr. H. do. (Peter Pindar).

Spur. s. [A.S. spurn, spurn.]

1. Sharp point fixed in the rider's heel, with which he pricks his horse to drive him forward.

He borrowing that homely armour for want of a better, had come upon the spur to redeem Philoela's picture. Sir P. Shalop.

Whether the body politic be
A horse whereon the government doth ride,
Who, newly in the seat, that it may know
He can command it, lets it straight feel the spur.

Shakspeare, Measure for Measure, i. 3.
He presently set spurs to his horse, and departed with the rest of the company.—Knollys, History of the Turks.

Was I for this entitled, sir,
And girl with rusty sword and spur,
For fame and honour to wage battle?

Butler, Hudibras, i. 2. 711.

2. Incitement; instigation: (used with to before the effect).

Seeing then that nothing can move, unless there be some end, the desire wherof provoketh unto motion, how should that divine power of the soul, that spirit of our mind, ever stir itself into action, unless it have also the like spur?—Hucker, Ecclesiastical Polity.

What need we any spur, but our own cause,
To prick us to redress?

Shakspeare, Julius Caesar, ii. 1.
The chief, if not only spur to human industry and action, is necessity. Locke.

The former may be a spur to the latter, till age him in love with the study, without any childish bait. Cicero.

3. Longest and largest leading root of a tree: (hence probably the spur of a post, the short wooden buttress affixed to it, to keep it firm in the ground).

Grief and patience, rooted in him both,
Mingle their spurs together.

Shakspeare, Cymbeline, iv. 2.

The strong-based pronoun
Have I made shake, and by the spurs
Pluck'd up by the pine and cedar. Id., Tempest, v. 1.

4. Sharp points on the legs of a cock with which he fights.

Of birds the bill is of like matter with the tooth:
as for their spur, it is but a nail.—Bacon.

Animals have natural weapons to defend and offend; some talons, some claws, some spurs and beaks. Ray.

5. Anything standing out; snug: (as, 'The spur of a post').

6. See extract.

Spurs [are] projections carried out from the banks of rivers to deflect the current and protect the banks;
they may be formed either of masonry, carpentry, or brushwood, according to circumstances. They are much employed in defending the banks of the Rhine,

the Po, the Danube, the Elbe, &c.; but the French engineers appear to prefer the continuous system of defence afforded by walls, or ditches.—Brande and Cox, Dictionary of Science, Literature, and Art.

Spur. v. a.

1. Prick with the spur; drive with the spur.

Your father knew them well, and when he mounted,

He'd 'em in strongly, and he spurr'd them hard.

Dryden, Spanish Friar, iii. 3.
My friend, who always takes care to cure his horse of starting fits, spurred him up to the very side of the coach.—Adrian.

Who would be at the trouble of learning, when he finds his ignorance is excused? But when you know best and teach them, you make them men; for though they have no natural wit, yet, if they are spurred and kicked, they will mend their pace.

—Collier, Essay, Of Pride.

2. Instigate; incite; urge forward.

Lovers break and loose,
Unless it be to come before their time;
So much they spur their expedition.

Shakspeare, Two Gentlemen of Verona, v. 1.
Let the new he has got upon their minds be so temper'd with the marks of good will, that affection may spur them to their duty. Locke.

3. Drive by force.

Love will not be spurred to what it loathes.

Shakspeare, Two Gentlemen of Verona, v. 2

4. Fix a spur to.

Castor the flame of fiery speed,
With well spurr'd load, took down;
As men, with leathern buckles, do Quench fire in country towns.

Old Ballad of St. George for England.

Spur. v. n.

1. Travel with great expedition.

With backward bows the Partisans shall be there,
And, spurring from the fight, confess their fear:
A double wreath shall crown our Caesar's brows.

Dryden, Translation of the Georgics, iii. 48.

2. Press forward.

Aeneas took th' alarm, while yet he led
His early warriors on his javelinee steed,
And, spurring on, his equals soon overpass'd.

Dryden, Translation of the Aeneid, v. 570.

Some bold men, though they beam with infinite ignorance and error, yet, by spurring on, reduce themselves. Gibbon.

Spur-royal. s. Gold coin, first coined in Edward the Fourth's time: it was of fifteen shillings value in James the First's time:
(sometimes written spur-rial or ryal).

Twenty spur-royals for that world!

Beaumont and Fletcher, The Two Gentlemen of Verona, v. 1.

I have a paper with a spur-royal in't.—B. Jonson, Alchemist.

Spurgall. v. a. Gall with the spur.

I was not made a horse,
And yet I bear a burthen like an ass,
Spurgall'd and tired by jangling Balmesbrooke.

Shakspeare, Richard III. v. 5.

I am ridden, Trane,

And spurgall'd to the life of patience.

Beaumont and Fletcher, The Two Gentlemen of Verona, v. 1.

Spurgalled. part. adj. Gall'd with the spur.

What I shall each spurgall'd lackey of the day,
When Faxon gives him double pence and pay,
Or each new pension'd scoundrel, pretend
To break my windows, if I treat a friend!

Pope, Epilogue to the Satires, dialogue.

Spurge. s. [Italian, spurgo; Fr. purge:
connected by most writers with purge, from its properties. The editor is more inclined to treat it, word for word, as apurgia, a term applied to some of the hawkweeds, though without seeing the exact connection.] Plant of the genus Euphorbia.

That the leaves of catapulta, or spurge, being plucked upwards or downwards, perform their operations by purge or vomit, is a strange conceit, ascribing unto plants positional operations.—*Sir T.
Browne, Vulgar Errors.*

Every part of the plant abounds with a milky juice. There are seventy-one species of this plant, of which wartwort is one. Broad-leaved spurge is a biennial plant, and used in medicine under the name of catapulta minor. The milky juice in these plants is used by some to destroy warts: but particular care should be taken in the application, because it is a strong caustick.—Miller, Gardener's Dictionary.

Spurgo-laurel. s. [Two words.] In Botany.
Daphne laureolus.

Spurgo-olive. s. [Two words.] In Botany.
Mexereon; Daphne mezereon.

Spurgings. s. Act of purging; discharge.
1019

I have been gathering wolves' hairs,
The mad dog's foam, and the adder's ears;
The spurring of a dead man's eyes;
And all since the evening star did rise,
R. Jonson, Musques at Court.

Spurious, adj. [Lat. spurius.]

1. Not genuine; counterfeit; adulterine.

Reformed churches reject not all traditions, but such as are spurious, superstitions, and not consonant to the prime rule of faith. — White.

The coin that shows the first is generally rejected as spurious, nor is the other esteemed more authentic by the present Roman medalists. — Abbotson, Treasures in Italy.

If anything else has been printed, in which we really had any hand, it is loaded with spurious additions. — Swift.

2. Not legitimate; bastard.

Your Sequins, Casars, Pompeys, and your Catos, These gods on earth, are all the spurious laws. — Adrian, Cato.

Spuriously, adv. In a spurious manner; falsely.

The deposition . . . confessing that the child had been spuriously passed upon Virginius for his own. — Whitaker, Spina and Vergina.

Spuriousness, s. Attribute suggested by Spurious; adulterateness; state of being counterfeit.

You proceed to Hippodotus, and speak of his spuriousness with as much confidence as if you were able to prove it. — Bishop Warham.

This, the first edition of Bentley's celebrated Dissertation on Phalaris, is now, in truth, universally considered to have established the spuriousness of the epistles conclusively and unanswerably. — Crook, History of English Literature, vol. ii. p. 191.

Spurling, v. a. [Fr. éperluer.] Sparling.

All saints, do by for jerke and sower,
For spurs and spurling for your horse,
Tusser, Five Hundred Points of good Husbandry.

Spurn, v. a. [A.S. spurnan.]

1. Kick; strike or drive with the foot.

They supposed I could rend bars of steel,
And spurn in pieces posts of adamant. — Shakespeare, Henry VI. Part I. l. 4.

Say my request's unjust,
And spurn me back; but if it be not so,
That art not least. — Id., Coriolanus, v. 3.
You that did void your rhenn upon my beard,
And food me as you spurn a stranger cur
Over your threshold. — Id., Merchant of Venice, i. 3.
[He] on the surging snake
Uplifted spurns the ground.
Milton, Paradise Lost, ii. 928.

So was I forced
To do a sovereign justice to myself,
And spurn thee from my presence.
Dryden, Don Sebastian, iv. 3.

Then will I draw up my legs, and spurn her from me with my foot. — Addison, Spectator.
When Athens sinks by fate unjust,
When wild barbarians spurn her dust.
Pope, Essay on the Tragedy of Brutus.

Now they, who reach Parian's holy crown,
Employ their pains to spurn some others down.
Id., Essay on Criticism, ii. 514.

2. Reject; scorn; put away with contempt; disdain.

In wisdom I should look you in the face;
But since thy outside looks so fair and warlike,
What safe and wisely I might well delay,
By rule of knight-hood, I disdain and spurn.
Shakespeare, King Lear, v. 3.

3. Treat with contempt.

Dignified as will pay a more cheerful service, when they find themselves not spurned, because fortune has laid them at their master's feet. — Locke.

Spurn, v. n.

1. Make contemptuous opposition; make insolent resistance.

A sun to blunt the sword
That guards the peace and safety of your person;
Say more, to spurn at your most royal image.
Shakespeare, Henry IV. Part II. v. 2.

I, Paulin, do religiously demand
Why thou against the church, our holy mother,
So wilfully dost spurn! — Id., King John, iii. 1.

I distrust me why
Fiance should spurn against our rule, and stir
The tributary provinces to war. — A. Philop., Briton.

2. Toss up the heels; kick or struggle.

The drunken chairman in the kennel spurns,
The glasses shatters, and his charge o'erturns.
Ging, Trivia, ii. 519.

Spurn, s. Kick; insolent and contemptuous treatment.

The insolence or office, and the spurns
That patient marks of the unworthy taken.
Shakespeare, Hamlet, iii. 1.

What defence can properly be used in such a despicable encounter as this, but either the slap or the spurn? — Milton, Colasterium.

Spurn-point, s. Game so called.

Come, let us have this boyes play,
And idle prattle past,
And let us go to nine-holes,
To spurn-point, or to cat.
The Common Cryer of London, (Nares by H. and W.)

Spurrer, s. One who makes spurs.

Gramercy, Lether-leg; get me the spurrer,
An' thou hast fitted me.
R. Jonson, Staple of News.

Spurt, s. See Spirt.

Spurway, s. Horse-way; bridle-road; distinct from a road for carriages.

Spütation, s. [Lat. sputum.] Act of spitting. — Rare.

A moist consumption receives its nomenclature from a moist sputation, or expectoration; a dry one is known by its dry cough. — Harvey, Discourse of Consumptions.

Spütative, adj. Spitting much; inclined to spit. — Rare.

I made a short retirement, with intention to have visited the city of Bath, and to see whether among all kind of affected persons, eminent rather, I could pick out any counsel to abate that spütative symptom, which yet remaineth upon me from my distractions of the spleen. — Sir H. Walton, Epistula, p. 574.

Spütter, v. n.

1. Emit moisture in small flying drops.

If a handy drop or two fall down,
It sends along my cheeks, like the green wool,
That, spüttering in the flame, works outwards into tears.
Dryden, Cleonora, i. 1.

2. Fly out in small particles with some noise.

The nightly virgin, while her wheel she spins,
Perceives the storms impending in the skies,
When sparkling hums their spüttering light advances,
And in the sockets only bubbles dance.
Dryden, Translation of the Georgics, i. 535.

3. Speak hastily and obscurely, as with the mouth full; throw out the spittle by hasty speech.

A pinking owl sat spüttering at the sun, and asked him what he meant to stand staring her in the eyes. — Sir R. L'Estrange.

They could neither of them speak their race; and so fell a spütting at one another, like two roasting apples. — Congreve.

Though he spüt through a session,
It never makes the least impression;
While'er he speaks for madness' sake. — Swift.

Spütter, v. a. Throw out with noise and hesitation.

Then dost with less the throne invade,
Obtending heav'n for what'er this befall;
And spüttering under spacious names the gall.
Dryden, Translation of the First Book of the Iliad, l. 6.

In the midst of caresses, and without the least pretended mentence, he spüt out the basest accusations! — Swift.

I love the language, that soft bastard Latin,
Which melts like kisses from a female mouth,
And sometimes if I should be writ on South,
With syllables that breathe of the sweet South,
And gentle liquids colour all so sweet a thought,
That not a single accent seems beneath;
Like our harsh northern whistling, grunting, guttural.

Which were obliged to hiss, and spit, and spüt all.
Brown, Beppo, xlv.

Spy, s. One sent to watch the conduct or motions of others; one sent to gain intelligence in an enemy's camp or country.

We'll hear poor rogues
Talk of court news, and we'll talk with them too,
And take upon 's the mystery of things,
As if we were God's spies. — Shakespeare, King Lear, v. 3.

Spies of the Volscians.
Held me in chase, that I was forced to wheel
Three or four miles about. — Id., Coriolanus, i. 6.

Every corner was possessed by diligent spies upon their master and mistress. — Lord Clarendon, History of the Great Rebellion.

I came on spies,
With purpose to explore, or to disturb,
The secrets of your realm.
Milton, Paradise Lost, ii. 970.

Such rank, proud me had,
To see that none thence issued forth a spy,
Or enemy, while God was in his work.
Id., viii. 232.

Nothing lies hid from radiant eyes;
All they subdue become their spies;
Swords, as chosen jewels, are Presented to oblige the fair.

Id., viii. 232.

Nothing lies hid from radiant eyes;
All they subdue become their spies;
Swords, as chosen jewels, are Presented to oblige the fair.

Id., viii. 232.

Nothing lies hid from radiant eyes;
All they subdue become their spies;
Swords, as chosen jewels, are Presented to oblige the fair.

Id., viii. 232.

Over my men I'll act my careful spies,
To watch rebellion in their very eyes.

Dryden, Tyrannick Love, l. 1.

Those who attend on their state, are so many spies placed upon them by the publick to observe them nearly. — Bishop Atterbury.

Spy, v. a. [N.Fr. espier; Modern Fr. épier.]

1. Discover by the eye at a distance, or in a state of concealment; espy.

Light hath no tongue, but is all eye;
If it could speak, as well as spy,
Spies were the word that it could say,
That being well I find would stay. — Donne.

As a tiger, who by chance hath spied
In some parish two gentle fawns at play,
Straight comes close, then rising changes off
His covert watch.

Milton, Paradise Lost, iv. 405.

A countryman spied a snake under a hedge, half frozen to death. — Sir R. L'Estrange.

My brother Guyomar, methinks, I spy;
Hastid in his steps, and wonder in his eye.
Dryden, Indian Emperor, i. 2.

One in reading skipped over all sentences where he spied a note of admiration. — Swift.

2. Discover by close examination.

Let a lawyer tell he has spied some defect in an entail, how seditions are they to repair that error? — Dr. H. More, Discourse of Christian Piety.

3. Search or discover by artifice.

Moses sent to spy out Janner, and took the villages. — Numbers, xxi. 32.

Spy, v. n. Search narrowly.

It is my nature's phreno
To spy into abuse; and oft my jealousy
Shakes faults that are not.

Shakespeare, Othello, iii. 3.
After we had done this, Thornton told me to hold the horses, and said he would go alone, to spy whether we might return. — Lord Lytton, Pelham.

Spyboat, s. Boat sent out for intelligence.

Noting the colour of the sea to their spyboats, to keep them from being discovered, came from the Venetians. — Arbuthnot.

Spyglass, s. Perspective glass.

There was much in this effusion which might have displeased the Father; but, to speak the truth, he paid no attention to it. His eye, and, finally, his spyglass, was employed in watching the return of his daughters to the shore. — Scott, The Pirate, ch. xxxvi.

But to finish off this Egyptian nonsense business, and bring it all to focus, we shall now . . . propose one moment through the spyglass of Monsieur Lachet. — Crèvecoeur, Critical and Historical Essays, Conté Capitulaire.

Squab, adj.

1. Unfeathered; newly hatched.

Why must old pious, and they stale, be drest,
When there's so many squab ones in the nest? — King.

2. Fat; thick and stout; awkwardly bulky.

The happy old ones round;
Nor the squab daughter nor the wife were nice,
Each health the youths began, Sim pledged it twice.
Beattie.

Squab, s. Kind of sofa or couch; stuffed cushion.

On her large squab you find her spread,
Like a fat corpse upon a bed.
Pope, Imitation of the Earl of Dorset.

Squab, n. With a heavy sudden fall, plump and flat.

No, truly, sir, I should be loth to see you Come fluttering down like a young rook, cry squab,
And take ye up with your lean benton into your buttocks.
Beattie and Fletcher.

The male took the tortoise up into the air, and dropt him down, squab, upon a rock, that dashed him to pieces. — Sir R. L'Estrange.

Squab-pie, s. Pie made of meat, apples, and onions.

Cornwall squab pie, and Devon whitepot bruns;
And Leicester beans and bacon, food of kings.
King, Art of Cookery.

Squabbish, adj. Thick; heavy; fleshy.

Diet renders them of a squabbish or lardy habit of body. — Harvey.

Squabble, v. n. Quarrel; debate peevishly; wrangle; fight.

Drunk? and speak parrot? and squabble? waver? Oh, then invincible spirit of wine! — Shakespeare, Othello, ii. 3.

The sense of these propositions is very plain, though heinous might squabble a whole day whether they should rank them under negative or affirmative. — Watts, Logic.

Squabble, s. Low brawl; petty quarrel.

In popular fictions, pragmatick fools commonly begin the squabble, and crafty knaves reap the benefit. — Sir R. L'Estrange.

A man whose personal courage is suspected, is not to drive squadrone before him; but may be allowed the worth of some squabble, or throwing a bottle at his neighbour's head.—Arbuthnot.

Squabbling. verbal abs. Act of one who squabbles.

If there must be disputes, is not squabbling less inconvenient than murder?—Collier, Essays, On Duelling.

Squabeo. s. In Ornithology. Species of heron; Ardea comata.

Squad. s. [Fr. escouade.] Company of armed men: (usually applied to those who are learning the military exercise).

Squaddy. adj. Square and stumpy. Rare.

We knew him by his bald pate and his crew hanging at his back, that he was a fat squaddy monk that had been well fed in some cloyster. Greene, News both from Heavens and Hell: 1563. (Nares by H. and W.)

Squadrone. s. [Fr. escadron.]

1. Body of men drawn up square.

Those half-rounding grounds
Just met, and closing slow in squadron join'd.
Milton, Paradise Lost, iv. 803.

2. Part of an army; troop.

Enraptured then rein'd his horse, that trotted neighing by;
The king a foot-man, and so scowles the squadrons orderly. Chapman

Nothing the Moors were more afraid of, than to be set battle to fight with squadrons coming orderly on.—Kneller, History of the Turks.

Then brautious Atys, with filius Ireal,
Of equal age, the second squadron led.
Dryden, Translation of the Æneid, v. 751.

3. Part of a fleet; certain number of ships.

Rome could not maintain its dominion over so many provinces, without squadrons ready equipt.—Arbuthnot.

Squadrone. adj. Formed into squadrons.

They gladly thither haste, and by a choir
Of squadrone angels, hear his carol sung.
Milton, Paradise Lost, xii. 368.

Squalid. adj. [Lat. squalidus.] Foul; nasty; filthy.

A squalid case desires a squalid song,
Without vain art or curious compliments;
And squalid fortune into bewhisp'ring flung Doth scorn the pride of wouled amens. Spenser.

Uncom'd his locks, and squalid his attire,
Unlike the trim of love and gay desire.
Dryden, Palamon and Arcite, l. 630.

Why are we driven from our innocent and happy homes, our country cottages that we loved, first to bide in close towns without comforts, and gradually to crouch into cellars, or find a squalid fair like this, without even the common necessities of existence?—B. Disraeli, Sybil, h. ii. ch. xlii.

Squall. s. [Arabic, khual.] Sudden gust of wind.

Look out for squalls. Be on one's guard; be on the watch.

Squall. s. Loud scream.

There we oft heard the notes of infant woe,
The short thick sob, loud scream, and shriller squall.
Pope, Imitation of Spenser.

Squall. s. Term of endearment.

The rich gull gallant calls her dear, and love,
Duck, lamb, squall, sweetheart, only, and his dove.
Taylor (the Water-poet): 1650. (Nares by H. and W.)

And here's the prettiest sight of all,
A woman that is mighty tall,
And yet her spouse a little squall.
Ballad of the Norfolk Farmer. (Nares by H. and W.)

Squall. v. n. Scream out as a child or woman frightened.

In my neighbourhood, a very pretty prattling shoulder of real squalls out at the right of a knife.—Spectator.

I put live into my coat pocket; and as to the sixth, I make a countenance as I would eat him alive. The poor man squall'd terribly.—Swift.
Cornelius sunk back on a chair; the guests stood astonished; the infant squall'd.—Arbuthnot and Pope.

Squalling. part. adj. Uttering squalls.

What occurred during my infancy, my dearest mother, I do not recollect; but I can retruce to the age of seven years, when I found myself in company with a number of others, from the squalling infant of a few days old, up to about my own age.—Maryat, Facts of Many Tales, Story of the Monk.

Squally. adj. Windy, after the manner of a squall in respect to its suddenness; gusty.

Capt. Crowe remarked that it was squally weather. Smollett.

Squalor. s. [Lat.] Nastiness; want of cleanliness and neatness.

What can filthy poverty give else but beggary, squalor, nastiness, squalor, ugliness, hunger, and thirst?—Burton.

Take heed that their new flowers and sweetens do not so much corrupt as the others' dryness and squalor.—H. Jonson.

The great body of the prison-population appeared to be Mivins, and Smuggle, and the person, and the butcher, and the leg, over and over, and over again. There were the same squalor, the same turmoil and noise, the same general characteristics, in every corner; in the best and the worst alike. The whole place seemed restless and troubled; and the people were crowding and sitting to and fro, like the shadows in an uneasy dream.—Dickens, Pickwick Papers, ch. xlv.

Squamose. adj. [from Lat. squamosus, the long o of which is the o in the final syllable -ose, and as such, accented.] Scaly.

The sea was replenished with fish, of the cartilaginous and squamous, as of the testaceous and crustaceous kinds. Woodward.

Squamous. adj. [Lat. squamosus, from squama -scale.] In Botany. Scaly; covered with scales.

Those galls and hells are produced, in the genus of oak, which may be called squamous oak-cones.—Derham, Physico-Theology.

Squander. v. a. [German, verschwenden.]

1. Scatter lavishly; spend profusely; throw away in idle prodigality.

We squander away some part of our fortune at play.—Bishop Atterbury.

They often squander'd, but they never gave. Savage.

Never take a favourite waiting maid, to imitate how great a fortune you brought, and how little you are allowed to squander.—Swift.

True friends would rather see such thoughts as they communicate to all the world, than what they squander about to all the world.—Pope.

Then careful Heaven supplied two sorts of men;
To squander these, and these to hide again. Id., Moral Essays, iii. 13.

How uncertain it is, whether the years we propose to ourselves shall be included to us, uncertain whether we shall have power or even inclination to improve them better than those we now squander away.—Rogers.

2. Scatter; dissipate; disperse.

He hath an agaveus bound to Tripolis, another to the Indies, and other ventures he hath squandered abroad.—Shakespeare, Merchant of Venice, l. 3.

Squander. s. Act of one who squanders.

The waste of our resources, and the squander of our opportunities.—Inquiry into the State of the Nation, p. 92: 1804.

Squandered. part. adj. Scattered.

He is a successful warrior,
And has the soldiers' hearts upon the skirts
Of Arragon our squander'd troops he rallies.
Dryden, Spanish Friar, l. 1.

Squanderer. s. One who squanders; spend-thrift; prodigal; waster; lavisher.

Plenty in their own keeping teaches them from the beginning to be squanderers and wasters.—Locke.

Squandering. part. adj. Prodigal; wasteful.

The monasteries could possess no private property; they could save no money; they could bequeath nothing. . . . The farmer had a deathless landlord then; not a harsh guardian, or a grinding mortgage, or a dilatory master in chancery; all was certain; the manor had not to dread a change of lords, or the oaks to tremble at the axe of the squandering heir.—B. Disraeli, Sybil, h. iii. ch. v.

Square. adj. [Lat. quadratus.]

1. Cornered; having right angles.

All the doors and posts were square, with the windows.—1 Kings, vii. 8.

Water and air the varied form confound;
The straight looks crooked, and the square grows round. Prior, Solomon, l. 180.

2. Forming a right angle.

This instrument is for striking lines square to other lines or straight sides, and try the squareness of their work.—Mason, Mechanical Exercises.

3. Cornered; having angles of whatever content: (as, a three square, five square).

Catching up in haste his three square shield,
And shiving helmet, man him buckled to the field. Spenser

The clavicle is a crooked bone, in the figure of an S, one end of which being thicker, and almost three square, is inserted into the first bone of the sternum.—Wineman, Surgeon.

4. Parallel; exactly suitable.

She's a most triumphant lady. If report be square to her.—Shakespeare, Antony and Cleopatra, ii. 2.

5. Strong; stout; well set: (generally, as in the extract, the first element in a compound).

William Rufus himself impressed his contemporaries in a manner which is vividly reflected in their histories. His person was not remarkable; he was a short, square-shouldered, fat man; with a ruddy complexion, and light flax-like hair, his eyes blood-shot, and of no certain colour; his forehead irregularly marked.—C. H. Pearson, The Early and Middle Ages of England, ch. xiv.

6. Equal; exact; honest; fair: (as, square dealing).

All have not offended;
For those that were, it is not square to take
On those that are, revenge; crimes, like to lands,
Are not inherited. Shakespeare, Timon of Athens, v. 5.

Let's have fair play;
Square dealing I would wish ye.
Beaumont and Fletcher, The Chances.

7. In Geometry. The square root of any number is that which, multiplied by itself, produces the square, as 4 is the square root of 16; because $4 \times 4 = 16$; and likewise 6 is the square root of 36, as $6 \times 6 = 36$.

Square. s.

1. Figure with right angles and equal sides.

Then did a star'd spire of diamond bright,
Ten feet each way in square appear to me,
Justly proportion'd up into his height,
So far as archer might his level see. Spenser.

Raised of grassy turf their table was;
And on her ample square from side to side
All Autumn piled. Milton, Paradise Lost, v. 302.

2. Area of four sides, with houses on each side.

The statue of Alexander VII. stands in the large square of the town.—Addison, Travels in Italy.

3. Content of an angle.

In rectangle triangles, the square which is made of the side that subtendeth the right angle, is equal to the squares which are made of the sides containing the right angle.—Sir T. Browne.

4. Rule or instrument by which workmen measure or form their angles.

Forth to the solemn oak you bring the square,
And span the mossy trunk before you cry, 'tis fair. Shenstone.

5. Rule; regularity; exact proportion; justness of workmanship or conduct.

In St. Paul's time, the integrity of Rome was famous; Coriath many ways reproved; they of Galatia much more out of square.—Hooker, Ecclesiastical Polity.

The whole ordinance of that government was at first evil plotted, and through other overights came more out of square, to that disorder which it is now come unto.—Spenser, View of the State of Ireland.

I have not kept my square, but that to come Shall all be done by the rule.

Shakespeare, Antony and Cleopatra, ii. 3.

Nothing so much setteth this art of influence out of square and rule as education.—Sir W. Raleigh.

6. Squadron; troops formed into square.

He alone
Dealt on lieutenantship, and no practice had
In the brave square of war. Shakespeare, Antony and Cleopatra, iii. 9.

Our superfluous levies, and our peasants,
Who in unnecessary action swarm;
About our squares of battle, were now
To purge this field of such a hiding foe. Id., Henry V. iv. 2.

7. A square number is when another called its root can be exactly found, which multiplied by itself produces the square.

Advance thy golden mountains to the skies,
On the broad base of fifty thousand rise;
Add one round hundred, and if that's not fair,
Add fifty more, and bring it to a square. Pope, Imitations of Horace, b. i. ep. vi.

8. Quaternary; number four.

I profess
Myself an enemy to all other joys
Which the most precious square of sense possesses,
And shal I am alone felicitate
In your dear love. Shakespeare, King Lear, i. 1.

9. Level; equality.

Men should root themselves with their equals;
For a rich man that converses upon the square
With a poor man shall certainly undo him.—Sir R. L'Estrange.

We live not on the square with such as these,
Such are our betters whom can better please.
Dryden, Translation of Juvenal, iii. 179.

Very good—my lord is upon the square, I promise ye; so much enraged as her ladyship to the full.—The Basset-Table.

'And do you mean to say, ma'am, is it possible, Mrs. Todgers, that for such a miserable consideration as eighteen shillings a week, a female of your understanding can so far demean herself as to wear a double face, even for an instant?'—'I am forced to keep things in the square if I can, sir,' faltered Mrs. Todgers. 'I must preserve peace among them, and keep my connection together, if possible, Mr. Pecksniff. The profit is very small.'—Dickens, Martin Chuzzlewit, ch. x.

10. Quintile; astrological situation of planets, distant ninety degrees from each other.

To the other five.
Their planetary motions and aspects,
In sextile, square, and trine, and opposite,
Of notions cullery. Milton, Paradise Lost, x. 657.

11. Rule; conformity.

I shall break no squares whether it be no or not.—Sir R. L'Estrange.

I have but one more stroke to give to finish Corporal Trim's character. . . . The fellow loved to advise,—or rather to hear himself talk; . . . though you might have been incommoded,—you could not well be angry. My niece Toby was seldom either the one or the other with him,—or, at least, this fault in Trim broke no squares with 'em.—Sterne, Tristram Shandy.

Squares go. In Chess. The game proceeds. One frog looked about him to see how squares went with their new king.—Sir R. L'Estrange.

Square. v. a.

1. Form with right angles; reduce to a square. Circles to square, and cubes to double, Would give a man excessive trouble.

Prior, Alma, iii. 394.

2. Measure; reduce to a measure.

Stubborn critics, and without a theme
For depravation, to square the general sex
By Cressid's rule. Shakespeare, Troilus and Cressida, v. 2.

3. Adjust; regulate; mould; shape.

Dreams are toys;
Yet for this once, ye superstitiously,
I will be squared by this.

Thou'rt said to have a stubborn soul,
That apprehends no further than this world,
And squar' at thy life accordingly.

He employs not on us the hammer and the chisel,
With an intent to wound or mangle us, but only to square and fashion our hard and stubborn hearts.—Boyle, Seraphick Love.

God has designed us a measure of our undertakings; his word and law, by the proportions whereof we are to square our actions.—Dr. H. More, Decree of Christian Piety.

The oracle was infused to proclaim Socrates to be the wisest man in the world, because he applied his studies to the moral part, the squaring men's lives.—Hammond.

His preaching much, but more his practice wrought;
A living sermon of the truths he taught;
For this by rules govern his life he squared,
That all might see the doctrine which he heard.

This must convince all such who have, upon a wrong interpretation, presumed to have opinions by theirs, and have in head examinations shown their abhorrence of university education.—Swift.

4. Accommodate; fit.

Eye me, blessed providence, and square my trial
To my proportion'd strength. Milton, Comus, 329.

Some professions can equally square themselves to, and thrive under all revolutions of government.—South, Sermons.

5. Respect in quartile.

O'er Libra's sign a crowd of stars prevails,
The icy Goat and Crab that square the scales.

Croech.

Square. v. n.

1. Suit with; fit with.

I set them by the rule, and as they square,
Or deviate from undoubted doctrine, then
This oral fiction, that old faith declares.

These marine beliefs do not square with those opinions, but exhibit phenomena that thwart them.—Woodward.

The State has, indeed, contributed powerfully to the diffusion of opinions on many important subjects, but it has left, in general, to the several professors and teachers the liberty of forming their own judgment as to the opinions which they would inculcate, and has not sought to induce them to make the matter of their teaching square with a prescribed standard.—Sir G. C. Lewis, On the Influence of Authority on Matters of Opinion, ch. ix.

2. Quarrel; go to opposite sides. Obsolete.

Now they never meet in grove or green,
By fountain clear, or spangled star-light sheen,
But they do square, that all the elves for fear
Creep into scorn cups, and hide them there.

Shakespeare, Midsummer-Night's Dream II. 1.

Are you such fools
To square for this? would it offend you then
That both should square?

Shakespeare, Titus Andronicus, II. 1.

Squarely. adv. In a square manner; suitably; in conformity.

Conform my manners squarely to their mode.

Joseph Keble, Poems, p. 63: 1676.

Every author has a way of his own, in bringing his points to bear,—for my own part, as I hate clattering and higgling for a few guineas in a dark entry, I resolved within myself, from the very beginning, to deal squarely and equitably with your great folks in this affair, and try whether I should not come off the better by it.—Sterne, Tristram Shandy, vol. I. ch. ix.

Squareness. s. Attribute suggested by Square; state of being square.

This instrument is for striking lines square to other lines or straight lines, and try the squareness of their work.—Moscow, Mechanical Exercises.
Motion, squareness, or any particular shape, are the accidents of body.—Watts, Logic.

Squarer. s. Quarrelsome fellow.

In there no young squarer now that will make a voyage with him to the devil!—Shakespeare, Much Ado about Nothing, I. 1.

Squaretoes. s. Old-fashioned formal person. Lewis XIV. . . . the old squaretoes, the idol of idleness, was in my mind an undoubted and royal man.—Thackeray, Book of Snobs, ch. ii.

Squash. v. a. Crush into pulp; batter or make as flat as a cake.

Squash. s.

1. Anything soft and easily crushed.

Not yet old enough for a man, nor young enough for a boy, as a squash is before it is a peasecod, or a colling, when it is almost an apple.—Shakespeare, Twelfth Night, I. 5.

2. See extract.

Squash is an Indian kind of pumpkin that grows square.—Boyle.

3. Anything unripe; anything soft.

How like I then was to this kernel,
This squash, this gentle-man.

Shakespeare, Winter's Tale, I. 2.

4. Sudden fall.

Since they will overload my shoulders, I shall throw down the burden with a squash among them.

—Arbuthnot.

5. Shock of soft bodies.

My fall was stopped by a terrible squash that sounded louder than the cataract of Niagara.—Swift.

Squat. v. n.

1. Sit cowering; sit close to the ground.

Let it squat till then, mal in that order he started up. Hacket, Life of Archbishop Williams, p. 125: 1683.

With the reflexive pronoun.

When he arrived, he swept out his room, dressed himself in better clothes, lighted his lamp, spread out his table, and then squatted himself down, with his legs twisted under him, and tossing off a tumbler of wine, he exclaimed, 'Well, I am lucky; nevertheless, here's confusion to all Mosaic merchants, with their vile customs. Allah send their mincey fast-days here to-night—A-ha! it's all.'—Murray, Pacha of Many Tales, The Water-Carrier.

2. Settle.

A fraternity of plunderers, thirty in number according to the lowest estimate, squatted, near Wallum Cross, under the shades of Epping Forest, and built their seven huts, from which they sallied forth with sword and pistol to bid passengers stand.—Murray, History of England, ch. xiii.

Squat. adj.

1. Cowering; close to the ground.

Him there they found,
Squat like a toad, close at the ear of Eve.

Milton, Paradise Lost, IV. 709.

Her dearest comrades never caught her

Squat on her hams.

2. Short and thick; having one part close to another (as those of an animal) contracted and cowering.)

The squill-insect is so called from some similitude to the squill-fish: the head is broad and squat.—Greece.

Alma in verse, in prose the mind,
By Aristotle's pen defined,
Throughout the body, squat or tall,
Is bound side all in all.

Prior, Alma, f. 14.

Squat. s.

1. Posture of cowering or lying close.

A stich-fall'n cheek that hangs below the jaw;
Such wrinkles as a skillful hand would draw
For an old granam age, when with a grace
She sits at squat, and scrubs her leathern face.

Dryden, Translation of Juvenal, x. 300.

2. Sudden fall.

Bruises, squats, and falls, which often kill others, can bring little hurt to those that are temperate.—G. Herbert.

Squat. s. Sort of mineral.

The squat consists of tin ore and spar incorporated.—Woodward.

Squat. v. a.

To squat or throw anything against the ground.—Barret, Alcear: 1880.

Squaterole. s. In Ornithology. Translation of the generic name Squaterola (not generally adopted); grey plover; grey sandpiper.

Squatter. s. Settler.

Before the revolution, many thousands of square miles, now enclosed and cultivated, were marsh, forest, and heath. Of this wild land much was, by law, common, and much of what was not common by law, was worth so little that the proprietors suffered it to be common in fact. In such a tract, squatters and trespassers were tolerated to an extent now unknown.—Murray, History of England, ch. iii.

Squattening. adj. Used for settling or squatting upon.

At the beginning of the revolutionary war, Westgate was a sort of squattening district of the great mining region to which it was contiguous, a place where adventurers in the industry which was rapidly developing, settled themselves.—R. Darrell, Sybil, II. ch. ii.

Squeak. v. n.

1. Set up a sudden dolorous cry; cry out with pain.

The shrieked dead
Did sneak and gibber in the Roman streets.

Shakespeare, Hamlet, I. 1.

2. Cry with a shrill acute tone.

Cart wheels sneak not when they are liquored.—Bacon.

I see the new Arion sail,
The late still trembling underneath thy nail:
At thy well-sharpen'd thumb from shore to shore,
The rebbles sneak for fear, the lasses roar.

Dryden, Mock-Heroic, 13.

Who can endure to hear one of the rough old Romans sneaking through the mouth of an orator?

—Johnson, Spectator.
They cease to sneak, and skip, and play;
Return they may to different cells,
Auditing one, whilst t'other tells.

Prior, Kite Robert's Niece.

In florid impotence he speaks,
And as the prompter lavishes, the puppet sneaks.

Pope, Epistle to Arbuthnot.

3. Break silence or secrecy for fear or pain.
If he be obstinate, put a civil question to him upon the rack, and he sneaks, I warrant him. Dryden, Don Sebastian, IV. 3.

Squeak. s.

1. Cry of pain.

Ran row and calf, and family of huns,
In panic horror of pursuing duns,
With many a deadly grunt and dolorous sneak.
Poor swine! as if their pretty hams would break.

Dryden, The Cock and the Fox, 730.

2. Shrill quick cry, not of pain.

The equette . . . with a great many skittish notes, affected sneaks, and studied inconsistencies, distinguished herself from the rest of the company.—Tatler, no. 157.

Squeaker. s.

1. One who, that which, sneaks; one who cries with a shrill acute tone.

Mimical sneakers sound bellows, the vain-glorious admirers only of themselves, and those of their own fashioned face and gesture.—Richard, Observations on Answer to Complaint of the Clergy, p. 137.

2. Applied to children and young animals. Colloquial.

Squeaking. verbal abs. Act of one who, that which, sneaks.

Blindworms planted in every log-hole go off at the squeaking of a fiddle and the thrumming of a guitar.—Dryden, Spanish Friar, I. 2.

Squeal. v. n. Cry with a shrill sharp voice; cry with pain. (Sneak seems a short sudden cry, and squeal a similar cry continued.)

He squealed out, as though he had heard some marvellous strange sounds.—Dr. Fulk: 1683.

She pinched me, and called me a sneaking chit.—Tatler, no. 15.

Squeamish. adj. [quintish.] Nice; fastidious; easily disgusted; having the stomach easily turned; being apt to take offence without much reason: (used always in dislike either real or ironical).

Yet, for countenance sake, he seemed very squeamish in respect of the charge he had of the princess Pamela.—Sir P. Melior.

Quoth he, That honour's very squeamish,
That takes a lasting for a blenish;
For what's more honourable than wars,
Or skin to tatters rent in wars?

Butler, Hudibras, II. i. 217.

It is rare to see a man at once squeamish and voracious.—South, Sermons.

His nose is rustick, and perhaps too plain

The men of squeamish taste to entertain. Southern.
There is no occasion to oppose the nutrients and the moderns, or to be squeamish on either side. He that wisely conducts his mind in the pursuit of knowledge, will gather what lights he can from either.—Locke.

Squeamishly, adv. In a squeamish manner.

Too palpable therefore is the modern delicacy of the writer of the battle of Hastings, who thus squeamishly introduces this tale of Saxon perfidy:

'I, tho' a Saxon, yet the truth will tell;
T. Warton, Enquiry into the Authenticity of the Poems attributed to Thomas Rowley, p. 70.

Squeamishness, s. Attribute suggested by Squeamish; niceness; delicacy; fastidiousness.

The thorough-paced politician must launch at the squeamishness of his conscience. I read it another lecture.—South, Sermons.

Upon their principles they may give the worship of the host of heaven; it is but conquering a little squeamishness of stomach.—Bishop Stillingfleet.

To administer this dose, fifty thousand operators, considering the squeamishness of some stomachs, and the peevishness of young children, is but reasonable.—Swift.

Squeamishness, s. Attribute suggested by Squeasy; nausea; queasiness; fastidiousness.—Rare.

A squeamishness and rising up of the heart against any thing vulgar, or mechanical condition of men.—Hammond, Works, iv. 614.

Squeasy, adj. Queasy; nice; squeamish; fastidious; scrupulous.—Rare.

He is as squeasy of his commendations as his courtiers.—Bishop Earle, Character of a Whig Man.

In squeasy stomachs honey turns to gall.—Dryden.

Squeeze, v. a. [A.S. cwisan.]

1. Press; crush between two bodies.

The sinking of the earth would make a convulsion of the air, and that crack must so shake or squeeze the atmosphere, as to bring down all the remaining vapours.—Dr T. Burnet, Theory of the Earth.

He therefore first among the swains was found
To reap the produce of his labour'd ground,
And squeezed the swains with golden liquor crown'd.
Dryden, Translation of the Georgics, iv. 204.
When Florio speaks, what virgin could withstand,
If gentle Damon did not squeeze her hand?
Pope, Rape of the Lock, canto I.

2. Oppress; crush; harass by extortion.

In a civil war people must expect to be crushed and squeezed toward the burden.—Sir R. L. Estlin.

3. Force between close bodies.

Squeeze, v. n.

1. Act or pass, in consequence of compression.

A concave sphere of gold filled with water and soldered up, upon pressing the sphere with great force, let the water squeeze through it, and stand all over its outside in multitudes of small drops, like dew, without bursting or cracking the body of the gold.—Sir I. Newton, On Opticks.

2. Force way through close bodies.

Many a publick minister comes empty in; but when he has crammed his guts, he is fain to squeeze hard before he can get off.—Sir R. L. Estlin.

Squeeze, s. Compression; pressure.

A subtle artist stands with yond'rous bag,
That bears upripiand winds of gentler sort
Than those that erst Laertes' son enclosed:
Peaceful they sleep; but let the tuneful squeezes
Of labouring elbow rouse them, out they fly
Melodious, and with spritely accents charm.
J. Philips, Cyder, II. 420.

Squeezing, verbal abs.

1. Act of one who, or that which, squeezes.

It is applied to the squeezing or pressing of things downwards, as in the presses for printing.—Bishop Wilkins.

2. Produce of squeezing; thing squeezed out.

What crowds of them, impudently bold,
In sounds and jingling syllables grown old,
Still run on puns, in a rushing vein,
E'en to the drops and squeezings of the brain!
Pope, Essay on Criticism, III. 604.

Squelch, v. a. Crush.

He has almost trod my guts out.—
O, 'twas your luck and mine to be squelch'd.
Ben Jonson and Fletcher, Nine Valours.

Squelch, s. Flat full on one side.

He tore the earth which he had saved
From squelch of knight, and storm'd and raved.
Author, Hudibras, I. 2. 885.

So soon as the poor devil had recovered the squelch, away he scamper'd, bawling like mad.—Sir R. L. Estlin.

Squib, s. [?]]

1. Small pipe of paper filled with wildfire.

The armada at Cadix, Sir Walter Raleigh was wont prettily to say, were suddenly driven away with squibs; for it was no more than a stratagem of fire-works manna, and sent upon them.—Baron, Considerations on a War with Spain.

The first of the south compareth the French valour to a squib, or fire of flax, which burns and crackles for a time, but suddenly extinguishes.—Horrell, Vocall Forest.

Lampoons, like squibs, may make a present blaze; But time, and thunder, pay respect to lays.
Waller.

Furious he begins his march,
Drives rattling on a brazen arch;
With squibs and crackers arm'd to throw
Among the trembling crowd below.
Swift.

Criticks on verse, as squibs on triumphs wait,
Proclaim the glory, and augment the state.
Young.

2. Sudden flash.

Dead clouds of sadness, or light squibs of mirth
Donne, Poems, p. 311.

3. Lampoon. Colloquial.

'What! Mark the fact?' said the curate of Lamsmere, with a smile. 'Come to write squibs for the election?' 'Squibs, sir?' cried Mark, indignantly. 'Burns wrote squibs,' said the curate, mildly.—Lord Lytton, My Novel, II. xi. 47.

They talk of things literary, of things pictorial, of the last scandal of the sacred rollers, of the last squib of the Corsica.—Steu, Dutch Pictures, The Shadow of a Young Dutch Painter.

4. Petty fellow. Obsolete.

Asked for their pass by every squib
That list at will them to revile or snail.
Spenser, Mother Hubbard's Tale.

The squibs, in this common phrase, are called libellers.—Tatler, no. 100.

5. Specially applied to one of the lower functionaries in the old governing houses.

A squib is a juff of lower rank, who serves at half-pay salary while he is learning to die.—J. Disraeli, Curiosities of Literature, G.

Squill, s.

1. Plant of the genus Scilla.

Seed or kernels of apples and pears put into a squill, which is like a great onion, will come in earlier than in the earth itself.—Baron, Natural and Experimental History.
'Twill down like oxeye of squills.
Lord Roscommon.

The self-same atoms
Can, in the truffle, furnish out a feast:
And muscate, in the seely squill, the taste.
Garth.

The squill... hath a large aerial bulbous root like an onion: the leaves are broad; the flowers are like those of ornithogalum, or the starry hyacinth: they grow in a long spike, and come out before the leaves.—Milner, Gardener's Dictionary.

2. In Ichthyology. Translation, scarcely current, of the Lat. aquilla, the generic name of a crustacean: (as the first element in a compound).

The squill-insect is so called from some similitude to the squill-fish, in having a long body covered with a crust, composed of several rings: the head broad and squat.—Grew.

Squinancy, s. [Lat. cynanche; Gr. κυνίχη.]

Quinsy.

Used for squinancies and inflammations of the throat; it seems to have a modifying and lenifying virtue.—Baron.

In a squinancy there is danger of suffocation.—Wiseeman, Surgery.

Squint, adj. Looking obliquely; looking not directly; looking suspiciously.

Herdrcrom, I fear me, thou have a squint eye.
Spenser, Shepherd's Calendar, August.

Her look is squint, with which wisely beholding one, she fix'dly looketh upon another.—Translation of Boetius, p. 71. 1820.

Where an equal pool of hope and fear
Does arbitrate the event, my nature is
That I incline to hope rather than fear,
And gladly banish squint suspicion.
Milton, Comus, 410.

Squint, s. [Fr. guigner.] Oblique look.

Squint, v. n. Look obliquely; look not in a direct line of vision.

Some can squint when they will; and children set upon a table with a candle behind them, both eyes will move outwards, to see the light, and so induce squinting.—Baron.

Not a period of this epistle but squints towards another ever against it.—Pope.

Squint, v. a.

1. Form the eye to oblique vision.

This is the foul Filberticidnet; he gives the web and the pin, squints the eye, and makes the hardlip.—Shakespeare, King Lear, III. 4.

2. Turn the eye obliquely.

Perkin began already to squint one eye upon the crown and another upon the sanctuary.—Baron, History of the Kings of Henry VII.

Squinteyed, adj.

1. Having the sight directed oblique.

He was so squinteyed, that he seemed spitefully to look upon them whom he beheld.—Knodice, History of the Turks.

2. Indirect; oblique; malignant.

This is such a false and squinteyed praise,
Which seeming to look upwards on his glories,
Looks down upon my fears.
Sir J. Denham, The Sophy.

Squintifogo, adj. Squinting. Coined.

The timber and the squintifogo maid
Of Isis was there; lost the gods for sin,
Should, with a swelling dross, stuff thy skin.
Dryden, Translation of Persius, v. 271.

Squiny, v. n. Look askant.

I remember thine eyes well enough: Dost thou squiny at me?—Shakespeare, King Lear, IV. 6.

Squire, s. [squire.]

1. Gentleman next in rank to a knight.

He will maintain you like a scutcheon-woman.—As.
that I will, come out and long had under the device of a squire.—Shakespeare, Merry Wives of Windsor, III. 4.

The rest are princes, barons, knights, squires,
And gentlemen of blood.
Id., Henry V., IV. 8.

On this occasion therefore the interest of the chiefs of the aristocracy, Norfolk and Somerset, Newcastle and Bedford, Pembroke and Dorset, coincided with that of the wealthy traders of the City and of the clever young aspirants of the Temple, and was diametrically opposed to the interest of a squire of a thousand or twelve hundred a year.—Maccubley, History of England, ch. xlii.

2. Attendant on a noble warrior.

Old Bites' form he took, Anchises' squire
Now left to rule Ascanius.
Dryden, Translation of the Æneid, IX. 888.

Knights, squires, and steeds must enter on the stage.
Pope, Essay on Criticism, II. 252.

3. Attendant at court: (used as the first element in a compound in the extracts.)

Return with her...
I could as well be brought
To kneel his throne; and, squire-like, pension beg,
To keep base life a-foot.
Shakespeare, King Lear, II. 1.

Minion of the suburbs,
And now and then admitted to the court,
And honoured with the style of squire of dames...

What is the second?—
The Minion of the Suburbs.—What hath he
To do in Constantinople?—I steal in now and then
As I am thought useful; marry, there I called
The squire of dames, or servant of the sex....

But you are
The squire of dames, devoted to the service
Of handsome ladies, ... the go-between,
This female and that waiting sir.

Masquing, The Emperor of the East, I. 2.
This squire of dames can, it appears probable, command the Seven Angels, Uriel, Michael, and company.—Carlyle, Critical and Miscellaneous Essays, Count Castiglione.

Squire, v. a. Attend as a squire.

Squiring to tilt-yards, play-houses, and all such publick places.—H. Jonson, Cynthia's Revels.

He is a Frenchman squires her to every place she visits, either on pleasure or business.—Guthrie, Geography, France.

Squirearchy, s. Member of the squirearchy.

Man is made for his fellow-creatures. I had long been disgusted with the interference of those selfish squirearches.—Lord Lytton, The Caxtons, II. ch. 21.

Squirearchy, s. Coined and hybrid word, expressive of the class, influence, or preponderance of the landed interest, i.e. of the squires.

Squireen, s. Squireling. Irish.

Squirehood, s. Rank and state of an squire.

If this should be the test of squirehood, it will go hard with a great number of my fraternity, as well as myself, who must all be unsquired, because a squire would will not be allowed to keep us company.—Swift, Letter to the King at Arms.

Squireling. s. Small squire. Contemptuous.
But to-morrow, if we live,
Our ponderous squire will give
A grand political dinner
To half the squirelings near.
Tennyson, Maud, xix. 2.

Squrely. adj. Becoming a squire.
One very fit for this squrely function.—Shelton, Translation of Don Quixote, i. 4.

Squireship. s. Rank, condition of a squire.
What profit hast thou reaped by this thy squire-ship?—Shelton, Translation of Don Quixote, i. 4.

Squirrel. s. [Fr. écureuil; Lat. sciurus, from Gr. skion = shade + oipai = tail.] Native animal of the class Rodentia (i.e. akin to the mice, rabbits, &c.) of the genus Sciurus (vulgaris).
One chanced to find a nut,
In the end of which a hole was cut,
Which lay upon a hazel-root,
There waited by a squirrel,
Which on the kernel gotten quick;
When quoth this fly, dear queen, be glad,
Let Oberon be ne'er so mad,
I'll set you safe from peril.
Drayton, Nymphidia.

The squirrel derives its name from the form of its tail, oia, a shade, oipai, a tail, as serving this little animal for an umbrella. That part is long, the rest of the body is clothed with hairs, disposed on each side horizontally, which gives it a great breadth. These serve a double purpose; when erect, they prove a secure protection from the injuries of heat and cold; when extended, they are very instrumental in promoting those vast leaps the animal takes from tree to tree. On the authority of Klein and Linnæus we may add a third application of the form of the tail; these naturalists tell us, that when the squirrel is disposed to cross a river, a piece of bark is the bark, and the tail the sail.—Pennant, British Zoology.

The squirrel is liable to considerable variety in point of colour, becoming grey in the gions. Linnæus, in his Lachesis Lapponica, states that the inhabitants of the Lapland Alps contrive, by means of their wooden bows, to procure in the course of the winter a considerable number of squirrels (Sciurus vulgaris) in their grey or white clothing, for the sake of their skins. Even in this country it appears that a certain degree of change takes place in the colour of the fur in spring and in autumn. Mr. Blyth first informed me of this fact, and states that in the summer the fur is much coarser, and more uniformly red; the pencils of the ears also are lost, as has been observed by former naturalists; in the winter the sides of the body assume a greyish tint, the pencils of the ears are long and full, and the fur softer and fuller. The summer change is not perfect till July.—Bell, History of British Quadrupeds, including the Edentata.

The climbing squirrels have four digits on the fore foot, and five digits on the hind foot. All possess complete collar-bones. In the grey squirrel the scapula is remarkable for the number and strength of the intermuscular crista. The squirrel's favourite nut is mainly held between the thumb tubercles, when operated on by the chisel-teeth. The little flying squirrel is chiefly remarkable for the long and strong accessory cartilage projecting from the ulnar side of the carpus, which aids in supporting the lateral fold of intercurrent serving as a parachute. Owen, Anatomy of Vertebrates, vol. iii. p. 383.

Squirt. v. a. [Norw. squitta; skit and skitling are connected with this word.] Throw out in a quick stream.
Sir Roger she mortally hated, and used to hire fellows to squirt kennel water upon him as he passed along.—Arbuthnot.

Squirt. v. n. Prate; let fly. Vulgarism.
You are so given to squiring up and down, and chattering, that the world would say, I had chosen a jack-pudding for a prime minister.—Sir R. L'Estrange.

Squirt. s.
1. Instrument by which a quick stream is ejected.
His weapons are a pin to scratch, and a squirt to bespatter.—Pope.
As the first element in a compound.
He with his squirt-fire could disperse
Whole troops.
Butler, Hudibras.

2. Small quick stream.
Water thrown with squirts of an infusion of the medicine in diluted water.—Bacon, Natural and Experimental History.

Squorter. s. One who plies a squirt.
The squorters were at it with their kennel water, for they were mad for the loss of their bubble.—Arbuthnot.

Stab. v. a. [Provincial German, staben.]
1. Pierce with a pointed weapon.

Near the lamentations of poor Anne,
Wife to thy Edward, to thy slaughter'd son;
Stab'd by the self-same hand that made these wounds.
Shakespeare, Richard III. i. 2.
Porcius, think thou wert thy dying brother
Stab'd at his heart, and all becaus'd with blood,
Storming at thee!
Addison, Cato.

2. Wound mortally or mischievously.
What tears will then be shed!
Then, to complete her woe, will I expose
Hermione: . . . 'twill stab her to the heart!
A. Phillips, Distressed Mother.

Stab. v. n.
1. Give a wound with a pointed weapon.
Now shall dare
With shorten'd sword to stab in closer war;
But in fair combat fight.
Dryden, Palamon and Arcite, iii. 508.

2. Offer a stab.
Thou had'st a thousand daggers in thy thoughts,
Which thou hast whetted on thy stony heart,
To stab at half an hour of my frail life.
Shakespeare, Henry IV. Part II. iv. 4.

3. Give a mortal wound.
He speaks poniards, and every word stabs.—Shakespeare, Much Ado about Nothing, ii. 1.

Stab. s.
1. Wound with a sharp-pointed weapon.
The elements
Wound the loud winds, or with beweek't at stabs
Kill the still closing waters.
Shakespeare, Tempest, iii. 3.

2. Dark injury; sly mischief.
3. Stroke; blow.
He had a scripture ready to repel them all; every pertinent text need home being a direct stab to a temptation.—South, Sermons.

Stabber. s. One who stabs; privy murderer.
Stabbing. verbal abs. Act of one who stabs.
Killing a man with a sword or a hatchet are looked on as no distinct species of action; but if the point of the sword first enter the body, it passes for a distinct species where it has a distinct name; as in England, where it is called stabbing. Locke.

Stabblingly. ade. In a stabbing manner; with intent to do a dark injury; maliciously.
This intimation against the comel is as stabblingly suggested as the story of Sardanapalus; that a man cannot give a general character of a meritorious statesman, but some of his majesty's privy-council must immediately be glanced at.—Bishop Parker, Reply to Recantation Transposed, p. 287: 1673.

Stabbliment. s. Support; firmness; act of making firm.
They serve for stabbliment, propagation, and shade.
In Rhin.

Stabblitate. v. a. Make stable; establish.
The soul about itself circumgyrates
Her various forms, and what she most doth love
She oft before herself stabblitates.
Dr. H. More, Immortality of the Soul, l. 2, 33: 1647.

Stability. s. [Fr. stabilité; Lat. stabilitas.]
1. Stableness; steadiness; strength to stand.
Wisdom and knowledge shall be the stability of thy times. Isaiah, xxxii. 6.
By the same degrees that either of these happen, the stability of the figure is by the same lessened.—Sir W. Temple.

2. Fixeness; not fluidity.
These mighty girder which the fabric bind,
These ribs round and vast in order join'd,
Such strength and such stability impart,
That storms above, and earthquakes underground
Break not the pillars.
Sir R. Blackmore.

3. Firmness of resolution.
This and that hanging state's stability. Cotton.

Stable. adj. [Fr.; Lat. stabilis.]
1. Fixed; able to stand; steady; constant; fixed in resolution or conduct.
If a man would be invincible,
He must be like a rock or stone, or tree;

For ev'n the perfect angels were not stable,
But had a fall more desperate than we.
Sir J. Davies, Immortality of the Soul.
No perfect, stable; but imperfect we,
Subject to change.
Dryden, Palamon and Arcite, iii. 1046.

2. Strong; fixed in a state or condition; durable.
This region of chance and vanity, where nothing is stable, nothing equal; nothing could be offered to-day but what to-morrow might deprive us of.—Rogers.

Stable. v. a. Make stable; fix; establish.
Obsolete.
Articles devised by the king's highness to stable Christian quietness and unity among the people.—Strype, Life of Archbishop Cranmer (under 1536).

Stable. s. [Lat. stabulum.] House for beasts.
I will make Rabbah a stable for camels.—Ezekiel, xxx. 5.
Stabful disorder fill'd his stable,
And stutish plenty deck'd her table.
Prior, An Epitaph.

Stable. v. n. [Lat. stabulo.] Kennel; dwell as beasts.
In their palaces,
Where luxury late reign'd, sea monsters whelp'd
And stab'd.
Milton, Paradise Lost, xi. 730.

Stable. v. a. Put into a stable.
Phorus, warlike of his yearly tasks,
Establish'd his steeds in hasty lays.
Spenser, Shephard's Calendar, November.

Stableboy. s. Boy who attends in the stable.
As soon as you alight at the inn, deliver your horses to the stableboy.—Swift.

Stableman. s. Groom; ostler.
If the gentleman hath bin a night, get the stableman and the wench to stand in his way. Swift.
I would with jockeys from Newmarket dine,
And to rough riders give my choicest wine;
I would carous some stableman of note,
And imitate his language and his coat.
Bramston.

Stableness. s. Attribute suggested by Stable; power to stand; steadiness; constancy; stability.
The king-becoming graces,
As justice, verity, temperance, stableness,
Bounty, perseverance, I have no relish of them.
Shakespeare, Macbeth, iv. 3.
Light of understanding, stableness of persuasion.
—Translators of the Bible, preface.

Stables. s. ? Stablestand. The following is the text, as it stands in all the editions, except that of Sir J. Haumer, who proposes stablestand, and that of Collier, who, from the corrected folio of 1632, reads—
I'll keep me stable where I lodge my wife.

Here me means myself, the sense being that he will keep himself constantly by his wife. Sir J. Haumer's reading, adopted in the previous editions, gives the extract under Stablestand. Malone thinks that stables, in a secondary sense, may mean station, i.e. the statio stabulis of Haumer. A German translation renders the word by Schilbwehr = sentry. This is about the amount of authority in favour of the word meaning stablestand. The present editor so interprets it; but he thinks that stables may be the word; i.e. that the ordinary reading may be combined with Sir J. Haumer's explanation. Hence, he has entered the word separately.

Be certain what you do, sir, lest your justice prove violence; in which three great ones suffer. Yourself, your queen, your son.—For her, my lord, I dare my life lay down, and will do it, Sir, Please you to accept it, that the queen is spotless I the eyes of heaven, and to you; I mean in this which you accuse her.—If it prove she's otherwise, I'll keep my stables where I lodge my wife; I'll go in company with her; Thus when I feel and see her, no further trust her; For every inch of woman in the world, Aye, every dram of woman's flesh, is false, if she be.
Shakespeare, Winter's Tale, ii. 1.

Stablestand. s. See extract from Cowell.
Stablestand is one of the four evidences or presumptions, whereby a man is convicted to intend the stealing of the king's deer in the forest; and this is when a man is found at his standing in the forest with a cross bow bent, ready to shoot at any deer; or with a long bow, or else standing close by a tree with greyhounds in a leash ready to slip.—Cowell.

Stable-stand (stabilis statio), as Spelman interprets it, is a term of the forest laws, and signifies a place where a deer-stealer fixes his stand under some convenient cover, and keeps watch for the purpose of killing deer as they pass by. From the place it came to be applied also to the person; and any man taken in a forest in that situation, with a gun or bow in his hand, was presumed to be an offender, and had the name of a stable-stand. In all former editions this hath been printed stable; and it may perhaps be objected that another syllable added spoils the smoothness of the verse. But by pronouncing stable short, the measure will very well bear it according to the liberty allowed in this kind of writing, and which Shakspeare never scruples to use; therefore I read stable-stand.—Hammer, Note on Winter's Tale, ii. 1.

Stabling. s. House or room for beasts.

Her terror once, on Afric's tawny shore,
Now smoked in dust, a stabling now for wolves!

Thomson, Liberty, pt. iii.

Stablish. v. a. [Fr. établir.] Establish; fix; settle.

Then she began a treaty to procure,
And stablish terms betwixt both their requests.

Spenser.

Now our Lord Jesus Christ himself, and God, even our Father, . . . comfort your hearts, and stablish you in every good work. — 2 Thimothians, ii. 16.
Stop effusion of our Christian blood,
And stablish quietness on every side.

Shakspeare, Henry VI. Part I. v. 1.

Poor heretics in love there be,
Which think to stablish dangerous constancy;
But I have told them, since you will be true,
You shall be true to them who're false to you.

Donne.

His covenant sworn
To David, stablish'd as the days of Heaven,
Milton, Paradise Lost, xii. 346.

Stack. s. [Icelandic.]

1. Large quantity of hay, corn, or wood, heaped up regularly together.

Against every pillar was a stack of billets above a man's height, which the watermen that bring wood down the Seine laid there. — Bacon, Natural and Experimental History.

While the marquis and his servant on foot were chasing the kid about the stack, the prince from horseback killed him with a pistol. — Sir H. Wotton, Life of the Duke of Buckingham.

While the cock, with lively din,
Scatters the fear of darkness thim;
And to the stack or the barn-door
Stoutly struts his dames before.

Milton, L'Allegro, 19.

Stacks of moist corn grow hot by fermentation. —
Sir I. Newton.

An inundation, says the fable,
O'erslow'd a farmer's barn and stable;
While ricks of hay and stacks of corn
Were down the sudden current borne.

Swift.

"Well, Snigford," said his lordship, in a peremptory tone, "this is a pretty business; I'll have this stopped directly." Fortunate man, if he had succeeded in doing so! The torch of the inventory had for the first time been introduced into the parish of Marney;
and last night the primrose stacks of the Abbey farm had blazed, a beacon to the neglected neighbourhood.
— R. Dismal, Spirit, b. ii. ch. iii.

2. Number of chimneys or funnels standing together.

A mason making a stack of chimneys, the foundation of the house sunk. — Wiseham, Surgery.

Stack. v. a. Pile up regularly into a stack;
make a stack.

So likewise a hovel will serve for a room,
To stack on the penne.

*Tassie, Five Hundred Points of Good
Husbandry*.

Stacte. s. [Gr. στακτή; Lat. stacte; A.S. stacte.] Aromatic gum that distils from the tree which produces myrrh.

Take unto thee sweet spices, stacte, and onycha, and galbanum. — Ezekiel, xxi. 26.

Stade. s. [Fr.; Lat. stadium.] Furlong.
The greatness of the town, by that we could judge, stretch'd in circuit some forty stades. — Juvenal, Satire of the Septuagint, p. 71: 1523.

Stadium. s. Latin form of Stade: (plural, stadia).

Theophrastus held it impossible to cultivate the olive at the distance of more than four hundred stadia from the sea. — Arsenius, History of Rome,
ch. xxiii. note.

Städe. s. [A.S. stæð, stæð, stæð.]

1. Anything which serves for support to another.

2. Staff; crutch. Obsolete.

He cometh on, his weak stæðs governing
And aged limbs on cypress stæðs stout,
And with an ivy twine his waist is girt about.

Spenser, Faerie Queen.

3. ? Standard.

Leave growing for stadles the likeliest and best,
Though seller and buyer dispatched the rest.

*Tassie, Five Hundred Points of Good
Husbandry*.

Coppice-woods, if you leave in them stadles too thick, will run to bushes and briars, and have little clean underwood. — Bacon.

Städle. n. a. Leave sufficient stadles when a wood is cut.

First see it well fenced, ere hewers begin;
Then see it well stadled without and within.

*Tassie, Five Hundred Points of Good
Husbandry*.

Stadtholder. s. Chief magistrate of the United Provinces.

They had secret powers given them, to treat concerning the prince of Orange's being their stadtholder. — Bishop Burnet, History of his own Time, King Charles II.

Staff. s. [A.S. staf, staf. — See under Stave.]

1. Stick with which a man supports himself in walking.

It much would please him,

That of his fortunes you should make a staff
To lean upon.

Shakspeare, Antony and Cleopatra, iii. 11.

Grant me and my people the benefit of thy em-bellishments, that thy rod as well as thy staff may comfort us. — Edison Basilisk.

2. Prop; support.

Hope is a lover's staff; walk hence with that,
And manage it against despairing thoughts.

Shakspeare, Two Gentlemen of Verona, iii. 1.

The boy was the very staff of my age, my very prop. — Id., Merchant of Venice, ii. 2.

If a subject be a son, then might he be a staff unto his father, wherewith not to strike but to sus-tain him. — Hobbes.

3. Stick used as a weapon; club; handle of an edged or pointed weapon: (plural, staves).

I cannot strike at writhed kernies, whose arms
Are hired to bear their staves.

Shakspeare, Macbeth, v. 7.

He that bought the skin ran greater risks than I other that sold it, and had the worse end of the staff. — Sir R. L'Estrange.

Out from his house ran every neighbour nigh;

The vicar first, and after him the . . .
With forks and staves the felon to pursue.

Dryden, The Cuck and the Fox, 725.

This staff shall not serve

To beat the dog off.

Massey, The Unnatural Combat, iii. 1.

4. Any long piece of wood.

He forthwith from the glittering staff unfurled
The imperial ensign.

Milton, Paradise Lost, i. 535.

To his single eye, that in his forehead glared
Like a full moon, or a broad burnish'd shield,
A forked staff we desperately apply'd,
Which in the spacious socket turning round,
Scout out the big round jelly from his orb.

Addison, Milton's Style imitated.

5. Round step of a ladder.

Descending and ascending by ladders, I ascended at one of six hundred and thirty-nine staves, or eighty-nine fathoms. — Dr. E. Brown, Travel Europe.

6. Ensign of an office; badge of authority.

Methought this staff, mine office-badge in court,
Was broke in twain.

Shakspeare, Henry VI. Part II. l. 2.

All his officers broke their staves: but at their return new staves were conveyed unto them. — *Sir J.
Hayward, Life and Reign of King Edward VI.*

Set all things right, or, as my name is Order,
And by this staff of office that commands you,
This chain and double ruff, symbols of power,
Whose uses in his function.

For one whole week makes forfeiture of his breakfast,

And privilege of the wine-cellar.

Massey, A New Way to Pay Old Debts, l. 2.

7. Establishment of officers, in various departments, attached to generals and armies.

8. See under Stave.

Cowley found out that no kind of staff is proper for an heroic poem, as being too free and lyrical; yet though he wrote in couplets, where rhyme is freer from constraint, he affects half-verse. — Dryden.

When Criso once a puny stick show'd,
He beat him with a staff of his own ode.

Harte.

Stä-striker. s. Sturdy beggar.

As trade increased, however, it was found that this maximian could not be enforced in the walled towns, and especially at the sea-ports, where there was a growing demand for labourers. Hence there was a con- at struggle on the part of the young husbandmen to get . . . ports. They crossed the country in bands of a . . . together, carrying quarter-staffs, begging their way, and threatening those who would not give alms; and hence arose the term 'sturdy beggar' and 'stä-striker' in the . . . statutes. To stop this, Acts were passed to compel husbandmen entering walled towns. They were not, however, evaded, and the foolish attempt forcibly to regulate wages was gradually abandoned. — Doubleday, The True Law of Population, p. 26: 1853.

Stämsh. adj. Stiff; harsh. Rare.

A wit in youth not over dull, heavy, stout, and laughish, but level, tough, and though somewhat stiffish, bold for learning and wide course of living, proweth always best. — Arden.

Stag. s. [see Stag.] Male red deer; male of the hind.

To the place a peer sequestered stag,
That from the hunter's aim had even a hurt,
Did come to languish.

Shakspeare, As you like it, ii. 1.

The swift stag from under ground
Bore up his branching head.

Milton, Paradise Lost, vii. 463.

The inhabitants of seas and skies shall change,
And fish on shore, and stags in air shall range.

Dryden, Translation of Virgil, Eclogues, l. 79.

A few of the terms [of Venery], betokening the different ages of the stag and hind, are still retained, though somewhat altered. The young of either sex is called a calf; after a few months the male becomes distinguished by the growth of the bosses, or frontal protuberances, on which the horns are afterwards developed, which during the first year are merely rounded knobs, from whence he takes the name of knollster. In the second year they are longer and pointed, and are called clags, and the animal has now the name of lockset.
In the third year the first or brow antler, has made its appearance, and the deer becomes a stag.
In the fourth the be-antler is added, and he is then termed a staggyrd. He is a stag in the fifth year, when the third antler or royal appears; and in the sixth, the commencement of the surrall or crown is formed, when he takes the name of hart, which name he retains through life. At this time he is called a hart or stag of ten. Probably because the branches including the surrall frequently amount to that number. After the seventh year he is said to be cracked, or jointed, or crowned, according to the number of branches composing the surrall.
The female is a calf in the first year, a bracket's sister in the second, and in the third and ever afterwards, a hind. — Id., History of British Quadrupeds, including the Catæ.

Stage. s. [N.Fr. estage; Modern Fr. étage.]

1. Floor raised to view on which any show is exhibited; raised floor of temporary use;
raised platform.

We primers, I tell you, are set on stages, in the sight and view of all the world. — Queen Elizabeth, Speech to Parliament: 1546.

I have seen the whole front of a mountebank's stage, from one end to the other, faced with patients, certificates, medals, and great seals, by which the several princes of Europe have testified their esteem for the doctor! — Trotter, m. 210.

See! on the embowered plain,

Clearing a stage,

Scattering the just away,

Comes the new man.

M. Arach.

2. Theatre; place of scenic or dramatic entertainments.

This green plot shall be our stage. — Shakspeare, Midsummer-Night's Dream, m. 1.

They errand us,

That with delight you profit, and endavour
To build their names up fair, and on the stage

Decider to the die want honour: want
On good and glorious actions, and what shame
Treads on the heels of vice, the salary
Of sex sesterlin. — Massey, The Roman Actor, l. 1.

Are you on the stage,

You talk so loudly. The whole world is one.

Ibid., l. 3.

I maintain, against the enemies of the stages that patterns of piety, decency represented, may second the precepts. — Dryden.

Knights, squares, and steeds must enter on the stage. — Pope, Essay on Criticism, ll. 288.

Used adjectively.

Neither shall we offer any extract as a specimen of the diction and sentiment that reigns in these dramas. We have said before that it is fair well-ordered stage-act about this of his; that the diction too is good, well-sequenced, grammatical diction; no fault to be found with either, except that they pretend to be poetry, and are throughout the most unadorned prose. — Carlyle, Critical and Miscellaneous Essays, German Playwrights.

3. Any place where anything is publicly transacted or performed.

When we are born, we cry that we are come
To this great stage of fools.

Shakspeare, King Lear, iv. 6.
1025

4. Place in which rest is taken on a journey; as much of a journey as is performed without intermission.

I shall put you in mind where it was you promised to set out, or begin your first stage; and bewitch you to go before me my guide.—Hammond, Practical Catechism.

Our next stage brought us to the mouth of the Tiber.—Addison, Travels in Italy.
From thence compell'd by craft and age,
She makes the head her latest stage.

We must not expect that our journey through the several stages of this life should be all smooth and even.—Lishop Atterbury.

Men drop so fast, ere life's mid stage we tread,
Few know so many friends alive, as dead. Young.

5. Single step of gradual process.

The changes and vicissitudes in wars are many; but chiefly in the seats or stages of the war, the weapons, and the manner of the conduct.—Bacon, Essays.

This is by some called the first stage of a consumption, but I had rather call it an ill habit preparatory to that distemper.—Sir R. Blackmore.

To prepare the soul to be a fit inhabitant of that holy place to which we aspire, is to be brought to perfection by gradual advances through several hard and laborious stages of discipline.—Royce.

The first stage of healing, or the discharge of matter, is by surgeons called digestion.—Sharp, Surgery.

History, however, in dealing with this Reign of Terror, has had her own difficulties. While the phenomenon continued in its primary state, as mere 'Horrors of the French Revolution,' there was abundance to be said and shrieked. With and without profit. . . . And now, in a new stage of the business, when History, ceasing to shriek, would try rather to include under her old forms of speech or explanation this new amazing thing; that some accredited scientific Law of Nature might suffice for the unexpected Product of Nature, and History might get to speak of it articulately, and draw inferences and profit from it; in this new stage, History, we must say, hobbles and founders perhaps in a still painful manner.—Carlyle, History of the French Revolution, b. v. ch. i.

Stage. v. a. Exhibit publicly.

I love the people;
But do not like to stage me to their eyes;
Though it do well, I do not relish well
Their loud applause.

Shakespeare, Measure for Measure, i. 1.

The quick comedians
Extemporarily will stage us, and present
Our Alexandrian revels.

Id., Antony and Cleopatra, v. 2.

Stagecoach. s. Coach that keeps its stages; coach that passes and repasses on certain days for the accommodation of passengers.

The story was told me by a priest, as we travelled in a stagecoach.—Addison.
When late their merry sides stagecoaches show,
And their stiff horses through the town move slow . . .
Then let the prudent walker shoes provide.

Gay, Trivia, l. 23.

Used adjectively.

I quitted the Piazza Coffee House, very much enlightened in my ideas of the dissimings of matrimony, and the advantage of making stage-coach acquaintanceships.—Theodore Hook, Gilbert Gurney.

Stagely. adj. Belonging to the stage; befitting the stage.

Nor may this be called an histrionic parade, or stagely visit and hypocrisy, while women seek to appear advantaged in stature, or in beauty.—Jeremy Taylor, A Artificial Handmaidens, p. 164.

Stageplay. s. Theatrical entertainment.

This rough-cast unknown poetry was instead of stageplays for one hundred and twenty years.—Dryden, Translation of Juvenal, dedication.

These two Mytilene brethren, lately torn, crept out of a small galliot into the majesty of great kings. Herein admire the wonderful changes and chances of these worldly things, now up, now down, the life of man were not of much more certainty than a stageplay.—Kneller, History of the Turks.

It is customary with fathers in stage-plays, after giving their daughters to the men of their hearts, to congratulate themselves on having no other business on their hands but to die immediately: though it is rarely found that they are in a hurry to do it. Mr. Pecksniff, being a father of a more sage and practical class, appeared to think that his immediate business was to live; and having deprived himself of any comfort, to surround himself with others.—Tichman, Maria Chuzzlewit, ch. xxi.

Stageplayer. s. One who publicly represents actions on the stage.

One Livius Andronicus was the first stageplayer in Rome.—Dryden, Translation of Juvenal, dedication.

Among slaves who exercised polite arts, none sold so often as stageplayers or actors.—Arbuthnot, Tables of ancient Coins, Weights, and Measures.

Stager. s.1. Player.

You . . . safe in your stage clothes,
Have quit, upon your catkins,
The stagers and the stagewrights too. B. Jonson.

2. One who has long acted on the stage of life; practitioner; person of cunning.

I've heard old cunning stagers
Say, 'twas for argument use wagers.

Butler, Hudibras, ii. 1, 297.

One experienced stager, that had baffled twenty tricks and tricks before, discovered the plot.—Sir E. L'Estremp.

Some stagers of the wiser sort
Made all these idle wanderers their sport:
But he, who heard what every fool could say,
Would never fix his thought, but trim his time away.

Dryden.

One cries out, these stagers
Come in good time to make more work for wagers. Id.

Be by a person cheated!
Had you been cunning stagers,
You might yourselves be treated
By captains and by majors. Swift.

A stately sentiment comes tramping forth with a clank that sounds poetic and heretic: we start in breathless expectation waiting to reverence the heavenly guest; and, alas, he proves to be but an old stager dressed in new buckram, a stager well known to us, once, often a stager that has already been drummed out of most well-regulated communities.—Carlyle, Critical and Miscellaneous Essays, German Playwrights.

Stagery. s. Scenic exhibition; show on the stage.

Lakeing those grave controversies to a piece of stagey, or scene-work.—Milton, Apology for Smect-ynus.

Stagetruck. adj. Smitten with a love of the theatre; mad after the drama.

'You are a precious fool, Jack Bunter,' said Cleveland, half angry, and, in despite of himself, half diverted by the false tones and exaggerated posture of the stagetruck pirate.—Sir W. Scott, The Pirate, ch. xxxix.

Stagewright. s. Dramatic poet.

And much good do't you then,
Brave pluck and velvet tongue;
(Can feed on art; and, safe in your stage clothes,
Lure quill upon your catkins.
The stagers and the stagewrights too. B. Jonson.

Staggard. s. Four year old stag.

(For example see under Stag.)

Stagger. v. n. [Provincial German, staggeren.]1. Reel; not stand or walk steadily.

He struck with all his might
Full on the helmet of the unwary knight:
Deep was the wound; he stagger'd with the blow.

Dryden, Palamon and Arcite, iii. 512.

He began to appear sick and giddy, and to stagger;
after which he fell down as dead.—Boyle.

2. Faint; begin to give way.

The enemy stagger: if you follow your blow, he falls at your feet; but if you allow him respite, he will recover his strength.—Addison.

3. Hesitate; fall into doubt; become less confident or determined.

He staggered not at the promise of God through unbelief; but was strong in faith.—Romans, iv. 20.

A man may, if he were of a fearful heart, stagger in this attempt.—Shakespeare, As you like it, iii. 5.

These means to fortify belief are experience, reason, and authority: of these the most potent is authority; for belief upon reason, or experience, will stagger.—Bacon.

But let it inward sink and drown my mind:
Falsehood shall want its triumph: I begin
To stagger; but I'd prop myself within. Dryden.

The staggering state of French statesmen must even stagger whither it is bound.—Carlyle, Critical and Miscellaneous Essays, Mirabeau.

Stagger. v. a.1. Make to stagger; make to reel.

That hand shall turn in never-cenching fire,
That staggers thus my person.

Shakespeare, Richard II., v. 5.

2. Shock; alarm; make less steady or confident.

The question did at first so stagger me,
Bearing a state of mighty moment in't.
Shakespeare, Henry VIII., ii. 4.

Whoever will read the story of this war, will find himself much staggered, and put to a kind of riddle.
—Howell.

When a prince falls in honour and justice, 'tis enough to stagger his people in their allegiance.—
Sir E. L'Estremp.

The shells being lodged with the belomites, scenites, and other like natural shells, it was enough to stagger a spectator, and make him ready to entertain a belief that these were no two.—Woodward.

The general seemed staggered in his resolution, but still attempted to rush past him. But Hartley, seizing him by the collar of his coat on each side,
'You are my prisoner,' he said; 'I command you to follow me.'—Sir W. Scott, The Surgeon's Daughter,
ch. viii.

Stagger. s. Staggering motion.

The individual whom Paul Deth discerned in the act of progression towards him, seemed to be more than ordinarily incommoded by the inclemency of the weather; and, to tell truth, with his head bent down and his arms spread out, advanced with a motion that alternated between a reel and a stagger, far more resembling that of a drunken man than of a labouring ship.—Sala, Dutch Pictures, The Ship-Chandler.

Staggering. verbal abs.1. Act of reeling.

The immediate forerunners of an apoplexy are a vertigo, staggering, and loss of memory.—Arbuthnot.

2. Cause of staggering or making to stagger.

This shall be no grief unto thee [in the margin,
no staggering, or stumbling].—1 Samuel, xxv. 31.

If thou confidently depend on the truth of this, without any doubting or staggering, this will be accepted by God.—Hammond.

Staggering. part. adj. Reeling; unsteady.

Then revealing the Twentynine invade,
By giddy heads and staggering legs betray'd.
Tate, Translation of Juvenal, xv. 53.

Staggeringly. adv. In a staggering manner.1. In a reeling manner.

Drunkards go staggeringly when they are top-heavy.—Granger, Commentary on Ecclesiastes
p. 319: 1621.

2. With hesitation.

While we are but staggeringly evil, we are not left without parentheses of consideration, thoughtful rebukes, and merciful interventions, to reveal us to ourselves.—Sir T. Browne, Christian Morals, i.
30.

Staggers. s. pl.1. Epilepsy of the horse.

His horse past cure of the fever, stark spoil'd with the staggers.—Shakespeare, Taming of the Shrew,
ii. 2.

2. Madness; wild conduct; irregular behaviour.

I will throw thee from my care for ever
Into the staggers, and the carless lapses
Of youth and immaturity.

Shakespeare, All's well that ends well, ii. 3.

Staghound. s. Hound for hunting the stag by scent: (see second extract).

One fellow, having just brought a bundle of twenty spears, was sitting in a corner, employed in painting the white staves of the weapons with yellow savermilion. Other busy-bodies had large stag-hounds, or wolf-dogs, of noble race, carefully muzzled to prevent accidents to passengers.—Sir W. Scott, The Abbot, ch. xix.

The opinion of those who have attended most carefully to the different breeds of dogs is, that the stag-hound is the produce of a cross between the old southern-hound, the ancestor probably of most of our races of hounds—and the slender fox-hound.
The result of this mixture is the produce of a tall, strong, heavy, well-formed dog, full of energy and power, combined with considerable gentleness and great perseverance: it is also of mild and gentle manners and expression.—L. N. History of British Quadrupeds, including the Cativora.

Stagnancy. s. State of being without motion or current.

Though there are many people are so wise
To call these rivers, they're but stagnancies, Left by the flood.

Colton, Wonders of the Drake, p. 55: 1681.

Stagnant. adj. [Lat. stagnans, -antis; stagnnum = standing pool.] Motionless; still;
not agitated; not flowing; not running.

What does the flood from its restriction keep?
Should it be stagnant in its simple rest,
The sun would through it spread destructive heat.

Sir R. Blackmore.

'Twas owing to this hurry and action of the water that the sand now was cast into layers, and not to a regular settlement, from a water quiet and stagnant.
—Woodward.

Immured and buried in perpetual sloth,
That gloomy slumber of the stagnant soul.

Johnson, Irene.

Stagnate. v. n. Lie motionless; have no course or stream.

The water which now arises must have all stagnated at the surface, and could never possibly have been refunded forth upon the earth, had not the stream been flowing raised up.—Windsward.

The alluvion moving through the capillary tubes stagnates, and unites itself to the vessel through which it flows.—Arbuthnot.
Where creeping waters cease,
Where marshes stagnate, Thomson.

Stagnation. s. Stop of course; cessation of motion; (often applied figuratively to moral or civil images).

As the Alps surround Geneva on all sides, they form a vast basin, where there would be a constant stagnation of vapours, did not the north wind scatter them from time to time.—Adrian.
To what great ends subservient is the wind!
Behold, where'er this active vapour flies,
It drives the clouds, and agitates the skies;
This from stagnation and corruption saves
The aerial ocean's ever-rolling waves.
N. R. Blackmore.

Staid. part. adj. [stayed.] Sober; grave; regular; composed; not wild; not volatile.

Put thyself
Into a 'habour of less fear, ere wildness
Vanquish my staid woe.'—Shakespeare, Cymbeline, iii. 4.
To our weaker view,
O'erlaid with black, staid wisdom's line.
Milton, Il Penseroso, 15.

I should not be a persuader to them of standing much in the spring, after three years that they have well laid their grounds; but to ride out, with prudent and staid guides, to all the quarters of the land.—Id., Tractate on Education.
I am the more at ease in Sir Roger's family, because it consists of sober and staid persons.—Addison, Spectator.

The doctor who was what is called a staid, discreet personage, appeared somewhat unwilling to gratify our curiosity.—Thendure Hook, Gilbert Gurney.

Staidness. s. Attribute suggested by Staid; sobriety; regularity; contrariety to wildness.

What good man,
That is a friend to truth, dares make it doubtful
That he hath Falstaff's staidness, and the courage
Of half Marcellus, to whom Hannibal swore
The style of Tarpe and of Scaevola of Rome?
Manning, r. The Roman Actor, l. 3.

The boiling blood of youth, fiercely uniting the fluid air, hinders that serenity and lived staidness which is necessary to so severe an intention.—Gharille, Scipion Senectute.
If sometimes he appears too gay, yet a secret earnestness of youth accompanies his writings, though the staidness and sobriety of age be wanting.—Depon, Preface to Translations from Ovid.

Stain. v. a. [N. Fr. disteindre, from Lat. tingo—dy, tinge.]

1. Bot; spot; maculate.

Lead me a looking-glass;
If that her breath will mist or stain the stone,
Why then she lives. Shakespeare, King Lear, v. 3.
From the gush
A stream of nectareous humour issuing flow'd . . .
And all his armour stain'd, ere while so bright.
Milton, Paradise Lost, vi. 351.
Embarrass again, my nouns: be less to more,
Nor stain your country with her children's gore.
Dryden, Translation of the Æneid, vi. 1113.

2. Dye; tinge.

3. Disgrace; spot with guilt or infamy.

Of honour void,
Of innocence, of faith, of purity,
Our wou'd ornaments now would and stain'd.
Milton, Paradise Lost, ix. 1073.

Stain. s.

1. Blot; spot; discoloration.

We nowhere meet with a more pleasing show than what appears in the heavens at the rising and setting of the sun, which is wholly made up of those different stains of light that show themselves in clouds of a different situation.—Addison.
Swift trouts diversified with crimson stains,
And pikes, the tyrants of the watery plains.
Pope, Windsor Forest.

In the Philosophical Magazine of December, 1830, the anonymous author of an ingenious essay 'On the Art of Glass-painting,' says, that if a large proportion of oxide has been employed with the silver, the stain is yellow; if a small proportion, it is orange-coloured; and by repeated exposure to the fire, without any additional colouring matter, the orange may be converted into red; but this conversion requires a nice management of the heat.—Ure, Dictionary of Arts, Manufactures, and Mines.

2. Taint of guilt or infamy; blot, or anything giving a foul character.

To solemn actions of royalty and justice their suitable ornaments are a luxury: are they only in religion a stain?—Hooker, Ecclesiastical Polity.
Our opinion, concerning the force and virtue which such places have, is, I trust, without any blamish or stain of heresy.—Hooker, Ecclesiastical Polity.

Then heaven and earth renew'd, shall be made pure

To sanctity, that shall receive no stain.
Milton, Paradise Lost, x. 638.

Nor death itself can wholly wash their stains;
But long contracted still even in the soul remains:
The reliques of inveterate vice they wear,
And spots of sin.
Dryden, Translation of the Æneid, vi. 394.

3. Cause of reproach; shame.

Hereby I will lead her that is the praise, and yet the stain of all womankind.—Sir P. Sidney.

Stainer. s. One who stains; one who blots; one who dyes; dyer: (common as the second element in a compound, e.g. paper-stainer).

Staining. verbal abs. Process of making a stain or tint.

The mouth of the muffle and the entry for introducing fuel to the fire, should be on opposite sides, to prevent as much as possible the admission of dust into the muffle, whose mouth should be closed with double folding-doors of iron, furnished with small peep-holes, to allow the artist to watch the progress of the staining, and to withdraw small trial slips of glass, painted with the principal tints used in the picture.—Ure, Dictionary of Arts, Manufactures, and Mines.

Stainless. adj.

1. Free from blots or spots.

The phoenix wings are not so rare
For antlers length and stainless hue.
Sir P. Sidney.

You gentle hills,
Robed in a garment of untrodden snow;
You darksome rocks, whence circles depend,
No stainless, that their white and glittering spires
Tinge not the moon's pure beam.
Shelley, Queen Mab.

2. Free from sin or reproach.

I cannot love him;
Yet I suppose him virtuous, know him noble,
Of great estate, of fresh and stainless youth.
Shakespeare, Twelfth Night, l. 5.

Stair. s. [A. S. steiger.] Steps by which we ascend from the lower part of a building to the upper: (an lately used for the whole order of steps; but now, if it be used at all, it signifies, as in Milton, only one flight of steps).

A good builder to a high tower will find make his stair upright, but winding; almost the full compass about, that the steepness be the more insensible.—Sir P. Sidney.

How many cowards, whose hearts are all as false
As stairs of sand, wear yet upon their chins
The beards of Hercules and frowning Mars!

Shakespeare, Merchant of Venice, iii. 2.
Slaver with lips as common as the stairs
That mount the Capitol. Id., Cymbeline, l. 7.
I would have one only goodly room above stairs,
Of some forty feet high.—Bacon, Essays.
The stairs were such as whereon Jacob saw Angels ascending and descending.
Milton, Paradise Lost, iii. 510.

Satan . . . now on the lower stair,
That scaled by steps of gold to heaven's gate,
Looks down with wonder at the sudden view
Of all this world. Id., iii. 540.

Trembling he springs,
As terror had increased his feet with wings;
Nor staid for stairs; but down the depth he threw
His body: on his back the door he drew.
Dryden, Translation of the Æneid, viii. 291.

As the first element in a compound.

Sir James Tierce repairing to the Tower by night, attended by . . . at the . . . and sent these two villains to execute the murder.—Bacon, History of the Reign of Henry VII.

Staircase. s. Part of a fabric that contains the stairs.

To make a complete staircase is a curious piece of architecture.—Sir H. Wotton, Elements of Architecture.

I cannot forbear mentioning a staircase, where the easiness of the ascent, the disposition of the lights, and the convenient landing, are admirably contrived.—Addison, Travels in Italy.

Bailey, with escort of twelve, steps forth to the great outer staircase; swings the obedient multitude with stretched hand; takes their oath, with a thunder of 'rolling drums,' with shouts that rend the welkin.—Curry, History of the French Revolution, pt. ii. b. l. ch. vi.

Stake. s. [A. S. stæc.]

1. Post or strong stick fixed in the ground.

The more I shaked the stake, which he had planted in the ground of my heart, the deeper still it sunk into it.—Sir P. Sidney.

His credit in the world might stand the poor town in great stead, as hitherto their ministers' foreign estimation hath been the best stake in their hedge.—Hooker, Ecclesiastical Polity.

He wanted pikes to set before his archers;
Instead whereof sharp stakes, plucked out of hedges,
They pitched in the ground.

Shakespeare, Henry VI, Part I. i. 1.
In France the grapes that make the wine grow upon low vines bound to small stakes, and the raised vines in arbores make but verjuice.—Bacon, Natural and Experimental History.

Or sharpen stakes, or head the forks, or twine
The sallow twigs to tie the straggling vine.
Dryden, Translation of the Georgics, l. 327.

As my arable land was but small, . . . I got it tolerably well fenced in about three weeks' time; and shooting some of the creatures in the day-time, I set my dog to guard it in the night, tying him up to a stake at the gate, where he would stand and bark all night long; so in a little time the enemies forsook the place, and the corn grew very strong and well, and began to ripen space.—DeFor, Literal Adventures of Robinson Crusoe.

2. Piece of long rough wood.

While he whield in fiery circles roared
The brand, a sharpen'd stake strong Dryas found,
And in the shoulder's joint milked the wound.
Dryden, Translation from Ovid, Metamorphoses, b. xii.

3. Anything placed as a pallisade or fence.

That halloo I should know: what are you yet speak:
Come not too near, you fall on iron stake's edge.
Milton, Comus, 430.

4. Post to which a beast is tied to be baited.

We are at the stake,
And hay'd about with many circums.
Shakespeare, Julius Caesar, iv. 1.

Have you not set mine honour at the stake,
And baited it with all the minimized thoughts
That tyrannous heart can think?
Id., Twelfth Night, iii. 1.

5. Anything pledged or wagered.

'Tis time short pleasure now to take,
Of little life the best to make,
And manage wisely the last stake.
O then what interest shall I make
To save my last important stake,
When the most just have cause to quake!
Lord Bacon.

The increasing sound is borne to other shore,
And for their stakes the throwing nations fear.
Dryden, Annus Mirabilis, xxiv.

The game was so contrived, that one particular cast took up the whole stake; and when some others came up, you laid down.—Arbuthnot.
I'll lay you ten guineas cash, . . . 'Tis done, I'll double the stakes.—Farghlar, The Constant Couple, l. 1.

6. State of being hazarded, pledged, or wagered.

When he heard that the lady Margaret was declared for it, he saw plainly that his kingdom must again be put to the stake; and that he must fight for it.—Bacon, History of the Reign of Henry VII.

Are not our liberties, our lives,
The laws, religion, and our wives,
Enough at once to lie at stake,
For covenant and cause's sake?
Baith, Hudibras, l. 1, 783.

Of my crown thou too much care dost take;
That which I value more, my love, 's at stake.
Dryden.

With any of you great interest at stake in a distant part of the world? Hath he ventured a good share of his fortune?—Bishop Atterbury.
Every moment Calo's life's at stake.—Addison, Cato.

7. See extract.

The stake is a small anvil, which stands upon a small iron foot on the workbench, to remove as occasion offers; or else it hath a strong iron spike at the bottom let into some piece of the workbench, not to be removed. Its office is to set small cold work straight upon, or to cut or punch upon with the cold chisel or cold punch.—Bacon, Mechanical Exercises.

Stake. v. a.

1. Fasten, support, or defend with posts set upright.

Stake and bind up your weakest plants and flowers against the winds, before they in a moment prostrate a whole year's labour.—Eclog, Calendar.

2. Wager; hazard; put to hazard.

Is a man betrayed in his nearest concerns? The cause is, he relied upon the services of a pack of villains, who designed nothing but their own game, and to stake him while they played for themselves.—South.

Persons, after their prisons have been flung open, have chosen rather to languish in their dungeons than stake their miserable lives on the success of a revolution.—Addison.

They durst not stake their present and future happiness on their own chimerical imaginations.—Id.

I'll stake you lamb that near the fountain plays,
And from the brink his dancing shade surveys.

Pope, Pastorals, Spring.

Stakenet. s. Net secured and expanded by stakes.

Pursuing a course along the shores and arrived at an estuary, on each side of the mouth, and for miles up on both sides, stake-nets are used.—Furvell, History of British Fishes, Salmon.

Stalactical. adj. Consisting of stalactite.

A cave was lined with these stalactical stones on the top and sides.—Derham, Physico-Theology.

Stalactite. s. [Gr. σταλακτις.] Calcareous deposit from water, stalactite being the term when it takes the shape of a nuicle; stalagmite when it forms a floor.

For the last half-century the occasional occurrence in various parts of Europe of the bones of man or the works of his hand, in caves—stalactites, associated with the remains of the extinct hyena, bear, elephant, or rhinoceros—has led to a suspicion that the date of man must be carried farther back than we had hitherto imagined.—Sir C. Lyell, Geological Evidences of the Antiquity of Man, ch. i.

Plural in -es.

The fretted pinnacle, the aisle, the nave,
Were there, all sequestered by darkness from her cave,
There with a little finger of phantasy,
Fantastic faces, moved and moved on high—
Thus Nature played with the stalactites,
And built herself a clay.

Byron, The Island, iv. 7.

Stalagmite. s. See under Stalactite.

In all . . . there was a slender crust of stalagmite.—Sir C. Lyell, Principles of Geology, ch. xiv.: 1838.

Stalagmitic. adj. Having the character of, constituted by, stalagmite.

The recent growths . . . of stalagmitic limestone are . . . conspicuous in Cuba.—Sir C. Lyell, Principles of Geology, ch. xiv.: 1838.

Stale. v. n. [N. Fr. estaller.] Make water.

Having tied his horse to a pole,
And taken time for both to stale.

Butler, Hudibras, iii. 1, 151.

Stale. s. Urine.

The smell of stale, as I observed before, is admirable against the vapours!—Swift, Advice to Sirvents.

Stale. s. [A. S.] Handle.

But, seeing th' arrow's stale without, and that the head did g
No further than it might be seen, he called his sports again.

Chapman, Translation of the Iliad.

It hath a long stale or handle, with a button at the end for one's hand.—Mortimer, Husbandry.

Stale. s. [?] In Chess. Stalemate: (the latter the commoner word).

They stand at stay, like a stale at chess, where it is no mate, but yet the game cannot stir.—Bacon, Essays, Of Boldness.

Stale. s. [German, stellen = place; stell-rogel = fowl placed as a lure; decoy-bird.]
1. Something exhibited or offered as an allurement to draw others to any place or purpose; decoy.

His heart being wholly delighted in deceiving us, we could never be warned; but rather our bird caught, served for a stale to bring in more.—Sir P. Sidney.

Still as he went he crafty stales did lay,
With cunning trains him to contrive new ways.

Spenser.

The trumpety in my house bring hither,
For stale to catch these thieves.

Shakespeare, Tempest, iv. 1.

Had he none else to make a stale but me?
I was the chief that raised him to the crown,
And I'll be chief to bring him down again.

Id., Henry VI. Part III., iii. 3.

A pretence of kindness is the universal stale to all loose projects: by this men are robbed of their fortunes, and women of their honour.—Dr. H. More, Government of the Tongue.

It may be a visor for the hypocrite, and a stale for the ambitious.—Id., Decay of Christian Piety.

This easy fool must be my stale, set up
To catch the people's eyes: he's tame and merciful;
Min I can manage.—Dryden, Don Sebastian, i. 1.

2. In Shakespeare it seems to signify a prostitute.

I stand dishonour'd that have gone about
To link my dear friend to a common stale.

Shakespeare, Much Ado about Nothing, iv. 1.

Stale. adj. [German, stel.]

1. Old; long kept; altered by time.

Nappy ale, good and stale,
Old Ballad of the King and Miller of Mansfield.

1028

This, Richard, is a curious case:
Suppose your eyes sent equal rays
Upon two distant pots of ale,
Not knowing which was mild or stale;
In this sad state your doubtful choice
Would never have the eating voice.

Prior, Alma, ii. 200.

A stale virgin sets up a shop in a place where she is not known.—Spectator.

2. Used till it is of no use or esteem; worn out of regard or notice.

About her neck a posquet mail,
Fraught with advice, some fresh, some stale.

Butler, Hudibras, ii. 1, 61.

Many things best opinion; so doth novelty: wit itself, if stale, is less taking. Green, Cosmologist.
Pompey was a perfect favourite of the people; but his pretensions grew stale for want of a timely opportunity of introducing them upon the stage.—Steele.

They reason and conclude by precedent,
And own stale maxims which they never invent.

Pope, Essay on Criticism, ii. 16.

Stale. v. a. Wear out; make old.

Age cannot wither her, nor custom stale
Her infinite variety.

Shakespeare, Antony and Cleopatra, ii. 2.

Were I a common laugher, or did use
To stale with ordinary mirth my love

To every new protester. Id., Julius Caesar, i. 2.

A barren-spirited fellow, one that feeds
On subject oris and imitations;
Which, out of use, and staled by other men,
Begin his fashion.

Id., iv. 1.

Stalely. adv. In a stale manner; of old; long time.

All your perished mountains
And was I once so stalely acquainted with.

Id., Jonson, Catiline's Conspiracy, ii. 2.

Stalemate. In Chess. Applied to the king, when he is forced into a situation from which he cannot move without going into check: by which the game is ended.

Staleness. s. Attribute suggested by Stale; address; state of being long kept; state of being corrupted by time.

have not been palled; but somewhat better than bottles of the same drinks and staleness kept in a cellar.—Bacon, Natural and Experimental History.
Provided our landlord's principles were sound, we did not take any notice of the staleness of his provisions.—Addison, Spectator.

Stalk. v. n. [A. S. stalcian.]

1. Walk with high and slow steps.

His monstrous enemy
With sturdy steps came stalking in his sight.

Spenser.

Shall your city call us lord,
In that behalf by which we challenged it?
Or shall we give the signal to our race,
And stalk in blood to our possession?

Shakespeare, King John, ii. 1.

Then stalking through the deeps,
He fords the ocean, while the topmost wave
Scarcely reaches up his middle side.

Addison, Milton's Style imitated.

Vegetations thought still found my flying road,
Nor found by hunts, nor to place confined;
I hunted my nights, and terrified my days;
Stalk'd through my gardens, and pursued my ways,
Nor slant from artful bow, nor lost in winding maze.

Prior, Solomon, ii. 15.

Discord, dire sister of the slaughtering power,
Smell at her birth, but rising every hour,
While scarce the skies her horrid head can bound,
She stalks on earth, and shakes the world around.

Pope, Translation of the Iliad, iv. 50.

2. Often used with some insinuation of contempt or abhorrence.

That accursed Heron Stalks close behind her, like a witch's fiend
Pressing to be employ'd.

Dryden, Spanish Friar, iv. 2.

'Tis not to stalk about, and draw trash up
From time to time.

Addison, Cato.

3. Walk behind a stalkinghorse or cover.

The king asked how far it was to a certain house:
they said six miles. Half an hour after he asked again: one said six miles and a half. The king alighted out of his coach, and crept under the shoulder of his led horse: and when some asked his majesty what he meant, I must stalk, said he; for your town is shy, and flies me.—Bacon, Apophthegms.

Stalk. s. High, proud, wide, and stately step.

Behind it forth there leapt
An ugly fiend, more foul than diurnal day:
The which with monstrous stalk behind him kept,
And ever as he went due watch upon him kept.

Spenser.

Milton next, with high and haughty stalks,
Unfetter'd in majestic numbers walks:
No vulgar hero can his muse engage,
Nor earth's vile scene confine his hallow'd rage.

Addison, Account of the English Poets, 50.

Stalk. s. [A. S. staelg = column, pedestal.]

1. Stem on which flowers or fruits grow.

A stock-gillyflower, gently tied on a stalk, put into a steep glass full of quinquilla, so that the quinquilla cover it: after five days you will find the flower fresh, and the stalk harder and less flexible than it was.—Bacon.

Small stores will serve, where stores
All seasons, ripe for use, hangs on the stalk.

Milton, Paradise Lost, v. 522.

That number attracts not basil, is windy repugnant unto truth; for if the leaves thereof, or dried stalks, be stripped into small straws, they arise into number, way, and other electricks, no other-ways than those of wheat and rye.—Sir T. Browne.

Roses unfold, and every fragrant flower,
Flew from their stalks to strew thy nuptial bow'r.

Dryden, State of Innocence, iii. 1.

2. Stem of a quill.

Viewed with a glass, they appear made up of little blinders, like those in the plume or stalk of a quill.—Green.

Stalker. s.

1. One who stalks.

Let's ha' good cheer to-morrow night at supper, stalker, and then we'll talk; good cheer, and plow, do you hear, sirrah?—Id., Jonson, Pastmaster.

2. Kind of fishing-net.

Stalking. part. adj. Walking with stately steps.

Of itself unfolds the eternal door;
With dreadful sounds the brazen hinges roar.
You see before the gate what stalking ghosts
Commands the guard, what sentries keep the post.

Dryden, Translation of the Aeneid, vi. 77.

Stalkinghorse. s. Horse either real or fictitious, by which a fowler shelters himself from the sight of the game; mask; pretence.

He uses his folly like a stalking-horse, and under the presentation of that he shoots his wit.—Shakespeare, As you like it, v. 4.

Let the counsellor give counsel not for faction but for conscience, forbearing to make the good of the state the stalkinghorse of his private ends.—Hakewill, Apology.

Hypocrisy is the devil's stalkinghorse, under an affectation of simplicity and religion.—Sir K. E. Lodge.

Stalky. adj. Hard like a stalk.

It grows upon a round stalk, and at the top bears a great stalky head.—Mortimer, Husbandry.

Stall. s. [A. S. stall, steall.]

1. Crib in which an ox is fed, or a horse is kept in the stable.

A herd of oxen then he carved, with high raised heads, forged all
Of gold and tin, for colour mixt, and bellowing from their stall,
Brought to their pastures.

Chapman, Translation of the Iliad.

Solomon had forty thousand stalls of horses.—1 Kings, iv. 26.

Duncan's horses,
Bounteous and swift, the minions of the race,
Turn'd wild in nature, broke their stalls, flung out,
Contending 'gainst obedience.

Shakespeare, Macbeth, ii. 4.

His fellow sought what lodging he could find;
At last he found a stall where oxen stood.

Dryden, The Cock and the Fox, 222.

2. Bench or form where anything is set to sale.

Stalls, bulks, windows,
Are smother'd up, leath' hild, and ridges horsed
With variable complexions; all agreeing
In earnestness to see him.

Shakespeare, Coriolanus, ii. 1.

They are nature's carver wars that lie on the stall, exposed to the transient view of every common eye.—Glaucippe.

How peillars' stalls with glitt'ring toys are laid,
The various fairings of the country maid.

Gay, Shepherd's Week, Saturday, 73.

Harley, the nation's great support,
Returning home one day from court,
Observed a jargon near Whitehall,
Chawping old authors on a stall.

Swift.

The next day Francis enjoyed the privilege of listening to some equally valuable criticism uttered by the Queen teaching Goethe and Klopstock, and might have learned an important lesson of economy from the male in which her Majesty's library had been formed. 'I picked the book up on a stall,' said the Queen. 'Oh, it is amazing what good books there are on stalls!'—Macaulay, Critical and Historical Essays, Madame de Arbray.

[Addison] says that in his time there was a man who made a living by cheating the country people. He was not a Cabinet Minister, he was only a mountebank; and he set up a stall, and sold pills that were very good against the earthquake.—Bright, Speeches.

3. Small house or shed in which certain trades are practised.

All these together in one heap were thrown, like carcasses of beasts in butcher's stall; And in another corner were strewn The antique ruins of the Romans fall. Spenser.

4. Seat of a dignified clergyman in the choir.

The pope creates a canon beyond the number limited, and commands the chapter to assign unto such a canon a stall in the choir and place in the choir.—Adelphi, Parsonage Juris Canonici. The dignified clergy, out of mere humility, have called their thrones by the names of stalls.—Bishop Warburton.

Stall, v. a.

1. Keep in a stall or stable.

For such enrichment, if you be able, Few chimneyes seeking you will easily; The fat ox, that wont lie in the stall, Is now fast stalled in his crumal. Spenser, Shepherd's Calendar.

Nixus hit the turnus with happier haste, And, thoughtless of his friend, the forest passed, And Allam plains, from Allam's name so call'd, Where king Lathmus then his oxen stall'd. Deppen, Translation of the Æneid, ix. 523.

2. Invest.

Long may't that live to wait thy children's loss; And see another as I see thee now, Deck'd in thy rights, as thou art stall'd in mine. Shakespeare, Richard III. i. 3.

Stall, v. n. Dwell.

We could not stall together in the whole world. Shakespeare, Antony and Cleopatra, v. 1.

Stallion, s. Instillation.

'Then prepared he as fast for his translation from the see of Lincoln unto the see of York, as he did before to his stallion.—Life of Cardinal Wolsey. His stallion drew near. Lord Herbert of Cherbury, History of Henry VIII. p. 312.

Stallfed, adj. Fed by food supplied under cover, rather than from the field, not with grass only, but dry and artificial food.

Every one must every day stallion. The head of one least, the most fat, and best, Of all the stallfed, in the waters' best. Chapman, Stallfed oxen, and crummed fowls, are often diseased in their livers.—Aethand, On the Nature and Choice of Animals.

Stalling, s. Keeping in a stall.

For my part, he keeps me rustically at home; or, to speak more properly, sties me here at home unkept; for call you that keeping, for a gentleman of my birth, that differs not from the stalling of an ox?—Shakespeare, As you like it, i. 1.

Stallion, s. [N.Fr. estalon.] Horse kept for mares.

The present defects are breeding without choice of stallions in shape or size. Sir W. Temple. If that Dracop's progeny at last Prove jaded, and in frequent matches cast, No favour for the stallion we retain, And no respect for the degenerate train. Spenser, Translation of Juvenal, viii. 103.

Stallman, s. One who attends at, or keeps, a stall.

The stallman saw my father had [a strong fancy] for the book the monarch he laid his hands upon it. 'There are not three Brucemallies in Christendom' said the stallman, 'except what are chained up in the libraries of the curious.'—Sterne, Tristram Shandy, ch. iii. vol. xxv.

Stallworth, adj. [A.S. stall-wyrð.] Stout; strong; brave.

His stallworth steed the champion stout bestrode. Fairfax.

Stamen, s. * [Lat.]

1. Threads.

As to cloth, the parallel threads above mentioned are called the stamen, in English, the warp or the chain.—History of the Royal Society, l. 67.

2. Foundation.

You are to know, that all, who enter into human life, have a certain date or stamen given to their being.—Tulter, no. 15.

3. In Botany. See under Style.

Stamina, s. pl. [Lat.]

1. First principles of anything.

A prerogative, that had moulded into its original stamina irresistible principles of decay and dissolution.—Hurko, On the Cause of the Present Discontents: 1770.

2. Tone, or vigour, of the animal system.

In the morbid mental affection included under the heads of aberration and impairment, are observed various gradations . . . of moral and intellectual disorder and weakness, extending from the more shadowy forms of false perception, . . . derangement and confusion of thought, to hallucinations and clearly manifested insane delusions; and from brain-fog, cerebral lassitude, loss of mental activity, tone, weakened memory, actual loss of memory, and flagging powers of attention, to obvious states of imbecility and idocy.—Dr. Forbes Winslow, On Certain Obscure Diseases of the Brain and Mind, ch. ii.

Staminate, v. a. Endue with stamina.

The persons who, Moses tells us, lived to so great an age, were the special favourites of God, and formed and staminated by the immediate hand of God with peculiar principles of vitality.—Bibliotheca Biblica, i. 258.

Stammel, s. [N.Fr. estamine.]

1. Kind of woollen cloth.

His table with stammel, or saune, or carpet neatly covered.—Compendium on the, p. 10: 1005.

2. Colour of the cloth, i.e. reddish brown.

Reddish, the first that doth appear In stammel: search is too dear. B. Jonson.

Used adjectively.

Her bed, with all its rich furniture, of cloth of stamel colour. Citation in Warton's Life of Sir T. Pope, p. 204.

I'll not quarrel with this gentleman

For wearing stammel breeches. Beaumont and Fletcher, Little French Lawyer.

Stammer, v. n. Speak with unnatural hesitation; utter words with difficulty.

I would thou couldst stammer, that thou mightst pour out of thy mouth, as wine comes out of a narrow-mouthed bottle, either too much at once, or more at all. Shakespeare, As you like it, i. 1. Cornelius hoped he would come to stammer like Demosthenes.—Aethand and Pope, Martinus Scribner.

Your learners would rather you should be less correct, than perfectly stammering, which is one of the worst diseases in rhetoric.—Swift.

Stammer, v. a. Pronounce or declare imperfectly.

They are fated to be a pair of absolute men.—By my troth, I think stammer at them. Beaumont and Fletcher, Two Noble Kinsmen, v. 1. 'You'll not object,' he said, when he was quite equipped, 'to venture further with us, Church wit, my friend?' His pale lips faintly stammered out a 'No.'—Jackson, Martin Chuzzlewit, ch. xxxiii.

Stammerer, s. [A.S. stammer.] One who speaks with hesitation.

A stammerer cannot with moderation hope for the gift of tongues, or a peasant to become learned as Origen.—Jerome Taylor.

Stammering, verbal abs. Act of one who stammers.

Sometimes to her news of myself to tell I go about; but then is all my best. Wry words, and stammering, or else foolish dumb: Say then, can this but of enchantment come? Sir P. Sidney.

Stammering, part. adj. Speaking with difficulty.

Lagan Juler, Will stammering tongues and staggering feet pro-
Dryden, Translation of the Georgics, ii. 132.

Stamp, v. a.

1. Strike by pressing the foot hastily on words.

If Aretie thus deploro His suffering, Palamon yet suffers more. . . He frets, he fumes, he stares, he stamps the ground. The hollow tower with clamorous cures around. Dryden, Palamon and Arcite, l. 112.

2. Pound; beat as in a mortar.

I took your sin, the calf which ye had made, burnt it with fire, and stamped it, and ground it very small. Isaiah, ch. xlv. 21.

Some apothecaries, upon stamping of esquinquies, have been put into a great sweating by the vapour only.—Baron.

3. Impress with some mark or figure.

Height of place is intended only to stamp the endowments of a private condition with lustre and authority.—South, Sermon.

Here swells the shelf with Oribly the great; There, stamped with arms, Newcastle shines complete. Pope, Ruin, l. 141.

4. Fix a mark by impressing it.

Out of mere ambition, you have made Your holy hat be stamped on the king's crown. Shakespeare, Henry VIII. iii. 2.

These prodigious conceits in nature spring out of framing abstracted conceptions, instead of those easy and primary notions which nature stamps in all men of common sense.—Sir E. Digby.

* There needs no positive law or sanction of God to stamp an obliquity upon such a disobedience. South, Sermon.

No constant reason of this can be given, but from the nature of man's mind, which both this notion of a deity torn with it, and stamped upon it; or is of such a frame, that in the first use of it it will find out God. Archbishop Tillotson.

Though God has given us no innate ideas of himself, though he has stamped on original characters on our souls, wherein we may read his being; yet having furnished us with those faculties our minds are endowed with, he hath not left himself without witness.—Locke.

What titles had they had, if nature had not strove hard to thrust the worst dissembling first, And stamped the noble mark of deityship Upon their baser metal? Rose, Ambitious Step-mother.

What an insupportable injustice would it be to a man engaged in the pursuit of knowledge, if he had not a power of stamping his best sentiments upon his memory in indelible characters?—Watts.

Without undertaking to pronounce definitely a precise judgment upon disputed questions of revelation, or to enforce that judgment by its legal and coercive powers, a government possesses a moral authority, by which it can stamp a character of public approbation upon certain acts and certain opinions. It is placed on a high and conspicuous eminence; its voice will be heard far and wide; many people will incline to imitate its tendencies; and its judgments, on subjects upon which it is competent to judge, will not fail to produce a powerful impression on the public.—Sir G. C. Lewis, On the Influence of Authority in Matters of Opinion, ch. ix.

5. Make by impressing a mark.

If two pennyweight of silver, marked with a certain impression, shall here in England be equivalent to three pennyweight marked with another impression, they will not fail to stamp pieces of that fashion, and quickly carry away your silver.—Locke.

6. Mint; form; coin.

We are bastards all; And that most venerable man, which I Did call my father, was I know not where When I was stamped. Shakespeare, Cymbeline, ii. 5.

Stamp, v. n. Strike the foot suddenly downward.

What a foul art thou, A ramping fool, to lunge, to stamp, and swear, Upon my party! Thou odd-headed slave, Hast thou not spoke like thunder on my side? Shakespeare, King John, iii. 1.

There is such an echo among the old ruins and vaults, that, if you stamp but a little louder than ordinary, you hear 'he said repeated.'—Addison.

He cannot bear the astonishing delight, But starts, exclaims, and stamps, and raves, and dies. Deane.

They got to the top, which was flat and even, and stamping upon it, they found it was hollow.—Swift. 'Then stamping turbidly on the reins, he exclaimed, 'Thus I annihilate the miserable toys for which thou hast sold thyself, body and soul, resigned thyself to an early and painless death, and me to misery and remorse for ever!'—Sir W. Scott, Kenilworth, ch. xxxvi.

Stamp, s. [Italian, stampo; Fr. étampe.]

1. Any instrument by which a distinct and lasting impression is made.

Some other nymphs, with colours faint And pencil slow, may cupid paint, And a weak heart in time destroy; She has a stamp, and prints the boy. Waller.

It could bear the stamp without alloy. Dryden.

2. Mark set on anything; impression.

But to the pure refined ore, The stamp of kings imparts no more Worth, than the metal held before. Carew. That sacred name gives ornament and grace; And, like his stamp, makes basest metals pass: 'Twere folly now a stately pile to raise, To build a playhouse, while you throw down plays. Dryden, Preface to the Opening of the New House, 1674.

Ideas are imprinted on the memory; some by an object affecting the senses only; others, that have more than once offered themselves, have yet been little taken notice of; the mind, intent only on one thing, not settling the stamp deep into itself.—Locke.

That hoary man had spent his livelong age In converse with the dead, who leave the stamp of ever-burning thoughts on many a page, When they are gone into the senseless damp of graves. Shelley, Revolt of Islam.

3. Thing marked or stamped.

The mere despair of surgery he cures; Haunting a golden stamp about their necks, Put on with holy prayers. Shakespeare, Macbeth, iv. 3.

4. Picture cut in wood or metal; picture made by impression; cut; plate.

At Venice they put out very curious stamps of the several edifices, which are most famous for their beauty and magnificence. — Addison, Travels in Italy.

5. Mark set upon things that pay customs to the government.

Indeed the paper stamp
Did very much his genius cram;
And since he could not spend his fire,
He now intended to retire. Swift.

6. Character of reputation, good or bad, fixed upon anything.

The persons here reflected upon are of such a peculiar stamp of impiety, that they seem formed into a kind of diabolical society for the fluting out new experiments in vice. — South, Sermons.

Where reason or Scripture is expressed for any opinion, we may receive it as of divine authority; but it is not the strength of our own persuasions which can give it that stamp. — Locke.

7. Authority; currency; value derived from any suffrage or attestation.

Of the same stamp is that which is obtruded upon us, that an admiral suspects the attraction of the headdress. — Sir T. Browne, Vulgar Errors.

The common people do not judge of vice or virtue by morality, or the immorality, so much as by the stamp that is set upon it by men of figure. — Sir R. L'Estrange.

8. Make; cast; form.

If speaking truth
In this line we were not thought flattery,
Such tribulation should this Douglas leave,
As not a soldier of this season's stamp
Should go so general current through the world.
Shakespeare, Henry IV. Part I. iv. 1.

When one man of an exemplary improbité charges another of the same stamp in a court of justice, he lies under the disadvantage of a strong suspicion. — Sir E. L'Estrange.

Let a friend to the government relate to him a matter of fact, he gives him the lie in every look; but if one of his own stamp should tell him that the king of Sweden would be suddenly at Perth, he hugs himself at the good news. — Addison.

A king of heaven's own stamp, not vulgar make:
Blessed in giving, and averse to take. Martin.

stamper. s. One who, that which, stamps; instrument of pounding.

From the stamping-mill it passeth through the crumpling-mill; but of late times they mostly use wet stampers. Curtis, Survey of Cornwall.

stamping. verbal abs. Act of one who, that which, stamps.

All the inhabitants of the land shall howl at the name of the stamping of the hoofs of his strong horses. — Jeremiah, xlvii. 2.

Then there are such scowls and malignant side-glances, ash-y indifference, stampings and hysterics, as might, one would think, wring the toughest bosom into drops of pity. — Carlyle, Critical and Miscellaneous Essays, German Playwrights.

stamping-mill. s. Mill for crushing ores.
(For extract see Stamper.)

stanch. v. a. [Fr. estancher.] Stop blood; hinder from running.

Iron or a stone laid to the neck, doth stanch the bleeding of the nose. — Bacon, Natural and Experimental History.

Loches, inwardly taken, fasten upon the veins, and occasion an effusion of blood, which cannot be easily stanch'd. — Sir T. Browne, Vulgar Errors.

He fought to hinder fighting, and easy'd
To stanch the blood by breathing of the vein.

Dryden, Heroic Stanzas on the Death of Oliver Cromwell.

stanch. v. n. Stop.

A woman . . . came behind him and touched the border of his garment; and immediately her issue of blood stanch'd. — Luke, vii. 44.

stanch. adj.

1. Sound; such as will not run out.

What we endeavour in vain may be performed by some virtuous, that shall have stanch vessels, and more sunny days. — Boyle.

2. Firm; sound of principle; trusty; hearty; determined.

The standing absurdity, without the belief of which no man is reckoned a stanch churchman, is that there is a calf's head club. — Addison.

In politics, I hear you're stanch, Directly bent against the French.

Prior, Epistles to Plectonum Shepherd, l. 133.

They mean to convince, not the travelling herd, or giddy populace, but the grave and stanch men, men of sobriety and firmness. — Bishop Waterland.

Each stanch polemic stubborn as a rock,
Came whip and spur. Pope, Dunciad, iv. 195.

3. Applied to dogs. Following the scent without error or remissness.

4. Strong; not to be broken.

If I knew
What lions would hold us stanch, from edge to edge
O' th' world I would pursue it.

Shakespeare, Antony and Cleopatra, ii. 2.

You will lose their love: this is to be kept stanch, and carefully watched. — Locke.

stanching. verbal abs. Act of that which stanches.

Of veins of earth medicinal are terra lemnis, terra sigillata, communis, and bolus armenius; whereof terra lemnis is the chief: the virtues of them are for curing of wounds, stanching of blood, and stopping of fluxes and rheums. — Bacon, Natural and Experimental History.

stanchion. s. [Fr. estanchon.] Prop; support. In Navigation. Upright timbers strengthening the bulwark and the rail.

The beams and the tiller (which traverses this nautical apartment) were painted a very bright white. The two guns were painted white, except the part which was outside the port; and the body of the cabin was done like wainscot. The stanchion itself was under the hands of an ingenious mechanic, who was labouring it in a very brilliant manner. — Hanway, Singleton Postcard.

stanchless. adj. Not to be stanch'd, or stopp'd.

There grows,
In my most ill-composed affection, such
A stanchless aversion, that, were I king,
I should cut off the nobles for their lands.

Shakespeare, Macbeth, iv. 3.

She unto Scythia sent, for hunger him to know,
And thrust her down his throat, into his stanchless bow.

Dryden.

stand. v. n. pret. stood. [A.S. standan.]

1. Be upon the feet; not sit, kneel, or lie down.

The absolution, or remission of sins, to be pronounced by the priest alone standing, the people still kneeling. — Book of Common Prayer, Morning Prayer, rubric.

2. Be not demolished or overthrown.

What will they then? what but unbuild
A living temple, built by faith to stand!
Milton, Paradise Lost, xii. 520.

3. Be placed as an edifice.

This port's tomb stand on the other side of Naples, which looks towards Vesuvius. — Addison, Travels in Italy.

4. Remain erect; not fall.

To stand or fall,
Free in thine own arbitrement it lies.
Milton, Paradise Lost, viii. 610.

Chariot and charioter lay overturn'd,
And fiery flaming steeds: what stood, recoill'd Overwhelm'd through the faint Statulek host,
Defensive senect; or, with pale fear surprised,
Fled incontinens. Ibid. vi. 390.

5. Become erect.

Mute, and amazed, my hair with horror stood;
Fear shrink my senses, and conceal'd my blood.

Dryden, Translation of the Æneid, iii. 40.

Her hair stand up; convulsive rage possess'd
Her trembling limbs. Ibid. vi. 74.

6. Stop; halt; not go forward.

The leaders, leaving charge from you to stand,
Will not go off until they hear you speak.

Shakespeare, Henry IV. Part II. iv. 2.

Now, in Gibion stand,
And thou thou in the vale of Alalon.

Milton, Paradise Lost, xii. 285.

Mortal, who this forbidden path
In arms presum'st to tread, I charge thee stand,
And tell thy name.

Dryden, Translation of the Æneid, vi. 520.

7. Be at a stationary point without progress or regression.

This nation of Spain runs a race still of empire, when all other states of Christendom stand at a stay. — Bacon.

Immense the pow'r, immense where the demand;
Say at what part of nature will they stand! Pope.

8. Be in a state of firmness; not vacillation.

My mind on its own centre stands unmoved,
And stable as the fabric of the world.

Dryden.

9. Be in any posture of resistance or defence.

Seeing how lothly opposite I stood
To his unmutal purpose, in fell motion
With his prepared sword he charge home
My unprovided body.

Shakespeare, King Lear, ii. 1.

From enemies heav'n keep your majesty;
And when they stand against you, my they fall.

Id. Henry IV. Part II. iv. 4.

10. Be in a state of hostility; keep the ground.

The king granted the Jews which were in every city to gather themselves together, and stand for their life. — Esther, viii. 11.

If he would presently yield, Barbarossa promised to let him go free; but if he should stand upon his defence, he threatened to make him repent his foolish hardness. — Knolles, History of the Turks.

We are often constrained to stand alone against the strength of opinion. — Sir T. Browne, Vulgar Errors, preface.

It was by the sword they should die, if they stood upon defence; and by the halber, if they should yield. — Sir J. Hayward.

11. Not to yield; not to fly; not to give way.

Who before him stood so to it? for the Lord himself brought his enemies unto him. — Ecclesiasticus, xvi. 3.

Put on the whole armour of God, that ye may be able to stand against the wiles of the devil. — Ephesians, vi. 11.

Their lives and fortunes were put in safety, whether they stood to it or ran away. — Bacon, History of the Reign of Henry VII.

12. Stay; not fly.

Then the lightning-loving Deity cast
A fable flight on my soldiers: nor stood fast
One man of all. Chapman.

Used substantively.

At the soldierly word stand, the flyers halted a little. — Lord Clarendon, History of the Grand Rebellion.

13. Be placed with regard to rank or order.

Amongst liquids reduced with this quality of relaxing, warm water stands first. — Arbuthnot, On the Nature and Choice of Aliments.

Theology would truly enlarge the mind, were it studied with that freedom and that sacred clarity which it teaches: let this therefore stand always chief. — Watts.

14. Remain in the existing state.

If I must make my brother to offend, I will eat no flesh while the world stands thus. — 1 Corinthians, viii. 13.

That sets and knaves should be no vain
To wish their vile resemblance may remain;
And stand recorded, at their own request,
To future days a libel or a jest.

Dryden, Epistle to Sir Godfrey Kneller, 117.

15. Be in any particular state.

The sea,
Awe'd by the rod of Moses so to stand Divided. Milton, Paradise Lost, xii. 197.

Accomplish what your signs fore-show:
I stand resign'd, and am prepared to go.

Dryden, Translation of the Æneid, ii. 926.

He struck the sunken, and stood again
New set'd, and straight recover'd his mind.

Addison, Translation from Ovid, Transformation of Tircis.

They expect to be favoured, who stand not possessed of any one of those qualifications that belonged to him. — Bishop Atterbury.

Some middle prices shew us in what proportion the value of their lands stand, in regard to those of our own country. — Arbuthnot.

Persians and Greeks like turns of nature stand,
And the world's victor stand subdued by sound.

Pope.

16. Not become void; remain in force; continue valid.

God was not ignorant that the judges, whose sentence in matters of controversy he ordained should stand, oftentimes would be deceived. — Hooker, Ecclesiastical Polity.

I will punish you in this place, that ye may know that my words shall surely stand against you for evil. — Jeremiah, xiv. 23.

My mercy will I keep for him for evermore, and my covenant shall stand fast with him. — Psalm, lxxix. 28.

A thing within my bosom tells me,
That no conditions of our peace can stand.

Shakespeare, Henry IV. Part II. iv. 1.

17. Consist; have its being or essence.

That could not make him that did the service perfect, as pertaining to the conscience, which stood only in meats and drinks. — Hebrews, ix. 9.

18. Be with respect to terms of a contract.

The hirelings stand at a certain wages. — Curtis, Survey of Cornwall.

19. Have a place.

If it stand, as you yourself still stand,
Within the eye of honour, be assured
My purse, my person, my extremest means,
Lie all unlock'd to your occasions.

Shakespeare, Merchant of Venice, i. 1.

My enemy's dog,
Though he had bit me, should have stood that night Against my dirr. Id. King Lear, iv. 1.

This excellent man, who stood not upon the advantage-ground before, provoked men of all qualities. — Lord Clarendon, History of the Grand Rebellion.

Charities wing'd
From the armoury of God, where stand of old Myriads. Milton, Paradise Lost, vii. 190.

20. Be in any state at the time present.

Oppress nature sleeps:
This rest might yet have balm'd thy broken senses,

Which, if convenience will not allow,
Stand in hard cure. Shakespeare, King Lear, iii. 6.
So it stands; and this I fear at last,
Hume's knavery will be the duchess' wreck.
Id., Henry VI. Part II. i. 2.

All which grace
I now will amplify, and tell what case
Thy household stands in. Chapman.
Our company assembled, I said, My dear friends, let us know ourselves, and how it standeth with us.
—Bacon.

Gardiner was made king's solicitor, and the patent, formerly granted to Saint John, stand revoked. — Lord Clarendon, History of the Grand Rebellion.

Why stand we longer shivering under fears?

Milton, Paradise Lost, x. 1003.
As things now stand with us, we have no power to do good after that illustrious manner our Saviour did. — Calamy, Sermons.

21. Be in a permanent state.

Say to the king the knowledge of the broil
As thou dost have it. — Don't fully it stood.
As two spent swimmers that do cling together,
And choke their art. Shakespeare, Macbeth, i. 2.

22. Be with regard to condition or fortune.

I stand in need of one whose glories may Redeem my crimes, ally me to his fame,
Dispel the fictions of my fœw on earth,
Disarm the justice of the powers above.
Dryden, Spanish Friar, iv. 2.

23. Have any particular respect.

Here stood he in the dark, his sharp sword out,
Muzzling of wicked charms, conjuring the moon
To stand 'a auspicious mistress.

Shakespeare, King Lear, ii. 1.
An utter unsuitableness of resemblance has to the relation which man necessarily stands in towards his Maker. — South, Sermons.

24. Depend; rest; be supported.

This reply standeth all by conjectures. — Archbishop Whitgift.
The presbyterians of the kirk, less forward to declare their opinion in the former point, stand upon the latter only. — Bishop Burnet.
He : it will know, must by the connexion of the proofs see the truth and the ground it stands on. —
Locke.

25. Be with regard to state of mind.

Stand in awe and sin not: commune with your own heart upon your bed, and be still. — Paulus,
iv. 4.
I desire to be present with you now, and to change my votes, for I stand in doubt of you. — Galatians,
iv. 20.

26. Succeed; be acquitted; be safe.

Readers, by whose judgement I would stand or fall, would not be such as are acquainted only with the French and Italian critics. — Addison, Spectator.

27. Be with respect to any particular.

Cesar entrants,
Not to consider in what case thou stand'st
Further than he is Caesar.
Shakespeare, Antony and Cleopatra, iii. 11.
To heaven I do appeal,
I have loved my king and common-weal;
As for my wife, I know not how it stands.
Id., Henry VI. Part II. ii. 1.

28. Be resolutely of a party.

The cause must be presumed as good on our part as on theirs, till it be decided who have stood for the truth, and who for error. — Hooker, Ecclesiastical Polity.

Shall we sound him?
I think he will stand very strong with us.
Shakespeare, Julius Caesar, ii. 1.
It remains,
To gratify his noble service, that I have thus stood for his country.
Id., Coriolanus, ii. 2.

29. Be in the place; be representative.

Chiron said, that kings' friends and favourites were like casting counters, that sometimes stand for one, sometimes for ten. — Bacon.
I will not trouble myself, whether these names stand for the same thing, or really include one another. — Locke.
Their language being scanty, had no words in it to stand for a thousand. — Id.

30. Remain; be fixed.

Watch ye, stand fast in the faith, quit you like men, be strong. — 1 Corinthians, xvi. 13.
How soon hath thy prediction, now blest!
Measured this transient world, the race of time,
Till time stand still.
Milton, Paradise Lost, xii. 553.

31. Hold a course at sea.

Behold on Latian shores a foreign prince!
From the same parts of heav'n his navy stands,
To the same parts on earth his army lands.
Dryden, Translation of the Æneid, vii. 103.

32. Have direction towards any local point.

The wand did not really stand to the metals, when placed under it, or the metalline veins. — Boyle.

33. Offer as a candidate.

He stood to be elected one of the proctors for the university. — J. Walton, Life of Bishop Sanderson.

34. Place one's self; be placed.

I stood between the lord and you at that time, to show you the Lord's word. — Inferno, v. 5.
The fool hath planted in his memory
An army of good words; and I do know
A many faults that stand in better place,
Garnish'd like him, that for a tricky word
Defy the matter.
Shakespeare, Merchant of Venice, iii. 5.
He was commanded by the duke to stand aside and expect his answer. — Knolton, History of the Turks.

35. Stagnate; not flow.

Where Ufen glides along the lowly lands,
Or the black water of Pampuna stands.
Dryden, Translation of the Æneid, vii. 1002.

36. Be with respect to chance.

Yourselves, renewed prices, then stand as fair
As any comer I have looked For my affection.
Shakespeare, Merchant of Venice, ii. 1.

Each thinks he stands fairest for the great lot, and that he is possessed of the golden number. — Addison, Spectator.
He was a gentleman of considerable practice at the bar, and stood fair for the first vacancy on the bench. — Howe.

37. Remain satisfied.

Though Page be a secure fed, and stand so firmly on his wife's frailty, yet I cannot put off my opinion so easily. — Shakespeare, Merry Wives of Windsor,
ii. 1.

38. Be without motion.

I'll tell you who time ambles withal, who time trots withal, who time gallops withal, and who he stands still withal. — Shakespeare, As you like it,
iii. 2.

39. Make delay.

They will suspect they shall make but small progress, if in the books they read they must stand to examine and unravel every argument. —
Locke.

40. Insist; dwell with many words, or much pertinacity.

To stand upon every point, and go over things at large, and be curious in particulars, belongeth to the first author of the story. — 2 Maccabees, ii. 30.
It is so plain that it needeth not to be stood upon.
— Bacon.

41. Be exposed.

Have I lived to stand in the taunt of one that makes fraters of English? — Shakespeare, Merry Wives of Windsor, v. 5.

42. Persist; persevere.

Hath the prince a full commission,
To hear, and absolutely to determine
Of what conditions we shall stand upon?
Shakespeare, Henry IV. Part II. iv. 1.

Never stand in a lie when thou art accused, but ask pardon and make amends. — Jeremy Taylor, Rule and Exercises of Holy Living.

The emperor, standing upon the advantage he had got by the seizure of their fleet, obliged them to deliver. — Swift, Gulliver's Travels.

43. Adhere; abide.

Despair would stand to the sword,
To try what friends would do, or fate afford.
Daniel.

44. Be consistent.

His faithful people, whatsoever they rightly ask,
the same shall they receive, so far as may stand with the glory of God, and their own everlasting good; unto either of which it is no virtuous man's purpose to seek any thing prejudicial. — Hooker,
Ecclesiastical Polity.
Doubt me not; by heaven, I will do nothing
But what may stand with honour.

Some instances of fortune cannot stand with some others; but if you desire this, you must lose that. — Jeremy Taylor.

It stood with reason, that they should be rewarded liberally out of their own labours, since they received pay. — Sir J. Barke.
Sprightly youth and close application will hardly stand together. — Fulton.

45. Be put aside with disregard.

We make all our addresses to the prebends, and neglect them, and in the interim let the councils stand by neglected. — Dr. H. More, Decay of Christian Piety.

46. In Navigation. See extract.

To stand when expressed of a ship, implies the movement by which she advances towards a certain object, or departs from it; as the 'enemy stands in shore,' 'the English fleet is standing off.' 'At daybreak we discovered three sail standing to the northward.' To stand by a rope is to attend to it. To stand on is to continue the course on which the ship sails. Stand from under is an order given to those below to keep out of the way of anything being lowered down or let fall from above. To stand off or out to sea, when speaking of a vessel, is to keep at a competent distance from the shore, so as to be clear of danger. To stand off and on is to keep alternately near to the shore and out to sea. To stand under easy sail is to advance in any proposed course with a moderate impulse of wind upon the sails.

To stand upon starboard or larboard tack, is to advance by tacking either to the right or left of the ship. — Falconer, Nautical Dictionary. (Barney.)

Stand by.

a. Support; defend; not desert.

The man hoped the dog would stand by him, if set upon by the wolf. — Sir R. L'Estrange.

If he meet with a repulse, we must throw off the fox's skin, and put on the lion's: come, gentlemen, you'll stand by me. — Dryden, Spanish Friar, iv. 1.

Our good works will attend and stand by us at the hour of death. — Calamy.

b. Be present without being an actor.

Marjaret's curse is fall'n upon our heads,
For standing by when Richard kill'd her son.
Shakespeare, Richard III. iii. 3.

Stand by when he is going. — Scyll.

c. Repose on; rest in.

The world is inclined to stand by the Arundelian marble. — Pope, Essay on Homer.

Stand for.

a. Propose one's self a candidate.

How many stand for consuls? — Three; but the thought of every one Coriolanus will carry it. —
Shakespeare, Coriolanus, ii. 2.

If they were jealous that Coriolanus had a design on their liberties when he stood for the consulship, it was but just that they should give him a repulse.
— Dean.

b. Maintain; profess to support.

Those which stand for the presbytery thought their cause had more sympathy with the discipline of Scotland than the hierarchy of England. — Bacon.
Freedom we all stand for. — B. Jonson.

Stand off.

a. Keep at a distance.

Stand off, and let me take my fill of death.
Dryden, Don Sebastian, v. 1.

b. Refuse to comply.

Stand no more off,
But give thyself into my sick desires.
Shakespeare, All's well that ends well, iv. 2.

c. Forbear friendship or intimacy.

Our bloods pour'd altogether
Would quite confound distinction; yet stand off
In difference so mighty.
Shakespeare, All's well that ends well, ii. 3.

Such behaviour breeds away friendship, and makes it stand off in dislike and aversion. — Cyprian, Epistles, vi. Friendship.

Though nothing can be more honourable than an acquaintance with God, we stand off from it, and will not be tempted to embrace it. — Bishop Abernethy.

d. Have relief; appear protuberant or prominent.

Picture is best when it standeth off, as if it were carved; and sculpture is best when it appears so tender as if it were painted; when there is such a softness in the lines, as if not a chisel had hewed them out of stone, but a jewel had drawn and stroked them in oil. — Sir H. Wotton, Elements of Architecture.

Stand out.

a. Hold resolution; hold a post; not yield a point.

King John hath reconciled Himself to Rome; his spirit is come in,
That so stood out against the holy church.
Shakespeare, King John, v. 2.

Pompey knows not you,
While you stand out upon these traitorous terms.
B. Jonson, Volpone's Conspiracy, iv. v.

Let not men flatter themselves less, that he hath the find it difficult at present to combat and stand out against an ill practice; yet that old age would do that for them, which they in their youth could never find in their hearts to do for themselves. —
South, Sermons.

Scarcely can a good-natured man refuse a complaisance with the solicitations of his company, and stand out against the railery of his familiars. — Rogers.

b. Not comply; secede.

Thou shalt see me once more strike at Tullus' face:
What art thou still? stand out!
Shakespeare, Coriolanus, i. 1.

If the ladies will stand out, let them remember that the jury is not all acquit. — Dryden.

c. Be prominent or protuberant.

Their eyes stand out with fatness; they have more than heart could wish. — Psalm, lxxii. 7.

Stand to.

a. Ply; persevere.

Palinurus cried aloud,
What gusts of weather from that gathering cloud
My thoughts presume! ere that the tempest roars,
Stand to your tackle, mates, and stretch your oars.
Virgil, Translation of the Æneid, v. 18.

b. Remains fixed in a purpose.

He that will pass his land,
As I have mine, may set his hand
And heart unto this deed, when he hath read;
And make the purchase spread
To both our goods if he to it will stand.
G. Herbert.

I still stand to it, that this is his sense, as will appear from the design of his words. — Bishop Stillingfleet.

c. Abide by a contract or assertion.

As I have no reason to stand to the award of my enemies; so neither dare I trust the partiality of my friends. — Dryden.

Stand under. Undergo; sustain.

If you unite in your complaints,
And force them with a constancy, the cardinal
Cannot stand under them.
Shakespeare, Henry VIII. iii. 2.

Stand up.

a. Erect one's self; rise from sitting.

I cry unto thee, and thou dost not hear me; I stand up, and thou rearest me not. — Job, xxx. 20.

b. Arise in order to gain notice.

When the accusers stand up, they brought none accusation of such things as I supposed. — Acts, xxi. 18.

c. Make a party.

When we stand up about the corn, he himself stuck not to call us the many-headed monster.
Shakespeare, Coriolanus, ii. 3.

Stand upon.

a. Concern; interest.

Does it not, think thee, stand me now upon?
Shakespeare, Hamlet, v. 2.
The king knowing well that it stood him upon, by how much the more he had hitherto protracted the time, by so much the sooner to dispatch with the rebels. — Bacon, History of the Reign of Henry VII.
It stands me much upon
To enervate this objection.
Baith, Hudibras, ii. l. 705.
Does it not stand them upon, to examine upon what grounds they presume it to be a revelation from God? — Locke.

b. Value; take pride.

Men stand very much upon the reputation of their understandings, and of all things hate to be accounted fools: the best way to avoid this imputation is to be religious. — Archbishop Tillotson.
We highly esteem and stand much upon our birth, though we derive nothing from our ancestors but our bodies; and it is useful to improve this advantage, to imitate their good examples. — Ray, On the Wisdom of God manifested in the Works of the Creation.

c. Insist.

A rascally, yea-forsooth knave, to bear a gentleman in hand, and then stand upon security. — Shakespeare, Henry IV. Part II. l. 2.

Stand. v. a.

1. Withstand.

None durst stand him;
Here, there, and every where, engaged he flew.
Shakespeare, Henry VI. Part I. l. 1.
Love stood the siege, and would not yield his lovers. — Dryden, Theodore and Monimia, 32.
Oh I hail boundless heaven
Bestow'd Hippolitus on Theseus's arms,
So had I stood the shock of angry fate.
Smith, Phœdra and Hippolitus.
That not for fame, but virtue's better end,
He stood the furious foe, the timid friend,
The dauntless critic. — Pope, Epistle to Arbuthnot.

2. Await; abide; suffer.

Bid him disband his legions,
Submit his actions to the publick censure,
And stand the judgment of a Roman senate.
Addison, Cato.

3. Keep; maintain: (with ground).

Turning at the length, he stood his ground,
And mised his friend.
Dryden, Translation of the Æneid, ix. 627.

Stand. s.

1. Station; place where one waits standing.

I have found you out a stand most fit,
Where you may have such vantage on the duke,
He shall not pass you.
Shakespeare, Measure for Measure, iv. 6.

In this covert will we make a stand,
Calling the principal of all the deer.
Id., Henry VI. Part III. iii. 1.

Then from his lofty stand on that high tree,
Down he alights among the sportful herds.
Milton, Paradise Lost, iv. 303.

The princely hierarch
On their bright stand there left his pow'rs to seize Possession of the garden. — Ibid, xi. 220.

Three persons entered into a conspiracy to assassinate Timoleon, as he was offering up his devotions in a certain temple: in order to it, they took their several stands in the most convenient places. — Addison.

The male bird, whilst the hen is covering her eggs, generally takes his stand upon a neighbouring bough, and directs her with his songs during her sitting. — Id., Spectator.

I took my stand upon an eminence which was appointed for a general rendezvous of these female carriers, to look into their several lodgings. — Ibid.

When just as by her stand Arsaces past,
The window by design or chance fell down,
And to his view exposed her dazzling beauties.
Ross.

The urchin from his private stand
Took aim, and shot with all his strength. — Swift.

Rank; post; station.

Father, since your fortune did attain
So high a stand, I meant not to desert. — Daniel.

Stop; halt.
A race of youthful and unhandled colts,
Fetiching mad bounds, bellowing and neighing;
If any air of music touch their ears,
You shall perceive them make a mutual stand;
Their savage eyes turn'd to a modest gaze.
Shakespeare, Merchant of Venice, v. 1.

The Earl of Northampton followed the horse so closely, that they made a stand, when he furiously charged and routed them. — Lord Clarendon, History of the Great Rebellion.

Once more the fleeting soul came back,
To inspire the mortal frame,
And in the body took a doubtful stand,
Doubtful and hovering like expiring flame,
That mounts and falls by turns.
Dryden, Theodora Augustalis, 114.

At every turn she made a little stand,
And thrust among the thorns her sly hand
To draw the rose. — Id., Palamon and Arcite, l. 191.

Well, I Arden, what is this?
The men of Gilead, my lord, the men of Gilead.
What, here? — Two miles off they make a stand.
What, are they mad? — I think not mad, my lord,
But desperate.
H. Taylor, Philip van Artevelde, Part I. v. 3.

Stop; interruption.

The greatest part of trade is driven by young merchants, upon borrowing of interest; so as, if the usurer either call in or keep back his money, there will ensue presently a great stand of trade.
Bacon.

Should this circulation cease, the formation of ladies would be at an end, and nature at a perfect stand. — Woodward.

Act of opposing.

We are come off
Like Romans; neither foolish in our stands,
Nor cowardly in retire.
Shakespeare, Coriolanus, i. 6.

Highest mark; stationary point: point from which the next motion is regressive.

Our sons but the same things can wish and do;
Vice is at stand, and at the highest flow;
Then, satire, spread thy sails; take all the wind blow. — Dryden.

In the beginning of summer the days are at a stand, with little variation of length or shortness;
because the diurnal variation of the sun partakes more of a right line than of a spiral. — Id.

The sea, since the memory of all ages, hath continued at a stand, without considerable variation. — Bentley.

7. Point beyond which one cannot proceed.

Every part of what we would,
Doth make a stand at what your highness will.
Shakespeare, King John, iv. 2.

When famed Vandyke this little wonder drew,
Flora combated the growing work to view;
Finding the painter's science at a stand,
The goddess snatch'd the pencil from his hand;
And flashing the piece, she smiling said,
Behold one work of mine that ne'er shall fade.
Prin.

8. Difficulty; perplexity; embarrassment; hesitation.

A fool may so far irritate the wits of a wise man, as at first to put a body to a stand what to make of him. — Sir R. L. Estrop.

The well-shaped clausule in a man, has a rational sound, though it appear not: this is just doubt.
Make the ears a little longer, then you begin to hearle: make the feet yet narrower, and then you are at a stand. — Locke.

9. Frame or table on which vessels are placed.

Such squires are only fit for country towns,
To stink of ale, and dust a stand with clowns;
Who, to be chosen for the land's protectors,
Tops and get drunk before the wren electors.
Dryden.

After supper a stand was brought in, with a brass vessel full of wine, of which he that pleased might drink; but no liquor was forced. — Id., Translation from P'ntarch, Life of Cleonence.

10. Building, scaffolding, or erection of any kind, placed so as to command a view of some particular object or action, e.g. a procession or a race. Such stands may be either temporary or permanent: (as 'the Grand Stand' at Ascot and elsewhere).

At length, a sprinkling of human beings is collected, but all is wondrous still, and wondrous cold.
The only thing that gives sign of life, is Lord Broomfield's movable stand; and the only intimation that fire is still an element, is the smiling breath of a stray cigar. — *H. Disraeli, The Young Duke, b. iii.
ch. i.*

Stand-up. adj. [often sounded as two words.]

Term applied to pugilistic contests, wherein the combatants stand manfully against one another, avoiding false or sham falls: (as,
'A fair stand-up fight').

If it should be pitted... for a stand-up fight... its best friends would have most reason to deplore
the inevitable results. — Times Newspaper, February 8, 1869.

Standard. s. [N.Fr. étendard.]

1. Ensign borne in battle.

This ensign, in the following day,
On those fair plains their standards proud display.
Milford.

Revet the standard thence of ancient night,
Yours be the advantage all, mine the revenge.
Milton, Paradise Lost, ii. 936.

To their common standard they repair;
The nimble horsemen scour the fields of air.
Dryden.

Behold... Camillus, loaded home,
With standards well releev'd and foreign foes
o'ercome.
Id., Translation of the Æneid, vi. 1132.

The royal standard, the state flag of Great Britain and Ireland... displays the arms of the United Kingdom, quarterly, first and fourth, three lions passant, guardant in pale, or, for England; second,
a lion rampant, gules within a double tressure flory, counterparty of the last, for Scotland; third, azure,
a harp, or, stringed argent, for Ireland; on an occasion of pretence, ensigned with the electoral hoop, and divided per pale and per chevron, quarterly in three compartments, the arms of His Majesty's dominions in Germany; gules, two lions passant guardant in pale, or, for Brunswick; or, seven of hearts proper, a lion rampant, azure, Lüneburg; third, gules, a horse courant argent for Saxony, in the centre, on an escutcheon gules, the crown of Charles-Auguste proper, being the badge of the office of arch-treasurer to the Holy Roman Empire. — Edinburgh, Nautical Dictionary. (Hurney).

2. That which is of undoubted authority; that which is the test of other things of the same kind.

The dramatist gives the lie to all dissenting apprehensions, and proclaims his judgment the fittest intellectual standard. — Glanville.

The heavenly motions are more stated than the terrestrial models, and are both originals and standards. — Hobbes.

When people have brought right and wrong to a false standard, there follows an evanescent uncertainty. — Sir R. L. Estrop.

The Romans made those times the standard of their wit, when they subdued the world. — Bishop Sprat.

From these ancient standards, I descend to our own historians. — Fellon.

When I shall propose the standard whereby I give judgement, any may easily inform himself of the quantity and measure of it. — Woodward.

The court, which used to be the standard of propriety and correctness of speech, ever since continued the worst school in England for that accomplishment. — Swift.

First follow nature, and your judgement frame
By her just standard, which is still the same.
Pope, Essay on Criticism, l. 18.

Suppose, for instance, I good-naturedly pointed out a blemish in my friend Mr. Punch's person, and say Mr. P. has a hump-back, and his nose and ears are more crooked than those features in Apollo's Antinous, which we are accustomed to consider as our standards of beauty; does this argue malice on my part towards Mr. Punch? Not in the least. It is the critic's duty to point out defects as well as merits, and he invariably does his duty with the utmost gentleness and candour. — Thackeray, Book of Snobs, ch. xvi.

That which has been tried by the proper test.

The English tongue, if refined to a certain standard, perhaps might be fixed for ever. — Swift.

4. Settled rate; fixed value.

That precise weight and fineness, by law ascertained to the pieces of each denomination, is called the standard. — Locke.

The device of king Henry VII. was profound in making farms of a standard, that is, maintained with such a proportion of lands as may breed a subject to live in plenty.—Bacon.

A standard might be made, under which no horse should be used for draught: this would enlarge the breed of horses.—Sir W. Temple.

By the present standard of the coinage, sixty-two shillings is coined out of one pound weight of silver.—Arbuthnot.

Used adjectively.

Our measures of length, I cannot call standards; for standard measures must be certain and fixed.—Hobler.

In comely rank call every merit forth: Imprint on every act its standard worth.

Prior, Carmen Seculare for the Year 1700.

5. In Horticulture. Standing stem or tree.

A standard of a damask rose, with the root in, was set upright in an earthen pan, full of fair water, half a foot under the water, the standard being more than two feet above it.—Boson, Natural and Experimental History.

Plant fruit of all sorts, and standard, mural, or arbutus which lose their leaf.—Reyn, Calendar.

In France part of their gardens is laid out for flowers, others for fruits; some standards, some against walls.—Sir W. Temple.

O blackbird! sing me something well: While all the neighbours shoot these round, I keep smooth plots of fruitful ground, Where thou mayst warble, eat, and dwell. The squabblers and the standards all Are thine; the range of lawn and park: The modelled black-hearts ripen dark, All thine, against the garden wall.

Tennyson, The Blackbird.

Standardbearer. s. One who bears a standard or ensign.

They shall be as when a standardbearer fainteth.—Isaiah, x. 18.

These are the standardbearers in our routmaking armies, the dwarfs and squires who carry the imprecations of the giants or knights.—South.

Standard. s. Standard tree. Rare.

The Druids were not left to see the princely stand of their royal oak return with a branch of willow.—Herrell, Forest Forest.

The commissioners of this county did not over-weary themselves in working, when they returned these persons, presenting no underwood, yew, no standard, but only yewer oaks, men of great wealth and worship in this shire.—Faller, Worthies, Northumberland, (Rich.)

Care was taken in the reign of Henry the Eighth (when woods were in a far better condition than now-a-days) for the preservation of all standards of beech.—Ibid., Buckinghamshire.

Stander. s.

1. One who stands.

Those soldiers who had kept their lives could best use their arms, the stander being always the sourest striker.—Faller, Holy War, p. 219: 1633.

2. Standard tree.

The young spring was pitifully nipt and over-trodden by very hinds; and also the fairest standard of all were rooted up and cast into the fire.—Isaiah, xlviii. 1.

Stander by. One present; mere spectator.

Explain some statute of the land to the stander by.—Howell, Ecclesiastical Poet.

I would not be a stander by to hear My sorrows and woes clouded so, without My present vengeance taken.

Shakespeare, Winter's Tale, i. 2.

When a gentleman is disposed to swear, it is not for my standers by to curtail his oaths.—Id., Cymbeline, ii. 1.

The standers by see clearly this event, All parties say they're sure, yet all dissent.

Sir J. Denham.

The standers by suspected her to be a duchess.—Adrian.

Stander up. One who makes himself of a party.

The plausible, affected titles of publick spirits, standers up for their country, and for the liberties, properties, and the rights of the subject.—South, Sermons, vi. 118.

Standing. part. adj.

1. Settled; established; not temporary.

Standing armies have the place of subjects, and the government depends upon the contented and discontented humours of the soldiers.—Sir W. Temple.

Laugh'd all the powers who favour tyranny, And all the standing army of the sky.

Dryden.

Money being looked upon as the standing measure of other commodities, men consider it as a standing measure, though when it has varied its quantity it is not so.—Larke.

Thus doth he advise them to erect among themselves standing courts by consent.—Kettlewell.

Such a one, by pretending to distinguish himself from the herd, becomes a standing object of rally.

—Adrian.

The common standing rules of the Gospel are a more powerful means of conviction than any miracle.—Bishop Atterbury.

Then Truth is hush'd, that Heresy may preach; And all's trash, that Reason cannot reach: Then God's own images on the soul impress'd Become a mockery, and a standing jest.

Cowper, Reformation.

To such length has modern machinery reached, Baskinley, we said, was great; but indeed money itself is a standing miracle.—Carlyle, The French Revolution, pt. ii. b. i. ch. ii.

It is (at least it was) a sort of standing rule in Oxford to wear the academic dress in finishing ladies.—G. F. Cox, Recollections of Oxford, p. 436: 1868.

2. Lasting; not transitory.

The landlubber had swelled his body to a prodigious size, and worked up his complexion to a standing crimson.—Adrian.

3. Stagnant; not running.

He turneth the wilderness into a standing water.—Psalm, cvii. 35.

This made their flowing shrink From standing lake to tripping ebbs.

Milton, Paradise Lost, xi. 846.

4. Fixed; not movable.

There's his chamber, His standing bed and trundle bed.

Shakespeare, Henry IV. of Windsor, iv. 5.

The standing part of a rope or tackle in the formation of knots, is the principal part of a rope which is made fast to the mast, deck, or block, in contradistinction to that pulled upon, which is called the fall or running part. The standing part of a sheet is that part which is made fast to the sheet's quarter. . . . Standing rigging is that which is employed to sustain the mast, and which remains in a fixed position; as the shrouds, stays, and backstays. Running rigging is that which is fitted for the purpose of the sails. Standing water is that in which there is no current or tide.—Fulmer, Nautical Dictionary. (Barnes.)

5. Continuing erect; not fallen; not cut down.

He let them go in the standing corn of the Philistines.—Judges, xv. 5.

Standing. verbal ult.

1. Continuance; long possession of an office, character, or place.

Nothing had been more easy than to command a patron of a long standing.—Dephon.

Although the ancients were of opinion that Egypt was formerly sea, yet this tract of land is as old, and of as long a standing as any upon the continent of Africa.—Woodward.

I wish your fortune had enabled you to have continued longer in the university, till you were of ten years' standing.—Swift.

2. Station; place to stand in.

Such ordnance as he brought with him, because it was fitter for service in field than for battery, did only beat down the battlements, and such little standings.—Kocher, History of the Turks.

His coming in is state; I will provide you a good standing to see his entry.—Howell.

Standing for hackney carriages.—Public Notice in several Parts of London.

3. Power to stand.

I sink in deep mire, where there is no standing.—Psalm, lxxix. 2.

No place for standing, mis-called standing room.

J. and H. Smith, Ejected Addresses, Imitation of Crabbe.

4. Rank; condition.

Standish. s. [stand-dish.] Stand for pen and ink.

I have newly made at least an essay of my invention in the structure of a little poor standish.—Sir H. Wotton, Reueries, p. 313.

A Grid-street patriot does not write to secure, but to get something: should the government be overturned, he has nothing to lose but an old standish.—Adrian.

I frequently to Denise Swift, esq. my large silver standish, consisting of a large silver plate, an ink-pot, and a sand-box.—Swift.

Standstill. s. Incapacity of moving or stirring: (as 'Bent to a standstill').

None of the Siamese twins insisted on running, and the other on walking, the result would be a stand-still, if not a downfall.—Times Newspaper, February 26, 1868.

Stang. s. [A.S.]

1. Long bar; wooden pole; shaft of a cart.

2. Perch; measure of land.

These fields were intermingled with woods of half a stang, and the tallest tree appeared to be seven feet high.—Swift.

Ride the stang. Ride skimmington. See: extracts.

Early on the morning of the first of January, the Fox Populi assemble together carrying stangs and baskets. Any inhabitant, stranger, or whoever joins not the ruffian tribe in sacrificing to their favourite saint-day, if unfortunate enough to be met by any of the band, is immediately mounted on the stang (if a woman, she is basketed), and carried shoulder-height to the nearest public-house, where the payment of sixpence immediately liberates the prisoner.—Gentleman's Magazine, p. 119: 1791.

Thomas Jamison, Matthew Murrington, George Hall, Joseph Rowntree, Simon Emerson, Robin Parkin, and Francis Wardle, for violently assaulting Nicholas Lowry, of Bishop Wearmouth, and carrying him on a stang, were sentenced to be imprisoned two years in Durham goal, and find sureties for their good behaviour for three years.—Newcastle upon Tyne Courant, August 8, 1793.

A party of boys, assuming the office of public censors, are riding the stang. This is a pole, supported on the shoulders of two or more of the lads, across which one of them is mounted, beating an old join or kettle with a stick. He at the same time repeats a speech, or what they term a naming, which, for the sake of detailing the tedious ceremony, is here subjoined:—

With a ran, ran, ran, On my old tin can, Mrs. — and her good man, She laund' him, she brought him, For spending a penny what I stood in need; She up with a three-folded shawl; She struck him so hard, and she cut so deep, Till the blood run down like a new-stick shawl.

Custom of Yorkshire, p. 61: 1814.

A custom [is] still prevalent among the country people of Scotland; who oblige any man, who is so intemperate as to beat his wife, to ride astride on a long pole, borne by two men, through the village, as a mark of the highest infamy. They call riding the stang; and the person who has been thus treated, when he recovers his honour in the opinion of his neighbours. When they cannot lay hold of the culprit himself, they put some young fellow on the stang or pole, who proclaims that it is not on his own account that he is thus treated, but on that of another person, whom he names.—Callender, Two Ancient Scottish Poems, p. 15.

To ride the stang is to be mounted on a strong pole, borne on men's shoulders, and carried about from place to place; the rider representing usually a heaped husband, and sometimes the husband who had beaten his wife. To ride skimmington, is, in some parts of England, of much the same import.—Todd.

The riding of the stang in a woman that hath lost her husband is, as I have described, by one's riding upon a long piece of wood, carried by two others on their shoulders, where, like a brand, he proclaims the woman's name, &c.—Notes to Allan Ramsay's Poems, cited by Broad.

There used formerly, and I believe it is still now and then retained, to be a kind of ignominious procession in the north of England, called riding the stang, when, as the glossary to Douglas's Virgil informs us, one is made to ride on a pole for his neighbour's wife's fault.—Brand, Popular Antiquities, ii. 107.

Stanhope. s. Kind of gig, named from the man of fashion who first brought it into notice, about A.D. 1820.

The office of Wilkins Flasher, Esquire, of the Stock Exchange was in a first floor up a court behind the Bank of England; the house of Wilkins Flasher, Esquire, was at Brixton, Surrey; the horse and stanhope of Wilkins Flasher, Esquire, were at an adjacent livery stable; the man of Wilkins Flasher, Esquire, was on his way to the West End to deliver some games; the clerk of Wilkins Flasher, Esquire, had gone to his dinner; and so Wilkins Flasher, Esquire, himself, cried, 'Come in,' when Mr. Fell and his companions knocked at the counting-house door.—Dickens, Pickwick Papers, ch. iv.

Staniel. s. [see Stonegall.] In Fulcnry. Inferior kind of hawk so called; ? sparrowhawk; ? kestrel; Stone-hawk.

With what wing the staniel chucks at it.

Shakespeare, Twelfth Night, ii. 8.

To prevent this danger, therefore, the doves need to have with them the bird which is called Titian-culus, i.e. a kestrel, or staniel; for she defendeth them, and by a certain natural power that she hath) searcheth and terrifyeth all other hawks; inasmuch that they cannot abide either to see her or to hear her cry.—Holland, Translation of Phry's Natural History, ii. 2, ch. xxxiv. (Rich.)

'Stid, this Staniel is a marlinist; and if I had not held him a fewerish, white-livered staniel, that would never have encountered any but the seven stars, that Knight of the Sun who employed me should have done him grand himself.—Lady Alimony, sign. ii. 1. (Nares by H. and W.)

Stanielry. s. Ignoble falconry. Rare.

My wish shall be for all that puny, pen-feathered syrr of buxardism and stanielry.—Lady Alimony, sign. i. 4. (Nares by H. and W.)

Stank. adj. [Italian, stanco.] Weak; worn out; weary. Rare.

Diagon, I am so stiff and so stank,
That much I may stand any more,
And how the western wind bloweth sore,
Beating the withered leaf from the tree. Spenser.

Stank. s. [A.S. stanc.] Dam; that by which anything is held up, or kept back.

Stannary. s. [Lat. stannum = tin.] Tin mine; tin-work, especially in Cornwall, the chief tin district of England and Europe.

If by public law the mint were ordained to be only supplied by our stannaries, how currently would they pass for more precious than silver mines!—Whitby Hall, Select Thoughts, § 17.

The stannary courts of Devonshire and Cornwall for the administration of justice among the tinners herein, are also courts of record, but of the same private and exclusive nature. They are held before the lord warden and his substitutes, in virtue of a privilege granted to the workers in the tin mines there, to sue and be sued only in their own courts, that they may not be drawn from their business, which is highly profitable to the public, by attending their lawsuits in other courts. . . . All tinners and labourers in and about the stannaries shall, during the time of their working therein, have the privilege from suits of other courts, and be only impleaded in the stannary court on all matters excepting pleas of land, life, and member. Sir W. Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England, b. iii. ch. vi. § 8.

Come, Yarn-moth, my boy, never trouble your brains
About what your old cronny,
The Emperor Hussy,

In doing, or lawing, on Muscovy's plains,
Nor trouble my lad, at the fate of our granaries;
Should there come a famine,

Still plenty to crum in
You always shall have, my dear lord of the stannaries. T. Moore, The Troop and Pathway.

In the singular number.

She hath also laid upon you the charge of a government in your own country, where you are to command manly people by your honorable office of the stannary, and where you are both a judge and a chancellor to rule in justice and to judge in equity. —Holinshead, Chronicle, Epistle Dedicatory. (Rich.)

Used adjectively.

A steward keepeth his court once every three weeks: they are termed stannary courts, of the Latin stannum, and hold plea of action of debt or trespass about white or black tin. Cyrie.

Stanstickle. s. Stickleback; banstickle; Jack's banstickle.

To stanstickle he did them all transform,
A fish no bigger than a petty worm.

The New Metamorphoses; MS. temp. Jac. I.
(Nares by H. and W.)

Stanza. s. [Italian.] In Poetry. Term applied to certain definite divisions of a metrical composition in which there is a pause, stund, or break, in both the sense and the metre. The stanza is more regular than the strophe, and longer than the couplet; though of course a couplet can be printed in a stanzaic form. Triplets, however, have a fairer claim to be considered such, while in respect to the quatrain, especially when (as in Gray's Elegy, &c.) the rhymes are alternate, there is no doubt as to its character. The Spenserian stanza (Faerie Queen, Child Harold, &c.) has nine lines; the Italian Ottava rima (as in Don Juan) eight; these numbers and four giving the ordinary number. The type and standard of the stanza is found in such Latin and Greek metres as the Alcaic, the Sapphic, and more particularly the stanzic Asclepiad, wherein the first three lines are identical in the way of metre, and the third, with which the stanza concludes, differs from them only in its length.

No hold as yet no verse of mine has been
To wear that gown on any line,
Nor till the happy mirthful house be seen Shall any stanza with it shine. Cowley.

Hence conveys himself strictly to one sort of verse or stanza in every ode.—Dryden.

In quatrains, the last line of the stanza is to be considered in the composition of the first.—Id.
Before his sacred name flies every fault,
And each exalted stanza beams with thought.

Pope, Essay on Criticism, ll. 423.
Stanza [is] a certain stated number of grave verses, containing some perfect sense, terminated with a rest or pause. The word is Italian, and signifies a stanza or station, because of the pause to be made at the end of each stanza, or complete sense.

. . . Stanzas were first introduced from the Italian into the French poetry about the year 1650, and thence they were transferred into the English.—Rea, Cyclopaedia.

When two or more stanzas are knit together into one, the compound stanza thence resulting may be called a stanza—a name that seems to have been first applied to the compound Italian stanza which came into fashion during the sixteenth century.—Dr. Gual, History of English Rhythms, b. iv. ch. i.

Stanzale. adj. Arranged as a stanza.
(See under Stanza.)

Staple. s.

1. Settled mart; established emporium.

A staple of romance and lies,
False tears, and real perjuries.

Prior, An English Padlock.
The customs of Alexandria were very great, it having been the staple of the Indian trade.—Arbuthnot, Tables of ancient Coins, Weights, and Measures.

Tyre Alexander the Great sacked; and, establishing the staple at Alexandria, made the greatest revolution in trade that ever was known.—Id.

The earl then acquainted them that he should move their sovereign to honour Woolstock occasionally with her residence. . . . Meanwhile, he refused to be the expounder of her gracious pleasure, in assuring them that for the increase of trade and encouragement of the worthy burghers of Woolstock, his majesty was minded to erect the town into a staple for wool.—Sir W. Scott, Knutworth, ch. vii.

Druses . . . was the great staple for both Mediterranean and northern merchandise.—Hallam, View of the State of Europe during the Middle Ages, ch. ix. pt. ii.

2. Original material of a manufacture.

At Leicester, for her wool whose staple doth excel,
And seems to overmatch the golden Phrygian fell.
Dryden, Polydion.

3. Staple commodity.

As I told you before, the whale is the staple of this island. You observe that his skin serves us as a house; from his leavings form all our implements: from his sinews, our thickest ropes down to our finest thread. The dress we wear is composed of the belly-part of the skin, dressed with a sort of soap, composed of the blubber obtained from the sea-weed which abounds in the lake, and the oil of the whale. His blubber serves us for fuel and candle; his flesh for meat, and the milk is invaluable to us.—Maryat, The Parks of Wray Tals.

4. Main element.

'I have been bred and reared all my life by this grandfather of whom I have just spoken. Now, he has a great many good points; there is no doubt about that; I'll not disguise the fact from you; but he has two very great faults, which are the staple of his bad side. In the first place, he has the most confirmed obstinacy of character you ever met with in any human creature. In the second, he is most abominably selfish.—Dickens, Martin Chuzzlewit, ch. vi.

Staple. adj.

1. Settled; established in commerce.

Some English wool, very good in a Bolesian hoar,
And into cash of springy softness made,
Did into France or colder Denmark roam,
To ruin with worse wares our staple trade.

Dryden, Anna Martinis, revii.
[Leather], though common to all countries, is better under the manufactures of Middlesex, because London therein is the staple place of slaughter, and the hides of beasts there bought, and generally tanned about Rufford, in this county.—Faller, Wortham, Middlesex.

[The] commerce of the English towns was confined to the exportation of wool, the great staple commodity of England.—Hallam, View of the State of Europe during the Middle Ages, pt. ii. ch. ix.

2. According to the laws of commerce.

What needy writer would not solicit to work under such masters, who will take off their wares at their own rates, and trouble not themselves to examine whether it be staple or no?—Swift.

Staple. s. Loop of iron; bar bent and driven in at both ends.

I have seen staples of doors and nails born.—Peckham.

Stapler. s. Merchant of the staple.

I do not mean only the staplers of Hamburg and Rotterdam.—Holwell, Letters, l. 6, 32.

Star. s. [A.S. steorra.]

1. Luminous nocturnal heavenly body, other than the moon; generally comprising the fixed stars and planets; strictly the former only.

Then let the pebbles on the hungry beach
Fillip the stars. Shakespeare, Coriolanus, v. 3.

I might as well attempt
To fix upon some bright particular star,
And strive to wed it, he's no more above me.

Id., All's well that ends well, l. 1.

Now of love they treat, till the evening star,
Love's harbingier, appear'd.

Milton, Paradise Lost, xl. 588.
His soul was like a star, and dwelt apart.
Wordsworth.

A violet 'neath a mossy stone,

Half-hidden from the eye;

A single star, when only one

Is shining in the sky.

Id.

It would be a vain task to count the stars in one of these stellar clusters. They are not to be reckoned by hundreds; and on a rough calculation, grounded on the apparent intervals between them at the borders (where they are not seen projected on each other) and the angular diameter of the whole group, it would appear that many clusters of this description must contain at least ten or twenty thousand stars compressed and wedged together in a round space, whose angular diameter does not exceed 8 or 10 minutes; i.e. in an area not exceeding the tenth part of that covered by the moon.—Sir J. Herschel, in Lardner's Cabinet Encyclopedia, Astronomy.

As the first element in a compound.

Hither the Syracusan's art transmits
Heaven's form, the course of things and human fate;

The included spirit serving the star-deck'd signs,
The living work in constant motion winds.

Ukewill, Apeology.

2. With the. Polestar.

Well, if you be not turn'd Turk, there is no more sailing by the star.—Shakespeare, Much Ado about Nothing, iii. 4.

3. Configuration of the planets supposed to influence fortune.

We are apt to do amies, and lay the blame upon our stars or fortune.—Sir R. L'Estrange.

The [Grillparzer] has met with applause in the career [writing dramatic], which therefore he is likely to follow further and farther, but nature and his stars say to it what they will.—Carlyle, Critical and Miscellaneous Essays, German Playwrights.

4. Mark of reference; asterisk.

Remarks worthy of ripe observation, note with a

5. Ornament.

So like a shattered column lay the king;
So like that Arthur, who with lance in rest,
Fram'd to plunge a star of tournament,
Shed through the lists at Camelot, and charged
Before the eyes of ladies and of kings.

Tennyson, The Epic.

6. Specially applied, in theatrical matters, to an actor of superior eminence; e.g. one from the capital among those of the provinces. Hence, also, the use of the verb, as 'starring' or 'starring it in the provinces.'

7. Decoration.

Eighteen shillings a week! Just, most just, thy course, upright Pecksniff! Had it been for the sake of a ribbon, star, or garter, . . . or eighteen thousand pounds, or even eighteen hundred! . . . to worship the golden calf for eighteen shillings a week! Oh pitiful, pitiful!—Dickens, Martin Chuzzlewit, ch. x.

8. Flaw.

Tired out
With cutting eight that day upon the pond,
Where, three times slipping from the outer edge,
I lump'd the ice into three several stars.

Tennyson, The Epic.

Star. v. a.

1. Influence, or determine by the stars.

My third comfort,
Star'd most unluckily, is from my breast
Haled out to murder.

Shakespeare, Winter's Tale, iii. 2.

2. Decorate with stars.

He furious hurl'd against the ground
His sceptre star'd with golden stiles around.

Pope, Translation of the Iliad, l. 923.

Star-of-Bethlehem. s. Native plant of the genus Ornithogalum (umbellatum).

Starapple. s. In Botany. Edible fruit of the Chrysophyllum Cnito.

The starapple is a globular or olive-shaped soft fleshy fruit, enclosing a stone of the same shape. This plant grows in the warmest parts of America where the fruit is eaten by way of dessert. It grows to the height of thirty or forty feet.—Miller.

The fruit of many [of the Sapotaceae] is esteemed in their native countries as an article of the desert. Much are the amodilla plum, the starapple, the marmalade, the medlar of Surinam, and others; they are described as having generally a sweet taste, with a little acidity.—Lindley, Vegetable Kingdom.

Starboard. s. [A.S. steorboord = rudder.] Right-hand side of the ship, as larboard is the left.

On shipboard the mariners will not leave their starboard and larboard, because some one accounts it eitherish. — Brainhall.

We have had enough of action and of motion, we roll'd to starboard, roll'd to larboard, when the surge was settling free.

When the wallowing monster spouted his foam-fountains in the sea.

Tennyson, The Lotos-eaters.

Used adjectively.

The Hellona . . . kept too close to the starboard shoal, and grounded against the outer ship of the enemy. . . . Each ship had been ordered to pass her leader on the starboard side, because the water was supposed to shoal on the larboard shore. — Smith's Life of Nelson, ch. vii.

On the starboard side of the deck, just abaft the gangway, stood the apparatus of punishment. — Hanning, Singleton Enticery.

Starob. s. [stark = strong, stiff.] That which gives strength, or stiffness; especially applied to certain granular vegetable elements, which, when partially dissolved in water, may be used for the stiffening of linen. In Physiology, starch is an important alimentary substance; and in Chemistry, important for the way in which it comports itself with certain reagents, e.g. iodine. Thus considered, starchy is often rendered by the word amylaceous, from amylum = starch.

But what you want? The devil, as he in the fulness of his malice first invented these great ruffles, so hath he now found out also two great pillars to bear up and maintain this his kingdom of pride without (for the devil is king and prince over all pride). The one arch or pillar with which the devil's kingdom of great ruffles is underproped, is a certain kind of liquid matter which they call starch, wherein the devil hath wiled them to wash and drier their ruffles, which being drier will stand stiff and upright about their necks. The other pillar is a certain device of wares created for the purpose, whipt with with gold thread, silver, or silk, and this he calleth a supportasse or underpropper. — Imitation of Imitation. (Saves by H. and W.)

Disliked your yellow starch, and your doublet Was not exactly Frenchified? — Shelley, Queen of Corinth.

With starch thin laid on, and the skin well stretched, prepare your ground. — Peacock, On Drawing.

Three kinds of starch have been distinguished by chemists; that of wheat, that called linum, and linum starch. These three serve in being insoluble in cold water, alcohol, ether, and oils, and in being converted into sugar by either dilute sulphuric acid or diastase. The main difference between these consists in their habitudes with water and iodine. — See, Dictionary of Arts, Manufactures, and Mines.

Used adjectively.

The potato consists of a mass of cells, enclosing starch-granules and an albuminous juice. The chemical composition of the potato is subject to great variations, as the analyses of different specimens vary considerably. In general terms, it may be stated that potatoes contain water in quantity amounting to three-fourths of their weight, the remaining fourth part being made up of starch, gum, sugar, albumen, vegetable fibre, and a very small proportion of fatty material. — Breide and Cox, Dictionary of Science, Literature, and Art.

2. Stiff, formal manner.

This professor is to infuse into their manners that beautiful political starch, which may qualify them for levees, conferences, visits. — Addison, Spectator, no. 305.

Starob. adj. Stiff; precise; rigid.

If this will not do, 'tis but misrepresenting subtlety as a starch and formal, and virtue as a laborious and slavish thing. — Killingbeck, Sermons, p. 250.

Starob. v. a. Stiffen with starch.

Her goodly countenance I've seen Bot off with kerchief starch'd and plumbers clean. — Gay, Shepherd's Week, Friday, 57.

Starobamber. s. Old criminal court of equity, now abolished.

There is a royal court of the star-chamber Will scatter all these mists, disperse these vapours, And clear the truth. — B. Jonson, The New Inn, v. 3. [They] do sit in a place which is called the starre-chamber, either because it is full of windows, or because at the first all the roofs thereof was decked with images of starres gilded. — Smith, Commonwealth, b. iii. ch. iv. (Rich.)

That court of justice, so tremendous in the Tudor and part of the Stuart reign, the star-chamber, still keeps its name, though was not taken from the stars with which its roof was said to have been painted (which were obliterated even before the time of Queen Elizabeth), but from the starrs (Hebrew starr) or Jewish covenants, which were deposited there by Richard I. in chests under three locks. No starr was allowed to be valid except found in those chests. . . . here they remained till the banishment of the Jews by Edward I. — Pennant, London, p. 122. (Rich.)

Thus it was the Court of Star-chamber (as the old court of the King's Council or Ordinarium was now called) exercised an extensive and anomalous jurisdiction, by means of which men were arbitrarily fined and imprisoned, and often suffered cruel mutilations for any alleged misdeed which the lords and prelates of the council or any minister of the crown might think fit to impute to them. — St. R. S. C. Essay, The Rise and Progress of the English Constitution, ch. xv.

No attempt was made after the Restoration to revive some of the instruments of royal misgovernment which the Long Parliament had overthrown. The Court of Star-chamber had been abolished, nor was it ever revived. — Id., ch. xvi.

Used adjectively.

Ullminster a starchy matter of it: if he were twenty Sir John Lubbocks, he shall not abuse Robert Shallow, esp. — Shakespeare, Merry Wives of Windsor, i. 1.

Starobed. part. adj.

1. Stiffened with starch.

Who? this in the starched beard? — B. Jonson, Every Man out of his Humour.

2. Stiff; precise; formal.

As supercilious . . . as a starched gallant is of any thing that may disorder his dress. — Hammond, Works, iv. 614.

Does the Gospel any where prescribe a starched squeezed countenance, a stiff formal frown, or a singularity of manners? — Swift.

Starobedness. s. Attribute suggested by Starched; stiffen; formality.

Chancing to smile at the Moor's deportment, as not answering the starobedness of his own nation. — Id., Addison, Description of Western Barbary, p. 165: 1671.

Starobes. s. One whose trade is to starch.

The taylor, starches, sews. — Macdonald, What you will.

Starobly. adv. In a starch manner; stiffly; precisely.

In answer to all this, I might with good pretence enough talk starobly, and affect ignorance of what you would be at. — Swift, Letter (in Sheridan's Life of Swift): 1704.

Starob. s. [A.S. stare, stær, stær.] Starling.

He that hath nothing but language only may be no more praised than a jockey, a jay, or a stare, when they speak fealty. — Sir T. Egmont, Gleanings, fol. 40.

Starob. v. n. [A.S. starian.]

1. Look with fixed eyes; look with wonder, impudence, confidence, stupidity, or horror.

Look not big, nor stare me first: I will be master of what is mine own.

Shakespeare, Titus of the Shrew, iii. 2. They were never satisfied with staring upon their masts, sails, cables, ropes, and turlings. — Abbot.

The tread of many feet steering this way; Perhaps my enemies, who come to stare At my affliction, and perhaps to insult. — Milton, Samson Agonistes, 110.

And, while he stares around with stupid eyes, His eyes with berries and his temples dyes. — Dryden, Translation of Virgil, Eclogues, vi. 54. Trembling the miscreant stood: He stared and roll'd his bearded eyes around.

Id., Translation of the Eclogues, ii. 53. Break out in crackling flames to slum thy snare, Or hiss a dragon, or a tree stare.

Id., Translation of the Georgics, iv. 591. Narcissa's nature, tolerably mild, To make a wench would hardly stew a child, Has been proved to grant a lover's prayer, And paid a tradesman once, to make him stare.

Pope, Moral Essays, ii. Gods! shall the ravisher display your hue While the fops cury, and the ladies stare! — Id., Rape of the Lock, canto iv.

Through nature and through art she ranged, And gracefully her subject changed: In vain; her hearers had no share In all she spoke, except to stare.

Swift, Cadenus and Vanessa. 'Mr. Tuppman, we are observed! — we are discovered!' Mr. Tuppman looked round. There was the fat boy, perfectly motionless, with his large circular eyes staring into the air, but without the slightest expression on his face that the most expert physiognomist could have referred to astonishment, curiosity, or any other known passion that agitates the human breast. — Dickens, Pickwick Papers, ch. viii.

2. Stand out prominent; stand up.

His hair stareth, or standeth on end. — Barret, Alceste: 150.

Starob. v. a. Affect or influence by stares; look at with a stare; look at with either a bold or a vacant expression.

Why dost thou not Try but the virtue of that Gargon face, To stare me into stare? — Dryden.

Is it possible for people without scruple to offend against the law, which they carry about them in indecipherable characters, and that stare them in the face whilst they are breaking it? — Locke.

A bear, as I approached with my present, threw his eyes in my way, and stared me out of my resolution. — Addison, Guardian.

The wit at his elbow gave him a touch upon the shoulder, and stared him in the face with so bewitching a grin, that the whistler relaxed his fibres. — Id., Spectator.

The High Bailiff of the city, who was himself in daily communication with Ferguson, reported to the House that he did not know where to find a single one of the refugees; and with this excuse the federal government was forced to be content. The truth was that the English exiles were as well known at Amsterdam, and as much stared at in the streets, as if they had been Chinese. — Macaulay, History of England, ch. v.

Whence comest thou? — Over Hensenstein: The owl was awake in the pale moonshine; I saw her at rest, in her downy nest, And she stared at me with her broad, bright eye. — Shelley, Translation from Goethe's Faust.

Starob. s. Fixed look.

I the name of something holy, sir, why stand you In this stare, stare? — Shakespeare, Twelfth, iii. 3. The balls of his broad eyes roll'd in his head, And glared hither a yellow and a red; He look'd a lion with a bloody stare, And o'er his eyes he hung his matted hair.

Dryden, Palamon and Arcite, iii. 41.

Starob. s. One who stares; one who looks with fixed eyes.

One self-approving hour a whole years outweighs Of stupid stares, and of bad lazars. — Pope, Essay on Man, iv. 255.

Starob. s. In Malacology. Radiate animal, chief of the genus Astoria; the term, however, has a wider application, and is sometimes given to the whole group of animals allied to, and represented by, the true starfishes.

The beauty and symmetry of the true starfishes attracted the attention of such observers of nature as dwell by the sea-side, from a very early period, and several kinds are noticed by ancient authors. . . . A fanciful analogy between the form of these radiata and the popular notion of a star has originated a name applied to them in most maritime countries, — a name which has given rise to a fine thought or two. As there are stars in the sky, so are there stars in the sea. 'Celestium spectula sidera deest juvenique astronomos; physarum interest stellis marinis visum intepere,' saith Christianus Gabriel Fischer, in his preface to Lank's volume. Our own poet, James Macpherson, whose inspiration has revealed gloriously among the wonders of nature, beautifully expresses the same analogy: —

The heavens Were thronged with constellations, and the seas Brown with their images. — E. Forbes, A History of British Starfishes.

Leaving the Ophiure, we are led through a long series of almost imperceptible gradations to the starfishes. In these, from the increased size of the body, the rays are omitted at their origin, and become so much dilated as to contain prolongations of the viscera lodged in their interior; an arrangement not met with in Ophiura and other slender-rayed Asteridae. The dilatation of the central part proceeds, and in the same proportion the rays become dilated; so that, by degrees, the asteroid shape becomes totally lost by the progressive filling up of the interspaces between the rays; and we arrive ultimately at completely pentagonal forms, the sides of the pentagon being perfectly straight lines. — Ermer Jones, General Outline of the Organization of the Animal Kingdom, § 334.

In the star-fishes, of which the body is flat, the mouth conducts to a wide stomach that fills the disc of the body. It was supposed formerly that this stomach was in all of them a blind sac, as Theodorus has described it in Asterias muricata. Afterwards Meckel detected in Comanthus a second opening of the intestinal canal, that lies on the same surface of the body with the mouth. — Dr. W. Clark, Translation of Van der Hoeven, Handbook of Zoology.

Starobes. s. One who contemplates the stars.

Let the astrologers, the stargazers, and the monthly prognosticators, stand up and save themselves. — Isaiah, xlvii. 13.

A stargazer, in the height of his celestial observations, tumbled into a ditch. — Sir R. L. Estlin.

Starobing. s. Contemplation of the stars.

staring. part. adj.

1. Gazing with a stare.

He cast on me a staring look with colour pale as death. Burton, Complaint of a Dying Lover. (Rich.)

Their staring eyes sparkled with fervent fire, And ugly slippers did nigh the man dismay, That, were it not for shame, he would retire. Spenser, Faerie Queen.

2. Sticking out.

Take off all the staring straws and jags in the hive, and make them smooth. — Mortimer, Household.

Star-jelly. s. In Botany. Cryptogamic plant of the genus Nostoc; Star-shot.

Common water, commonly called star-jelly, a trembling gelatinous plant that springs up suddenly after rain, is by superstitious persons supposed to possess virtue as a vulnerary, and in joints of the joints. — Lindley, The Vegetable Kingdom.

Stark. adj. [A.S. steare - strong.] The notions of strength and stiffness being allied, this is the origin of Starch.]

1. Strong.

Here be some forces of night so proud and stark, As can behold the sun, and never shrink. Sir T. W. Hall, in Padric's Art of Poetry. p. 202. (Nares by H. and W.)

Stark beer, boy, stout and stout beer, Beaumont and Fletcher, Beggar's Bush. lii. 1. (Nares by H. and W.)

His heavy head devoid of careful stark, Whose senses all were strait benumbed and stark. Spenser, Faerie Queen.

The north is not so stark and cold. B. Jonson. So soon as this spring is become stark enough, it breaks the ice in two, and slimes the seed. — De Rham, Physico-Theology.

2. Stiff in death; dead.

How found you him? — Stark, as you see. Shakespeare, Cymbeline. iv. 2.

3. Deep; full; still.

Consider the stark severity The commonwealth is in now; the whole senate Sleepy, and dreaming no such violent blow. B. Jonson, Catiline's Conspiracy.

4. Mere; simple; plain; gross.

To turn stark fools, and subjects fit For sport of boys and rabble wit. Rattler, Hudibras.

He pronounces the citation stark nonsense. — Collier.

With stiff.

Many a nobleman lies stiff and stark Under the hoofs of vintaging enemies. Shakespeare, Henry IV. Part I. v. 3.

I sought to close mine eyes, But like the tails, their lids were stiff and stark; I would have risen, but ere that I could rise, My parched skin was split with piercing agonies. Shelley, The Revolt of Islam.

In the following extract the sense is not evident; perhaps rigorous (as in rigorous weather) is as near an equivalent as exists.

From the stark night of vapours the dim rain is driven, And the lightning let loose, like a drudge from heaven. She sees the black trunks of the water-spout spin; And bend as if heaven were minning in From the skirts of the thundercloud. Shelley, A Vision of the Sea.

Used adverbially.

Then are the best but stark unmet; for open suspecting others' views of secret condemning themselves. — Sir P. Sidney.

The fruitful heaped bow, armed At flashing brows of that sun-shiny shield, Becomes stark blind, and all his senses dazed, That down he tumbled. Spenser.

Why, by the most covert arguments, will disrobe himself at once of all his old opinions, and turn himself out stark naked in quest of new notions? — Locke.

Common in combination with mad.

He is stark mad, who ever says That he hath been in love an hour. Dante.

These notions, that seemed moderate before, became desperate, and those who were desperate seemed stark mad; whence tumults, confused halloos and howlings. Sir J. Hayward.

Especially with staring.

In some squire South, all dressed up in feathers and ribbons, stark staring mad, brandishing his sword. — Arbuthnot, History of John Bull.

'It seems,' said the Earl of Derby, 'that Old England, who takes a frolicsome brain-fever once every two or three years, for the benefit of her doctors, and the purification of the torpid lethargy brought on by peace and prosperity, is now gone stark staring mad on the subject of a real or supposed Popish plot.' — Sir W. Scott, Peccol of the Peak. ch. v.

starkle. v. n. ? Startle. Rare.

When the news of these occurrences were flown far abroad, and intelligence thereof continually given, one after another, had made Galias Caesar to starkle. — Holland, Translation of Ammianus Marcellinus. 1664.

starkly. adv. In a stark manner; stiffly; strongly. Rare.

As fast lock'd up in sleep as guiltless labour, When it lies starkly in the traveller's lanes. Shakespeare, Measure for Measure. iv. 2.

starkless. adj. Having no light of stars.

A boundless continent, Dark, waste, and wild, under the frown of night, Starkless exposed. Milton, Paradise Lost. iii. 423.

Might give them furloughs for another world; But we, like sentries, are obliged to stand In starkless nights, and wait the appointed hour. Dryden.

starklight. s. Light of the stars.

Now they never meet in grove or green, By fountain clear or spangled starklight stream, Shakespeare, Midsummer-Night's Dream. ii. 1.

Or glittering starklight, without there is sweet. Milton, Paradise Lost. iv. 655.

They danced by starklight and the friendly moon. Dryden.

Used adjectivally.

Owls, that mark the setting sun, declare A starklight evening and a morning fair. Dryden, Translation of the Georgics. i. 547.

The starklight smile of children, the sweet looks Of women, the fair breast from which I feel, The murmur of the unexpressed looks, And the green light which shifting overhead, . . . These sights and sounds did nurse my spirits' folded powers. Shelley, The Revolt of Islam.

starklike. adj.

1. Stellated; having various points resembling a star in lustre.

Nightside tree rises with a wooden stem, green-leaved, and has starklike flowers. — Mortimer, Household.

2. Bright; illustrious.

The having turned many to righteousness shall confer a starklike and immortal brightness. Lyth, & Raphael's Lore.

These reasons moved her starklike husband's heart; But still he held his purpose to depart. Dryden, Translation from Ovid, Cypre and Alceste.

starkling. s. [stare.] In Ornithology. Bird of the genus Sturnus.

I will have a starkling taught to speak Nothing but Mortimer, and give it him, To keep his anger still in motion. Shakespeare, Henry IV. Part I. i. 3.

A specimen of the red-winged starkling of America (Sturnus prothonotarius) came into the possession of J. H. Curney, Esq., in a fresh state, during June 1862, and was said to have been shot near Barton Broad, and to have had another of the same species in company with it. It was a male bird, in good condition, and almost adult plumage; the stomach full of the remains of beetles. I have detailed these circumstances, as it seems probable, if these points were so, that these foreign visitors intended to test here. Wilson says they resort to low grounds where reeds and alders grow, for that purpose, and that the bird in America is often termed marsh blackbird, or swamp bird. — Farrall, History of British Birds.

starpaved. adj. Studded with stars.

In progress through the roof of heaven starpaved. Milton, Paradise Lost. iv. 964.

starproof. adj. Impervious to starlight.

Under the shady roof Of branching elm starproof. Milton, Arcadia. 88.

star-rede. s. [A.S. rede = counsel.] Doctrine of the stars; astrology. Obsolete.

Ægyptian wisdom old, Which in star-rede were wont have best insight. Spenser, Faerie Queen.

starked. adj.

1. Influenced by the stars with respect to fortune: (commonest as the second element in a compound; as, ill-starred = born under a malignant star).

2. Decorated with stars.

That starked Ethiopian queen, that strove To set her beauty's praise above The sea-symphies. Milton, Il Penseroso. 10.

star-reed. s. [probably a coined word translating the Spanish combination as given in the extract.] Peruvian plant of the genus Aristolochia.

The A. fragrantissima, called in Peru, Rejuna de la Estrella, or star-reed, is highly esteemed in Peru, as a remedy against dysenteries, malignant inflammation tury fevers, colds, rheumatic pains, &c. The root is the part used. — Lindley, The Vegetable Kingdom.

starry. adj.

1. Decorated with stars; abounding with stars.

Amphie would ring mounts on high Above the clouds, above the starry sky! Pope, Pastoral, Winter.

That starry night, with its clear silver, sent Timeless resolve which launched at misery Into my soul. Shelley, The Revolt of Islam.

The night is starry and cold, my friend, And the New-year lothe and bold, my friend, Comes up to take his own. Tennyson, The Death of the Old Year.

2. Consisting of stars; stellar.

Such is his will, that paints The earth with colours fresh, The darkest skies with stores Of starry lights. Spenser.

Heaven and earth's compacted frame And flowing waters, and the starry theme, And both the radiant lights, one common soul Inspires and feeds, and animates the whole. Dryden, Translation of the Æneid. vi. 680.

Of old sat Freedom on the heights, The thunders breaking at her feet: Above her shook the starry lights: She heard the torrents meet. Tennyson.

Al, bear me with thee, smoothly borne, Up forward under starry light, And move me to my marriage-morn And round again to happy night. Id.

3. Resembling stars.

Behold the Nereids under the green sea, Their wavering limbs borne on the wind-like stream, Their white arms lifted over that streaming hair With carmine ples and starry sea-flower crowns, Hasting to grace their mighty sister's joy. Shelley, Prometheus Unbound.

starchoot. s. Star-jelly; Star-shot.

I have seen a good quantity of that jelly, by the vulgar called a starchoot, as if it remained upon the extinction of a falling star. — De Jole.

starchooter. s. Contemptuous term applied to the earlier observers of the heavens by means either of the quadrant or the telescope.

When navigators first began to make observations with instruments on deck, the self-sufficient called them starchooters, and, when a star's altitude was taken, would ask them if they had hit it. When the pendulum was first employed in this country to measure time, the incredulous were more than usually happy in their jests upon the swing cases, as they called them. From Mother to a Son, by C. D., Preface by J. B.

starchot. s. Jelly-like matter, sometimes luminous, probably of more kinds than one, popularly mistaken for the remains of a fallen star; (under Star-jelly we find it as a cryptogamic plant; under the present entry as the excrement of a sea-bird.)

The solution substance known by the name of starchot, or star jelly, owes its origin to the bird, or some of the kind; being nothing but the half-digested remains of earthworms, on which these birds feed, and often discharge from their stomachs. — Pennant, British Zoology. vol. ii. p. 58.

starchot. s. Fossil framework of certain species of star-fishes, or allied genera.

Hereabout are found starchot-stones; but I was not then advised of it. Ray, R. manna. p. 107.

start. s. [A.S.] Tail: (used chiefly in composition, as, redstart (the bird) = red-tail).

start. v. n. [German, stürzen.]

1. Feel a sudden and involuntary twitch or motion of the animal frame, on the apprehension of danger.

A shape appeared Bending to look on me: I *start*ed back; It *start*ed back. Milton, Paradise Lost. iv. 461.

In his efforts He does not blush, or start, to style himself (As if the name of Emperor were lame) Great Lord and God, Domitian. M. Waring, The Roman Actor. l. 1.

An open enemy to flattery, especially from a friend from whom he *start*ed to meet the slightest appearance of that servile kindness. — Bishop Hall.

As his doubts decline, He dreads just vengeance, and he *start*s at sin. Dryden.

I start as from some dreadful dream, And often ask myself if yet awake. Id., Spanish Friar.

He *start*s at every new appearance, and is always waking and solicited for fear of a surprise. — Collier Essay, Of Credulity.

'Tis sweet to see, from half-past five to six,
The long wax candles with short cotton wicks,
Touched by the lamp-lighter's Prometheus art,
Start into light and make the lighter start.

J. and H. Smith, Rejected Addresses, Imitation of Crælia

Then they started from their places,
Moved with violence, changed in line,
Caught each other with wild grimaces,
Half invisible to the view.

Templeton, Vision of Sin.

2. Rise suddenly: (commonly with up).

There started up, in Queen Elizabeth's reign, a new Presbyterian sect, which tendered a form of discipline to the queen, and to the state. White.

Clam'd by these strings, trees starting from the ground

Have follow'd with delight the powerful sound.

Lord Rowanham.

They starting up beheld the heavy night.

Dryden.

The mind often works in search of some hidden idea, though sometimes they start up in our minds of their own accord. Locke.

Night, Dryden bless once more our eyes,
New blackmoors and new Milbours must arise;
Nay, should even Homer lift his awful head,
Zeus upon would start up from the dead.

Pope, Essay on Criticism, ii. 462.

3. Move with sudden quickness.

The flowers, call'd out of their beds,
Start, and raise up their drowsy heads. Clearland.

A spirit, fit to start into an empire,

And look the world to law. Dryden, Cleomenes.

4. Shrink; wince.

With trial fire touch me his finger end;
If he be chaste, the flame will back descend,
And turn him to no pain; but if he start,
It is the flesh of a corrupted heart.

Shakespeare, Merry Wives of Windsor, v. 5.

5. Deviate.

The lords and gentlemen take all the meanest sort upon themselves; for they are best able to bring them in, whenever any of them start out. —
Spec. re, View of the State of Ireland.

The old druidic sun from his long-beaten way
Shall at thy voice start and mislead the day;
The peacock's robes shall break their measured pace,
And slithering poles change their allotted place.

Cowley.

I rank him with the prodigies of fame,
With things which start from nature's common rubs.

With bearded infants, and with ferning nudes.

Crech.

Keep your soul to the work when ready to start aside, unless you will be a slave to every wild imagination. Watts.

6. Set out from the barrier at a race.

The clangor of the trumpet gives the sign;
At once they start, advancing in a line.

Dryden, Translation of the Æneid, v. 182.

When from the goal they start,
The youthful charioteers with heaving heart
Rush to the race.

Id., Translation of the Georgics, iii. 163.

7. Set out on any pursuit.

Fair course of passion, where two lovers start,
And run together, heart still yoked with heart.

Waller.

People, when they have made themselves weary, set up their rest upon the very spot where they started. Sir R. L. Estlin.

When two start into the world together, he that is thrown behind, unless his mind proves generous, will be displaced with the other. Collier.

Some honorable gentlemen know what it is to run a horse that has been weighted. I heard the other day of a horse that won every race in which it started up to a certain period, when it was for the first time weighted. It then lost the race, and it is reported in the annals of the turf that it never won a race afterwards. — Bright, Speeches, Russia, June 7, 1853, vol. i. p. 518.

Start. v. n.

1. Alarm; disturb suddenly; startle.

Discreet, familiar to my thought from thoughts,
Cannot once start me. Shakespeare, Macbeth, v. 5.

Being full of supper and disturbing draughts,
Upon malicious bravery dost thou come
To start my quiet? Id., Othello, i. 1.

The very print of a fox-foot would have started ye.

— Sir R. L. Estlin.

2. Make to start or fly hastily from a hiding- place; rouse by a sudden disturbance.

The blood more stirr

To rouse a lion than to start a hare.

Shakespeare, Henry IV. Part I. i. 3.

I started from its vernal bowers

The rising game, and chased from flower to flower.

Pope, Dunciad, iv. 423.

3. Bring into motion; produce to view or notice; produce unexpectedly.

Conjuro with 'em!

Brutus will start a spirit as soon as Cæsar.

Shakespeare, Julius Cæsar, i. 2.

It was unadvisedly done, when I was enforcing a weightier design, to start and follow another of less moment. — Bishop Strat.

The present occasion has started the dispute amongst us. — Lealie.

Insignificant evils may be started against every thing that is not capable of mathematical demonstration. — Addison.

I was engaged in conversation upon a subject which the people have to start in discourse. — Id., Peregrinator.

The 'Pindic Review' had been started originally to support the Church, . . . and to maintain the cause of aristocracy, which it did by employing the language of Billingsgate. — Hannay, Singletun Poultry, l. i. ch. viii.

4. Discover; bring within pursuit.

The sensual ones agree in pursuit of every pleasure they can start. Sir W. Temple.

5. Put suddenly out of place.

One, by a fall in wrestling, started the end of the chivito from the sternon. — W. Brown, Surgery.

Start. s.

1. Motion of terror; sudden twitch or con- traction of the frame from fear or alarm.

These fawns and starts . . . would well become
A woman's story at a winter's fire,
Authorized by her grandeur.

Shakespeare, Macbeth, iii. 4.

Against his bosom leaped his heaving heart.

Dryden, Palamon and Arcite, i. 555.

2. Sudden rousing to action; excitement.

How much had I to do to calm his rage!
Now fear I thus will give it start again.

Shakespeare, Hamlet, iv. 7.

3. Sall; vehement eruption; sudden effu- sion.

Thou art like enough, through vassal fear,
Base inclination, and the start of spleen,
To fight against me under Percy's jay.

Shakespeare, Henry IV. Part I. iii. 2.

Several starts of fancy off-hand look well enough; but bring them to the test, and there is nothing in
'em. — Sir R. L. Estlin.

We were well enough pleased with this start of thought. — Addison.

Are they not only to disguise our passions,
To set our looks at variance with our thoughts,
To check the starts and sallies of the soul?

Id., Cato.

4. Sudden fit; intermitted action.

Methought her eyes had crost her tongue;
For she did speak in starts distractedly.

Shakespeare, Tenby Night, ii. 2.

Thy forms are studied arts,

Thy subtle ways be narrow straits;

Thy curtesy but sudden starts;

And what thou callst thy gifts are baits.

B. Jonson.

Nature does nothing by starts and leaps, or in a hurry; but all her motions are gradual. *Sir R.
L. Estlin*.

An ambitious expression, a little charmer, or a start of passion, is not enough to take leave upon.

Collier.

5. Quick spring or motion; push.

Both cause the string to give a quicker start. —
Bacon.

In stringers, the more they are wound up and strained, and thereby give a more quick start back, the more treble is the sound; and the sicker they are,
or less wound up, the lower the sound. — *Id.,
Natural and Experimental History*.

How could water make those visible starts upon freezing, but by some sudden freezing principle which as suddenly shuts into it? — Girard, Cosmologia Sacra.

6. First emission from the barrier; act of setting out.

You stand like greyhounds in the slips,
Straining upon the start.

Shakespeare, Henry V. iii. 1.

All leapt to chariot,

And every man then for the start casting his proper lot.

Chapman.

If a man deal with another upon conditions, the start of first performance is due. — Bacon.

Get the start. Begin before another; obtain advantage over another.

Get the start of the majestic world.

Shakespeare, Julius Cæsar, i. 2.

All pretorian courts, if any of the parties be laid asleep, under pretence of arment, and the other party during that time doth cautiously get the start and advantage at common law, yet the pre-torian court will not back all things 'in statu quo prius.' — Bacon, Considerations on War with Spain.

Doubtless some other heart

Will get the start;

And, stepping in before,

Will take possession of the sacred store
Of hidden secrets.

Crashaw.

Ere the knight could do his part,
The squire had got so much the start,
He had to the lady done his errand,
And told her all his tricks aforehand.

Butler, Hudibras, iii. 1, 148.

She might have forsaken him, if he had not got the start of her. — Dryden, Translation of the Æneid, dedication.

The reason why the mathematicks and mechanic arts have so much got the start in growth of other sciences, may be resolved into this, that their progress hath not been retarded by that reverential awe of former discoverers. — Bayle.

The French year has got the start of ours more in the works of nature than in the new stile. — Addison.

Start. s. One who, that which, starts.

1. One who shrinks from his purpose.

Stand to it boldly, and take quarter,
To let thee see I am no start.

Butler, Hudibras, i. 3, 605.

2. One who suddenly moves a question or objection.

3. Dog that rouses the game; springer.

Here.

If Sheridan was not the staunchest hound in the pack, he was at least the best start. — Idling.

Start. s. In Botany. See extract.

Startle is a name applied to some species of Centauria; viz. the Jersey startle, and the yellow startle, or St. Barnaby's thistle. — G. W. Johnson, The Farmer's Encyclopedia.

Start. verbal obs. Act of one who starts.

Fear, like a terrible voice, wakes the soul by startings, and so causes it that it remains inaccessible to every thing, except that stroke of amazement that beats it. — Idling, Sermons, p. 137, 1654.

Startling is an apprehension of the thing feared, and in that kind it is a motion of shrinking; and likewise an impression, in the beginning, what the matter should be, and in that kind it is a motion of erecting; and, therefore, when a man would listen suddenly to anything, he startles; for the starting is an erecting of the spirits to attend. — Bacon, Natural and Experimental History.

Nor fright thy mure.

With midnight startings. Donne, Poems, p. 258.

Start. s. Evasion; loophole.

By the same conversation and starting-hole he avoids the words of Christ himself. — Martin, Message of Peace, vol. i. h. 1, 1550.

What trick, what starting-hole, canst thou find out, to hide thee 'ran this open shame? — Shakespear, Henry IV. Part I. i. 1.

The indelicacy and faintness of our wanton reason might otherwise find out many starting-holes.

— Dr. H. More, Antidote against Idolatry, ch. i.

Start. s. Barrier from which the race begins; place, in a race to start from, when it is a post or barrier of any kind; starting-place generally.

It seems to be rather a 'terminus a quo,' that a true principle as a starting-point is none of the horse's legs. — Boyle.

Start. s. Place to start from.

Should some god tell me that I should be born,
And cry again, his offer I would scorn;
Assured, when I have ended well my race,
To be led back to my first starting-place.

Sir J. Dehaim, Off Out Age, pt. i.

Start. s. In a starting manner; with sudden fits; with frequent intermis- sion.

Why do you speak so startingly and rash?

Shakespeare, Othello, iii. 4.

Start. v. n. Move on feeling a sudden impression of alarm or terror.

Why shrinks the soul

Back on herself, and starts at destruction?

Addison, Cato, v. 1.

Start. v. a.

1. Fright; shock; impress with sudden ter- ror, surprise, or alarm.

To hear the lark begin his flight,
And singing startle the dull night
From his watch tower in the skies,
Till the dappled dawn doth rise.

Milton, L'Allegro, 41.

The supposition that angels assume bodies needs not startle us, since some of the most ancient and most learned fathers seemed to believe that they had bodies. — Locke.

honest! Oh name it not!

The very mention shakes my inmost soul;

The gods are startled in their peaceful mansions,
And nature shudders at the shocking sound.

Smith, Phædra and Hippolytus.

His books had been solemnly burnt at Rome as heretical; some people, he found, were startled at it; so he was forced boldly to make reprisals, to buoy up their courage. — Bishop Atterbury.

1037

Now the least
Incumbent rustles, from the mournful grove,
Oft starting such as studious walk below,
And slowly circles through the waving air.
Thompson, Seasons, Autumn, 1867.

2. Deter; make to desist.

They would find occasions enough, upon the account of his known affection to the king's service, from which it was not possible to remove or startle him.—Lord Clarendon, History of the Grand Rebellion.

Will not had more scruples from religion to startle him, and would not have attained his end by any gross act of wickedness.—Ibid.

startle. s. Sudden alarm; shock; sudden impression of terror.

After having recovered from my first startle, I was very well pleased at the result.—Spectator.

startled. part. adj. Caused to start; surprised.

With startled eye,
Such whispering waked her.

Milton, Paradise Lost, v. 20.

startling. part. adj.

1. Causing a startle.

The startling steel was seized with sudden fright,
And, bounding, o'er the pavement past the knight.
Dequas, Palamou and Acre, li. 701.
The short man . . . gave four or five most startling double knocks, of eight or ten knocks a piece.—Dickens, Pickwick Papers, ch. xxi.

2. Strong term for surprising.

It is a little startling to read that, of the two chief universities in Christendom for the study of theology, the English University was looked upon as remarkable for activity of imagination, and had less new amounting to tenacity, in subtle speculation, while Paris was marked by its solid and safe theology, and for its almost excessive deference to antiquity.—Sir E. Creasy, History of England, ch. xii.

startup. s. One who comes suddenly into notice.

That young startup hath all the glory of my overthrow.—Shakespeare, Much Ado about Nothing, i. 3.
In a manner all husbandmen do, we are startups; our common name is meretricious social.—Witall, Dictionary, p. 211; 1688.
Upon my life his marriage with that startup,
That make this good queen cockered in her bosom.
R. Browne.

Startup. adj. Suddenly come into notice.

A new startup sect.—Bishop Warburton, Doctrine of Grace, p. 262.

Startup. s. [?] High shoe; galage.

The sleepiest first hath been her nursery,
Where she hath worn her idle infancy,
And in high startups walk'd the pasture plains.
Bishop Hall, Satires, vi. 1.
But Hob and John of the country, they slept in churchly in their high startups.—R. Girard.
When not a shepherd, anything that could,
But greased his startups black as autumn's snow.
Drayton, Elocution, ix.
Home I came again, in a manner distraught, and uncertain what to do for thought. I sit down to rest myself; some of my men comes to me and pulls off my startups, others I see hastening to lay the supper and make ready the cloth.—Terence, in English, 1614. (Aures by H. and W.)
Draw close into the covert, lest the wet,
Which falls like lazy mist upon the ground,
Soak through your startups.

Fletcher, Faithful Shepherdess.

Let me see your work;
Flo upon't, what a thread's here! a poor cobbler's wife

Would make a finer to sew a clown's rent startup.
Masinger, The Picture, v. 1.

This was a stupid lout, seemingly a farmer's boy, in a gray jerkin, with his head bare, his hose about his heels, and huge startups upon his feet.—Sir W. Scott, Kenilworth, ch. xxiv.

starvation. s. Condition of that which is starved; process of starving.

Starve. v. n.

1. Perish; be destroyed. Obsolete.

To her came message of the murderment,
Wherein her guiltless friends should hopeless starve.
Fairfax.

2. Perish with hunger: (with with or for; of less properly).

Were the joints of honest industry, and of starving with hunger and cold, not before us, nobody would doubt which to choose.—Locke.

An animal that starves of hunger, dies feverish and delirious.—Arbuthnot.

Brush him up that distaff
With fax upon it: though no Daphne,
Nor you a second Heracles, as I take it,
As you spin well at my command, and please me,
Your wage, in the warmest bread and water,
Shall be proportionable.—I'll starve first.—
That's as you please.
Masinger, The Picture, v. 2.

3. Be killed with cold: (with with or for).

I have seen the naked starve for cold,
While avarice my charity controlled.
Snodgrass, Paraphrase on Job.

4. Suffer extreme poverty.

Sometimes virtue starves while vice is fed;
What then! Is the reward of virtue bread?
Pope, Essay on Man, iv. 140.

5. Be destroyed with cold.

Had the seeds of the pepper-plant been borne From Java to these northern countries, they must Have starved for want of sun.—Woodward, Natural History.

Written sterre, probably for the sake of the rhyme.

Seven months he so her kept in bitter smart,
Because his sinful lust she would not serve,
Till such time as noble Britomart
Released her, that else was like to sterre,
Through cruel knife that her dear heart did serve.
Spenser, Faerie Queen.

Starve. v. a.

1. Kill with hunger.

I cannot blame his cousin king,
That wish'd him up the barren mountains starved.
Shakespeare, Henry IV. Part I. i. 3.
Hunger and thirst, or gums and swords,
Give the same death in different words:
To push this argument no further,
To starve a man in law is murder.

Prior, Alma, iii. 254.
If they had died through fasting, when meat was at hand, they would have been guilty of starving themselves.—Pope.

2. Subdue by famine.

Thy desires
Are wolfish, bloody, starved, and ravenous.
Shakespeare, Merchant of Venice, iv. 1.
He would have worn her out by slow degrees,
As men by fasting starve the unfamed disease.
Drayton, Tithes of Ancient Chimes, Wrights, and Measures.
Attalus endeavoured to starve Italy, by stopping their convey of provisions from Africa.—Arbuthnot,

3. Kill with cold.

From beds of racing fire to starve in ice
Their soft ethereal warmth, and there to pine Unmovably, indur'd, and frozen round.
Milton, Paradise Lost, ii. 600.

4. Deprive of force or vigor.

If their minds are starved by disease, and have lost that reach and strength which nature fitted them to receive.—Locke.

Starvedly. adv. As one who is starved.

Security and ignorance may scatter some refuse morsels of joy, savored with much bitterness, or mingle like some leeching house-keeper, which keepeth open doors for one day with much cheer, and lives starved all the years after.—Bishop Hall,

Meditations, (Orl 318).

Starveling. s. One who is thin, chilled, and weak for want of nourishment.

If I long, I'll make a fat pair of fellows; for old
Sir John leaves with me, and he's no starveling.—
Shakespeare, Henry IV. Part I. ii. 1.
Now thy alms is given, the letter's read;
The holy risen again, the which was dead;
And thy poor starveling beautifully fed.
The fat ones would be making sport with the lean,
and calling them starvelings.—Sir R. L'Estrange.

Starveling. adj. Hungry; lean; pining.

The thronging clusters thin
By kind avulsion; else the starveling brood, Void of sufficient sustenance, will yield
A slender autumn.
J. Phillips, Cyder, l. 388.
Poor starveling bard, how small thy gain!
How disproportion'd to thy pains!

Swift, On Poetry.

Starwort. s. In Botany. Term huxly applied to any plant which shows like a star; more especially to the members of the genus Aster; the water-starworts are of the genus Callitriche; the shavegrass, or starwort, of the genus Equisetum.

This herb is called in Greek Ἀστὴρ Astros, and also Βασβωρὴ; in Latin, Aster Atticus, and Impatiens; of some Astorian, Asteriscum, and Hyspithalmum; in High Dutch, Mogerkraut; in Spanish, Botas; in French, Estrille, and Aper gentile menne; in English, Starwort and Shavewort.—Gerarde, Herbal, p. 490; 1633.
The water-starworts are annual aquatic plants, which grow in ditches, ponds, or lakes. There are two native species, the vernal water starwort, and the autumnal water starwort.—C. W. Johnson, Farmers' Encyclopedia.

Statarian. adj. Disciplined.

I have made bold to bring a new adopted son of mine to try a detachment of your statarian soldiers to escort him into the regions of physiology and pathology.—Smarch (i.e. Tucker), Light of Nature, vol. ii. pt. ii. ch. xxiii.

Statarianly. adv. In a statarian manner.

Your skirmishing parties, call them cohorts or cowhearts, shall never drive my statarianly disciplined battalion from its ground.—Smarch (i.e. Tucker), Light of Nature, vol. ii. pt. ii. ch. xxiii. (Rich.)

Statary. adj. Fixed; settled.

The set and statary time of paring of nails, and cutting of hair, is but the continuation of ancient superstition.—Sir T. Browne.

State. s. [Lat. status, etymologically the standing (Lat. sto = I stand) position, condition, or relation in which anything occurs. The connection between this and that which, by representing a state, establishes something relating to the state represented, originates two series of meanings, which are found in the word under notice. This gives us (1) from the primary Latin form status, the series of terms connected with condition; (2) the series connected with estate (Fr. état), suggesting nobility or privilege of some kind or other, carrying with it political rights. Hence the close affinity between the States body politic, and the States the constituents thereof.

To distinguish between the origin of a word derived directly from the Latin status, and one from the immediate root of estate, is difficult. Hence, in the present entry, the two classes are dealt with as one; in other words, between the immediate derivatives from status and the immediate derivatives from the root of estate no distinction is drawn.

In the previous editions there is no separate entry. The derivatives from état, however, are noted separately.]

1. Condition; circumstances of nature or fortune.

I do not, brother,
Infer as if I thought my sister's state Secure. Milton, Comus, 467.
Their sins have the aggravation of being sins against grace, and forsaking and departing from God, which respect makes the state of apostates as the most execrable, so the most desperately dangerous state.—Hammond.

Thus have his prayers for others altered and amended the state of his own heart. Luc.
Relate what latium was, her ancient kings,
Describe the past and present state of times.
Drayton, Trictrachion of the Faucil, vii. 51.

Like the popish's is your past's state,
Poor and despair'd. Pope, Satires of Donne, sat. ii.

2. Modification of anything.

Keep the state of the question in your eye. Boyle.

3. Stationary point; crisis; height; point from which the next movement is regression: (here status statia, a standing-place).

The herb that endureth the womb but eight months, and is expelled at six years, cannot live much more than thirty, as having passed two personal motions; that is, its beginning and increase; and having lost two more to run through, that is, its state and declination.—Sir T. Browne, Vulgar Errors.

Tumours have their several degrees and times: an beginning, augment, state, and declination.—Wiceman, Surgery.

4. Estate; signiory; possession: (here the connection is with estate).

Strong was their plot,
Their states far off, and they of wary wit. Shuck.
Canst thou ever hope
To enjoy a quiet bed with her whose father Ruined thy state?

Masinger, A New Way to Pay Old Debts, l. 1.

Your state, my lord, again is yours.
Id., The Fiddlers, v. 2.

5. Person of high rank; principal person in the government; notable.

The archbishop of Grenada saying to the archbishop of Toledo, that he much marvelled, he went so great a state, would visit hospitals.—id., Est, and Puncta: 1614.

Generally in the plural.

Our great admiral
With other states, being invited guests,
He does entreat you to appear among them
In some fresh habit.
Masinger, The Unnatural Combat, iii. 1.

'Tis a goodly pile, this,
But better by the owner. But most rich
In the great states it covers.

Id., The Great Duke of Florence, v. 2.

The bold dukes
Pleased highly those infernal states.

Milton, Paradise Lost, ii. 398.

6. Mode of government.

No state can be named wherein any part of the body of those imperial laws hath the just force of a law, otherwise than as custom hath particularly induced it.—Selden.

Often with the definite article. The community; public; commonwealth.

If anything more than your sport
Did move your greatness, and this noble state
To call on him, he hopes it is no other
But for your health sake.

Shakespeare, Troilus and Cressida, ii. 3.

What he did by fortune,
It was the state that now must make his right.

Daniel.

A state's anger

Should not take knowledge either of foolish women.

Id., Jonson's Catiline's Conspiracy.

The state hath given you licence to stay on land for the space of six weeks.—Idem.

It is better the kingdom should be in good estate, with particular less to many of the people, than that all the people should be well, and the state of the kingdom altogether lost.—J. J. Heyward.

I found not one

In all the state and kingdoms that I passed through Worthy to be her second.

Mansinger, The Emperor of the East, i. 1.

For you we stay'd, as did the Grecian state

Till Alexander came.

Waller.

Since they all live by begging, it were better for the state to keep them.

Idem, General.

These are the realms of unrelenting fate;
And awful Rhodanthus rules the state:

He hears and judges.

Dryden, Translation of the Æneid, vi. 763.

Singly state. In Shakespeare—individuality.

My thought, whose murder is but fantastical,
Shakes my single state of man, that function
Is smother'd in sunrise.

Shakespeare, Macbeth, i. 3.

7. Civil power, as opposed to, or contrasted with, ecclesiastical.

The same criminal may be absolved by the church, and condemned by the state; absolved or pardoned
by the state, yet censured by the church.—Lastie.

8. Republic, or government not monarchical, as opposed to a regal government.

Well monarchies may own religion's name,
But state's are atheists in their very name.

Dryden, Satire on the Dutch.

They forced nothing from a state so narrow in compass of land, and so weak, that the strength of their armies has ever been made up of foreign troops.—Sir W. Temple.

9. Rank; condition; quality.

Fair dame, I am not to you known,
Though in your state of honour I am perfect.

Shakespeare, Macbeth, iv. 2.

High state the bed is where misfortune lies.

Fairfax.

10. Solemn pomp; appearance of greatness.

He hath more, and even
As Pompey's dignity, Augustus' state,
Antony's bounty, and great Julius' fortune,
With Cato's resolution.

Mansinger, The Roman Actor.

When in triumphant state the British muse,
True to herself, shall barbarous aid refuse.

Lord Roscommon.

Let my attendants wait: I'll be alone,
Where least of state, there most of love is shown.

Dryden.

These kings received the marks of sovereign power:

In state the monarchs march'd, the victors bore
The awful axes and the rods before.

Id., Translation of the Æneid, vii. 244.

To appear in their robes would be a troublesome piece of state.—Collier.

At home surrounded by a servile crowd,
Prompt to shame, and in detraction loud,

Around begirt with men and swords and spears,
His very state acknowledging his fears.

Prior, Solomon, iii. 281.

If God has delivered me up to evil spirits, to be dragged by them to places of torments, could it be any comfort to me that they found me upon a bed of state?—Law.

11. Dignity; grandeur.

She instructed him how he should keep state, and yet with a modest sense of his misfortune.—Bacon,

History of the Reign of Henry VII.

The swan . . . rows her state with easy feet.

Milton, Paradise Lost, vii. 440.

He was well stay'd, and in his gait

Preserved a grave majestic state.

Butler, Hudibras, i. 1, 487.

Such cheerful modesty, such humble state,

Moves certain love.

Can this imperious lord forced to resign,
Quit all his state, descent, and serve again?

Pope, Translation of the First Book of the Thebaid of Statius.

He will consider, not what arts, or methods, or application will soonest make him richer and greater than his brethren, or remove him from a shop to a life of state and pleasure; but will consider what arts, what methods, what application can make worldly business most acceptable to God, and make a life of trade a life of holiness, devoted to piety.

—La.

12. Sent of dignity; emblazoned canopy over the same: (this distinction is sometimes neglected; in the first edition of Mac Fleec- noe, Dryden writes state; in the second he substitutes throne; the word was then grow- ing obsolete). Obsolete.

This chair shall be my state, this dagger my sceptre, and thus cushion my crown.—Shakespeare,

Henry IV. Part I. ii. 1.

Over the chair is a state made round of ivory, somewhat whiter than ours; and the state is curiously wrought with silver and silk.—Bacon.

His high throne . . . and a state
Of richest texture spread, at his upper end

Was placed.

Milton, Paradise Lost, v. 113.

It is your seat; with this a general salugation, offering Timothy the state.

As to the supreme magistrate Seely teachers,
And prays Timothy to accept.

Mansinger, The Bandman, i. 1.

We have spoken, follow.

And now expect your sentence.

[The ladies descend from the state.]

Id., The Great Duke of Florence, v. 2.

As she affected not the grandeur of a state with a canopy, she thought there was no offence in an elbow chair.—Arbuthnot.

Used affectually.

The form was her study, the heart her state room.

—Arbuthnot.

That a state trial so conducted was little better than a judicial murder had been, during the proscription of the White party, a fundamental article of the Whig creed.—Mansfield, History of England,

ch. xviii.

The time has gone by for the reestablishment of a new state church.—Bright, Speeches.

State. v. a.

1. Settle; regulate.

This is to state accounts, and looks more like merchandize than friendship.—Collier, Keegan, Of Friendship.

2. Represent in all the circumstances of modification.

Were our case stated to any sober hearer, he would never guess why they who acknowledge the necessity of prayer, and confess the same God, may not ask in the same form.—Dr. H. More, Decay of

Christian Piety.

To state it fairly, impartiality is the most advantageous way for a translator to show himself, but the greatest wrong which can be done to the memory of the dead.—Deffen.

I pretended not fully to state, much less demonstrate, the truth contained in the text.—Bishop

Atterbury.

Though I don't pretend to state the exact degree of mischief that is done by it, yet its plain and natural tendency to do harm is sufficient to justify the most absolute condemnation of it.—Law.

Twenty years ago, when I stated in this house the things, or nearly the things, I stated recently, and shall state to-night, he . . . was making speeches of exactly the same import.—Bright, Speeches.

Stated. part. adj. Settled.

This is so stated a rule, that all the casuists press it in all cases of damage.—Dr. H. More, Decay of

Christian Piety.

He is rapable of corruption who receives more than what is the stated and unquestionable fee of his office.—Addison.

Statedly. adv. Regularly; not occasionally.

Why should not the body assume statedly the air of a thing, to which it is so often obliged to suit itself?—Philosophical Letters on Physiognomy,

pp. 218.

Stathouse. s. Stadthouse.

Is it not idle, if there be mud-walles; half-broken low cottages unequally built; no stathouse?—Bishop

Hall, Against the Brownists, § 9. (Ord MS.)

Every town hath his garrison; and the keys of the gates in the night time are not trusted but in the stathouse.—Fellham, On the Low Countries.

(Ord MS.)

Stately. adv. In a stately manner.

Aye, Gilbert, God forgive thee for thy sin!

Thou'st suggest stately the only walk;

Thou'st lost to take upon this solid earth;
Full many a better man less bravely died.

H. Taylor, Philip van Arkerde, Part I. v. 3.

Statelyness. s. Attribute suggested by Stately.

1. Grandeur; majestic appearance; august manner; dignity.

We may reflect the excellency of the understanding then by the glorious considerations of it now, and guess at the statelyness of the building by the magnificence of its ruins.—South, Sermons.

For statelyness and majesty what is comparable to a horse?—Dr. H. More, Aphorisms against Atheism.

2. Appearance of pride; affected dignity.

Aggravate such punctual ready wit
Did on it . . . itself obtrude.

Id.,

Did his vast looks to larger statelyness.

Bacon, and, Psyche.

She hated statelyness; but wisely knew
What just reward was to her title due.

Id.,

Let us not be unjust to this class of persons; the German aristocracy. It is a poor error to figure them as wrapt up in ceremonial statelyness, avoiding the most gifted man of a lower station; and for their own supercilious triviality, themselves avoided by all truly gifted men.—Carlyle, Critical and Mis- cellaneous Essays, State of German Literature.

Stately. adj.

1. August; grand; lofty; elevated; majestic; magnificent.

A stately pyramid to her I'll rear,
That Rhodope's or Memphis' towers was.

Shakespeare, Henry IV. Part I. i. 4.

These regions have abundance of high cedars, and other stately trees casting a shade.

Sir W. Raleigh, History of the World.

Truth, like a stately dame, will not show herself at the first visit.—South, Sermons.

He many a walk traversed
Of stately covert, cedar, pine, or palm.

Milton, Paradise Lost, ix. 434.

Revered Isabel, the crown and loveliest,
The stately flower of female fortitude,
Of perfect wisdom and pure lowliness.

Temple, Isabel.

Thus her heart rejoices greatly,
Till a cat-way she discerns.

With arched bearings stately,
And beneath the gate she turns.

Id., The Lord of Burleigh.

2. Elevated in mind or sentiment.

He maintains majesty in the midst of plainness, and is stately with an addition, which is the vice of Lucretius.—Deffen.

Stately. adv. In a stately manner.

Ye that stately tread, or lowly creep.

Milton, Paradise Lost, v. 201.

Statement. s.

1. Arrangement of a series of facts or circumstances.

The greatest clearness of apprehension; quickness sufficient, and not extreme, which, in a judge, is perilous, often allied with impudence, and apt to degenerate into business; admirable perspicuity of statement, whether delivering his opinion to the court and the bar, or giving his directions to a jury;
conciseness with clearness; these were the contributions which his understanding made towards the formation of his judicial character.—Lord Brougham,

Historical Sketches of Statesmen during the Reign of George III., Lord Mansfield.

It is not caprice, but a most sure instinct, which has led [Nichols] to seize on some particular passage of a careless or ill-informed writer, and to perceive in it marks of most important truth; while on other occasions he has set aside the statements of the same writer with no deference to his authority
whatever.—Arnold, History of Rome, ch. xiii.

The whole army thus assembled amounted, according to the statement of Plutarch, to forty thousand men.—Id., ch. xiv.

Dionysius states positively that the Roman army marched out across the Tiber. It is true that he seems to have supposed the Alia to have been on the right bank of the Tiber; but this confusion arose probably from his finding no notice of the Romans crossing the river before the battle. His first statement is probable, and seems to me to explain the extreme awkwardness with which the battle
on the Alia took place.—Id., note.

2. Facts or circumstances so arranged; thing stated.

The greatest clearness of apprehension; quickness sufficient, and not extreme, which, in a judge, is perilous, often allied with impudence, and apt to degenerate into business; admirable perspicuity of statement, whether delivering his opinion to the court and the bar, or giving his directions to a jury;
conciseness with clearness; these were the contributions which his understanding made towards the formation of his judicial character.—Lord Brougham,

Historical Sketches of Statesmen during the Reign of George III., Lord Mansfield.

It is not caprice, but a most sure instinct, which has led [Nichols] to seize on some particular passage of a careless or ill-informed writer, and to perceive in it marks of most important truth; while on other occasions he has set aside the statements of the same writer with no deference to his authority
whatever.—Arnold, History of Rome, ch. xiii.

The whole army thus assembled amounted, according to the statement of Plutarch, to forty thousand men.—Id., ch. xiv.

Dionysius states positively that the Roman army marched out across the Tiber. It is true that he seems to have supposed the Alia to have been on the right bank of the Tiber; but this confusion
arose probably from his finding no notice of the Romans crossing the river before the battle. His first statement is probable, and seems to me to explain the extreme awkwardness with which the battle
on the Alia took place.—Id., note.

Statemonger. s. One who is versed in the arts of government; overbusy politician.

I would therefore see the most subtle statemonger in the world clink out a way for his majestic to mediate.—Lord Keeper Williams, Letter to Cal,

p. 111: 1623.

Stateroom. s. Magnificent room in a palace or great house.

Statesman. s.

1. Politician; one versed in the arts of government.

It looks grave enough
To seem a statesman.

The corruption of a poet is the generation of a statesman. Pope.

War is the statesman's game, the priest's delight,
The lawyer's jest, the hired assassin's trade.

The tyranny of William displayed less of passion or insolence than of that indifference about human suffering, which distinguishes a cold and far-sighted statesman. Impressed by the frequent risings of the English at the commencement of his reign, and by the recollection, as one historian observes, that the mild government of Canute had only ended in the expulsion of the Danish line—he formed the scheme of riveting such fetters upon the conquered nation, that all resistance should become impracticable. Hallam, View of the State of Europe during the Middle Ages, pt. ii. ch. viii.

Barbs make new poems,
Thinkers new schools,

Statesmen new systems,
Critics new rules.

Look, ah, what genius,
Art, science, wit!

Soldiers like Cesar, Statesmen like Pitt.

Arnold, Racine, or, The New Age.

2. One employed in public affairs.

If such actions may have passage free,
Bond-slaves and pagans shall our statesmen be.

It is a weakness which attends such and low; the statesman who holds the helm, as well as the peasant who holds the plough. South, Sermons.

A British minister must expect to see many friends fall off, whom he cannot gratify, since, to use the phrase of a late statesman, the pasture is not large enough. Addison.

Here Britain's statesmen oft the fall forebode
Of foreign tyrants, and of nuptial noose.

Pope, Rape of the Lock, cant.

3. One who occupies his own estate; small landholder.

Statesmanship. s. Skill in political legislation and action.

A perfect connoisseur in statesmanship.
Churchill, The Candidate, (Vers MS.)

In the ultimate crisis, at least, of Venetian liberty, that solemn mockery of statesmanship was exhibited to contempt. Hallam, View of the State of Europe during the Middle Ages, pt. ii. ch. iii.

Stateswoman. s. Female statesman.

How she was in debt, and where she meant
To raise fresh sums: she's a great stateswoman!

St. John.

Several objects may innocently be ridiculed, as the passions of our stateswomen. Addison.

Static. adj. Statical.

A man weigheth some pounds less in the height of winter, according to experience, and the static aphorisms of Sanctiorum. Sir T. Browne, Vulgar Errors.

Statistical. adj. Static.

At first we might expect, perhaps, that since static forces move under the general notion of our the mode of measuring them would be derived from the second axiom of causation, that causes are measured by their effects. But we find that the application of this axiom is controlled by the limitation which we noticed, after stating that axiom, namely the condition that the causes shall be capable of addition. Further, as we have seen, a static force produces no other effect than this, that it balances some other static force; and hence, the measure of static forces is necessarily dependent upon their balancing, that is upon the equality of action and reaction. That the static forces are incapable of addition is involved in our conception of such forces. Whewell, Philosophy of the Inductive Sciences, pt. i. b. iii. ch. vi. § 4.

The duality of aspect demands duality of name. Add to this, that if we class those attributes in respect of which the object is active while the subject is passive, as dynamical; and if we class as static, those in respect of which the subject is active while the object is passive; then we must class as statico-dynamical, those in respect of which subject and object are both active. Herbert Spencer, Principles of Biology.

If one by a static engine could regulate his insensible population, he might often, by restoring of that, foreve, prevent, or shorten a life of his gout. Arbutnot, On Diet.

Statistically. adv. In a statical manner; according to statics.

A machine is an instrument by which force or motion may be transmitted and modified as to its quantity and direction. There are two ways in which a machine may be applied, and which give rise to a division of mechanical science into parts conominated statics and dynamics; the one including the theory of equilibrium, and the other the theory of motion. When a machine is considered statically, it is viewed as an instrument by which forces of determinate quantities and directions are made to balance other forces of other quantities and other directions. If it be viewed dynamically, it is considered as a means by which certain motions of determinate quantity and direction may be made to produce other motions in other directions and quantities. Kohler and Lenzner, in Lardner's Cabinet Cyclopaedia, Mechanics, § 222.

Statics. s. pl. Branch of mechanics treating of equilibrium, or balance of motive power.

This is a catholic rule of statics, that if any body be bulk for bulk heavier than a fluid, it will sink to the bottom; and, if lighter, it will float upon it, having part extant, and part immersed, as that so much of the fluid as is equal in bulk to the immersed part be equal in gravity to the whole. Beutley.

We must first turn our attention to a technical distinction of mechanics into two portions according as the forces about which we reason produce rest or motion: the former portion is termed statics, the latter dynamics. If a stone fall, or a weight put a machine in motion, the problem belongs to dynamics; but if the stone rest upon the ground, or a weight be merely supported by a machine, without being raised higher, the question is one of statics. In statics forces balance each other, or keep each other in equilibrium. Whewell, Philosophy of the Inductive Sciences, pt. i. b. iii. ch. vi. § 2, 3.

To these names ought to be added that of Stephen Hales, whose Vegetable Statics, published in 1727, and the translation, published in 1733, carried both vegetable and animal physiology considerably farther than any preceding work either English or foreign. Craik, History of English Literature, vol. ii. p. 168.

Stating. verbal abs. Statement.

Many other inconveniences are consequent to this stating of the question; and particularly that by those which thus state it, there hath never yet been assigned any definite number of fundamentals. Hammond, On Fundamentalism.

Station. s. [Fr.; Lat. statio, -onis.]

1. Act of standing.

Their manner was to stand at prayer, whereupon their meetings into that purpose on these days had the names of stations given them. Hooker, Ecclesiastical Polity.

In station like the herald, Mercury,
New-lighted on a heaven-kissing hill.

Shakspeare, Hamlet, iii. 4.

2. State of rest.

All progression is performed by drawing on or impelling forward some part which was before in station or at quiet, where there are no joints. Sir T. Browne, Vulgar Errors.

3. Spot where anyone is placed.

The seditions remained within their station, which, by reason of the multitude of the heavily unlit, might more fitly be termed a kennel than a camp. Sir J. Haywards.

The planets in their station listening stood.

Milton, Paradise Lost, vii. 563.

4. Post assigned; office.

Michael in either hand lends them out of Paradise, the fiery serpent waving behind them, and the cherubim taking their stations to guard the place. Milton.

5. Situation; position.

To single stations now what years belong,
With planets join'd, they claim another song.

Greec.

The fire and date, why love they to remain
In middle station and an even plain;
While in the lower marsh the gourd is found,
And while the hill with olive-shade is crown'd?

Prior, Solomon, l. 67.

6. Employment; office.

No member of a political body so mean, but it may be used in some station or other. Sir R. L. Ke-trudge.

By spending this day in religious exercises, we acquire new strength and resolution to perform God's will in our several stations the week following. Newton.

Whether those who are leaders of a party arrive at that station more by a sort of instinct, or influence of the stars, than by the possession of any great abilities, may be a point of much dispute. Id.

7. Character; state.

Far the greater part have kept, I see,
Their station. Milton, Paradise Lost, vii. 145.

8. Rank; condition of life.

I can be contented with an humble station in the temple of virtue, than to be set on the pinnacle. Dryden.

Henry resolved that Becket should succeed [Arch-bishop Theobald] in the . . . See of Canterbury. Becket remonstrated. . . He knew well the impetuous and violent temper of the king, and the certainty of their friendship being turned to bitter hate, if he should in his new station thwart the royal will. . . He may have felt that if he were to assume the station of the highest ecclesiastic in England. . . he could no longer be the more instrument of kingly will, without contracting a degree of baseness and guile, from which his soul revolted. Sir E. K. Coing, History of England, ch. ix.

9. See extract.

Stations, in Ecclesiastical Antiquities [are] the weekly fasts of Wednesdays and Fridays. These were omitted between Easter and Whitsonide. They terminated at three in the afternoon; hence sometimes called Semijeiunia. Saturday was made a station day by the council of Elvira; and this, it is said, led to the gradual neglect of the Wednesday station in the Western church. Brande and Cox, Dictionary of Science, Literature, and Art.

10. See extract.

The term station is also applied to certain points in the narrative of the passage of Christ from the judgment-seat to the cross, which are selected by the Roman Church as subjects for meditation, and are well known through the pictorial representations common in Roman Catholic churches. Brande and Cox, Dictionary of Science, Literature, and Art.

11. In Botany. See extract.

The various peculiarities which characterize different stations, can scarcely be appreciated. Those which possess a very general resemblance, may still differ in some important circumstance by which the existence, or at least the prevalence of some peculiar species may be determined. Thus a marsh may be formed by salt and fresh water mixed in different proportions; two tracts in other respects alike, may be very differently exposed to the prevalence of winds, or the influence of sea breezes, &c. Independently of these modifying circumstances, we may enumerate about sixteen tolerably well-defined stations, in one or other of which the different plants of every flora will be found more particularly attached. . . Greater uncertainty prevails respecting the different habitations of plants than their stations. Hendee, Principles of Descriptive and Physiological Botany, pt. ii. §§ 338-340.

Station. v. a. Assign to a certain post, rank, or place.

He gained the brow of the hill, where the English phalanx was stationed. Lord Lyttelton.

The commanding officer of the troops on board of one of our ships asked where his men should be stationed? He was told that they could be of no use; that they were not near enough for musquetry, and were not wanted at the guns; and had, therefore, better go below. This, he said, was impudic; it would be a disgrace that could never be wiped away. They were therefore drawn up upon the gunway, to satisfy this cruel point of honour; and there, without the possibility of annoying the enemy, they were mown down. Saunders, Life of Nelson, ch. vii.

Stationary. adj. [Fr. stationnaire.]

1. Fixed; not progressive.

Mine own businesses are rather stationary than retrograde. Sir H. Wotton, Remains, p. 263.

Between the descent and ascent, where the inner seemed stationary, I stopped the prism, and fixed it in that posture, that it should be moved no more. Sir I. Newton, On Opticks.

In astronomy a planet is said to be at its station, or to be stationary, when its motion in right ascension ceases, or its apparent place in the ecliptic remains for a few days unaltered. Brande and Cox, Dictionary of Science, Literature, and Art.

2. Respecting place.

The same harmony and stationary constitution, as it happened in many species, so doth it fall out in individuals. Sir T. Browne.

Stationer. s.

1. Bookseller.

Such other places, where little markets are kept: as at Brussels, Lavaine, &c. I will not enter into particulars concerning such places; your own consciences are best witnesses what pernicious projects, what calumnious detractions, are there on foot: I only say, that year standing stationers, and assistants at your inn- and markets, and miracle-fairs, are but most part of low-dost life. Sheldon, Miracles of Antichrist, p. 174: 1610.

Hitherto no stationer has lost by me. Pall r.

Some modern tragedians are beautiful on the stage, and yet Tryphon the stationer complains they are seldom asked for in his shop. Dryden.

With authors, stationers obey'd the call;
(The field of glory is a field for all),
Glory and gain the industrious tribe provoke,
And gentle Dulness ever loves a joke.

Pope, Dunciad, ii. 31.

The company of stationers existed long before the invention of printing. A stationer, therefore, was a dealer who kept a shop or stall, as distinguished from an itinerant vendor, whether of books or brown-breads. Pegge, Anecdotes of the English Language, p. 336: (2nd ed.)

2. Dealer in Stationery.

Stationery. s. See extract.

Stationery, a term which is not very well defined, but which is now commonly understood to designate the pens, ink, paper, wax, wafers, and other materials necessary to the writing of letters, including pen-knives, erasers, &c. Formerly the term had a wider significance, stationer and bookbinder being held to be synonymous. And hence it is that the Stationers' Company formerly comprised, and continues to comprise, all the more eminent bookellers and publishers of the Metropolis. The name has no doubt been derived from the stationers (stations) that were assigned in the forum at Rome to the vendors of books, which were classed among the (sic) 'mercurium viliissimum.'—McCulloch, Dictionary of Commerce.

The term stationery is derived from the business of bookellers having been anciently carried on entirely in stalls or stations. The Stationery Office in London is the medium through which all government officers, both at home and abroad, are supplied with writing materials; and at the same time it contracts for the printing of all reports and other matters laid before the House of Commons, &c. It consists of a comptroller, a store-keeper, and about thirty clerks and other subordinate officers, and has a branch establishment at Dublin.—Brande and Cox, Dictionary of Science, Literature, and Art.

STATIST. s. Policy; arts of government.

The greatest politician is the greatest fool; for he turns all his religion into hypocrisy, into statism, yes into atheism; making Christianity a very foot-stool to policy.—Junius, Six Stigmatized, p. 613; 1830.

Hence it is that the enemies of God take occasion to blaspheme, and call our religion statism.—South, Sermons, l. 181.

statist. s. Statesman; politician; one skilled in government.

I do believe,
Statist though I am none, nor like to be,
That this shall prove a war.

Right and lawful Shakespeare, Cymbeline, il. 4.

Was never yet found as a mural inscription
In the black book of profit. I am sunk Too low to be moved up, it being held
A foolish weakness and disease in statists,
In favour of a weak man to provoke
Such as are mighty.

Massinger, Believe as You List, l. 1.

The statists (that then catallist, as those
The top of eloquence, statists indeed,
And lovers of their country.

There was a young barrister who had written a pamphlet, and was a spectacle; there was the brother of a Liberal member; there was a statist in embryo; there was a leading-article man. All more or less clever—all working men, and pushing men.

'Have you seen The Lays of Ancient Rome?' asked humbly across the table. 'I never read poetry,' said the statist.—Hannay, Singleton Fancies.

Statist. adj. Statistical.

Statist. s. [Fr. statistique.] See Statistics.

Statistical. adj. Relating to, having the character of, constituted by, statistics.

It is scarcely worth while to discuss all the objections which the narrow views of cold-hearted statistical writers have suggested against the clarity of this benevolent country.—Dr. Knox, Sermons, xviii. (Rich.)

In 1832 a statistical department was organised in the Board of Trade for preparing, classifying, and publishing official returns and information respecting the statistics of the United Kingdom and its dependencies, and also respecting foreign states. Mr. Porter was placed at the head of this department; and the numerous volumes of well digested, commodiously arranged returns he has since given to the world afford the best evidence of his zeal and industry.—McCulloch, The Literature of Political Economy, p. 222; 1845.

Statistically. adv. In a statistical manner; by means of statistics.

'I was reading a work the other day,' said Egremont, 'that statistically proved that the general condition of the people was much better at this moment than it had been at any known period of history.' 'Ah! yes, I know that style of speculation,' said Gerard; 'your gentleman, who reminds you that a workman now has a pair of cotton stockings, and that Harry the Eighth himself was not as well off.'—B. Disraeli, Sybil, b. iii. ch. v.

Statisticalian. s. One engaged on, employed in, interested in, statistics.

The researches, however, of the best statisticalians fail to satisfy us.—Hallam, View of the State of Europe during the Middle Ages, bk. iii. ch. viii.

Statistics. s. That part of political philosophy which investigates the several elements of the strength and resources of a state; exhibiting the results in either actual or approximate tables; or, at any rate in a numerical form. Todd names the Statistical Account of the Population, &c., of England and Wales, by Capper, date 1801, and this is probably one of the earliest works in which the name appears. Compare the notice from Richardson. Though the etymology of the term rests on the word state, the numerical method involved in the application has led to its extension to other branches of knowledge, e.g. the proportion of German, Latin, French, and other words in the English language has been treated as philological statistics.

Statistik is a word for which we are said to be indebted to a living writer. Statisticks is applied to everything that belongs to a state, its population, soil, product, &c.—Richardson, in Dictionary; 1837.

Statistica is that department of political science which is concerned in collecting and arranging facts illustrative of the condition and resources of a state. To reason upon such facts, and to draw conclusions from them is not within the province of statistica; but in the business of the statesman and of the political economist. . . . It would be useless to attempt an enumeration of the various matters that are included in the province of statistica; but for the more convenient consideration of the subject it may be divided into:—1. Historical statistica, or facts illustrative of the former condition of a state; 2. Statistica of population; 3. Of revenue; 4. Of trade, commerce, and navigation; 5. Of the moral, social, and physical condition of the people.—Cyclopedia of Political, Constitutional, and Economic Knowledge; 1840.

The earliest statistical calculations—apart from some vague and uncertain guesses as to the currency and population were made for certain practical purposes, for the granting annuities and affecting insurance, i.e. the first statistica were what is called vital statistica. Such calculations illustrate better than anything else the nature of a statistical induction. . . . Statistica in foreign countries are generally supplied from the various administrative bureaux, and are, as a rule, exact and exhaustive. In England the collection of statistica is partly the function of government boards (and as far as these can enquire are as good as complete), and in part, the action of individual observation or research. Thus the customs returns of exports and imports, of shipping, of trade, of railways, are supplied from the Board of Trade; that of the banks and circulation, from the Treasury; that of pauperism, from the Poor Law Board, &c. But some statistica of great importance are as yet withheld, or only gradually accorded.—Brande and Cox, Dictionary of Science, Literature, and Art.

Statua. s. [Lat.] Statue, of which it is probably the older form. Obsolete.

Let there be a fountain, or some fair work of statuas, in the midst of this court.—Bacon, Essays, Of Building.

The Greeks at that place raised him a statua.—Sir T. Herbert, Relation of some Years Travels into Africa and the Great Asia, p. 212.

Crosses . . . famous for the statuas which were placed in them.—Hyllin, History of the Presbyterians.

Statuary. s. [Fr. statuaire.]

1. Art of carving images or representations of life.

The northern nations, that overwhelmed it by their numbers, were too barbarous to preserve the remains of learning more carefully than they did those of architecture and statuary.—Sir W. Temple.

2. One who practices or professes the art of making statues.

As the statuary,
That, by the large size of Alcides' foot,
Guess'd at his whole proportion.

On other occasions the statuaries took their subjects from the poets.—Addison.

How shall any man, who hath a genius for history, undertake such a work with spirit and cheerfulness, when he considers that he will be read with pleasure but a very few years? This is like employing an excellent statuary to work upon mouldering stone.—Swift.

So he [Corporal Trim] stood before my father, my uncle Toby, and Dr. Sloop, so swayed his body, so contracted his limbs, and with such an oratorical sweep throughout the whole figure.—a statuary might have modelled from it;—nay, I doubt whether the oldest fellow of a college, or the Hebrew Professor himself could have denied it.—Stearns, Tristram Shandy, vol. i. ch. xvii.

Painters and statuaries were by no means a despised or ill paid class.—Macaulay, History of England, ch. iii.

Shall we be careful in our newspapers, and negligent on our tombstones? Shall we teach our peasantry spelling, and bury them without it? Shall we be learned by the fireside, and illiterate at the grave? Sir, I early perceived this rank abuse, and

I exerted myself to rectify it! I put myself in communication with various statuaries, and engaged to supply—for a proper but moderate remuneration—proper inscriptions.—Lepeur was charmed. 'You deserve great credit, upon my honour, Mr. Laker,' he said; 'but give me an example. Is it not difficult to deal with such a variety of persons as you must have to write epitaphs for, and, pardon me, are you not apt to repeat yourself?'—'Mankind is fallible,' said Laker, with a sigh. 'Some people have thought so. Statuaries, sir, I am sorry to say, have made the observation!'—Hannay, Singleton Fancies, b. i. ch. ix.

Used adjectively.

Painting and the statuary art, cousin german to poetry.—Blake, Apology, p. 211.

Statue. s. [Fr.; Lat. statua.] Solid representation of any living being.

The princess heard of her mother's statue, a pious many years in doing, and now newly perfected by that rare Italian master.—Shakespeare, Winter's Tale, v. 2.

They speak not a word:

But like dumb statues, or unfeeling stones,
Stared each on other.

Architects propounded unto Alexander to cut the mountain Athos into the form of a statue which in his right hand should hold a town capable of containing ten thousand men, and in his left a vessel to receive all the water that flowed from the mountain.—Bishop Wilkins, Mathematical Magick.

A statue of Polydeus, called the rule, deserves that name for having so perfect an agreement in all its parts, that it is not possible to find a fault in it.—Brydges, Translation of De Witt's Act of Painting.

The difference between an animal and an automaton statue consists in this, that in the animal we trace the mechanism to a certain point, and then we are stopped; either the mechanism becoming too subtle for our discernment, or something else beside the known laws of mechanism taking place; whereas, in the automaton, or the comparatively few portions of which it is made, we trace the mechanism throughout.—Paley, Natural Theology, ch. iii.

Statue. s. a. Place as a statue; form as a statue.

Thou shalt be worshipp'd, kiss'd, loved, and ador'd;
And, were there sense in his idolatry,
My substance should be statued in thy shade.

Shakespeare, Two Gentlemen of Verona, iv. 4.
The whole man becomes as if statued into stone at earth.—Felltham, Rovers, l. 54.

Statuesque. adj. Having the character of a statue.

In such statuesque, taper-holding attitude, our families De Launay might have left Tiburt, the red cheeks of the Bassache, Cure of Saint Stephen, and all the tag-rag-and-bobtail of the world, to work their will.—Carlyle, The French Revolution, pt. i. b. v. ch. vi.

Statuette. s. Small statue.

There are various species of statues, 1. Those smaller than nature, or statuettes. 2. Those of the same size as nature, 3. Those larger than nature, which are called herculean figures, 4. Those which are several times larger than nature, and are called colossal.—Brande and Cox, Dictionary of Science, Literature, and Art.

Statuminate. s. a. [[Lat. statuminatus, pms. part. of statumino.] Support; underprop. Rare.

I will statuminate and underprop thee.—B. Jonson, New Inn.

Stature. s. [Fr.; Lat. statura.]

1. Height of any animal.

What stature we attain at seven years we sometimes double, most times come short of, at one-and-twenty. Sir T. Brown, Vulgar Errors.

A creature who might erect
His stature, and might with front serene Govern the rest. Milton, Paradise Lost, vii. 609.
Foreign men of mighty stature came. Dryden.

Thyself but dust, thy stature but a man;
A moment thy duration, foolish man!

What stature we attain at seven years we sometimes double, most times come short of, at one-and-twenty. Sir T. Brown, Vulgar Errors.

We have certain demonstrations from Egyptian mummies, and Roman urns and rings, and measures and rulers, and many other antiquities, that human stature has not diminished for above two thousand years.—Beauchamp, &c.

Edward I. . . was holy in stature, and so remarkable for length as well as strength of limb, that he is often termed Edward Longshanks by the old writers.—Sir R. C. Cressy, History of England, ch. xiii.

2. Stature. Obsolete.

And then before her [Diana's] stature strait he told,
Devoutly all his whole petition there.

Mirra, for Jugalotta. (Narra by H. and W.)
Those cheeks glittering bright, and statures all
Of gold,
Of solid mass, more rich than glorious to behold.

Those ignorant, which made a God of Nature,
And Nature's God divinely never knew,
Were those to Fortune that first built a statue.
Drayton, Legend of the Duke of Normandy.
(Nares by H. and W.)

Statu'd. adj. Endowed with, arrived at, full stature; proportioned: (used as the second element in a compound rather than as a separate word).
How doth the giant honour seem
Well statu'd in my fond revenue!

J. Hall, Poems, p. 1614.

Status. s. [Lat.] State: (chiefly used in the ablative case with the relative pronoun, i.e.
as in statu quo; this being part of a longer combination, i.e. in statu quo ante bellum— state as before the war. It was used originally in treaties, whereby the belligerents held the same possessions as they had before the war. It is now applied more generally; and sometimes in the nominative case).

Swift, in his masterly argument 'Against Abolishing the Christian Religion,' needs not without pallies, that immortal men of wit, enjoying a comfortable status, by virtue of jokes on the Calci-cium, would hereby be left without jubilation, the staff of life cut away from their hand.—Farley, Criticism and Miscellaneous Essays, Dindorf.

Statutable. adj. According to statute.
I met with one who was three inches above five feet, the statutable measure of that club.—Addison, Guardian.

Statutably. adv. In a statutable manner;
according to statute..

Holder was statutably established in this place by Dr. Fell.—Warburton, Life of Bishop.

Statute. s. [Fr. statut; Lat. statutum = thing established, pass. part. of statuo = I set up, establish, appoint, lay down as a rule or command.] Legislative enactment, i.e. law constituted by a definite and specific act of the legislature as opposed to the system originating in custom, prescription, and precedent; or statute law as contrasted with common law.

Not only the common law, but also the statutes and acts of parliament, were specially intended for its benefit.—Spenser.

There was a statute against vagabonds; wherein note the dislike the parliament had of calling them as charitable and pious.—Bacon.

Know the statute of heaven and laws of eternity,
those immutable rules of justice.—Archbishop Tillotson.

We have already seen, that a foundation was laid in the statute of provisions under Edward III. In the next reign, many other measures tending to repress the interference of those were adopted, especially the great statute of provisions, which subjects all persons bringing papal bulls for translation of bishops and other ecclesiastical purposes into the kingdom to the penalties of forfeiture and perpetual imprisonment. . . . Combined with the statute of provisions, it put a stop to the pope's usurpation of patronage, which had impoverished the church and kingdom of England for nearly two centuries.
Several attempts were made to overthrow these enactments; the first parliament of Henry IV. gave a very large power to the king over the statute of provisions, enabling him even to annul it at his pleasure. This however does not appear in the statute-book.—Hallam, View of the State of Europe during the Middle Ages, pt. II, ch. vii.

Statute-book. s. Book of statutes.
(See under Statute.)

Statute-fair. s. Meeting, held in certain districts, at a stated time of the year, for the hiring of servants: (in Warwickshire and elsewhere called a mop).

Do you come to market for my daughter, like servants at a statute-fair? Do you think you or any other man in the world is to come into my house, like the grand signior, and throw the handkerchief first to one and then t'other, just as he pleases?— G. Colman and J. Garrick, The Clandestine Marriage, iii. 1.

Statute-merchant. s. See extract from Blount.

I'll enter into a statute-merchant to see it answered.—Alas! art thou bound in a statute-merchant? A brown thread will bind thee fast enough.
—Lips, Mother Bombie, iv. 2. (Nares by H. and W.)
But with this provision, that he must bind over his land in a statute-merchant, or staple, and so at last forfeit all to the merciless incarer.—R. Greene, Quip for an Upstart Courtier.

Who would let me have a thousand pounds up in a statute-merchant of his soul.—Nash, Pierce Pen-niless Complaint. (Nares by H. and W.) Statute-merchant [is] a bond acknowledged before one of the clerks of the statute-merchant, and mayor of the staple, a chief warden of the city of London, or two merchants of the said city, for that purpose assigned; or before the mayor, chief warden, or master of other cities or good towns, or other sufficient men for that purpose appointed; sealed with the seal of the debtor and the king, which is of two pieces; the greater is kept by the said merchant, &c., and the less by the said clerk.—Blount.

Statute-roll. s. Enrolled statute.

In the second year of Richard II., the council, after hearing read the statute-roll of an act recently passed, confirming a criminal jurisdiction in certain cases upon justices of the peace, declared that the intention of parliament, though not clearly expressed therein, had been to extend that jurisdiction to certain other cases omitted, which accordingly they caused to be inserted in the commissions made to these justices under the great seal.—Hollin, View of the State of Europe during the Middle Ages,
pt. iii, ch. viii.

Statutory. adj. Enacted by statute.

In the statutory and statutory part of law a plodding blockhead may excel; but in the ingenious and rational part of it, a plodding blockhead can never excel.—Dr. Johnson, in Boswell's Life (under 1766).

It is, on the whole, expedient that the statutory maximum should so far exceed the ordinary rates as to allow of a certain elasticity of administration; and there is little doubt that within a few years the turnouts of all railways will virtually be largely reduced by the incessant fall in the value of gold.—Saturday Review, August 22, 1863, p. 230.

Staunch. adj. See Stanch.

Stave. s. [Word for word this is staff, under the eighth sense of which this latter word may be found, with the meaning given in the present entry. With the word, however, now under notice, the current singular form always ends in -re, never in -ff.] Metrical division in a poem. See extract, in which the import of the term is more specific and precise than is the case in ordinary language; where it is generally recognized that the stanza consists of more staves than one. That the stave is, in general, a shorter division than the stanza and strophe is much as may be safely said.

A stave is a portion of a song or poem, containing a given number of verses, arranged according to some given law, and ending with a period, or at least with some important division of a sentence. When two or more staves are knit together into one, the compound stave; thence resulting may be called a stanza, a name that seems to have been first applied to the compound Italian stave, which came into fashion during the sixteenth century. . . . The classical stave, which admitted variety of verse (the Dactylic and Abaic for instance), though some of them were well known during the middle ages, seem to have had but little influence on the modern versification of Europe. The later Latin poets generally preferred those staves, which contained only one description of verse. In the church-hymns, the iambic trimeter is always in staves of four verses; the imperfect trochaic tetrameter almost always in staves of three; the dactylic in staves of four; and the iambic trimeter in staves of five.
All these staves were used in 'rhythms'; and it is probable that the stave of four verses, with eight syllables to the verse, now so common throughout Europe, may represent the first; and some of our finest staves of four verses, with continuous rhyme, the third of these classical combinations.
Speculations, however, of this kind require extreme caution.—Dr. Gaskell, History of English Rhythms,
b. iv. ch. i.

Stave. v. a.

1. Break in pieces: (used originally of barrels made of small parts or staves).

If an irrelevant expression, or a thought too wanton, are crept into my verses, let them be staved or forfeited like contrabanded goods.—Dryden.

2. Push away as with a staff: (with off).

How can they escape the contagion of the writings, whom the virulence of the calumnies have not staved off from reading?—R. Johnson.

The condition of a servant staved him off to a distance; but the gospel speaks nothing but allure-ment, attraction, and invitation.—South, Sermons.
Always more inclined to stave off an immediate difficulty by some patch-work scheme of modifications and suspensions, than to consult for posterity in the comprehensive spirit of legal philosophy, we accumulate statute upon statute, and precedent upon precedent, till no industry can acquire, nor any intellect digest the mass of learning that grows upon the panting student.—Hallam, View of the State of Europe during the Middle Ages.

3. Pour out by breaking the cask.

The feared disorders that might ensue thereof have been an occasion that divers times all the wine in the city hath been staved.—Sir E. Sandys, Tracts.

4. Furnish with runcles or staves of a ladder.

Stave. v. n. Fight with staves.

This equal shame and envy stir'd
The enemy, that one should beard
So many warriors, and so stout,
As he had done, and staved it out.

Butler, Hudibras, l. 3, 83.

Staved. part. adj. Furnished with staves: (in the extract, the runcles or rounds of a ladder, and as the second element in a compound).

This was the shameful end of Aloysius Gritius, Soliman's deputy in Hungary; who, climbing too fast up the evil staved ladder of ambition, suddenly fell, and never rose more.—Knaul, History of the Turks.

Stave and tail. v. n. Part dogs, by interposing a staff, and by pulling the tail.

The comparisons for their soon assault,
First Trulls clawed, and Cerberus tail'd,
Until their mastiffs loosed their hind.

Butler, Hudibras, l. 3, 133.

Stavesacre. s. [Gr. σταυ = STAVE + ακρη = wild.] Plant, akin to the larkspur, of the genus Delphinium (staphysagria); lousewort.

Stavesacre. . . is with great difficulty preserved in our cold countries, . . . then in some mild winters I have kept it covered over with a little fern, to defend it from the injury of the March winds, which dash more harme under plants that come forth of hot countries, than doth the created frost. It flourish-eth in June, and the seed is ripe the second year of its sowing. . . . The seeds of stavesacre are extremely hot, almost in the fourth degree, of a biting burning quality.—G. Park, Herball, p. 163, 1633.

Stavesacre—the seed mixed with oyle driveth away lice: with vinegar it killeth lice, being rubbed on the forehead.—Longham, Garden of Health,
p. 620. (Nares by H. and W.)

Stavesacre—that's used to kill vermin.—Then believe, if I serve you, I shall be lousy.—*Machewe, Dr.
Renshaw, (Nares by H. and W.)*

Look, how much toasters we carry with us to ex-pell cold, the like quantity of stavesacre we must provide to kill lice in that rugged country.—Nash, Lenten Stuff, (Nares by H. and W.)

Stay. v. n. [unlike to Stand.]

1. Continue in a place; forbear departure.

If she did but me back, I'll give her thanks,
As though she had me stay by her a week.

Shakespeare, Twelfth of the Shrew, ii. 1.

He did ordain, that as my might depart as would; but as many as would stay should have very good means to live from the state.—Bacon.

Not after resurrection shall he stay
Longer on earth than certain times to appear.

Milton, Paradise Lost, xii. 436

The injured sea, which from her wonted place,
To gain some new avenger did force,
If the new larks imported once thence,
No longer will from her old channel stay. Waller.

Nor must he stay at home, because he must be back again by our-and-twenty.—Locke.

Every plant has its atmosphere, which hath various effects on those who stand near them.—Arbuthnot, On the Nature and Choice of Aliments.

Servants sent on messengers stay out longer than the messengers require.—Swift.

2. Continue in a state.

The flames augment and stay
At their full height, then languish to decay.

Dryden.

All joy stay with you.

A new Way to Pay old Debts, li. 2.

3. Wait; attend; forbear to act.

Would you tarry for them till they were grown?
would you stay for them from having husbands?—
Baile, l. 13.

I'll tell thee my whole device
When I am in my coach, which stays for us.

Shakespeare, Merchant of Venice, iii. 4.

We for his rigid purposes will stay

To end the river. Dryden, Indian Emperor, l. 2.

I stay for Turpin, whose devoted head

Is owing to the living and the dead;

My son and I expect it from his hand.

Id., Translation of the Æneid, xi. 276.

The father cannot stay any longer for the fortune, nor the mother for a new set of babies to play with.—
Locke.

4. Stop; stand still.

When she did pour out her larger spright,
She would command the lusty sun to stay,
Or backward turn his course.

Spenser.

Perkin Warbeck, thinking that when matters once go down the hill, they stay not without a new force revived to try some exploit upon England.—Bacon, History of the Reign of Henry VII.

Throws his sleep flight in many an airy wheel,
Nor stay'd, till on Niphates top he lights.
Milton, Paradise Lost, iii. 741.

Dwell; belong.

I must stay a little on one action, which preferred
The relief of others to the consideration of yourself.
—Dryden.

Nor will I stay
On Amphyz, or what deaths he doth that day.
Id., Translation from Ovid, Metamorphoses, b. xii.

Rest confidently; (with upon).

Because ye desire this word and trust in oppression, and stay the cross therefore this iniquity shal-be to you as a breach ready to fall. Isaiah, xxx. 12.
They call themselves of the holy city, and stay themselves upon the God of Israel. Id., xlviii. 2.

Wait; give attentions or submissive at- tendance; (with upon).

Worthy Macheth, we stay now your leisure.
Shakspeare, Macbeth, i. 3.
The man from Shylock, — Is the such an one? —
He stays upon your will. Id., Antony and Cleopatra, i. 2.

Stay. v. a.

1. Stay; withhold; repress.

All that may stay their minds from thinking that which they heartily wish were false, but cannot think it so. Shakspeare, Hamlet, Eccelesiastical Polity.
The Sirens sang to allure them into danger; but Orpheus — all that he said them. — Sir W. Raleigh, History of the World.
To stay these sudden gusts of passion,
That hurry you from passion, rest assured
The secret of your love lies with me only. Romeo.
Why cease we then the wrath of heaven to stay?
Be troubled all. Pope.

2. Delay; obstruct; hinder from progres- sion.

The joyous time will not be stay'd
Unless she do it in the forenoon take. Spenser.
Your ships are stay'd at Venice.
Shakspeare, Merchant of Venice, iv. 2.
But — the shore, with tears, with sighs, with moan,
They him constrain'd; rousing the bounds that stay,
Their willing fleet. Id.
I will bring thee where no shadow stays
Thy coming. Milton, Paradise Lost, iv. 470.
How have I wandered
Out of the track of duty!
Could never mind tell me a passenger,
That in his clarity would set me right,
Or stay me in my presence to rime.
Macquary, The Picture, iv. 4.

A fray ensued,
And lo! as we were slaying some fourteen
That stayed our passage, it pleased Providence
Thus gently to elude us on the way.
Id., Taylor, Philip and Arcturide, Part I. ii. 3.

Unfettered words of dilligent pain,
Imprisoning words, which, as they clench
Heavenward, were stay'd beneath the dome
Of hollow laughter.
Tennyson, Recollections of the Arabian Nights.

3. Keep from departure.

The people sought him, and came unto him, and stay'd him that he should not depart from them. —
Luke, iv. 42.
If a prisoner I were here, you might
Have then fastened on a conqueror's right,
And stay'd me here.
Dryden, Indian Emperor, ii. 3.

4. Wait for; stay for.

Perdy, said he, here comes, and is hard by,
A knight of valiant power, and great assay,
That never yet encounter'd enemy,
But did him deadly damn, or fowle dismay;
No thou for better hope, if thou his presence stay.
Spenser, Faerie Queen, ii. 4. 40.

5. Prop; support; hold up.

Arms and his stayed up his hands, the one on the one side and the other on the other. — Kroesus, xvii. 12.
On this determination we might stay ourselves without further processing herein. — Hooker, Eccelesiastical Polity.
Mallows and reeds, on banks of rivers born,
Remain to cut, for vineyards useful found,
To stay thy vines.
Dryden, Translation of the Georgics, ii. 573.

Stay the stomach.

a. Stop the cravings of hunger.

He took nothing but a bit of bread to stay his stomach. — Locke.

b. Satisfy a strong desire.

You will understand that, doctor, before I have finished this discourse; but, to stay your stomach till then, you may please to know that in France the greatness of the nobility, which has been lately taken from them, did not consist in vast riches and revenues, but in great privileges and jurisdictions, which obliged the people to obey them; whereas our great peers in former times had not only the same great dependences, but very considerable revenues besides, in demesnes and otherwise. — Neville.

Stay her stomach with a few half hundred phys-till I can procure a remission big enough to satisfy her great soul with adventures. — Pope.

False knight, thou canst not see thy lodge love,
And canst not stay thy stomach for an hour,
But thou must fight it the street; thy hungry
sword —
Could it keep Lent no longer? By my faith
Thou shalt do penance at thy lady's feet.
This live-long night for this. — God's merry, lady!
"Twere a sharp trial, one man to keep Lent,
Whilst all around kept Carnival; the sin
Was in the stomachs of your citizens;
But I will do thee penance and the loss.
Id., Taylor, Philip and Arcturide, Part I. ii. 3.

Stay. s. [Fr. stayer.]

1. Continuance in a place; forbearance of departure.

Determine,
Or for her stay or going; the affair cries haste.
Shakspeare, Othello, i. 3.
Should judges make a longer stay in a place than usually they do, in a county would be a very good abolition. — Bacon.
Her long with ardent look his eye pursued,
Delighted I but desiring more her stay.
Milton, Paradise Lost, ix. 397.

The Thracian youth invokes
Orpheus returning from the Elysian shades, Embrace the hero, and his stay. — Waller.
So long a stay was made
The jealous king suspect we have been plotting.
Sir J. Denham, The Sophy.
What pleasure hoped thou in my stay?
When I'm constrain'd and wish myself away?
Dryden.

When the wine sparkles from afar,
And the well-natured friend cries, 'Come away!
Make haste, and leave thy business and thy care,
No mortal interest can be worth thy stay.'
Id., Translation from Horace, b. i. ode xxix.

2. Stand; cessation of progression.

Bones, after full growth, continue at a stay; teeth stand at a stay except their wearing. Bacon.
Affairs of state second rather to stand at a stay, than to advance or decline. Sir J. Denham.
Made of sphere-metal, never to decay,
Until his revolution was at stay.
Milton, Epitaph on Ithobem the Cambridge Church.

Almighty crowd! thou shorten'st all dispute;
Nor faith nor Thou hastest o'er all. Dryden, The Medal.

3. Stop; obstruction; hinderance from pro- gress.

His full heart thought long that little way,
Grieved with each step, terminated with each stay.
Farmer.

4. Restraint; prudence; caution; discreet shrewdness; sobriety of judgment.

For her son,
In her own hand the crown she kept in store,
Till riper years he taught, and stronger stay.
Spenser.
Many just and temperate provisos well shew'd and foretold the wisdom, stay, and moderation of the king. Id.
— With prudent stay he long deferr'd rough contention. A. Phillips.

5. Fixed state.

Who have before, or shall write after thee,
Their works though toughly labour'd, will be Like infancy or age to man's firm stay.
Or early and late twilights to mid-day.
Alas! what stay is there in human state!
And who can shun inevitable fate?
Dryden.

6. Prop; support.

Obedience of citizens unto the law of nature is the stay of the whole world. — Hooker, Eccelesiastical Polity.
What surety of the world, what hope, what stay,
When this was once a king, and now is stay?
Shakspeare, King John, v. 7.
My only strength, and stay! forlorn of thee,
Whither shall I betake me? where subsist?
Milton, Paradise Lost, x. 921.
Trees serve as so many stays for their vines, which hang like garlands from tree to tree. — Addison,
Travels in Italy.

7. Tackling.

With stays and cordage last he rigg'd the ship,
And roll'd on levers, launch'd her in the deep.
Pope, Translation of the Odyssey, v. 331.

8. Rope in a ship to keep the mast from falling aft.

All masts, topmasts, and flagstaves, have stays, except the spirital topmast; the mainmast, foremast, with the masts belonging to them, have also back stays, which help to keep the mast from pitching forward or overboard. — Harris.
Stay, in sea language, [is] a big strong rope employed to support the masts on the fore-part, by extending from their upper end and at the mast-head towards the fore-part of the ship, as the masts are extended to the right and left, and to land it.

The stays are denominated from the masts, as the lower stays, top mast stays, foremast stays, flagstaff or royal stays, &c. — Ross, Cyclopaedia.

9. See extract.

Stay in the manes [is] to stay or sustain your horse to hold the bridle firm and tight. We likewise stay or sustain a horse with the in-le, or inleel, when he makes his escape so before his shoulders upon volts; as also when we hinder him to traverse, and ride him equally, keeping him always subject, so that his escape cannot sign out, and he cannot lose either his calence or his ground, but makes all his times equal. — Ross, Cyclopaedia.

Stayed. part. adj. Fixed; settled; serious; not volatile; staid, of which it is the origi- nal form, and from which it is a different word only so far as it may be sounded as a dissyllable, which staid cannot.

Whatsoever is above these processeth of shortness of memory, or of want of a stayed and equal attention. — Bacon.
He was well stayed, and in his gait
Preserved a grave majestic state.
Booth, Hudibras, i. 1. 427.

A stayed man and wife are seldom so incontinent as not to find consolation in each other. — Pope.

Stayedness. s. Attribute suggested by Stayed.

1. Solidity; weight.

When substantialness combineth with delightfulness, and earnestness with stayedness, how can the language sound other than most full of sweetness?
Camden, Britannia.

2. Composure; prudence; gravity; judi- ciousness.

Justice . . . is a thing much unbecoming the stay-edness of a Christian. — Whitby, Redemption of Time, p. 18: 1634.
Such an incredible stayedness and firmness of spirit, as would have rendered his power and tranquillity impregnable against all the assaults of misfortune. — De, Scott, Works, vol. ii. p. 233: 1718.

Stayer. s. One who stays; i. e. holds, or supports; one who withholds or stops.

May Jove, the guardian of the Capitol,
He, the great stayer of our troops in rout,
Fulfil your hopes, and animate the cohorts!

Staylace. s. Lace with which women fasten their bodice or stays.

A staylace from England should become a topic for censure at visits. — Swift.

Stayless. adj. Without stop or delay.

They fled the field
With stayless steps, each one his life to shield.
Mirror for Magistrates, p. 187.

Staymaker. s. One who follows the trade of making stays.

Our ladies choose to be stayed by the staymaker.
— Spence, Critic.

Stays. s. [without singular always; though in composition the form is singular, e. g. Stay-lace.]

1. Bodice; kind of waistcoat stiffened with whalebone, worn by women.

No stubborn stays her yielding shape embrace.
Gray.
Beside her sat her spinster daughters, three in number, and of gentlemanly deportment, who had so mortified themselves with tight stays, that their tempers were reduced to something less than their wits, and sharp being was expressed in their very mood. — Dickens, Martin Chuzzlewit, ch. iv.

2. Station; fixed anchorage.

They were come upon the stays, when one of the sailors descried a galleon. — Sir P. Sidney.
Our ships lay anchor'd close: nor needed we Fears larine on any stays. Chapman.

3. Any support; anything that keeps another extended.

Weavers stretch your stays upon the waf.
Dryden.

Stead. s. [A. S. sted.]

1. Place; (chiefly used in such expressions as, 'You shall go in my stead;' i. e. in my place, room, or in lieu of me. It is also the second element in the adverb instead;
common, too, as the second element in topographical names, as Hampstead, Wanstead, and the like).

Fly therefore, fly this fearful stead anon,
Lest thy foolishness work thee sad confusion.
Spenser, Faerie Queen.

They nigh approached to the stead
Where as those mermaids dwell.

Spenser, Faerie Queen.

The term of life is limited,
No may a man prolong nor shorten it;
The soldier may not move from watchful stead,
Nor leave his stand until his captain bid. Id.

2. Room; place which another had or might have.

If we had taken them clean away, or else removed them, so as to place in their stead others, we had done worse.—Honker, Ecclesiastical Polity.

There fell down many slain, and they dwell in their steads until the captivity.—Chronicles, v. 22.
Nor do the bold attempts bring forth
Events still equal to their worth;
But sometimes fail, and in their stead
Fortune and cowardice succeed.

Heller, Hudibras, l. 1, 887.

Jealousy then fired his soul,
And his face kindled like a burning coal;
Now cold despair succeeding in her stead,
To livid paleness turns the glowing red.

Dryden, Palamon and Arcite, l. 466.

'Take a fool's advice now, and you will not be here long.'—'How meanest thou, knave?' answered the Saxon.—'Even thus,' replied Wamba; 'take thou this frock and cord, which are all the orders I ever had, and march quietly out of the castle, leaving me your cloak and bridle to take the long leap in thy stead.'—'Leave thee in my stead?' said Otrio, astonished at the proposal; 'why, they would hang thee, my poor knave.'—'You let them do as they are permitted,' said Wamba.—Sir W. Scott, Ivanhoe,
ch. xvii.

3. Frame of a bed.

The gentle bed,
Sallow the feet, the borders, and the stead.
Dryden, Translation from Ovid, Narcissus and Philemon.

Stand in stead. Be of great use; help; advantage.

A complaint man hath some parts, whereof the want could not deprive him of his essence; yet to have them standed him in singular stead, in respect of special use.—Honker, Ecclesiastical Polity.

He makes his understanding the warehouse of lumber rather than a repository of truth, which will stand him in stead when he has occasion for it.—
Locke.

The smallest act of charity shall stand us in great stead.—Bishop Atterbury, Sermons.

Stand, v. a.

1. Help; support; assist; bestend.

We are neither in skill, nor ability of power, greatly to stand you.—Sir P. Sidney.

It nothing stands us
To chide him from our eyes.

Shakespeare, All's well that ends well, iii. 1.
Rich garments, laces, stuffs, and necessities,
Which since have standed much. Id., Tempest, l. 2.
Can you so stand me,
As bring me to the night of Isabella?

Id., Measure for Measure, l. 5.
Your friendly aid and counsel much may stand me.

2. Fill the place of another. Obsolete.

We shall advise this wounded maid to stand up your appointment, and go in your place.—Shakespeare, Measure for Measure, iii. 1.

Steadfast, adj. [A.S. stædfæste.]

1. Fast in place; firm; fixed.

Such was this giant's fall, that seem'd to shake
This steadfast globe of earth, as if for fear old quake.

Spenser.

Jaws ought to be like stony tables, plain, steadfast, and immovable.—Id., View of the State of Ire- land.

How reverend is the face o'...is tall pile,
Whose many pillars rear their aged heads
To peer aloft its arch'd and popl'rous roof,
By its own weight made steadfast and immovable,
Looking tranquilly! it strikes an awe
And terror on my aching sight. Congress.

2. Constant; resolute.

I hope her stubborn heart to bend,
And that it then more steadfast will endure.

Spenser.

Be faithful to thy neighbour in his poverty, that thou mayest rejoice in his prosperity; abide steadfast unto him in the time of his trouble.—Ecclesiasticus, xxii. 23.

Your adversary the devil, as a roaring lion, walk-eth about, seeking whom he may devour; whom resist, steadfast in the faith.—1 Peter, v. 8.

3. Not turn aside by fear.

What form of death could him affright,
Who unconcern'd, with steadfast sight,
Could view the surer mounting steep,
And monsters rolling in the deep?

Dryden, Translation from Horace, b. l. ode iii.

Steadfastly, adv. In a steadfast manner;
firmly; constantly.

God's omniscience steadfastly grasps the present and most slippery uncertainty.—South, Sermons.

In general, steadfastly believe, that whatever God hath revealed is infallibly true.—Archbishop Wake, Preparation for Death.

Stedfastness, s. Attribute suggested by Steadfast.

1. Immutability; fixedness.

So hard these heavenly beauties be enclosed,
As things divine, least passions do improve,
The more of stedfast minds to be enclosed,
The more they stayed be on stedfastness. Spenser.

2. Firmness; constancy; resolution.

He was so doubtful... of his own character, that he determined not to say one word of vain regret or good resolve to Mark, but steadfastly to keep his purpose before his own eyes solely; and there was not a jot of pride in this; nothing but humility and stedfastness: the best armour he could wear.—
Dickens, Martin Chuzzlewit, ch. xxiii.

Steadily, adv. In a steady manner.

1. Without tottering; without shaking.

Sin has a tendency to bring men under evils, unless hindered by some accident, which no man can steadily build upon.—Smith, Sermons.

2. Without variation or irregularity.

So steadily does fickle fortune star
Th' obedient orb that it should never err.

Sir R. Blackmore.

Steadiness, s. Attribute suggested by Steady.

1. State of being not tottering, not easily shaken.

2. Firmness; constancy.

John not the better of his choleric temper, and wrought himself up to a great steadiness of mind, to pursue his interest through all impediments.—Ar- buthnot, History of John Bull.

3. Consistent unvaried conduct.

Steadiness is a point of prudence as well as of courage.—Sir R. L. Estlin.
A friend is useful to form an undertaking, and secure steadiness of conduct.—Collier, Essays, Of Friendship.

Steady, adj. [A.S. stædig.]

1. Firm; fixed; not tottering.

Their feet steady, their hands diligent, their eyes watchful, and their hearts resolute.—Sir P. Sidney.

2. Regular; constant; undeviating; unre-mitted.

He... talks between worlds and worlds with steady wing. Milton, Paradise Lost, v. 208.
Steer the bounding bark with steady toil,
When the storm thickens and the billows boil.

Pope.

3. Not wavering; not fickle; not changeable with regard to resolution or attention.

Now clear I understand,
What oft my steadfast thoughts have search'd in vain. Milton, Paradise Lost, xii. 370.
Steady to my principles, and not dispirited with my afflictions, I have, by the blessing of God, overcome all difficulties.—Dryden, Translation of the Aeneid, prologue.
A clear sight keeps the understanding steady.—
Locke.

Steady, v. a. Make steady.

The bird not only clings with its claws, but partly supports itself by strongly inclining its tail against the wall, making that a fulcrum; and, thus steadied, it works and plasters the materials into the face of the brick or stone.—White, Natural History of Sel- borne.

Steak, s. [Danish, stæge; Swedish, steka = roast. Another derivation connects it with the German stücke = piece; and a third with stick, the verb; a steak, writes Horne Tooke, being 'a piece or portion of flesh, so small, as it may be taken up and carried, stuck upon a fork or any slender sticking instrument.' (Diversions of Purley, vol. ii. p. 221.)] Slice of flesh broiled or fried; collop.

The surgeon protested he had cured him very well, and offered to eat the first steak of him.—
Tatler.

Fair ladies, number five,
Who in your merry freaks,
With little Tom contrive
To feast on ale and steaks. Swift.

Steal, v. a. pret. steals; archaic, stale; past part. stolen. [A.S. stelan.]

1. Take by theft; take clandestinely; take without right: (to steal generally implies secrecy; to rob, either secrecy or violence).

Thou runn'st a tilt in honour of my love,
And steal'st away the ladies' hearts of France.

Shakespeare, Henry VI. Part II. l. 1.

There are some shrewd contents in yon same paper,
That steal the colour from Ramanio's cheek;
Some dear friend dead.

Id., Merchant of Venice, iii. 2.

The flat transgression of a schoolboy, who, overjoyed at finding a bird's nest, shows it his companion, and he steals it.—Id., Much Ado about Nothing, ii. 1.
How then should we steal out of thy lord's house silver or gold?—Genesis, xlv. 8.

2. Withdraw or convey without notice.

The law of England never was properly applied to the Irish, by a purposed plot of government, but as they could insinuate and steal themselves under the same by their humble carriage and submission.
—Spenser.

Let us shift away, there's warrant in that theft
Which steals itself when there's no mercy left.
Shakespeare, Macbeth, ii. 3.

3. Gain or effect by private and gradual means.

Young Lorenzo

Stole her soul with many vows of faith,
And ne'er a true one.

Shakespeare, Merchant of Venice, v. 1.

Were it not that my fellow-schoolmaster Dish watch Bianca's steps so narrowly,
'Twere good to steal our marriage.

Id., Timing of the Shrew, iii. 2.

They hate being alone, for fear some affrighting apprehensions should steal or force their way in.— Calaneo.

Variety of objects has a tendency to steal away
the mind from its steady pursuit of any subject.—
Watts.

Steal a march. Get, by acting or moving in secret, a start or advantage of anyone.

You must know, she yesterday wanted to steal a march of poor Liddy, and went to breakfast in the room without any other companion than her dog, in expectation of meeting with the baronet.—Emollett, Hamphrey Clinker.

Steal, v. n.

1. Withdraw privily; pass silently.

My Jorda of Amiens and myself
Did steal behind him as he lay along
Under an oak. Shakespeare, As you like it, ii. 1.

The most peaceable way, if you take a thief, is to let him show what he be, and steal out of your company. Id., Much Ado about Nothing, iii. 3.

At time that lovers' flights doth still conceal,
Through Athens' gate have we devised to steal.

Id., Midsummer-Night's Dream, l. 1.

In my conduct shall your ladies come,
From whom you now must steal and take no leave.
Id., Henry IV. Part I. iii. 1.

A bride

Should vanish from her clothes into her bed,
As souls from bodies steal, and are not seen.

Donne.

The vapour of charcoal hath killed many; and it is the more dangerous, because it cometh without any ill smell, and steals on by little and little.—
Bacon, Natural and Experimental History.

A soft and solemn breathing sound,
Rose like a steam of rich distill'd perfumes,
And stole upon the air, that even silence
Was look ere she was ware. Milton, Comus, 555.

As wise artists mix their colours so,
That by degrees they from each other go;
Black steals unheeded from the brightening white,
Without offending the well-crown'd night,
So on us steals our blessed change.

Dryden, Astræa Redux, 125.

Now his fierce eyes with sparkling fury glow,
Now steals out, and tears begin to flow. Pope.

With away.

Fix of mind to avoid further entreaty, and to fly
all company, one night she stole away.—Sir P.
Sidney.

I cannot think it,
That he would steal away so guiltily like,
Seeing you coming. Shakespeare, Othello, iii. 3.

At a time when he had no steward, he stole away.
—Swift.

Good! when I had just run her down,—and is the little puss stole away at last? Stole away!
plagues on't, stole away!—O. Colman the elder, The Jealous Wife, ii. 3.

Construction with were instead of had, the result being an ambiguous or equivocal sentence.

Others weary of the long journey, lingering behind, were stolen away; and they which were left, mollied with dirt and mire.—Kneller, History of the Turks.

2. Practise theft; play the thief; take anything thievishly; have the habit of thieving.

The good humour is to steal at a minute's notice...
Convey, the wise it call; steal! a flea for the phrase!—
Shakespeare, Merry Wives of Windsor, l. 2.

Stealer, s. One who steals; thief.

The transgression is in the stealer.—Shakespeare,
Much Ado about Nothing, ii. 1.

Stealing, verbal abs. Act of one who steals.

Stealing is taking from another what is his without his knowledge or allowance.—Locks.

Stealthily, adv. In a stealing, or stealthy, manner; by invisible motion; by secret practice.

They were diverse motions, they did so stealthily slip one into another, as the latter part was ever in hand before the eye could discern the former was ended.—Sir P. Sidney.

She draws towards the countenance of her sister Stanhope more and more, but stealthily.—Sir H. Wotton, Romances, p. 483.

Stealth, s.

1. Act of stealing; theft.

In the secret dark that none reproves,
Their pretty stealths shall work, and snares shall spread.

The owner proveth the stealth to have been committed upon him by such an outlaw, and to have been found in the possession of the prisoner.—Id., View of the State of Ireland.

The stealth of our most mutual entertainment
With character too gross in writ on Juliet.

Shakespeare, Measure for Measure, l. 3.
The gods persuaded Mercury,
Their good observer, to this stealth.

Chapman, Translation of the Iliad.

2. Thing stolen.

On his back a heavy load he bore
Of nightly stealths, and pillage several.

Spenser, Faerie Queen.
Store of cabins are but sluttish dens, that breed sickness in peace, serving to cover stealths, and in fight are dangerous to tear men with splinters.—Sir W. Raleigh.

3. Secret act; clandestine practice: (by stealth means secretly; clandestinely; with desire of concealment; but, like steal, is often used in a good sense).

The wisdom of the same spirit borrowed from melody that pleasure, which, mingled with heavenly mysteries, causeth the smoothness and softness of that which toucheth the ear to convey as it were by stealth the treasure of good things into man's mind.—Hooker, Ecclesiastical Polity.

I feel this youth's perfections,
With an invisible and subtle stealth,
To creep in at mine eyes.

Shakespeare, Twelfth Night, l. 3.
The monarch, blinded with desire of wealth,
With steel invades his brother's life by stealth
Before the sacred altar.

Dryden, Translation of the Færil, l. 480.
Let humble Allen, with an awkward shame,
Do good by stealth, and blush to find it vain.

Pope, Epitaph to the Satyr, dialogue l.
Stealthily, adv. In a stealthy manner;
clandestinely.

Your heads so many bee-hives; honey'd words
Swarm in your ears, and others from your mouth
Go buzzing out to ply for sweets abroad;
And so your summer wastes, till some cold night
The cunning husbandman comes stealthily,
And there in fire and brimstone for my boys.

H. Taylor, Philip van Artevelde, Part I. ii. 3.
Stealthily, adj. Done clandestinely; performed by stealth.

Now wither'd murder . . . with his stealthy pace,
Moves like a ghost.

Shakespeare, Macbeth, ii. 1.
Like the retreat of waters, or the stealthy pace of old age, that extraordinary power over human opinion has been subsiding for five centuries.—Hallam, View of the State of Europe during the Middle Ages, pt. ii. ch. vii.

It was impossible not to admire the singular beauty of the countenance; and yet, it had that expression, at once stealthy and fierce, which war with society has stamped upon the lineaments of the race of which it reminded me.—Lord Lytton, The Carians, pt. iv. ch. iii.

Steam, s. [A.S. stæme.]

1. Vapour of anything moist and hot.

His offering soon propitiates fire from heaven
Consumed with nimble glances and grateful steam.

Milton, Paradise Lost, xi. 441.
While the temple smok'd with hallow'd steam,
They wash the virgin.

Dryden, Palamon and Arcite, iii. 107.
Such the figure of a feast
Which, were it not for plenty and for steam,
Might be resembled to a sick man's dream.

Some it bears in steam up into the air, in such a quantity as to be manifest to the smell, especially the sulphur.—Woodward.

But thou wilt never move from hence,
The sphere thy fate allows;
Thy later days increased with pence
Go down among the pots;
Thou hastenest by the grossy steam
In haunts of hungry sinners,
Old boxes, larded by the steam
Of thirty thousand dinners.

Tennyson, Will Waterproof's Lyrical Monologue.

2. As applied in mechanics from its elasticity.

Men have crossed oceans by steam, the Birmingham fire king has visited the fabulous East; and the genius of the Cape, were there any Camerons now to sing it, has again been alarmed, and with far stronger thunder than Gann's. There is no end to machinery. Even the horse is stripped of his harness, and finds a fleet firehorse yoked in his stead. Nay, we have an artist that hatches chickens by steam; the very brood hen is to be superseded.— Carlyle, Critical and Miscellaneous Essays, Signs of the Times.

During many years after the invention of the barometer and the consequent discovery of atmospheric pressure, the boiling-point of a liquid was defined to be the temperature at which its evaporating tendency is equal to the common pressure of the atmosphere, or the lowest temperature at which its vapour can have the elasticity of common air.
About the middle of the last century it was noticed by several distinguished Fellows of the Society that the boiling-point of water under a constant pressure varies within certain limits, according to the depth to which the thermometer is plunged into the boiling liquid. In the Report on Thermometers published in the Transactions for 1777, it was stated that the steam from boiling water fairly represents the atmospheric pressure; and it was recommended that, in determining the boiling-point, the water be boiled in a metal vessel constructed so as to allow the bulb, and nearly the whole of that part of the stem that contained mercury, to be surrounded by the steam. In the first experiments undertaken by Dalton, Watt, Robinson, Southern, and others for determining the pressure of saturated steam at different temperatures above and below the standard boiling-point, it was noticed that if a minute portion of soda or of some salt soluble in water, and not capable of rising in vapour with it, be allowed to ascend to the top of the mercury, the column rises, thereby indicating a diminished pressure of steam.
The adhesion of the soda to the water tends to restrain the water from evaporating, and thus the steam-boiling tension of a solution of soda is meas-urably less than that of pure water at the same temperature. . . . In 1803 De Luc stated, in very precise terms, that boiling is produced by the bul-bles of air which the heat disengages from the liquid. If the water be completely purged of air it cannot boil, because steam can only form on free surfaces, such as the air-bubbles prevent. Deprived of air, water can boil only on the upper or free surface. Water in a tube from which the air had been carefully expelled was raised to 234° F. without boiling.—C. Tomlinson, On the Action of Solid Bodies in Liberating Vapour from Boiling Liquids, Proceedings of the Royal Society, January 21, 1860.

2. Energy in general.

The two Miss Peckniffs being a pretty good match for the three Miss Chuzzlewits, and all five young ladies living, in the figurative language of the day, a great amount of steam to dispose of, the alteration would no doubt have been a long one but for the high valour and prowess of the strong-minded woman, who, in right of her reputation for powers of screwing, did so behaviour and pummed Mrs. Spottleswoth with taunting words that that poor lady, before the engagement was two minutes old, had no refuge but in tears.—Dickens, Martin Chuzzlewit, ch. iv.

Steam, v. n. [A.S. steman.]

1. Smoke or vapour with moist heat.

Let the crude humours dance
In heated brass, steaming with fire intense

J. Phillips, Cyder, ii. 139.
Say a baked cod's head and shoulders: did you ever try it baked, Twigg? With oysters, I mean, and bread-crumbs—done brown—and steaming, directly the spoon goes in, like mad!—Hannay, Singleton Pottery.

2. Send up vapours.

See, see, my brother's ghost hangs hovering there,
O'er his warm blood, that steams into the air.

Dryden, Indian Emperor, iii. 4.
But they smile, they find a music centred in a doleful song

Steaming up, a lamentation and an ancient tale of wrong.

Like a tale of little meaning, tho' the words are strong;
Chanted from an ill-used race of men that cleave
the soil.

Sow the seed, and reap the harvest with enduring toil,
Storing yearly little dues of wheat, and wine, and oil.

Tennyson, The Lotus-Eaters.

3. Pass in vapours.

Scarcely had Plinius in the gloomy east
Got harrowed his fiery-footed steed,
Ne rear'd above the earth his flaming crest,
When the last deadly smoke aloft did steam.

Spenser.
The dissolved amber plainly swam like a thin film upon the liquor, whence it steamed away into the air.—Moyle.

These minerals not only issue out at these larger exits, but steam forth through the pores of the earth, occasioning sulphureous and other offensive stenches.—Woodward.

Steam, v. a.

1. Exhale; evaporate.

How ill did him become
In slouthful sleeps his molten heart to steam.

Spenser, Faerie Queen.

2. Act upon by applying steam instead of the boiling water which produces it; cook or dress food by steam.

Steam-engine, s. Apparatus for the production and direction of steam.

Duncan Macmorrough informed us, that we were quite wrong in supposing ourselves to be the miracle of the Creation. On the contrary, he avowed that already there were various pieces of machinery of far more importance than man; and he had no doubt, in time, that a superior race would arise, not by a steam-engine on a spinning-jenny.—H. Disraeli, The Young Duke, b. v. ch. vii.

Steamer, s. Steam-vessel.

Suddenly, up flies a signal! Away go the steamers with their load of mariners! Away goes the 'Castor,' —away goes the splendid 'Pique,' brilliant 'Dido,' deadly 'Waipi!' The blue bay gleams with the white sails of the flying ships—and the wind carries the scent of death elsewhere.—Hannay, Singleton Pottery.

Steaming, part. adj. Rising in, or as, steam.

Nor bird would sing, nor lamb would bleat,
Nor any cloud would cross the vault,
But day increased from heat to heat,
On stony drought and steaming salt.

Tennyson, Mariana in the South.

Steamship, s. Steam vessel rigged as a ship rather than as a boat.

There methinks would be enjoyment more than in this march of mind,
In the steamship, in the railway, in the thoughts that shake mankind.

Tennyson, Locksley Hall.

Steam, s. [A.S.] Jur. Oshalete, or local.

Upon a huge great earth-pot steams he stood,
From whose wide mouth there fumed the Roman flood.

Spenser, Faerie Queen, vii. 42.

Stearate, s. In Chemistry. See under Stearic.

Stearic, adj. [Gr. stear, gen. stearos = fat.]
In Chemistry. Term applied to one of the acids which constitute fat; viz. the one which most conduces to its solid (the oleic being the one which conduces to its fluid) character. The salts of stearic acid are the stearates.

Stearic acid, improperly called stearine, is the solid constituent of fatty substances, as of tallow and olive oil, converted into a crystalline mass by saponification with alkaline matter, and abstraction of the alkali by an acid. By this process fat is convertible into three acids called stearic, margaric, and oleic; the first two being solid, and the last liquid. The stearic, of which fecitious wax candles are made, consists of the stearic and margaric acid combined. These can be separated from each other only by the agency of alcohol, which holds the margaric acid in solution after it has deposited the stearic in crystals.—Ure, Dictionary of Arts, Manufactures, and Mines.

Stearic acid forms both neutral and acid salts.
The stearates of the alkalis are soluble in water, alcohol, and ether; but when the aqueous solutions of the neutral compounds are largely diluted, the y deposit flakes of the acid stearate. The stearates of the alkaline earths may be obtained by double decomposition, from bicarbonate of potash; they are insoluble. Stearate of potash is the basis of soft soap, and stearate of soda of the principal hard soaps; these stearates are separated from their solutions in water by excess of alkali, and also by chloride of sodium and some other salts. Stearate of lead is the basis of lead-plaster.—Frankland, in Brande and Cox, Dictionary of Science, Literature, and Art.

Stearin, s. In Chemistry. Common name for Stearic acid; this being a substance of which the acid character is determined by the way in which it comports itself with the alkalis in saponification (soap-making) rather than its sensible qualities; stearic acid with a certain mixture of glycerin and margarin.

The acid may be obtained by decomposing a soluble stearin soap by tartaric acid, and purifying the product by solution in boiling alcohol, from which it separates in crystalline flakes; it may be further purified by solution in ether. It is white, inodorous, and tasteless, but it reddens litmus: it fuses at about 100°, and may be distilled in vacuo, but when highly heated in the air it undergoes more or less change. Stearic acid may be distinguished from oleic by its ready solubility in a boiling solution of potash.—Frankland, in Brande and Cox, Dictionary of Science, Literature, and Art.

Stearite. s. In Minerology. Soapstone.

Stearite is a mineral of the magnesian family. It has a greyish-white or greenish-white colour, often marked with dendritic delimitations, and occurs massive, as also in various supposititious crystalline forms; it has a dull or fatty lustre; a coarse splintery fracture, with translucent edges; a shining streak; it writes freely; is soft, and easily cut with a knife, but somewhat tough; does not adhere to the tongue, feels very greasy; indissoluble before the blowpipe; specific gravity from 2.6 to 2.8. It consists of silice, 11; magnesia, 41; alumina, 2; iron, 7.5; manganese, 1.5; chrome, 2; with a trace of lime. It is found frequently in small contemporaneous veins that traverse serpentine in all directions, as in Portsey, in Shetland, in the limestone of Frohoklin, in the serpentine of Cornwall, in Axminster, in Saxony, Bavaria (at Bayreuth, Hünzburg, &c.). It is used in the manufacture of porcelain. It makes the densest semi-transparent, but rather brittle, and apt to crack with slight changes of heat. It is employed for polishing serpentine, marble, agate, onyx, alabaster, and mirror glass, as the basis of cosmetic powders, as an ingredient in anti-attrition pastes; it is used in powder upon the inside of boots, to make the feet slide easily in them; when rubbed upon greasy spots in silk and woollen clothes, it removes the stains by absorption, it enters into the composition of certain crayons, and is used itself for making traces upon canvas, silk, &c. The spotted stearite, cut into canons and valvets, assumes an onyx aspect. Stearite forms excellent stoppers for the chemical apparatus used in distilling or sublimating corrosive vapours. Linnæus stearite is tale. See, Dictionary of Arts, Manufactures, and Mines.

Stearite has a massive variety of tale, with a smooth grey feel, like that of soap, and as soft as to yield to the nail. It is a hydrated silicate of magnesia, and is found near the Lizard Point in Cornwall, at Gledor Rock, and MacIsland in Carriacou, and in Bonfleur, Canada, &c. Stearite is a material much used in China for carving into grotesque figures; and slabs of the same stone are, from their refractory nature, employed for lining ovens and furnaces. It is also made into gas-lights, which possess the advantage of not requiring or becoming stopped up. Franklin, in Breeds and Cox, Dictionary of Science, Literature, and Art.

Steatoma. s. [Gr. steion, steos.] In Pathology. Species, or variety, of tumour, so-called from its fatty, or soapy, character.

If the matter in a wen resembles milk curds, the tumour is called athema; if like honey, meliceris; and if composed of fat, steatoma.—Sharp, Surgery.

Steatotomous. adj. Having the character of a steatoma.

Steatotomous growths may be attached to either the internal or the external surface of the uterus.—Casper, Synonymical Dictionary, Puerpera.

Steel. s. [A.S. stæle.] Horse for state or war.

My noble steed known to the camp I give him,
With all his train belonging.

Impresses quint, enjambons and steds,
Milton, Paradise Lost, l. 32, 33.

Stead are our men, and warlike are our steds,
Waller.

She thought herself the troubling dame who had,
And how the grisly ghost that spurr'd the infernal steed. Dryden, Theodora and Hecuba, 311.

Who, like our native African, instructs
The fiery steed, and trains him to his goal?

See! the bold youth strain up the threatening steed;
Hark! their warriors' heads with eager speed,
And earth rolls back beneath the flying steed.

Some nymphs affect a more heroic breed,
And vault from hunters to the managed steed.

Young, Love of Fanny, iv. 119.

Steel. s. [A.S. stal, style.]

1. Carburetted iron.

They are not charmed against your points, of steel nor iron framed. Chapman.

A looking-glass, with the steel behind, looketh whiter than glass simple.—Bacon, Natural and Experimental History.

Diamonds, though hard bodies, will not readily strike fire with steel, much less with one another;
nor a flint easily with a steel, if they both be wet;
the sparks being then quenched in their eruption.—See P. Beauvois, Vulgar Errors.

Both were of shining steel, and wrought so pure
As might the strokes of two such arms endure.

Dryden, Palamon and Arcite, ll. 175.

Steel is made from the purest and softest iron, by keeping it red hot, straitened with coal-dust and wood-ashes, or other substances that abound in the phlogiston, for several hours in a close furnace.—See J. Hill, Materia Medica.

[Steel is] iron, refined and purified by the fire with other ingredients, which renders it white, and its grain closer and finer than common iron. Steel,

of all other metals, is that susceptible of the greatest degree of hardness, when well tempered, whence its great use in the making of tools and instruments of all kinds.—Chambers.

The good quality of steel is shown by its being homogeneous, being easily worked at the forge; by its hardening and tempering well, by its resisting or overcoming force, and by its elasticity. To ascertain the first point, the surface should be ground and polished on the wheel, when its lustre and texture will appear. The second test requires a skilful workman to give it a heat suitable to its nature and state of conversion. The size and colour of the grain are best shown by taking a bar forged into a razor form, hardening and tempering it, and then breaking off the thin edge in successive bits with a hammer and anvil. If it had been fully heated only at the end, then, after the hardening, it will display on fracture a succession in the aspect of its grains from that extremity to the other, as they are whiter and larger at the former than the latter. The other qualities become manifest on filing the steel; using it as a chisel for cutting iron, or bending it under a heavy weight. See, Dictionary of Arts, Manufactures, and Mines.

Steel principally differs from wrought iron in containing a certain amount of combined carbon, and in being susceptible of having its hardness much increased by being first strongly heated, and then suddenly cooled in water. Steel is also much more brittle than ordinary iron; but less so than cast-iron or pig iron, which, besides containing a larger per centage of carbon, is, moreover, to a greater or less degree, combined with other impurities. J. A. Phillips, Manual of Metallurgy,
p. 301: 1852.

As the first element in a compound.

At her back a bow and quiver gay, Stall'd with steel-headed darts wherewith she quell'd

The savage boasts in their victorious play. Spenser.
With mighty bars of iron, — enduring brass
The steel-bound doors and iron gates he ties. Faerie.

Used adjectivally.

A lance then took he, with a keene steel head,
To be his keeps off, both 'gainst men and dogs. Chapman.

2. Weapons or armour.

Beave Macbeth with his brandish'd steel,
Which smok'd with bloody execution,
Carved out his passage till he had faced the slave,
Shakespeare, Macbeth, l. 2.

He sudden as the world,
In proud Ptolemy's lesson plann'd the sword;
Toxens unguised, and with movement slow,
Or to revenge or ward the coming blow,
Stood doubting; and while doubting thus he stood Received the steel bathed in his brother's blood.

Dryden, Translation from Ovid, Moleger and Alcinda.

Knights were knights then; God mend the age, say I!

True as the steel upon their backs were they,
And their one bulwark's word was gospel law.

H. Taylor, Philip van Artevelde, Part I. ll. 3.

3. Chalybeate medicines.

After relapse, steel strengthens the solids, and is likewise an antacid.—Arbuthnot.

4. It is used proverbially for hardness (as, hands of steel).

Steel. v. a.

1. Point or edge with steel.

Add proof unto mine armour with thy prayers,
And with thy blessings steel my lance's point.
Shakespeare, Richard II. l. 1. 3.

2. Make hard or firm.

Idea well steel'd with weighty arguments.

Shakespeare, Richard III. l. 1.

So service shall with steel'd sinews toil,
And labour shall refresh itself with hope.

Id., Henry V. ll. 2.

From his metal was his party steel'd;
Which, more in him related, all the rest
Turn'd on themselves, like still and heavy lead.

Id., Henry IV. Part II. ll. 1.

O God of battles! steel my soldiers' hearts,
Possess them not with fear. Id., Henry V. ll. 1.

Wily will you a light against so sweet a passion,
And steel your heart to such a world of charms?

Id.,

Man, foolish man!
Scarcely know'st thou how thyself began!

Scarcely hast thou thought enough to prove thou art;
Yet steel'd with study's boldness, thou dar'st try
To send thy doubtful reason's dazzled eye
Through the mysterious mists of vast immensity.

Pope, Tale and Epilogue iii. 14.

So perish all whose hearts the furies steel'd,
And cursed with hearts unknowing how to yield.

Pope.

Steeld. part. adj. Converted into, hardened, either physically or morally, as steel.

Let the steeld Turk be deaf to matrons' cries,
See virgins ravished with relentless eyes. Tickell.

Steeler. s. See extract.

Steeler, in ship-building, [is] a name given to the foremost or aftermost plank, in a strake which drops short of the stem and stern-post, and of which the end or butt nearest the rabbet is wrought very narrow, and well forward or aft. Its use is to take out the spring-side occasioned by a full bow, or sudden circular buttock.—Rees, Cyclopaedia.

Steeliness. s. Attribute suggested by Steely.

Their nature and education in the soft and warm bosom of that pacific sea, had so far temper'd the natural steeliness of their metal as it turn'd edge.—
Christian Religion's Appeal, p. 7th. (Ord MS.)

Steeling. verbal abs. See extract; case hardening.

Steeling, in cutlery, [is] the laying on a piece of steel upon a larger mass of iron, to make that part which is to receive the edge harder than the rest.
The body of an axe may very well be of iron, as it never comes into use to cut with, and perhaps is stronger, and less liable to break, than if of steel;
but it must have a quantity of steel at that part where the edge is to be made.—Rees, Cyclopaedia.

Steely. adj.

1. Abounding in, having the character, nature, or qualities of, steel: (applied to certain varieties of iron).

To prepare steely iron by the Catalan method, the founder greatly diminishes the quantity of slittings which are usually strowed on the fire during the process of smelting, and takes care to run off the clinkers very frequently, in order to diminish the decarbonizing influence on the metal.—J. A. Phillips, Manual of Metallurgy, p. 311: 1852.

2. Mingle with steel. Rare.

Thy brother's blood the thirsty earth hath drunk,
Brought with the steely point of Clifford's lance, Shakespeare, Henry VI. Part III. ll. 3.

Like polished mirrors, a this steely breast
Had every nerve of his been expressed.

Marrel, On the Death of the Last Protector.

Here smokes his forge, he traces his sinewy arm,
And early strikes the sounding anvil war;
Around his shop the steely sparks flew,
As for the steel he shaped the bending arm.

Wap, Tricla, l. 283.

3. Hard; firm; unmoved; unfeeling.

That she would warm her noble heart of that steel resistance against the sweet blows of love.—
See P. Suberg.

That steely heart yet relents not!—Bishop Hall,
Contemplations, l. iv.

Steelyard. s. Balance, in which the weight is moved along an iron rail, and grows heavier as it is removed farther from the fulcrum.

Hither your steelyards, butchers, bring to weigh
The pound of flesh Antonio's debt must pay!

Shakespeare, The Merchant of Venice.

The muscle at the shoulder, by which the arm is raised, is fixed nearly in the same manner as the load is fixed upon a steelyard within a few deci-mals, we will say, of an inch from the centre upon which the steelyard turns.—Paley, Natural Theology, p. 112.

Steening. s. [Stone.] See extract.

Steening [is] brickwork laid dry (that is without mortar) used for forming the cylindrical shaft of a well or cesspool, whose office is to prevent the irruption of the surrounding soil.—Rees, Cyclopaedia.

Steenskirk. s. [see extracts; Disraeli giving the Dutch, Macaulay the German, form.]

Name brought into fashion after the Battle of Steenskirk for several articles of dress and its adjuncts; wigs, buckles, and powders; chiefly, however, applied to large, elaborately ornamented, neckties.

A quaker is prouder of his diminutive cravat, than a beau of his steenskirk.—Larocque &c. p. 53: 1791.

As for ruffles and steenskirts, they were never worn in the very splendour and luxury of the empire.—King, Miscellaneous, p. 221.

Fashions have frequently originated from circumstances as silly as the following one. Isabella, daughter of Philip II. and wife of the Archduke Albert, vowed not to change her linen till Ostend was taken; this siege, unlikely for her comfort, lasted three years; and the supposed colour of the archduchess's linen gave rise to a fashionable colour, hence called 'L'Isabelle,' or the Isabella; a kind of whitish-yellow dingy. Sometimes they originate in some temporary event: as after the battle of Steenskirk, where the aloes were large cravats, by which the French frequently were held of Louis XIV., cravats were called Steenskirts; and after the battle of Kamillins, wigs received that denomination.—
J. Disraeli, Curiosities of Literature, Anecdotes of Fashion.

The people lined the roads to see the prince and nobles who returned from Steenskirk. The jewellers devised Steenskirk buckles: the perfumers sold Steel-

Stee powder. But the name of the field of battle was peculiarly given to a new species of collar. Lace neckcloths were then worn by men of fashion; and it had been usual to arrange them with great care. But at the terrible moment when the brigade of Bourbonnais was flying before the onset of the allies, there was no time for foppery; and the finest gentlemen of the Court came spurring to the front of the line of battle with their rich cravats in disorder. It therefore became a fashion among the beauties of Paris to wear round their necks kerchiefs of the finest lace studiously disarranged; and these kerchiefs were called steepkerchiefs.—Macleay, History of England, ch. xix.

Steep, v. a. [Provincial German, stippen.]

Sunk; macerated; imbedded; dip.

When his brother saw the red blood trail
Adown so fast, and all his armour steep,
For very fellows loud he sent to sleep. Spenser.
He, like an actor, lurking in the weeds,
His wandering thought in deep desire down steep;
And his frail eye with spoil of beauty fed. Id.
A napkin steeped in the baron's blood
Of sweet young Rutland.

Shakespeare, Henry VI. Part III. H. 1.
The conquering war hath steep'd our sense
In soft and delicate letargy.

Id., Antony and Cleopatra, li. 7.
Many dream and to find, neither deserve,
And yet are steep'd in fixtures. Id., Comedies, v. 4.
Four days and nights steep themselves in night;
Four nights will quickly draw away the time.

Id., Measure for Measure, i. 1.
When flowing cups run softly round,
With no ill-timed flames,
Our careless leads with roses bound,
Our courts with loyal flames;
When thirsty grief in wine we steep,
When health and dream thus go to sleep,
Plashes that tinkle in the deep
Know no such idleness.

Locke, Lines to Athens from Prison.
Whole droves of minds are by the drink and Compell'd to drink the deep letargy blood;
In large forgetful draughts of letargy
Of their past labours and their future years.
Depue, Poetical description of the East, vi. 1013.
When steep'd in warm love's hump prevents the mutilin sea.—Mortimer, Habsburgs.

Steep, adj. [A.S. steep.] Rising or descending with great inclination; precipitous.
The mountains shall be thrown down, and the steep places shall fall. Isaiah, xxviii. 20.

Steep, s. Precipice; ascent or descent approaching to perpendicularity.

As that Thetis in water that proposed
Her riches, and him, who soval'd it, down'd;
That other found out and a steel, for grief and sought Cast herself headlong from the Elysian top.
Metastasis, Prologue, p. 572.

As which turned for their very steep
Require from heaven in season steep;
And lofty reaches as far upwards steep
As to the nether heavens they drive the rock,
So low did her secure foundation lie;
She was not humble, but humility.

DeVaux, Eleonora, 91.
Leaving o'er the rails, he naps not stand,
And view'd below the black coast of mud,
Where common shores a hollow mirror keep,
Whose torrents rush from a rainbow's fatal steep.
Guy, Trivia, li. 371.

Uprone the king of men with sword,
And sudden strait his cruel-black steed;
Down the yawning steep he rode,
Which leads to He's dark shade.

Geop, The Deceit of Odin.

Steepness, s. Attribute suggested by Steep; state or quality of being steep.

The craginess and steepness of places up and down is a great advantage to the dwellers, and makes them inaccessible.—Howell, Instructions for Foreign Travels, p. 132.

Steeping, verbal abs. Process by which anything is steeped.

Most of the steepings are cheap things, and the goodness of fine crop is a great matter of gain.—Bacon.

Steep, s. [A.S. steap, styppel.] Tower or spire of a church; being the general name for the two. See fifth extract.

Blow, winn, and edek your cheeks; rage, blow I
You cataracts and hurricanes, spout Till you have drain'd our steeples, drain'd the cocks.

Shakespeare, King Lear, li. 2.
What was found in many places, and preached for wheat fallen on the ground from the clouds, was but the seed of hyberies, and thence found in steeples or high places, might be conveyed thither or noted by birds.—Sir T. Browne, Vulgar Errors.

They, far from steeples and their sacred sound,
In fields their silent conventicles found.
Dryden, Hind and Panther, l. 612.

I was born under the shadow of St. Dunstan's steep, just where the confus of the eastern and western inhabitants of this two-fold city meet and just in friendly opposition at Temple-bar.—Lamb, The Londoner.

Steeple... is a general term, and applies to... [either a] tower or spire, or combination of the two.—Quell, Encyclopedia of Architecture, (Glossary).

In our instance, a joke about explanation has been taken far fact, and explanations given of it. Bacon, or Sedley, or some such dry humourist, put forth the sarcasm of the old man who took Timotheus steep to be the cause of the Goodwin Sands, because he never heard of the Sands until after the steep was built. Those who should have been hit by this, but were not, accepted the fact, and proceeded to account for it. They put forth that some funnels destined for lights or other warnings, were diverted to build the steep; whence of course increased the wrecks. So it would seem that any sarcasm aimed at universal expositors may be but a missionary to the cannibals, our dinner menu.—From Matter to Spirit, by C. D., Preface, by A. B.

As the first element in a compound.
A raven I saw steep-high, just over your house.—Sir R. L. K. R. R.

Steeped, adj. Towered; adorned as with towers.

A steeped turbant on her head she wore. Fairfax.

Steep-chase, s. Race across country, on horseback, from the starting-point to some conspicuous object (either a steeple or something equally visible at a distance) as a winning-post.

At any rate, if he can't write, he has mastered a number of other accomplishments wonderful for one of his age and size. He is one of the best shots and riders in England. He rode his horse Abraham, and won the famous Gifford's steep-chase.—Thackeray, Book of Snobs, ch. xxix.

Steeplehouse, s. Contemptuous name for a church.

Analapst: the word in the original is ecclesia, not tempus; which never signifies your steeplehouse! Festley, Dippers, p. 11: 1613.

About cups and hands, vestures and gestures, steepchases and churches, what there confound!—Jeremy Taylor, Artificial Happiness, p. 154.

These are the weathercocks and on, but against steepchases, as churches are styled in our New Children's dictionary! Whitlock, Observations on the Present Manors of the Kingdom, p. 161: 1654.

He maketh animals at a steepchase, as those sacred oracles are in derision called.—Id., p. 146.

Their sense rest upon the material edifices or churches wherein divine service is celebrated, calling them steepchases in derision. Hollwell, Account of Fanatism revealed by the Quakers, p. 35.

Steepness, s. Attribute suggested by Steep.

The craginess or steepness of that mountain maketh many parts of it inaccessible.—Brerewood, On Language.

Lord Level swam over Trent on horseback, but could not recover the further side, by reason of the steepness of the bank, and so was drowned.—Bacon, History of the Reign of Henry VII.

Vineyards, meadows, and cow fields lie on the borders and run up all the sides of the Alps where the barrenness of the rocks, or the steepness of the ascent, will suffer them.—Adams.

Steepy, adj. Having a precipitous declivity.

Rhetorical.
Who hath disposed, but thou, the winding way,
Where springs down from the steepy crags do lead?

A prophet some, and some a poet cry,
(No matter which, so neither of them lie)
From steepy Chikry's top to Pylus drove His herd; and for his pains enjoy'd his love.

Dryden, Amargyllis, 102.
No more, my gams, shall I behold you climb
The steepy cliffs, or crop the flow'ry thyme.

Id., Translation of Virgil, Eclogues, l. 104.

Steer, s. [A.S. steor, styre.] Young bullock.

They think themselves half exempted from law and obedience; and having once tasted freedom, do, like a steer that hath been long out of his yoke, grudge and repine ever after to come under rule again.—Spenser, View of the State of Ireland.

Lancelot, Neptune's jure at by his that year,
With solemn pomp then sacrificed a steer.
Dryden, Translation of the Aeneid, li. 267.

Steer, v. a. [A.S. steoran, styran.] Direct; guide in a passage: (originally used of a ship, but applied to other things).

A costly palmer, clad in black attire,
Of ripest years, and hairs all hoary gray,
That with a staff his feeble limbs did steer,
Lost his long way his aged limbs should tire.

Spenser.

The ship was steered, the harbour cleared,
Merrily did we drop;
Below the kirk, below the hill,
Below the lighthouse top.

Coleridge, The Ancient Mariner.

Steer, v. n. Direct a course at sea; direct, or conduct generally.

As when a ship by skillful steersmen wrought,
Nigh river's mouth, or foreland, where the wind
Veers oft, as oft so steers, and shifts her sail.

Milton, Paradise Lost, ix. 618.

In a creature, whose thoughts are more than the sands, and wider than the ocean, fancy and passion must needs run him into strange compasses, if reason, which is his only star and compass, be not that he steers by.—Locke.

Steerage, s.
1. Act or practice of steering.

Having got his vessel launched and set afloat, he committed the steerage of it to such as he thought capable of conducting it. Spectator.

2. Direction; regulation of a course.
He that hath the steerage of my course,
Direct my sails. Shakespeare, Romeo and Juliet, l. 4.

3. That by which any course is guided.
Inscribed to Phobus, here he hung on high,
The steerage of his wings, that cut the sky.

Dryden, Translation of the Aeneid, vi. 23.

4. Regulation, or management of anything.
You raise the honour of the peerage,
Proud to attend you at the steerage. Swift.

5. Stern or hinder part of the ship.

6. Cabin in the fore part of a ship for inferior class of passengers.

'I came over in the same ship as the general,' said Martin, 'but not in the same cabin. It being necessary for me to observe strict economy, I took my passage in the steerage.' Dickens, Martin Chuzzlewit, ch. xvii.

Steerer, s. One who steers; steersman; pilot.

Now what the artificer is to works of art, who orders and disposes them to other ends than by nature they were made, that is the Maker of all things to all natural agents, directing all their operations to ends which they cannot apprehend; and thus appears the Maker to be the Steerer of this great ship, the Law of this universal commonwealth, the General of all the hosts of heaven and earth. Bishop Pearson, Exposition of the Creed, art. i.

Steersman, s. One who steers; pilot.

Through it the joyful steersman clears his way,
And comes to anchor in his inmost bay. Dryden.

(See also under Stiller, p. 11.)

Steersmate, s. Fellow-steersman.

What pilot so expert but needs must work,
Embark'd with such a steersmate of the helm? Milton, Samson Agonistes, 1045.

Steg, s. Provincial for gender: entered in the previous editions as a male horse; it is the Icelandic steggr, steggi = male in general, and the origin of Stag).

Steganography, s. [Gr. steganos = conceal'd under cover (στυγος = I cover) + γραφω = writing, γράφω = I write.] Art of secret writing; writing in cypher; cryptography.

Such occult notes, steganography, polygraphy, or magical telling of their minds. Bacon, Anatomy of Memory, p. 133.

Steganotic, s. [Gr. steganos = I roof, cover, stop; stegon = roof.] In Old Maline. See extract: (astrigent is the modern term).

Steganotic, in medicine, rare, remedies proper to stop the vessels of the vessels of the vessels, when relaxed, stretched, or broken. Such are pomegranate leaves, red roses, plantain leaves, for antilroots, &c. Steganotic are, in the leucorrhoea and other fluxes of the blood. Id., Cyclopaedia.

Stellar, adj. [Lat. stellaris, from stella = star.] Relating to, connected with, constituted by, the stars.

In part shed down
Their stellar virtue, on all kinds that grow
On earth; made largely apt to receive Perfection from the stars' more potent ray.

Milton, Paradise Lost, iv. 670.

Salt dissolved, upon fraction, returns to its affected cube, and regular figure of minerals, as the hexagonal of crystal, and stellar figure of the stone asteria. Gillette.

Stellary, adj. Astral; starry.

The Milky way... is made up of infinite orbs of stars, such as that we view around us in a starry night; an infinite infinity of such groups of stellary orbs.—Stukely, Palaeogeographia Sacra, p. 23.

Stellate. adj. [Lat. stellatus.] Pointed in the manner of a painted star.

One making a regulus of antimony, without iron, found his regulus adorned with a more conspicuous star than I have seen in several stellate reguluses of antimony and mass.—Boyle.

Stelled. adj. Starry. Rare.

And quench'd the stelled fire.
Shakespeare, King Lear, iii. 7.

Stellify. v. a. Make, or turn, into a star.
Rare; obsolete.

By him who strives to stellify her name.
Drayton, Legend of Mithila.

Chloris, in a general council of the gods, was proclaimed goddess of the flowers; and was to be stellified on earth.—B. Jonson, Chloridia.

Stellionate. s. [See extract; more probably from the root of stigma, which applies to the spots on the lizard or etc.] In Law. Deceitful selling of a thing otherwise than it really is; as, if a man should sell that for his own estate which is actually another man's.

It discerneth of crimes of stellionate, and the impositions towards crimes capital, not actually committed. Bacon.

The name is said to be derived from stellio, a lizard, because the fraudulent man may be compared with that animal for versatility and address. The six common species of stellionate enumerated by Roman writers were: 1. When one sells the same thing to two purchasers; 2. When a debtor pledges to his creditors something which does not belong to him; 3. When one abstracts or dammifies something which he has pledged to creditors; 4. Collusion by two parties to the prejudice of a third; 5. When a vendor substitutes an object of less value for that which he has engaged to sell; 6. A willful false declaration in an instrument.—Brande and Cox, Dictionary of Science, Literature, and Art.

Stelography. s. [Gr. στυλογραφία, from στυλος = pillar + γραφω = write.] Art of writing upon a pillar.

This pillar (of Jacob) thus engraved gave probably the origin to the invention of stelography.—Stackhouse, History of the Bible.

Stem. s. [Lat. stemma; A.S. stemma; German, stamm.]

1. Stalk; twig.

Two lovely berries moulded on one stem,
So with two seeming bodies, but one heart.
Shakespeare, Midsummer-Night's Dream, iii. 2.

After they are first shed up curly foot in length, they spread a very large leaf, having no branch nor twig in the trunk or stem.—Sir W. Raleigh, History of the World.

Set them aslope a reasonable depth, and then they will put forth many roots, and so carry more shoots upon a stem.—Izaak Walton.

This, ere it was in the earth,
God made, and every herb, before it grew
On the green stem. Milton, Paradise Lost, vii. 335.
Fair-well, you flowers, whose buds with early care
I watch'd, and to the cheerful sun did rear:
Who now shall bind your stems? or, when you fall,
With fountain streams your fading souls recall?
Depden, State of Lancashire.

The fouring Spring with leechy rain
Beats down the slender stem and bearded grain.
Id., Translation of the Georgics, l. 423.

2. Race; generation; family; stock.

I will essay her worth to celebrate,
And so attend ye toward her glittering state;
Where ye may all, that are of noble stem,
Approach. Milton, Arcades, 80.

Whosoever will undertake the imperial diadem
Must have of his own worthiness to support it;
which is one of the reasons that it hath continued these two ages and more in that stem, now so much spoken of.—Hawell, Fossil Footprint.

Dost thou in hands aspire to doleful fame?
Learn well their lineage and their ancient stem.
Tickell.

3. Progeny; branch of a family.

This is a stem
Of that victorious stock, and let us fear
His native mightiness. Shakespeare, Henry V, ii. 4.

4. Prow or forepart of a ship.

Orontes' barque . . . ev'n in the hero's view,
From stem to stern, by waves was cover'd o'er.
Depden, Translation of the Æneid, l. 162.

Stem. v. a. Oppose a current; pass across or forward notwithstanding the stream.

Above the deep they raise their scaly crests,
And stem the flood with their erected brows.
Sir J. Denham, Destruction of Troy.

In shipping such as this, the Irish kern
And untam'd Indian on the stream did glide,
Ere sharp keel'd boats to stem the flood did bourn,
Or fin-like cars did spread from either side.
Depden, Annus Mirabilis, clvii.

At length Erasmus, that great injured name,
The glory of the priesthood, and the shame,
Stem'd the wild torrent of a barbarous age,
And drove those holy Vandals off the stage.
Pope, Essay on Criticism, iii. 603.

Stem. v. n. Move forward as a ship with its stem.

They on the trading flood,
Through the wide Ethiopians to the cape,
Ply, stemming nightly toward the pole.
Milton, Paradise Lost, ii. 630.

Stemples. s. [?] In Mining. See extract.
Stemples in mining [are] cross-bars of wood in the shafts. . . . In many places, the way is to sink a perpendicular hole, or shaft, the sides of which they strengthen from top to bottom with wood-work, to prevent the earth from falling in: the transverse pieces of wood for this purpose they call stemples, and, by means of these, the miners in some places descend, without using any rope, catching hold of these with their hands and feet.—Rees, Cyclopædia.

Stench. s.

1. Stink; bad smell.

Death, death! oh amiable and lovely death!
Thou odoriferous stench, sweet rotteness,
Arise forth from thy couch of lasting night.
Shakespeare, King John, iii. 4.

So bees with smoke, and doves with noisome stench,
Are from their hives, and houses, driv'n away.
Id., Henry VI. Part I, l. 15.

Physicians, by the stench of feathers, cure the rising of the mother.—Bacon, Natural and Experimental History.

The ministry will be found the salt of the earth, the thing that keeps societies of men from stench and corruption.—South, Sermons.

The hungry Nar,
Corrupted with the stench of sulphur flows,
And into Tiber's stream the infected current throws.
Addison.

2. Good smell.

Black bulls and bearded goats on altars lie,
And clouds of savoury stench involve the sky.
Drayton.

Stench. v. a. [allied to stink, as drench to drink.]

1. Make to stink.

The fininess of the ponds only stencheth the water.—Mortimer, Husbandry.

Dead birds stench every coast.
Young, Resignation, pt. i.

2. Stop; hinder from flowing.

Redrings to stench and incensations to thicken the blood.—Harvey, Discourse of Conceptions.

Stenchy. adj. Having a bad smell.

Far nobler prospects these
Than gardens black with smoke in dusty towns,
Where stenchy vapours often beat the sun. Dyer.

Stencilling. s. [?] See extract.

The English first imported and began to imitate the Chinese paper-hangings. . . . The first method of making this paper was stencilling; by laying upon it, in an extended state, a piece of pasteboard having spaces cut out of various figured devices, and applying different water-colours with the brush. Another piece of paper with other patterns cut out was next applied, when the former figures were dry, and new designs thus imparted.—Cree, Dictionary of Arts, Manufactures, and Mines.

Stenography. s. [Gr. στενός = narrow + γραφω = writing; γραφω = I write.] Art of writing in shorthand; shorthand.

Some will peruse a tale impudently, and cannot be delivered of a jest, till they have travelled an hour in trivials, as if they had taken the whole tale by stenography, and now were putting it out at large.—Pittman, Rhodesia, l. 163.

O the accurate stenography of state!

The princely eagle alights into a bat. Chenierland.
The art of short-hand was first attempted in this country by Dr. Timothy Bright, who published his 'Character' in the year 1588. The 'Writing School-master' of Mr. Peter Bale appeared two years after Dr. Bright's work. Bale's book is divided into three parts, the first of which is entitled 'Brachygraphy,' and contains rules to write as fast as a man can speak with propriety and distinction. In 1618 appeared 'Willis's Stenography,' or Short-hand Writing by Spelling Character. . . . Henry Dix's 'Brachygraphy' was an attempt to improve upon Willis's.—Rees, Cyclopædia.

Stenography has of late years become a part of academic instruction, and therefore any endeavour to extend its utility and further its improvement, requires neither apology nor excuse. It would be almost a waste of time to dwell at any length or with an affected formality, upon the advantages to be derived from the study of stenography when the recent establishment of institutions of all kinds has opened new channels of improvement to the people at large, and to which all classes of persons may obtain access on the most moderate terms. And what can or ought to claim a greater share of attention than an art which improves the memory, supplies it with mental aliment, and enables its possessor to enrich his commonplace book with such otherwise fugitive portions of co-temporary history, as might without the aid of short-hand be lost to posterity?—G. Latham, An Attempt to remodel the Art of Stenography on new and more primitive Principles than the Systems now in Use: 1838.

Stent. v. a. Stint. (Spenser uses it for the sake of his rhyme).

Therewith Sir Guyon left his first embrace,
And turning to that woman, fast her leant
By the loose locks that hang before her eyes,
And to the ground her threw: yet nought she stent
Her bitter railing and fole revilement.
Spenser, Faerie Queene, ii. 4. 12.

Stentorian. adj. Loud; uncommonly loud.

They echo forth in stentorian clamours.—Sir T. Herbert, Relation of some Years Travels into Africa and the Great Asia, p. 325.

At that moment the waiter entered the room, and, in a stentorian voice, said, 'Gentlemen, is either of your names Gurney?'—Theodore Hook, Gilbert Gurney, vol. iii. ch. v.

'Why, I suppose you don't mean to spend the evening in the stable or the coach-house,' he returned. 'That, indeed, is not such hospitality as I would show to you my friend,' cried Mr. Pecksniff, pressing his hand. And then he took a long breath, and tapping at the window, shouted with stentorian blandness, 'Boh!'—Dickens, Martin Chuzzlewit, ch. 12.

Stentoronic. adj. Stentorian. Rare.

For thus he measures out his own stentoronic voice.—Bishop Warburton, Doctrine of Grace, b. ii. ch. v. (Rich.).

Stentorophonic. adj. [from Stentor, the Homeric herald, whose voice was as loud as that of fifty men, and φωνή = voice.] Loudly speaking or sounding.

I heard a formidable noise,
Loud as the stentorophonic voice,
That would far off. Butler, Hudibras, iii. 1. 251.
Of this stentorophonic horn of Alexander there is a figure preserved in the Vatican.—Berham, Physical Theology.

The speaking trumpet, under the title of the stentorophonic tube, was long revered in England to Sir Samuel Morland; but Kircher has formally laid claim to it in his 'Musurgia'; however, the stentorophonic horn or tube of Alexander the Great claims primacy and, as well as superior magnitude; for it is said he could give orders to his army, at the distance of one hundred stadia, which is above twelve English miles.—Rees, Cyclopædia.

Step. v. n. [A.S. steppan.]

1. Move by a single change of the place of the foot.

One of our nation hath proceeded so far, that he was able, by the help of wings, in a running pace, to step constantly ten yards at a time. Bishop Wilkins, Mathematical Magick.

2. Advance by a sudden progression.

Ventilum lately
Buried his father, by whose death he's strapp'd
Into a great estate.
Shakespeare, Timon of Athens, ii. 2.

3. Move mentally.

When a person is hearing a sermon, he may give his thoughts leave to step back so far as to recollect the several heads.—Watts.

They are stepping almost three thousand years back into the remotest antiquity, the only true mirror of that ancient world.—Pope, Preface to Translation of the Iliad.

4. Go; walk.

I am in blood
Stept in so far, that should I wade no more,
Return were as tedious as go o'er.
Shakespeare, Macbeth, iii. 4.

5. Come as it were by chance.

The old poets step in to the assistance of the moderns.—Addison.

6. Take a short walk.

See where he comes: so please you, step aside,
I'll know his grievance.
Shakespeare, Romeo and Juliet, l. 1.

My brothers, when they saw me wearied out,
Stepp'd, as they said, to the most thick-side
To bring me berries.
Milton, Comus, 194.

When your master wants a servant who happens to be slow, answer, that he had but that minute stept out.—Swift.

7. Walk gravely, slowly, or resolutely.

Pyrrhus, the most ancient of all the bashaws,
Stept forth, and, appealing unto his merces, earnestly requested him to spare his life.—Knox, History of the Turks.

When you stepp'd forth, how did the monster rage,
In scorn of your soft looks and tender age! Cowley

How the swain retreats,
His flock before him stepping to the fold.
Thomson, Seasons, Summer.

In robe and crown the king stept down.

Youngs, The Beggar Maid.
Singleton gallantly stepped forward to assist her,
and by his aid she landed safely, and then acknowledged the courtesy with a smile.—Hannay, Singleton Pontenoy, b. ii. ch. ii.

Step. s.

1. Progression by one removal of the foot.

Thou sound and firm-set earth,
Hear not my steps, which way they walk.
Ling'ring perdition, worse than any death
Can be at once, shall step by step attend
You and your ways.—Id., Tempest, iii. 3.
Who was the first to explore the untrodden path,
When life was hazarded in every step?—Ashmun, Cato.

2. One remove in climbing; hold for the foot; stair.

While Solomon lay at Buda, seven bloody heads of bishops, slain in battle, were set in order upon a wooden step.—Knutson, History of the Turks.
The breadth of every single step or stair should be never less than one foot, nor more than eighteen inches.—Sir H. Wotton.
Those heights where William's virtue might have staid,
And on the subject world look'd safely down,
By Marlbro' pass'd, the prince and steps were made Sublimar yet to raise his queen's renown.
Prior, Ode to Queen Anne, xix.

It was a saying among the ancients, truth lies in a well; and, to vary on this metaphor, we may justly say, that logic does supply us with steps, whereby we may go down to reach the water.—Watts.

It is no wonder that the longest mathematical demonstration should be so much more easily constructed and understood, than a much shorter train of just reasoning concerning real facts. The former has been aptly compared to a long and steep, but even and regular, flight of steps, which gives the breath, and the strength, and the perseverance only; while the latter resembles a short, but rugged and uneven, ascent up a precipice, which requires a quick eye, agile limbs, and a firm step; and in which we have to tread now on this side, now on that—ever considering, as we proceed, whether this or that projection will afford room for our foot, or whether some loose stone may not slide from under us. There are probably as many steps of pure reasoning in one of the longer of Euclid's demonstrations, as in the whole of an argumentative treatise on some other subject, occupying perhaps a considerable volume.—Archbishop Whately, Elements of Logic, b. iv. ch. ii. § 5.

3. Quantity of space passed or measured by one removal of the foot.

The gradus, a Roman measure, may be translated a step, or the half of a paces or pace. Arbuthnot, Tables of Ancient China, Weights, and Measures.

4. Small length; small space.

'Best have [the carriage] to the theatre at night,' Gray exclaims; 'it is but a step to the Wells, and we can walk there. I've got tickets for all. But Sadler's Wells at eleven.'—Thackeray, Book of Nodes, ch. xxv.

From billiards to whist is but a step; and when a man gets to whist and five points on the roller, my opinion is, that it is all up with him.—Ibid.,
ch. xlv.

5. Walk; passage.

O may thy pow'r, propitious still to me,
Conduct my steps to find the fatal tree
In this deep forest!—Dryden, Translation of the Æneid, vi. 275.

6. Gradation; degree.

The same sin for substance hath sundry steps and degrees, in respect whereof one man beneath a more heinous offender than another.—Perkins.

7. Progression; act of advancing.

To derive two or three general principles of motion from phenomena, and afterwards to tell us how the properties and actions of all corporeal things follow from those manifest principles, would be a very great step in philosophy, though the causes of those principles were not yet discovered.—Sir I. Newton.

One injury is but defended by a second, and this by a third; by these steps the old masters of the palace in France became masters of the kingdom; and by these steps a general during pleasure might have grown into a general for life, and a general for life into a king.—Swift.

The quiet must not proceed too swiftly towards the determination of his point, that he may with more ease draw the learner to those principles step by step, from whence the final conclusion will arise.
—Watts.

A great nobleman, who had an estate of fifteen or twenty thousand pounds a year, and who embraced two or three boroughs, would no longer be able to put his younger son, his younger brother, his man of business, into Parliament, or to earn a salary or a step in the peerage by finding a seat for the Lord of the Treasury or an Attorney General.—Macaulay, History of England, ch. xxi.

8. Footstep; print of the foot.

From hence Astræa took her flight, and here
The prints of her departing steps appear.
Dryden, Translation of the Georgics, ii. 671.
That man is not the most in tribulation
Who, resolute of mind, walks his own way,
With answerable mind to plant his steps.
H. Taylor, Philip van Artevelde, Part I. iii. 3.
Flow down, cold rivulet, to the sea,
Thy tribute wave deliver:
No more by these my steps shall be,
For ever and for ever,
Flow, softly flow, by lawn or lea,
A rivulet then a river;
No where by these my steps shall be
For ever and for ever.—Tennyson, A Farewell.

9. Gait; manner of walking.

Sudden from the golden throne
With a submissive step I hasten'd down;
The glowing garland from my hair I took,
Love in my heart, obedience in my look.
Prior, Solomon, ii. 145.

10. Action; instance of conduct.

The reputation of a man depends upon the first steps he makes in the world.—Pope.

Take a step. Make a movement in a given direction.

Worthy sir,
We're in a perihum predicament,
And I should take no step without advice.

H. Taylor, Philip van Artevelde, Part I. ii. 4.
No wine, beer, or coffee could be sold without a license. It was rumored that every person lodging such a license would shortly be required to enter into the same engagements which had been imposed on public functionaries, or to relinquish his trade.
It seems certain that, if such a step had been taken,
the houses of entertainment and of public resort all over the kingdom would have been at once shut up by hundreds.—Miscellany, History of England,
ch. viii.

Step-parent. s. Stepfather or stepmother.

Stepchildren are strangers to the succession of their step-parents.—Brande and Cox, Dictionary of Science, Literature, and Art.

Stepchild. s. Stepson or stepdaughter.

Stepdame. s. Stepmother.
His wanton step-dame loved him the more;
But when she saw her off'd sweets refused,
Her love she turn'd to hate.
Spenser.

A step-dame but I have, a cursed she,
Who rules my hen-peck'd sire, and orders me.
Dryden, Translation of Virgil, Æneid, iii. 14.
Anybody would have guessed Miss to have been bred up under the influence of a cruel step-dame, and join to be the fumbling of a tender mother.—Arbuthnot, History of John Bull.

Stepdaughter. s. Female child of one parent, but not of both.

Stepfather. s. Mother's husband, who is not the father of the child or children, who suggest the second part of the term.

Stepmother. s. Father's wife who is not the mother of the child or children who suggest the second part of the term.

How should their minds chafe but misbuild, lest this discipline, which always you match with divine doctrine as her natural and true sister, be found unto all kinds of knowledge a step-mother?—Hauker, Ecclesiastical Polity.

You shall not find me, daughter,
After the slander of most step-mothers,
Ill-ryed unto you.—Shakespeare, Cynthia, i. 2.

Cato the elder, being aged, buried his wife, and married a young woman: his son came to him, and said, Sir, what have I offended, that you have brought a step-mother into your house? The old man answered, Nay, quite the contrary, son; thou pleasest me so well, as I would be glad to have more such.—Roman.

'Fanny Singleton's talking to his stepmother without knowing her!' said Welwyn.—Hannay, Singleton Pontenoy.

Steppe. s. [P] In Geography.

The steppes of Russia are not unlike the heaths of Germany; being in part susceptible of cultivation, and affording pasturage for numerous herds belonging to nomadic tribes.—Asiatic Geology.

Far in the east of Europe, and on the borders of Asia, is the great Aralo-Caspian tract, a part of which, the Kirgiz steppes, occupies nearly fifteen thousand square miles of almost unbroken surface, depressed nearly a hundred feet below the general level of the ocean. It is terminated by much loftier lands in Central Asia; but these decline towards the Arctic ocean, descending to the plains of Siberia, whose elevation is probably little greater than that of the European plain.—Id., Elementary Course of Geology, Mineralogy, and Physical Geography,
p. 38: 1869.

Stepping verbal abs. Act of going forward by steps.

Though short he fall of old Corvino's age,
His steppings with the old her's footsteps ft.
Dr. H. More, Song of the Soul, l. 2, 22.

Steppingstone. s.

1. Stone laid to catch the foot, and save it from wet or dirt.

Like steppingstones to save a stride,
In streets where kennels are too wide.
Or from the bridge I leaped to leap
The milldam rushing down with noise,
And see the minnow everywhere
In crystal eddies glimmer and poles.
The late flag-flowers were there springing
Below the range of stepping-stones,
Or those three chestnuts rear, that hung
In masses thick with milky cones.
Tennyson, The Miller's Daughter.

2. Assistance to progress. Metaphorical.

Stepson. s. Male child of one parent, but not of both.

Stereoraceous. adj. [Lat. stercus, stercoria = dung.] Belonging to dung; partaking of the nature of dung.

Green juicy vegetables, in a heap together, acquire a heat equal to that of a human body; then a putrid stereoraceous taste and odour, in taste resembling putrid fish, and in smell human faeces.—Arbuthnot, On the Nature and Choice of Aliments.

Stereoration. s. Act of dunging; act of manuring with dung.

The first help is stereoration: the sheep's dung is one of the best, and the next dung of kine, and that of horses.—Heron.

Stereoration is reasonable. Frolyan, Calendar.
The exterior pulp of the fruit serves not only for the security of the seed, whilst it hangs upon the plant, but, after it is fallen upon the earth, for the stereoration of the soil, and promotion of the growth, though not the first permeation of the seminal plant. Roy, On the Wisdom of God manifested in the Works of the Creation.

Stereochrome, or Stereochromy. s.

[Gr. στέρεος = solid, rigid + χρῶμα, -aroc = skin, complexion, colour.] Kind, variety, imitation of, substitute for, fresco; so called from the permanence, or fixation of the colours. A term of very recent origin; see Waterglass.

The intonaco may be three of fine quartz sand and one of lime, such as is used in fresco-painting. The design may be traced on the wall when properly hardened; but the wall should be moistened immediately before painting. The colours are applied, mixed with distilled water, not heavily or in any great body, but thinly hatched over the surface. When the picture is finished, the whole is fixed by an application of the so-called waterglass from a syringe under expressly for the purpose, called a sprinker. The picture is thus indelibly fixed, hence the term stereochromy.—Brande and Cox, Dictionary of Science, Literature, and Art.

Stereograph. s. Stereographic impression.

Photography and the stereoscope in all their multitude concert are inadequate to produce on a plain surface the endless variety of forms into which at once and in succession the surface of water is carved by the wind. The nearest approximation to such a representation at present achieved is a stereograph taken by the instantaneous process. C. M. Ingley, Introduction to Meteorology, b. i. § 34, p. 50.

Stereographic. adj. Connected with, relating to, constituted by, Stereography;

delimited on a plane; done according to the rules of stereography.

The angles made by the circles of the sphere are equal to the angles made by their representatives in the stereographic projection.—Reid, Inquiry.

The reason of this is not far to seek; for both eyes receive nearly the same perspective when the two objects are binocularly united; and such difference as there may be cannot possibly be such as misleads between two stereographic perspectives of one symmetrical coin.—C. M. Ingley, Introduction to Metaphysics, b. i. § 47, p. 45.

Stereography. s. [Gr. γραφειν = writing; γραφω = I write.] Perspective.

Stereography [is] that branch of solid geometry which demonstrates the properties and shows the construction of all regularly defined solids; it explains the method for constructing the surface on planes, as to form the entire body itself, or to cover its surface; or, when the solid is bounded by plane surfaces, the inclination of the planes.—Encyclopædia.

Stereometer. s. [Gr. μετρον = measure; μετρω = I measure.] Instrument for the measur- ing of solids.

Ray's stereometer was first described in the Annales de Chimie for 1797. An instrument on exactly the same principle was afterwards brought forward by Sir John Leslie under the name of Coincimeter.—Brande and Cox, Dictionary of Science, Literature, and Art.

Stereometry. s. [Gr. stereion = solid + metron = measure, from metrao = I measure.] Art of measuring, principle of the measurement of, solid bodies.

Stereoscope. s. [Gr. stereon = I see, spy, deservy.] Instrument for the exposition of the influence of binocular vision in determining the solidity of visible objects.

On the mode in which our notion of the solid forms and relative projection of objects is acquired, great light has been thrown by the interesting experiments of Professor Wheatstone. It seems perfectly evident, both from reason and experience, that the flat picture upon the retina which is the immediate source of our sensation, could not itself convey to our mind any notion but that of a corresponding plane surface. In fact, any notion of solidity, which might be formed by a person who had never had the use of more than one eye, would entirely depend upon the combination of his visual and tactile sensations. But where both eyes are employed, it has been ascertained by Professor Wheatstone, that they concur in exciting the perception of solidity or projection, which arises from the mental combination of the two dissimilar pictures formed upon the two retinas. It is easily shown that any near object is seen in two different modes by the eye.

But it is equally evident, that the mental association of the different pictures upon the two retinas, does of itself give rise to the idea of solidity. This proof is afforded by Professor Wheatstone's ingenious instrument, which has been described by him in 1838.—See, Carpenter, Principles of Human Physiology, p. 433.

We retain two visual images, and they confuse each other. We want a mental stereoscope to reduce them to unity.—See, De la Roche, Note on p. 272 of Atlas Theologique, Politique, and Miscellaneous, by N. P. Chénier, 1833.

Professor Wheatstone, reasoning from this fact, concluded that if he could see two pictures of an object at once, and draw exactly as they appear to each eye in binocular vision, they could be blended into one, and that each eye could appear perfectly solid as in nature. The practical result of this reasoning was the invention of the stereoscope, which verified the truth of the argument, and gave the most convincing proof, that it is by means of the double image that we are enabled to judge with the greatest accuracy of the distance and relief of objects placed before us. J. D. Moyle, An Introduction to Mental Philosophy on the Inductive Method, p. 135: 1852.

Stereoscopic. adj. Connected with, relating to, the stereoscope.

These observations will be found useful in obtaining stereoscopic views of the structures in carpentry and shipbuilding.—See David Leverett, The Stereoscope, p. 18: 1856.

Stereotomy. s. [Gr. stereon = section, cutting; from root of tereon = I cut.] Cutting bodies. See extract.

Stereotomy is the science of cutting solids to suit certain conditions required for their forms.—Gwilt, Encyclopedia of Architecture.

Stereotype. s. [Gr. stereon = type, standard, cast, mould.]

1. In Printing. Solid plate of fixed type.

2. System of printing from immovable type.

There is some probability that this art originated in China, where it was practised long before it was known in Europe. Some European travellers might have imported the hint. That the Romans did not practise the art of printing cannot but excite our astonishment, since they really possessed the art, and may be said to have enjoyed it, unconscious of their rich possession. I have seen Roman stereotypes, or printing, immovable types with which they stamped their pottery. He daily practising the art, though confined to this object, it did not occur to so ingenious a people to print their literary works, is not easily to be accounted for. . . . Our modern stereotype consists of entire pages in solid blocks of metal, and, not being liable to break like the soft wood at first used, is profitably employed for works which require to be perpetually reprinted. 1. Diarelli, Curiosities of Literature, Early Printing.

Used adjectively.

On pouring stereotype metal into this mould, a carved plate was obtained, which after undergoing a certain amount of trimming at two machines, specially made for the purpose, was for squaring the plate while being picked, the other for planing the back, could be taken to press and set to work within twenty-five minutes from the time at which the process began.—E. J. Courtenay, in Brande and Cox, Dictionary of Science, Literature, and Art.

Stereotype. v. a. Cast solid plates in moulds taken from movable types.

Stereotyping by this process is very simple. A piece of any work proposed to be stereotyped is set up with movable types. In the ordinary way, a plaster cast is then taken from it, which, being first dried, is immersed in fluid metal. The plaster used for forming the mould is pulverized gypsum, mixed with water to the consistency of cream. . . . After the form of types has been surrounded with a brass frame, and slightly oiled on the surface, the fluid plaster is poured upon it, and, by the application of a brush, made to fill every cavity of the letters, the superfluous portion being scraped off. When the plaster has set sufficiently hard, it is by means of the frame lifted off the face of the type and detached from it. It is then baked to dryness in an oven; and when quite hard it is placed in an iron box or cask, which has also been heated in an oven. The box is now plunged into a large pot of melted type metal, and kept about ten minutes under the surface, in order that the weight of the metal may force it into all the three parts of the letters. The whole is then cooled; the mould is broken and washed off, and the back of the plate turned smooth on a lathe, or planed by a machine. The cast or plate, after being sufficiently cooled, is carefully examined with a view to removing any imperfections previous to its being printed from.—R. J. Courtenay, in Brande and Cox, Dictionary of Science, Literature, and Art.

Stereotyping. s. Process by which anything is stereotyped: (used adjectively in the extract).

The stereotyping process by which the rapid printing of newspapers is effected is an improvement hardly inferior to that by which the late Mr. Walter applied steam power to the printing press, and certainly equal to that by which the rotary press superseded the reciprocating action of the flat machine.—R. J. Courtenay, in Brande and Cox, Dictionary of Science, Literature, and Art.

Sterile. adj. [Lat. sterilis.] Barren.

Our elders say,
The barren, touched in this holy chasm,
Shake off their sterile curse.

To separate seeds, put them in water: such as are corrupted and sterile swim.—Sir T. Browne, Vulgar Errors.

She is grown sterile and barren, and her births of animals are now very incalculable.—Dr. H. More, Justine against Abolition.

When the vegetative stratum was once washed off by rains, the hills would have become barren, the strata below yielding only more sterile and mineral matter, such as was unfit for the formation of vegetables. Woodward.

Sterility. s. [Fr. stérilité; Lat. sterilitas, -atis.] Barrenness; want of fecundity; unfruitfulness.

Main is this sown of people, by reason of the sterility of the soil, and because their natives are exhausted by so many encroachments in such vast territories.—Bacon, Considerations on War with Spain.

An eternal sterility must have possessed the world, where all things had been fastened everlastingly with the immutable chains of speechless gravity, if the Almighty had not said, Let the earth bring forth grass, the herb yielding seed, and the fruit-tree yielding fruit.—Bentley, Sermon.

He had more frequent occasion for repetition than my post; yet he cannot ascribe this to any sterility of expression, but to the genius of his times, which deluged in these reiterated verses.—Pope, Essay on Homer.

Sterilize. v. a. Make, or render, barren; deprive of fecundity, or the power of production.

May we not as well suppose the sterilizing the earth was suspended for some time, till the deluge became the exhalation of it?—Woodward, Natural History.

God sterilize the fertile with thy rage. Savage.

Sterling. adj. [often, perhaps generally, postpositive; as, 'so many pounds sterling'; in which case the sense is, to some extent, adverbial. For the views respecting its derivation see the extracts illustrative of the question.]

1. Term by which genuine English money is discriminated.

The king's treasure that he left at his death amounted unto eighteen hundred thousand pounds sterling.—Bacon, History of the Reign of Henry VIII. Several of them would rather choose to count out a sum in waterless than in pounds sterling.—Addison.

2. Genuine; having just the test.

There is not one single witty phrase in this collection, which hath not received the stamp and approbation of one hundred years: he may therefore be secure to find them all genuine, sterling, and authentic.—Swift, Polite Conversation.

Do these foreign contemporaries of ours still exhibit, in their characters as men, something of that sterling nobleness, that union of majesty with modesty, which we must ever venerate in those our spiritual fathers?—Carlyle, Critical and Miscellaneous Essays, State of German Literature.

Some have said sterling money to take that name of a stare, stamped in the border or ring of the penny; none other of a bird called a stare or sterling, stamped in the circumference.—Stow, London, pp. 42-43. (Saves by H. and W.)

When a given weight of gold or silver is of a given fineness, it is then of the true standard, and called enterling or sterling metal; a name for which there are various reasons given, but none of them satisfactory; and of this sterling or enterling metal, all the coin of the kingdom must be made, by the statute 25 Edw. III. c. 13. So that the king's prerogative seemeth not to extend to the issuing or intelling the value of the coin, below or above the sterling value: though Sir Matthew Hale appears to be of another opinion. . . . The most plausible opinion seems to be that adopted by those two city noblemen, that the name was derived from the enterlings or enterlings, as those Saxons were anciently called, who inhabited that district of Germany, now occupied by the Hesse-Lorns and their appendages, the earliest traders in modern Europe. Sir W. Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England, b. 1. c. 4. vii.

Sterling was the title for silver money current within this kingdom, and took its name from this; that there was a pure coin stamped first in England by the enterlings, or merchants of East Germany, by the command of King John; and Howden writes it enterling. Instead of the pound sterling, we now say so many pounds of lawful English money; but the word is not wholly disused, for though we ordinarily say lawful money of England, yet in the Mint they call it sterling money; and when it was found convenient in the fabrication of medals, to have a certain quantity of base metal to be mixed with the pure gold and silver, the word sterling was then introduced; and it has ever since been used to denote all certain proportion or degree of fineness, which ought to be retained in the respective coins. Jowett, Law Dictionary.

Sterling [was] originally the name of an English penny, the standard coin in which it was commonly stipulated that payments should be made; it was subsequently applied to the currency of England in general, and metaphorically came to signify, of standard value, genuine, sound. . . . The origin of the name is unknown. Some suppose it to be from the coin having had a star on the reverse, the objection to which is that there is no evidence of any coin in which the star occupied a place sufficiently marked to give a name to the coin. There are, indeed, pennies, of King John on which there is a star in the hollow of a crescent, with other emblems, but it is a very inconspicuous object. Others suppose that the name was given to coins struck at Stirling in Scotland. But the hypothesis most generally approved is, that the coin was named from the Kinderlings, or North Germans, who were the first moneyers in England.—Wedgwood, Dictionary of English Etymology.

Sterling. s. [from the adjective.]

1. English coin; money.

This visionary various projects tries,
And knows that to be rich is to be wise:
By useful observation he can tell
The sacred charms that in true sterling dwell;
How odd makes a patrician of a slave,
A dwarf an Miss, a Thersites leave. Garth.
Great name, which in our rolls recorded stands,
Lends honours, and protects the learned hands,
Accept this offering to thy bounty due,
And Roman wealth in English sterling view.

G. Arbuthnot.

2. Standard rate.

Sterling was the known and approved standard in England in all probability from the beginning of king Henry the Second's reign.—Lapsley.

Stern. adj. [A.S. stýrne.]

1. Severe of countenance; truculent. . . .

Why look you still so stern and tragical?
Shakespeare, Henry VI. Part I. iii. 1.
I would outstare the sternest eyes that look,
Oubtrave the heart most daring on the earth,
Pick the young sucking calfs from the she-bear.
Yea, mock the lion when he roars for prey,
To win thee, lady. Id., Merchant of Venice, ii. 1.
It shall not be amiss here to present the stern but lively countenances of this so famous a man.—Knauber, History of the Turks.

Gods and men
Fear'd her stern frown, and she was queen of the woods. Milton, Comus, 440.

The judge supreme soon cast a stern stare,
Stern, yet attempt'd with benignity. Harte.

2. Severe of manners; harsh; unrelenting; cruel.

Women are soft, mild, pitiful, and flexible;
Thou stern, obdurate, flinty, rough, remorseless.
Shakespeare, Henry VI. Part III. i. 4

The common executioner, Whose heart the assassin's slight of death makes hard,
Falls not the ax upon the humbled neck,
But first begs pardon: will you sterner be,
Than he that deals and lives by bloody drops?

Id., As you like it, iii. 5.
When that the poor have cried, Caesar hath wept;
Ambition should be made of sterner stuff.

Id., Julius Caesar, iii. 2.
Then shall the war, and stern domestic, and strife
Immortal, be the business of my life;
And in thy face, the dusty spoils among,
High on the burnish'd roof, my banner shall be hung. Dryden, Palamon and Arcide, iii. 339.
Stern as tutors, and as uncles hard,
We lash the pupil, and demand the ward.
Id., Translation of Persius, l. 26.

3. Hard; afflictive.

If waters had at thy rate how'd that stern time,
Thou should'st have said, G-o, port-er, turn the key,
All cruels else submitted.

Shakespeare, King Lear, iii. 7.
Mischievous stool,
And with his stern steel drew in streams the blood.
Chapman.

Stern. s. [A.S. stearn.]

1. Hind part of the ship where the rudder is placed.

Let a barbarous Indian, who had never seen a ship, view the separate and disjointed parts, as the bow and stern, the ribs, masts, ropes, and shrouds, he would form but a very true idea of it.—Watts,
On the Improvement of the Mind.
They turn their heads to sea, their sterns to land.
Dryden, Translation of the Kural, vi. 4.

2. Post of management; direction.

The king from Elam I intend to send,
And sit at chiefest sterns of public weal.
Shakespeare, Henry VI. Part I. l. 1.

3. Hind part of anything.

She all at once her beasty body raised,
With doubled forces lurch above the ground;
This wrapping up her wreathed sterns around,
Lapt three upon his shield.

Spenser, Faerie Queene, l. 1. 19.
Take an idle whelp, he runs ahead after his own stern.—Bishop Hall, Honour of the Married Chryse,
p. 7.

Stern-chaser. s. In Navigation. See ex- tract.

Bow-chasers [are] the cannons situated at the forepart of a ship, in line upon any object ahead of her. Stern-chasers are those placed in the after part of a ship, pointed sternward, and intended to annoy any vessel in pursuit of her.—Fishoner, Nautical Dictionary, (Barney.)

With this he (Vulcanus) got under the stern of the Elephant, below the reach of the stern-chasers; and under a heavy fire of small arms from the marines, fought his raft, till the force was unmanned with such skill, as well as courage, as to excite Nebon's warmest admiration.—Southey, Life of Nelson, ch. vii.

Sternage. s. Steerage or stern.

Grapple your minds to sternage of this navy,
And leave your England as dead midnight still.
Shakespeare, Henry V. iii. chorus.

Sternal. adj. In Anatomy. Connected with, relating to, constituted by, constituting, a sternum.

In the burrowing mole, the first sternal bone, or manubrium, is of unusual length, being much produced forward, and its under surface downward in the shape of a deep keel for extending the origin of the pectoral muscles. Seven pairs of ribs directly join the sternum, which consists of four bones, in addition to the manubrium and an ossified cartilage appendage.—Owen, Anatomy of Vertebrates, vol. iii.
p. 384.

Sternerd. adj. In Rural Architecture. Hav- ing a particular kind of stern; (as, 'a square-sternerd,' or 'a pink-sternerd vessel').

Sterner. s. Pilot; governor; director.

He that is 'regens sidera,' the sterner of the stars.
—Dr. Clarke, Sermons, p. 15: 1637.

Sternly. adv. In a stern manner; severely; truculently.

No mountains lion tore
Two lambs so sternly. Chapman.
Sternly he pronounced
The rigid interdiction.

Milton, Paradise Lost, viii. 333.
Yet sure thou art not, nor thy face the same,
Nor thy limbs moulden in so soft a frame;
Thou look'st more sternly, dost more strongly move,
And more of awe than heart, and less of love.

Dryden, State of Innocence, ll. 3.

Sternness. s. Attribute suggested by Stern.

1. Severity of look.

Of stature huge, and eke of courage bold,
That sons of men amazed their sternness to behold.
Spenser.

How would he look to see his work so noble Vilely bound up! what would he say? or how Should I, in these my burrow'd haunts, behold
The sternness of his presence!

2. Severity or harshness of manners.

I have sternness in my soul enough
To hear of murders, rapes, and sacrileges.
Dryden, Cleomenes, l. 1.

Sternon. s. [Gr. sternon.] Sternum.

A soldier was shot in the breast through the sternon.—Wismann, Surgery.

Sternophthalmi. s. [Gr. sternon = breast, chest + o = ophthalmos = eye.] Men having, or believed to have, an eye in the breast, chest, or bosom.

We relinquish as fabulous what is delivered of sternophthalmi, or men with eyes in their breasts.—
Sir T. Browne, Vulgar Errors, p. 154. (Ord. M.S.)

Sternpost. s. In Navigation. Upright timber forming the after-end of the ship.

Sternum. s. [Lat. from Gr. sternon.] Breast- bone.

In Mammalia, the sternum is generally simple, and consists of a single chain of ossicles, except in the ungulate, and occasionally in man, where a double series of ossifications are originally developed in the body of the bone, but which afterwards become confluent. The upper portion, or manubrium sterni, remains long distinct from the main body of the sternum; in man the cartilaginous appendage of the lower edge of the sternum is called xiphoid or ensiform.—Owen, in British and Amer. Dictionary of Science, Literature, and Art.

Sternutation. s. [Lat. sternutatio.] Act of sneezing.

Concerning sternutation, or sneezing, and the custom of saluting upon that motion, it is generally believed to derive its original from a disease wherein sternutation proved mortal, and such as sneezed died.—Sir T. Browne, Vulgar Errors.

Sternutation is a convulsive shaking of the uterus and muscles, occasioned by an irritation of those in the nostrils.—Quincy.

Sternutative. adj. Having the quality of provoking to sneeze.

Sternutatory. s. Medicine that provokes to sneeze.

Physicians, in persons near death, use sternuta- tories, or such medicines as provoke with sneezing;
when, if the faculty arise, and sternutation ensue, they conceive hopes of life.—Sir T. Browne.

Sterquilinous. adj. Mean; dirty; poultry.

Obsolete.
Now . . . any sterquilinous rascal is licensed to throw dirt in the faces of sovereign princes in open printed language.—Howell, Letters, ii. 18: 1644.

Stérorous. adj. [Lat. sterto = I snore; stertor = snoring.] Having the character of a snore.

How could it be otherwise? In that stertorous last sleep of our European world, must not phantasmic enoch, born of the pit . . . lit just in ghostly misquarrels and counterpane.—Carlyle, Critical and Miscellaneous Essays, Canal Enthusiasm.

The faithful clerk, Snug, awake at this moment, tolerably refreshed by his slumber, and wiped away a kind of apoplectic foam that used to gather about his lips during his stertorous snooze. Indeed, Snug being seized with apoplexy was a thing confidently expected by the mess, facetiously alluded to by many,
and rather wished for, as a lark, by some.—Hawley,
Sington Postman.

Starve. See Starve.

Stethometer. s. [Gr. stethos = I measure; metron = measure.] In Medicine. Instru- ment for measuring the capacity, and determining the form, of the chest.

The amount of motion in the chest and abdomen, and of its various parts, is capable of being accurately determined by means of the chest-measure of Dr. Gibson or the stethometer of Dr. Quain. Both instruments are composed of a brass box, having a dial and an index, which is moved by a rack at right to a prolonged pinion or a string. One revolution of the index indicates an inch of motion in the chest; the intervening space being graduated. It has been found necessary, when making observations on the respiratory movements, whether of the chest or of the abdomen, to divert the patient's attention, and make him look straight forward, otherwise these movements become so affected as to vitiate the results.—J. H. Bennett, Lectures on Medicine, p. 44.

Stethoscope. s. [Gr. stethos = breast, chest + skopos = I see.] In Medicine. Instru- ment for conducting the internal sounds of the body to the ear of one who listens with the view of ascertaining how far those vital processes which are attended with sound are healthy and normal, or morbid and irregular. Of these the respiratory sounds of the lungs, and the circulatory sounds of the heart are the chief, and as both are referred to the chest, the name stethoscope applies to the instrument which investigates them. Other sounds, however, beyond the chest may be investigated by the same, or a similar, instrument; e.g.

the circulation of the gravid uterus, as well as that of the fetus.

When the ear of the stethoscope rested gently upon the precestral region, no unnatural sound whatever was heard. But when either the ear or the stetho- scope was applied with such force as to cause the ribs to sink below their natural level, then a loud bellows-murmur sprang up. The speed at which it was heard, and not beyond it, was just as far as the mouth of the stethoscope extended, when it was placed upon the cartilage of the third rib as a centre.—Dr.
P. M. Latham, Diseases of the Heart.

Stethoscópic. adj. Connected with, relating to, determined by, the stethoscope: (as, 'a stethoscópic examination').

Stethoscópic. adj. Stethoscopic.

Stethoscópic. adv. In a stethoscopical manner; by means of the stethoscope.

Stethoscópic. s. Adept at the stethoscope.

Stethoscópy. s. Art of stethoscopic ex- amination.

Stéven. s. [A.S. stefu.] Cry; loud clamour.

No sooner was out, but swifter than thought,
Fast by the hulk, the wolf howler roused;
And had not Rodly run to the stéven,
Lowler had been slain thence same even. Spenser.

Stew. v. a. [Fr. estuer; Dutch, stören.] Settle anything in a slow moist heat, with little water.

Ere I was risen from the place that show'd
My duty sweating, came a teeming jess,
Stew'd in his host's half bratness.
Shakespeare, King Lear, ii. 4.

Stew. s. [N.Fr. esture.]

1. Bagnio; bathhouse.

As buring, Kisa from his boiling stew
Both belch out flames, and rocks in pieces broke,
And roared ribs of mountains molten new,
Knur'd in coal black clouds and hilly smoke.

Spenser.
The Lydians were inhibited by Cyrus to use any armor, and give themselves to baths and stew.— Abbot.

2. Brothel; house of prostitution: (generally plural).

There be that hate burlards, and never were at the stew; that shun falsehood, and never look pretence.—Ascham.

With them there are stewes no dissolute houses, no courtesans. Bacon, Sir Alcides.

Pleasures of worse nature
Are gladdly entertained; and they that shun us Practice in private sports, the stewes would blush at.
A litter, borne by eight Libanian slaves,
To my diseases from a glorious straggle,
The most consensuous of our Roman society,
Nay, of the guarded robe, the Senators,
Esteem an easy purchase.

Marston, The Roman Actor, l. 1.
Her, though seven years she in the stew had lain,
A nursery must receive and think a maid.

Donne.
What moderate sin would make the park or stew,
Whom troops of lawless nymphs can chase?
Lord Bacon, Common.

Plural form with singular meaning.

And here, as in a tavern or a stew,
He and his wild associates spend their hours.
B. Jonson, Every Man in his Humour, ii. 1.
(Nares by H. and W.)

His modest house
Turned to a common stew.
Heywood, English Traveller. (Nares by H. and W.)
You may find them, as Solomon says, not in corners of the streets only, but thick in the very midst of them, and turning the whole city into a stew.—
England's Vanity, p. 55: 1683. (Nares by H. and W.) Making his own house a stew, a bawling, and school of lewdness, to mull the rudiments of vice into the unwary flexible years of his poor children.
—South, Sermons.

3. Prostitute. Rare.

It was so plotted betwixt the lady, her husband, and (beyond that) instead of that beauty he had a notorious stew sent him.—Sir A. Fehlon, Court of King James, p. 146.

Plural form for singular.

And shall Cassandra now be turned, in common speech, a stewas. Whetstone, Promos and Cassandra, Part I. iv. 3. (Nares by H. and W.)

4. Meat stewed: (as, a stew of veal, beef, or the like).

I have seen corruption boil and bubble,
Till it o'er-run the stew.

Shakespeare, Measure for Measure, v. 1.

Stew. s. [Provincial German, stau = damp, pond.] Storepond; small pond where fish are kept for the table.

Stew. s. [German, stamb = dust.] Confusion, as when the air is full of dust, smoke, or steam. Provincial.

In a stew. Perspiring with fear or confusion. Vulgarism.

He, though naturally bold and stout,
In short was in a most tremendous stew.
Barham, Ingolstadt Legends, The Ghost.

Steward. s. [A.S. stiward; Icelandic, stjovardr.]

1. One who manages the affairs of another.

There sat yelad in real,
Down to the ground, a comely personage,
That in his hand a white rod managed;
He steward was, light Diet, ripe of age,
And in demeanour sober, and in council sage.

Spenser, Faerie Queen.

How is it that I hear this of thee? Give an account of thy stewardship; for thou mayest be no longer steward.—Luke, xvi. 2.

Whilst I have gold, I'll be his steward still.

Shakespeare, Timon of Athens, iv. 2.

Take on you the charge
And kindly government of this your land;
Not as protector, steward, minister,
Or lowly factor for another's gain.

Id., Richard III. iii. 7.

Improve all those talents the providence of God hath intrusted us with, because we are but stewards, and must give an account of them.—Nathan.

When a steward defrauds his lord, he must connive at the rest of the servants while they are following the same practice.—Swift.

What can be a greater honour than to be chosen one of the stewards and dispensers of God's bounty to mankind? What can give a generous spirit more complacency than to consider that great numbers owe to him, under God, their subsistence, and the good conduct of their lives?—Id.

Just steward of the bounty he received,
And dying power than the poor relieved. Harte.

2. Officer of state.

The duke of Suffolk is the first, and claims
To be high steward. Shakespeare, Henry VIII. iv. 1.

Steward. v. n. Manage as a steward.

Did he thus requite his mother's care in stewarding the state?—Fuller, Holy War, p. 83.

Stewardly. adv. With the care of a steward.

It is with a provident deliberation, not a rash and prodigal hand, to be dealt; and to be stewardly dispensed, not wastefully spent.—Tooker, Fabrick of the Church, p. 48: 1804.

Stewardship. s. Office of a steward.

The earl of Worcester

Hath broke his staff, resign'd his stewardship.

Shakespeare, Richard II. ii. 2.

Shew us the hand of God

That hath dismiss'd us from our stewardship.

Ibid. iii. 3.

If they are not employed to such purposes, we are false to our trust and the stewardship committed to us, and shall be one day severely accountable to God for it.—Calamy, Sermons.

Stewish. adj. Suiting the brothel or stews.

Rhymed in rules of stewish rildrty.

Bishop Hall, Satires, l. 9.

Stibial. adj. [Lat. stibium = antimony.]

Antimonial.

The former depend upon a corrupt inhaled melancholy, and the latter upon an adust, stibial, or enigmatic sulphur.—Harrop.

Stibiarian. s. Violent man: (from the violent operation of antimony). Obsolete.

This stibiarian prometh audaciously upon the royal throne, and, after some sacrilegious tenderness a bitter pill of mercuries and cruelty; but, when the same was rejected because it was violent, then he presents his antimonial potion.—White.

Stibium. s. [Lat. stibium.] Antimony.

Germs nor stibium can prevail,

No art repair where age makes fall.

Collop, Poeta Revivida: 1630.

Stich. s. [Gr. stichē, stichos.] See extract.

In some ancient Greek New Testaments, at the close of the Epistles, there were some numeral letters added, signifying how many stiches were in the Epistle. What these stiches were the learned Salewus informs us. A stich in poetry was a verse, whatever kind or parts it may consist of: a verse is a measured line, whether it be iambick, heroic, or any other length. In rural affairs, a stich is an order or rank of trees; and a verso a furrow, or as much as the plowman turns up in one line. In military matters it is an order of ten men. This term is used in numbering the books of Scripture. Verses are applied to prose as well as metre, and were distinguished by great letters or arithmetical notes. The Jewish and Christian writers have computed these stiches in Scripture books, and have added them at the end of each book. Suleerus endeavours to show, by sundry instances, that a stich is not a line, but a sentence or part of it, either comma, or colon; and that it answers to a verse in our Bible.—Mather, Indication of the Holy Bible, p. 17: 1720.

Stichometry. s. [Fr. stichométrie.] Catalogue of books of Scripture, to which is added the number of the verses which each book contains.

Stick. s. [A.S. sticca.]

1. Piece of wood small and long.

Outions as they hang will shoot forth, and so will the herb opium, with which in the country they trim their houses, binding it to a lath or stick against a wall.—Bacon, Natural and Experimental History.

Some strike from clashing flints their fiery seed,

Some gather sticks the kindled flames to feed.

Dryden.

Berghem's wife would never allow that excellent artist to quit his occupation; and she contrived an odd expedient to detect his inconstancy. The artist worked in a room above her; ever and anon she roused him by thumping a long stick against the ceiling, while the obedient Berghem answered by stamping his foot, to satisfy Mrs. Berghem that he was not napping.—L. Diarist, Curiosities of Literature.

'We got out of bed backwards, I think, for we're as cross as two sticks.'—Dickens, Martin Chuzzlewit, ch. xxix.

2. Long and slender instrument.

3. Thrust; stab.

Stick. v. a. preterit stuck; past part. stuck.

1. Fasten on so as that it may adhere.

Two troops in fair array one moment shew'd;
The next, a field with fallen bodies strow'd;
The points of spears are stuck within the shield,
The steeds without their riders scour the field,
The knights unhorsed.

Dryden, Palamon and Arcite, iii. 505.

Would our ladies, instead of sticking on a patch against their country, sacrifice their necklaces against the common enemy, what deserves ought not to be made by their favour?—Addison.

O for some pedant reign,

Some gentle James to bless the land again;

To stick the doctor's chair unto the throne,

Give law to words, or war with words alone.

Pope, Dunciad, iv. 175.

2. Cause to stick up or stick out; set up in an awkward prominent manner.

'What,' repeated Mr. Peckinail, sticking up his hair and glancing at his bust by Spoke.—Dickens, Martin Chuzzlewit, ch. xxx.

Stick. v. n.

1. Adhere; unite itself by its tenacity or penetrating power.

I will cause the fish of thy rivers to stick unto thy scales.—Ezekiel, xlix. 4.

The green caterpillar breedeth in the inward parts of roses not blown, where the dew sticketh.—Bacon.

Though the sword be put into the sheath, we must not suffer it there to rust, or stick so fast as that we shall not be able to draw it readily, when need requires.—Sir W. Raleigh.

If on your fame our sex a blot has thrown,

'Twill ever stick, through malice of your own.

Young, Love of Fame, v. 553.

Thou art a handsome and a hopeful youth,
Nor will I have the least affront stick on thee,
If I with any danger can prevent it.

Manning, A New Way to pay Old Debts, l. 1.

2. Be inseparable; be united with anything: (generally in an ill sense).

Now does he feel

His secret wrongs sticking on his hands.

Shakespeare, Macbeth, v. 2.

He is often stigmatized with it, as a note of infamy, to stick by him whilst the world lasteth.—Bishop Butler.

In their quarrels they proceed to calling names, till they light upon one that is sure to stick.—Swift.

3. Rest upon the memory painfully.

The going away of that which had staid so long doth yet stick with me.—Bacon, Natural and Experimental History.

4. Stop; lose motion.

None of those, who stick at this impediment, have any enemies so bitter and implacable as they found theirs.—Kettelwell.

I shudder at the name!

My blood runs backward, and my faltering tongue
Sticks at the sound.

Smith, Phædra and Hippolytus.

5. Resist emission.

Wherefore could I not pronounce amen?

I had must need of blessing, and amen

stuck in my throat.—Shakespeare, Macbeth, ii. 2.

'Those Popish errors—' 'Ah, very true!' cried the Squire: 'that Pope sticks hard in my gizzard.' I could excuse her being a foreigner, and not having, I suppose, a shilling in her pocket—bless her husband's face!—but to be worshipping images in her room instead of going to the parish church, that will never do. But you think you could talk her out of the Pope, and into the family pew?'—Lord Lytton, My Novel, b. xi. ch. ii.

6. Be constant to; adhere with firmness: (sometimes with to, and sometimes with by).

The knave will stick by thee, I can assure thee that: he will not out, he is true bred.—Shakespeare, Henry IV. Part II. v. 3.

Some stick to you, and some to t' other side.

Dryden.

They could not but conclude that to be their interest, and being so convinced, pursue it and stick to it.—Archbishop Tillotson.

7. Be troublesome by adhering: (with by or to).

I am mislaid to trifle away my time, rather than let it stick by me.—Pope, Letters.

8. Remain; not be lost.

Proverbial sentences are formed into a verse whereby they stick upon the memory.—Watts.

9. Dwell upon; not forsake.

If the matter be knotty, the mind must stop and buckle to it, and stick upon it with labour and thought, and not leave it till it has mastered the difficulty.—Locke.

Every man, besides occasional affections, has beloved stickers which the mind will more closely stick to.—Id.

10. Cause difficulties or scruple.

This is the difficulty that sticks with the most reasonable of those who, from conscience, refuse to join with the Revolution.—Swift.

11. Scruple; hesitate.

It is a good point of running for a man to shape the answer he would have in his own words and propositions; for it makes the other party stick the less.—Bacon.

The church of Rome, under pretext of explication of Scripture, doth not stick to add and alter.—Id.

Rather than put a or misarranging to our own corrupt do not stick to arraign providence itself.—Sir R. L'Estrange.

Every one without hesitation supposes eternity, and sticks not to ascribe infinity to duration.—Locke.

That two bodies cannot be in the same place is a truth that nobody any more sticks at, than at this maxim, that it is impossible for the same thing to be, and not to be.—Id.

To stick at nothing for the publick interest is represented as the reduced part of the Venetian wisdom.—Addison, Travels in Italy.

Some stick not to say, that the parson and attorney forged a will.—Arbuthnot.

12. Be stopped; be unable to be proceed.

They never doubted the common; but heard all stuck in the lord's house, and desired the names of those who hindered the agreement between the lords and commons.—Lord Clarendon, History of the Grand Rebellion.

He threw: the trembling weapon pass'd
Through nine bull-hides, each under other placed
On his broad shield, and stuck within the last.

Dryden, Translation from Otello, Story of Cyprius.

13. Be embarrassed; be puzzled.

Where they stick, they are not to be farther puzzled by putting them upon finding it out themselves.—Locke.

They will stick long at part of a demonstration, for want of perceiving the connection of two ideas, that, to one more exercised, is as visible as any thing.—Id.

Should a little more explication can take in the connection of a few propositions; but if the chain be prolix, here they stick and are confounded.—Watts, On the Improvement of the Mind.

Stick out.

a. Be prominent with deformity.

His flesh is consumed away that it cannot be seen, and his bones that were not seen stick out.—Job, xxxiii. 21.

b. Refuse compliance.

Stick. v. a. [A.S. stician.]

1. Stab; pierce with a pointed instrument.

The Heron, when their old kindred fall sick, sticks them with a dagger.—Gros.

2. Fix upon a pointed body: (as, 'he stuck the fruit upon his knife.')

3. Fasten by transfixion.

Her death!

I'll stand betwixt: it first shall pierce my heart;
We will be stuck together on his dart.

Dryden, Tyrannick Love.

4. Set with something pointed.

A lofty pile they rear,
Of pitch-trees, caks, and pines, and unctuous fir:
The fabrick's front with cypress twigs they strew,
And stick the sides with boughs of baleful yew.

Id., Translation of the Aeneid, vi. 309.

Stick-lac. s. [two words.] See extract.

Lac is a resinous substance, the secretion of which appears to depend upon the puncture of a small insect (the Coccus lacinus) made for the purpose of depositing its ova upon the branches of several plants, especially the Ficus religiosa and indica, the Rhamnus jujuba, the Croton tiglium, and the Elaeagnus fruticosa, which grow in Assam, Siam, Peru, Borneo, and Malabar. The twig soon becomes encased with a reddish substance, which cures, and consists of the impregnated juice of the plant imbued with colouring matter derived from the insect. The twigs thus encased constitute the stick-lac of commerce. — Brande, Manual of Chemistry, p. 1510: 1849.

Stickiness. s. Attribute suggested by Sticky, adhesive quality; viscosity; glutinousness; tenacity.

Sticking. verbal abs. Act of that which, or one who, sticks; adherence.

The first contains a sticking fast to Christ, when the Christian profession is persecuted; and the second a rising from sin, as he rose to a new Christian life. — Hammond.

Sticking-place. s. Point of determination.

If we should fail.—We fail!
But screw your courage to the sticking-place,
And we'll not fail.

Shakespeare, Macbeth, l. 7.

Sticking-plaster. s. Court-plaster: (used adjectively in the extract, and applied ludicrously to a silhouette.)

In the front room upstairs where the dinner is laid out, there is a picture of Muffinbrough Castle, of the Earl of Muffinbrough, K.C. Lord Lieutenant of Middlesex; an engraving from an almanac, of St. Boniface College, Oxon., and a sticking-plaster portrait of Hugh when young, in a cap and gown. — Thackeray, Book of Snobs, ch. xiv.

Stickle. v. n. [from the practice of prize-fighters, who placed seconds with staves or sticks to interpose occasionally.]

1. Take part with one side or other.

Fortune, as she's wont, turn'd stickle,
And for the foe began to stickle.

Butler, Hudibras, l. 3, 515.

2. Contest; altercation; contend rather with obstinacy than vehemence.

Let them go to 't, and stickle,
Whether a conclave, or a conventicle, Cleveland.
Herald's stickle, who got who,
So many hundred years ago.

Butler, Hudibras, l. 3, 491.

3. Trim; play fast and loose; act a part between opposites.

When he was half of the Christians killed, and the rest in a fair way of being routed, he stickles betwixt the remainder of God's host and the race of fiends. — Dryden.

Stickle. v. a. Arbitrate.

Here Weaver, as a flood affecting sadly peace,
His place of speech resigns; and to the time refers
The hearing of the cause, to stickle all three sirs.

Dryden, Pulchritudo, song 21.

Stickleback. s. Small British fish of the genus Gasterosteus (pungitius, &c.); prickly-back; stankebleck; bunstickle: Jack bunstickle.

A little fish called a stickleback, without scales, hath his body furred with several prickles. — J. Walton, Complete Angler.

The rough-tailed three-spined stickleback is one of the smallest as well as one of the most common of our fishes, and is found both in the salt and in the fresh water; not only does almost every river, brook, and lake produce this well-known species, but it is also common all round the coast from the Land's End to the Orkneys. Cuvier and Valenciennes first noticed that three species of three-spined sticklebacks had been constantly included under the term 'Gasterosteus aculeatus' of Linnaeus; and the distinguishing characteristics being very obvious, all three species were shortly afterwards made known as inhabiting the waters of this country, and a figure of each given with a short memoir, in the Magazine of Natural History. The three-spined stickleback was first described by Belon, and figured by Rondeletius; and the history, habits, and peculiarities of the three species before referred to, have been constantly included in that of one only—the 'aculeatus' of authors. Willoughby and Pennant have figured the species now called Gasterosteus luteus, or the smooth-tailed stickleback, while Bloch and Mr. Donovan have given coloured representations of Gasterosteus trachurus. — Yarrell, History of British Fishes.

Stickler. s. One who stickles.

1. Sidesman to fencers; second to a duellist; one who stands to judge a combat; arbitrator.

Basilius came to part them, the stickler's authority being unable to persuade cholerick learners; and part them he did. — Sir P. Sidney.

Basilius, the judge, appointed sticklers and trumpets, whom the others should obey. — Id.

The dragon wing of night o'erspreads the earth,
And, stickler like, the armies separates.

Shakespeare, Troilus and Cressida, v. 9.

Our former chiefs, like sticklers of the war,
First fought 't' inflame the parties, then to poison:
The quarrel loved, but did the cause abhor;
And did not strike to hurt, but make a noise.

Dryden, Heroic Stanza on the Death of Oliver Cromwell.

2. Obstinate contender about anything.

Quercetanus, though the grand stickler for the 'true prin', has this concession of the irreproducibility of diamonds. — Boyle.

The Tory or high church clergy were the greatest sticklers against the exorbitant proceedings of king James II. — Id.

All place themselves in the list of the national church, though they are great sticklers for liberty of conscience. — Id.

3. Small officer who cut wood for the priory of Ederose within the king's parks of Clarendon.

Sticky. adj. Viscous; adhesive; glutinous. Herbs which had hitherto are those of strong smell, and with a sticky stalk. — Bacon, Natural and Experimental History.

Stiff. adj. [A.S. stif.]

1. Rigid; inflexible; resisting flexure; not flaccid; not limber; not easily flexible; not pliant.

They, rising on stiff pinions, tower
The mid serial sky. Milton, Paradise Lost, vii. 451.

First assist me to renew
Life in what lies in my view

Stiff and robl!

His resurrection rests with me and you.

Byron, The Deformed Transformed, l. 1.

If you are not stiff with your wounds, come to my room. — B. Disraeli, Coningsby, b. iv. ch. xv.

2. Not soft; not giving way; not fluid; not easily yielding to the touch.

Still less and less my boiling spirits flow;
And I grow stiff as cooling metals do.

Dryden, Indian Emperor.

Mingling with that oily liquor, they were wholly incorporate, and so grew more stiff and firm, unkind but one substance. — T. Burnet, Theory of the Earth.

3. Strong; not easily resisted.

On a stiff scale

The Theban swan extends his wings.

Sir J. Denham, Progress of Learning.

4. Hardy; stubborn; not easily subdued.

How stiff is my vile sense,
That I stand up, and have ingenious feeling
Of my huge sorrows! Better I were distract.

Shakespeare, King Lear, i. 6.

5. Obstinate; pertinacious.

We neither allow interest nor purpose the stiff definition of any unnecessary custom heretofore received. — Hooker, Ecclesiastical Polity.

Yield to others when there is cause; but it is a shame to stand stiff in a foolish argument. — Jeremy Taylor.

A war causes, the Cretans own their cause,
Stiff to defend their hospitable laws.

Dryden, Cymon and Iphigenia, 633.

6. Harsh; not written with ease; constrained.

Stiff, formal style.

Sir W. Davenant, Gondibert.

7. Formal; rigorous in certain ceremonies; not disengaged in behaviour; starched; affected.

The French are open, familiar, and talkative; the Italians stiff, ceremonious, and reserved. — Addison, Travels in Italy.

Stiff forms are bad, but let not worse intrude,
'Nor conquer art and nature to be rude.

Young, Love of Fame, v. 483.

8. Strongly maintained, or asserted with good evidence.

This is stiff news.

Shakespeare, Antony and Cleopatra, l. 2

Stiffen. v. a. [A.S. stifian.]

1. Make stiff; make inflexible; make unpliant.

He stiffened his neck, and hardened his heart
From turning unto the Lord God of Israel. — 2 Chronicles, xxvi. 13.

When the blast of war blown in our ears,
Stiffen the sinews, summon up the blood,
Disguise fair nature with hard-favour'd rage.

Shakespeare, Henry V, iii. 1.

Her eyes grow stiffen'd, and with sulphur burn.

Dryden, Translation of the Aeneid, vii. 624.

2. Make torpid.

Stiffen. v. n.

1. Grow stiff; grow rigid; become unpliant.

Fix'd in astonishment, I gaze upon thee,
Like one just blasted by a stroke from heaven,
Who pants for breath, and stiffens yet alive;
In dreadful looks, a monument of wrath.

Addison, Cato.

In the stall he will not stiffen,
But be winged as a Griffin,
Only flying with his feet;
And will not such a voyage be sweet?

Merrily, merrily, cover us round,
Shall our heavy black horses skin over the ground!
From the Alps to the Caucasus, ride we, or fly!
For we'll leave them behind in the glance of an eye.

Byron, The Deformed Transformed, l. 2.

2. Grow hard; be hardened.

The trampler soil, then stiffening by degrees,
Blunt from the bounded earth the bounding seas.

Dryden

3. Grow less susceptible of impression; grow obstinate.

Some souls we see

Grow hard and stiffen with adversity. Dryden

Stiffening. part. adj. Becoming, growing, stiff.

The poor, by them shrouded, naked be,
Veiled with no other covering but the sky;
Exposed to stiffening frosts and dreaching showers,
Which thicken'd air from her black bosom pours.

Sandys

Her stiffening grief,

Who saw her children slaughter'd all at once,
Was dull to mine. Dryden and Lee, Rhipis.

The sun was sinking—still I lay

Chain'd to the chair and stiffening steel,

I thought to wrangle there our clay,

And my dim eyes of death had need;

No hope arose of being freed.

Byron, Mazeppa, xviii.

Stiffhearted. adj. Obstinate; stubborn; continuacious.

They are impudent children, and stiffhearted. — Esauel, l. 4.

Stimish. adj. Somewhat stiff.

If the rules of the horse be stiffish, or a man's hand any thing rude, the belly's stiff needs soon frets. — Asham, Turcopiles, p. 139.

Stimy. adv. In a stiff manner.

1. Rigidly; inflexibly; stubbornly.

In matters divine, it is still maintained stiffly, that they have no stiffened force. — Hooker, Ecclesiastical Polity.

Then began I greatly to commend them that stood so stiffly for the name of the Lord. — 2 Esdras, ii. 47.

The Indian flag of itself multiplies from root to root; the plenty of the sap and the softness of the stalk making the bough, being overladen and not stiffly upheld, to weigh down. — Bacon.

Hold, hold my heart;
And you, my sinews, grow not instant old,
But bear me stiffly up! Shakespeare, Hamlet, l. 4.

Stiffnecked. adj. Stubborn; obstinate; continuacious.

An infinite charge to her majesty, to send over such an army as should tread down all that standeth before them on foot, and lay on the ground all the stiffnecked. — Spenser.

This stiffneck'd pride, nor art nor force can bend,
Nor high-born hopes to reason's lure descend.

Sir J. Denham, Of Prudence.

Stiffness. s. Attribute suggested by Stiff.

1. Rigidity; inflexibility; hardness; ineptitude to bend.

The stiffness and dryness of iron to melt, must be helped by moistening or opening it. — Bacon.

The willow bows and recovers, the oak is stubborn and inflexible; and the punishment of that stiffness is one branch of the allegory. — Sir R. L. Estlin.

2. Ineptitude to motion; torpidness.

The pillow of this frame grows weak,
As if the weight of many years oppress'd 'em;
My sinews slacken, and an icy stiffness
Benumbs my blood.

Sir J. Denham, The Sophy, v. 1.

3. Tension; not laxity.

To try new shrouds, one mounts into the wind,
And can below, their ease or stiffness note.
Drayton, Anna Mirabilis, cxviii.

4. Obstinacy; stubbornness; contumaciousness.

The impudence of obedience is to be plied by parents, before the stiffness of will runs on too fast.
—H. Wotton, On the Education of Children, p. 70.
The vice of old age have the stiffness of it too;
and as it is the stiffest time to learn in, so the unfitness of it to unlearn will be found much greater.
—South, Sermons.

Firmness or stiffness of the mind is not from adherence to truth, but submission to prejudice.
—Locke.

These hold their opinions with the greatest stiffness; being generally the most lively and firm in their tenets.
—Id.

5. Unplensing formality; constraint.

All this religion set easily upon him, without any of that stiffness and constraint, any of those forbidding appearances which disfigure the actions of the sincerely pious.
—Bishop, Th. Sharp.

6. Rigorism; harshness.

There fill yourself with these most joyous sights;
But speak no word to her of these sad plights,
Which her too constant stiffness hath constrain.
Spenser.

7. Manner of writing, not easy but harsh and constrained.

Rules and critical observations improve a good genius, where nature leadeth the way, provided he is not too scrupulous; for that will introduce a stiffness and affectation, which are utterly alien from all good writing.
—Fulton.

Stile, v. a. [Fr. étouffer; connected with stop, stuff, &c.]

1. Oppress or kill by closeness of air; suffocate.

Where have you been broiling?
Among the crowd? the abbey, where a finger
Could not be wedged in more; I am stifled
With the mere rankness of their joy.
Shakspeare, Henry VIII. iv. 1.

Prayer against his absolute decree
No more avails than breath against the wind!
Blown stifling back on him that breathes it forth.
Milton, Paradise Lost, xl. 311.

Stifled with kisses, a sweet death he dies.
Drayton.

I took my leave, being half stifled with the closeness of the room.—Swift, Account of Partridge's Bath.

2. Keep in; hinder from emission.

Whilst ladies became endared by reflecting or transmitting tales of that sort of rage more copiously than the rest, they stop and stifle in themselves the rage which they do not reflect or transmit.—Sir I. Newton, On Opticks.

3. Extinguish by hindering communication.

These notions, only used for storehouses, were dark and dull and, being filled with wood and cotton, and the like—such heavy merchandise as stiffen sound and stops the throat of echo—had an air of polyphonic dumbness about them which, added to their silence and desertion, made them very grim.
—Dickens, Martin Chuzzlewit, ch. ix.

4. Extinguish, or suppress, by artful and gentle means.

Every reasonable man will pay a tax with cheerfulness for stifling a civil war in its birth.—Addison, Freeholder.

5. Suppress; conceal.

If I prove thy fortune, Polydore, to conquer,
Trust me, and let me know thy love's success,
That I may ever after stifle mine.
Otway, Orphan, l. 1.

6. Suppress artfully or fraudulently.

These conclusions have been acknowledged by the disputers themselves, till with labour and study they had stifled their first convictions.
Rogers.

On these two pillars will our faith for ever stand, firm and unmovable, against all attempts; whether of vain philosophy, to better the doctrine, or of vainer criticism, to corrupt or stifle the evidence.
—Bishop Waterland.

You revel in the art of stifling and curbing your resentment.—Swift.

Stile, s. [German, stiefel—boot.] First joint above a horse's thigh next the buttock.

The stifle is properly the articulation of the knee, and contains the kneecap.—Rees, Cyclopædia.

Stilement, s. Something that might be suppressed or concealed.

Uttering ought else but idle stilements,
Tunes without sense, words without sense.
Brace, Lingua, l. 1: 1667.

Stifling, part. adj. Causing a feeling of suffocation.

That part of the air that we draw out, left the more room for the stifling steams of the coals to be received into it.—Boyle.

Stigma, s. [Lat.; Gr. στῖγμα, -aroc.]

1. Brand; mark with a hot iron.

2. Mark of infamy.

All such slanders were from thence called Bartemias, simply in a perpetual stigma of that butchery.—Sir G. Buck, History of Richard III. p. 63: 1640.

Happy is it for him, that the blackest stigma that can be fastened upon him, is that his robes were whiter than his brethren's.—Bishop Hall, Remains, preface.

3. In Biology. Mark, or point in general: (common in the plural form, stigmata).a. In Anatomy. Apex of the style.

The filaments, antheric, and stigmata of flowers, bear no more resemblance to the young plant, or even to the seed, which is formed by their intervention, than a ribbed or plane disc to a table or chair. What then are the filaments, anthers, and stigmata of plants, but instruments so called?—Paley, Natural Theology, ch. iv.

The surface of all parts of plants (except the spanglides and some stigmata to be described hereafter) is covered, at least when young, with a thin skin, which may easily be detached, especially from the leaves, and most readily after these organs have been allowed to unweave for a few days in water.—Hoodon, Principles of Descriptive and Physiological Botany, pt. I. vol. i. § 23.

The stigma in the upper extremity of the style, without epidermis; in consequence of which it has almost uniformly either a humid or equidose surface. In the first case it is so in consequence of the fluids of the style being allowed to flow up through the intercellular passage of the tissue, there being no cuticle to repress and conceal them; in the latter case, the papillae are really the rounded sides of vesicles of cellular tissue. When perfectly simple, it is usually notched on one side, the notch corresponding with the side from which the filaments arise. See the stigma of Rosa, Prunus P., and others. If it belongs to a single carpel, it is her unprovided, or its divisions, if any, are placed by side, as in Sparganium, Euphorbia w., Crocus, &c.; but if it is formed by the union of the stigmata of several carpels, its lobes are either opposite each other, as in Milium, or placed in a wheel as in Geranium. Such being the case, it is a general law that an apparently simple ovary, to which more than two opposite stigmata belong, is really of a compound nature; but when the stigma of a simple carpel is two lobed, the lobes are often placed exactly opposite each other, as in composites, crasses, &c., and then the apparent number of the stigmata is not the real number.—Lindley, Introduction to Botany, p. 367.

b. In Entomology. Breathing pore.

We now come to a class of Artificians in which the highest problem of animal mechanism is solved, and the entire body and its appendages can be lifted from the ground and be propelled through the air. The species which enjoy this swiftest mode of traversing space breathe the air directly; but their organs of respiration are peculiarly modified in relation to their powers of locomotion: they consist of innumerable tracheæ commencing from lateral pores called stigmata, or by and tubes, which are ramified through and over every tissue and organ of the body.—Owen, Lectures on Comparative Anatomy, Insecta, lect. xvi.

Stigmatic, adj. Branded, or marked, especially in token of infamy or disgrace: (in the extract with the, and used as a substantive).

The crooked, the halt, the stigmatic.—Drayton, Epistles, King John to Matilda.

Stiletto, s.

1. Notorious lewd fellow, who has been burnt with a hot iron; or bears other marks about him, as a token of his punishment.

2. One on whom nature has set a mark of deformity.

Foul stigmatic, that's more than thou canst tell.
Shakspeare, Henry VI. Part II. v. 1.
Thou art neither like thy sire nor than;
But like a foul misshapen stigmatic,
Mark'd by the destinies to be avoided.
Id., Henry VI. Part III. ii. 2.

Stigmatical, adj. Stigmatic.

He is deformed, crooked, old and weary,
Vicious, ingrateful, foolish, blunt, unkind,
Stigmatical in making, worse in mind.
Shakspeare, Comedy of Errors, w. 2.

What could that apish and stigmatical friar have done either more or worse?—Bishop Hall, Pharmasian and Christianity.

Stigmatically, adv. In the way of a stigma; with a mark of infamy or deformity.

If you spy any man that hath a look Stigmatically drawn, like to a fury.

Wonder of a Kingdom: 1636.

Stigmatize, v. a. [Fr. stigmatiser.] Mark with a brand; disgrace with a note of reproach.

They had more used have their cheeks stigmatized with a hot iron, none of our Jacobins, instead of painting:—Barton, Autobiography of Melancthon, p. 476.
But my clothes

To be defaced and stigmatized so fully!
I take it as a customary doom me,
Above the wisdom of our laws to right.

B. Jonson, Magnetical Law.

Men of learning who take to business, discharge it with greater honesty than men of the world; because the former in reading have been used to find virtue extolled and vice stigmatized, while the latter have seen vice triumphant and virtue discountenanced. Addison.

Some enthusiasts affect to stigmatize the finest and most elegant authors both ancient and modern, as dangerous to religion.—Id.

The privileges of justice should be ascertained, and whoever violates them stigmatized by public censure.—Swift.

The villain, then, hath done you the poor justice which remained in his power, said Tremilian: 'and I beheld before me the wife of Varney!' 'The wife of Varney!' she replied, with all the emphasis of scorn; 'with what base name, sir, does your boldness stigmatize the—the—the—' She hesitated, dropped her tone of scorn, looked down, and was confused and silent, for she reflected what fatal consequences might attend her completing the sentence with 'the Countess of Leicester,' which were the words that had naturally suggested themselves. Sir W. Scott, Kenilworth, ch. xxvii.

On this occasion his [Bishop Burnett's] fortitude seems to have failed him. To be stigmatized by the popular branch of the legislature as a teacher of doctrines so seditious that they disgusted even Tories, to be joined in one sentence of condemnation with the editor of Filmer, was too much. —Macaulay, History of England, ch. xix.

Stile, s. [A.S. stigel, from the root of stigan—ascend, mount.] Set of steps to pass from one enclosure to another.

There comes my master and another gentleman from Brace, over the stile this way. —Shakspeare, Merry Wives of Windsor, iii. 1.

If they draw several ways, they be ready to hang themselves upon every gate or stile they come at.—Sir H. B. Lister.

The little strutting pile,

You see just by the church-yard stile. Swift.

Stiletto, s. [Italian; Fr. stilet; Lat. stilus.]

1. Small dagger, of which the blade is not edged but round, with a sharp point.

When a senator should be torn in pieces, he hired one who, entering into the senate-house, should assault him as an enemy to the state; and, stabbing him with stiletta, leave him to be torn by others.—Hobbes, I. Apology.

2. Beard: (in the Elizabethan period, often pointed like a stiletto).

The very he that

Wears a stiletto on his chin.

Forl, The Pines, m. 1. (Sarcas by H. and W.)

Used adjectively.

The stiletto beard,
O, it makes me afraid,
It is so sharp beneath;
For he that doth place
A dagger in his face,

What must he wear in his sheath?

Academy of Compliments. (Sarcas by H. and W.)

Stiletto, v. a. Stub.

This king was likewise stifled by a royal votary which had been enclimated and conjured for the purpose.—Bacon, Charge against William Talbot. (Rich.)

Still, s. Vessel for distillation; alembic.

Nature's confederator, the bee,
Whose sockets are moist alembic.

The still of his refining mould

Melting the garden into gold. Cleveland.

In distilling hot spirits, if the head of the still be taken off, the vapour which ascends out of the still will take fire at the flame of a candle, and the flame will run along the vapour from the candle to the still. See I. Newton, On Opticks.

This fragrant spirit is obtained from all plants in the least aromatick, by a cold still, with a heat not exceeding that of summer.—Arbuthnot, On the Nature and Choice of Aliments.

Still [is] a chemical apparatus for vaporizing liquids by heat in one part, called the encaustic, and condensing the vapours into liquids in another part, called the refrigerator, the general purpose of both combined being to separate the more volatile fluid particles from the less volatile. In its simplest form it consists of a retort and a receiver, or of a pear-shaped and a capital, furnished with a slanting tube for conducting away the condensed vapour.

in drops; whence the term still, from the Latin verb stillare, to drop.—Ure, Dictionary of Arts, Manufactures, and Mines.

still v. a. [Lat. stilla = 1 drop; stilla = a drop.] Distill; extract or operate upon by distillation.

Then starts she suddenly into a throng
Of short thick sobe, whose thundering valleys float,
And roll themselves over her lubrick throat
In panting murmurs, still'd out of her breast,
That ever bullding spring. Crashaw, Musick's Duel.

still v. n. [Lat. stilla.] Drop; fall in drops. Rare.

His sceptre 'gainst the ground he threw,
And tears still'd from him which moved all the crew. Chapman.

still s. [Pstige.] Ascent: (perhaps pronounced stille).

On craggy rocks, or steepy stills, we see None runs more swift nor easier than he.
W. Browne, Britannia's Progress, b. I. song iv.
(Nares by H. and W.)

still v. a. [A.S. stillan.]

1. Silence; make silent.

Is this the scourge of France?
Is this the Talbot so much fear'd above,
That with his name the mothers still their babes?
Shakespeare, Henry V. Part I. ii. 3.
The third fair morn now blown upon the main,
Then gliss smooth by all the liquid plain,
The winds were hush'd, the billows scarcely cur'd,
And a dead silence still'd the wat'ry world. Pope.

2. Quiet; appease.

In all refrains of anger, it is the best remedy
To make a man's self believe, that the opportunity Of revenge is not yet come; but that he foresees a time for it, and so to still himself in the mean time, and reserve it.—Bacon, Essays, Of Anger.
Here comes a man of counsel, whose advice
Hath often still'd my lawless discontent. Shakespeare, Measure for Measure, iv. 1.

3. Make motionless.

He lay a full way over the water, had power to still and compose it, as well as to move and disturb it.—Woodward.

still adj. [A.S. stille.]

1. Silent; uttering no noise: (it is well observed by Junius, that st is the sound commanding silence).

We do not see, that often just and harsh:
The old but true still swine eat all the draught.
Shakespeare, Twelfth Night, iv. 2.
Your wife's betray, with her modest eyes,
And still conclusion, shall acquire no honour
By using upon.

Shakespeare, Antony and Cleopatra, iv. 13.
The storm was laid, the winds retired Obedient to thy will;
Then, that word at thy command,
At thy command was still. Addison, Ode.

2. Quiet; calm.

When he spied
Thus in still waves of deep delight to wade, Fiercely approaching to him, hardly cry'd. Spenser.

From hence my lines and I depart,
I long soft still walks, they to my heart;
To the nurse they to the child of art. Donne.
Religious pleasure moves gently, and therefore easily. It does not affect by rapture, but is like the pleasure of health, which is still and sober.
—South, Sermons.

Hope quickens all the still parts of life, and keeps the mind awake in her moments and indolent hours. Addison.

Silvius Italicus has represented it as a very gentle and still river, in the beautiful description he has given of it.—Id.

How all things listen, while thy muse complain'd!
Such silence waits on Philomela's strains
In some still grove, when the whist'ring breeze
Pants on the leaves, and dies upon the trees.
Pope, Pastoral, Winter.

3. Motionless.

Grevin sat still, but with no still pensiveness.—Sir P. Sidney.

Though the body really moves, yet not changing perceptible substance with other bodies, as fast as the idea of our mind follow in train, the thing seems to stand still, as we find in the hands of clocks.—Locke.

Think, in this state of ignorance, we short-sighted creatures might not mistake true felicity, we are endowed with a power to suspend any particular desire. This is standing still, where we are not sufficiently assured.—Id.

But hark! he strikes the golden lyre,
And now the tortured ghosia respires,
But shadowy forms advance,
Thy stone, O Sisyphus, stands still;
Jason robs upon his wheel.
Pope, Ode on St. Cecilia's Day.

4. Continual; constant.

But that still use of grief makes wild grief tame,
My tongue should to thy ears not name my boys,
Till that my nails were anchor'd in thine eyes. Shakespeare, Richard III. iv. 4.

I, of those, will wrest an alphabet,
And by still practice learn to know the meaning.
Id., Titus Andronicus, iii. 2.

5. Gentle; not loud.

After the earthquake a fire, but the Lord was not in the fire; and after the fire a still small voice.—
1 Kings, xix. 12.

Me softer airs befit, and softer strings
Of lute or viol still, more apt for mournful things.
Milton, Ode on the Passion, 27.

Cash'd with a slower still. Id., Il Penseroso, 127.

The gentle blasts of western winds shall move
The trembling leaves, and through their close bosoms breathe. Curcio, Poema, p. 70.

Still music, whilst we rest ourselves beneath
Their dawning shade. Curcio, Poema, p. 70.
A still small voice speaks unto me,
Thou art so full of misery,
Were it not better not to live?
Then in the still small voice I said;
Let me not rest in endless shade
What is so wonderfully made. Tennyson, The Two Voices.

still s. Calm; silence; quiet.

He had never any jealousy with his father, which might have been the cause of his fall.—Bacon, History of the Reign of Henry VII.

still adv.

1. To this time; now.

It hath been universally reported, and is still received, that extreme opinions of great multitudes have so carried the air, that heads lying over have fallen down.—Bacon.

Thou, O nation of immortal fame!
Here dying to the shore hast left thy name;
Cajeta still the place is call'd from thee,
The nurse of great, Eneas' infancy. Dryden, Translation of the Æneid, vi. 1.

2. Nevertheless; notwithstanding.

The desire of fame betrays the ambitious man into indecencies that lessen his reputation; he is still afraid lest any of his away in private.—Addison.

3. In an increasing degree.

As God sometimes addresses himself in this manner to the hearts of men; so, if the heart will receive it, the soul will be more and more powerfully. South, Sermons.

The moral perfection of the Deity, the more attentively we consider, the more perfectly still shall we know them. Bishop of Atherbury.

4. Always; ever; continually.

Unless God from him did by vision still show them what to do, they did nothing.—Hooker, Ecclesiastical Polity.

When the disease of talking still once possesseth,
he can never hold his peace.—Id., Id.
He told them, that if their king were still absent from them, they would at length cry out again.—Sir J. Davies, Discourse on the State of Ireland.

Chymists would be rich, if they could still do in great quantities, what they have sometimes done in little. Boyle.

Trade begets trade, and people go much where many people are already gone; so men run still to crowd in the streets, though only to see. Sir W. Temple.

The fewer still you name, you wound the more;
Good is but one, but Harpax is a score.
Pope, Imitations of Horace, b. ii. sat. i.

5. After that.

In the primitive church, such as by fear being compelled to sacrifice to strange gods, after repentance, and kept still the office of preaching the gospel.—
Archbishop Whitgift.

6. In continuance.

I with my hand at midnight held your head;
And, like the watchful minutes to the hour,
Still and anon cleav'd up the heavy time,
Saying, What lack you? Shakespeare, King John, iv. 1.

still-life s. In Painting. Things that have only vegetable life.

Even that, which according to a term of art we commonly call still-life, must have its superiority and just preference in a talent of its own species.
—Lord Shaftesbury.

stillititious adj. [Lat. stillititius.] Falling in drops; drawn by a still.

stillatory s.

1. Alembic; vessel in which distillation is performed.

In all stillatories the vapour is turned back upon itself, by the encounter of the sides of the stillatory.
—Bacon.

2. Room in which stills are placed; laboratory; still-room.

All offices that require heat, as kitchens, stilla-ries, stores, should be meridional.—Sir H. Wotton, Elements of Architecture.

These are nature's stillatories, in whose caverns the ascending vapours are engaged to that universal vapour, that good fresh water.—Dr. H. More, Autobiographical Memoirs.

stillborn adj. Born lifeless; dead in the birth.

Grant that our hopes, yet likely of fair birth,
Should be stillborn; and that we now present
The utmost man of expectation;
I think we are a body strong enough,
Even as we are, to equal with the king. Shakespeare, Henry V. Part II. i. 3.

Many casualties were but matters of course, as whether a child were abortive or stillborn.—Canan, Observations on the Bills of Mortality.

The stillborn sounds upon the pale lung,
And dead imperfect on the full face languish.
Dryden, The Duke and the Duchess, 300.

I know a trick to make you thrive;
O, 'tis a quaint device!
Your stillborn poems shall revive,
And soon to wrap up spirit. Swift.

stillier s. One who, that which, stills; (in the extract, as the second element in a compound).

Empedocles got the title of wind-stillier.—Maric Casabona, Of Gravity and Incoherency in Things, natural, civil, and divine, p. 100, 1004.

stillicide s. [Lat. stillidium; cado = 1 fall.] Succession of drops. Rare.

The stillicides of water, if there be water enough to follow, will draw themselves into a small thread;
because they will not discontinue.—Bacon, Natural and Experimental History.

stillicious adj. Falling in drops. Rare.

Crystal is found sometimes in rocks, and in some places not unlike the stirrions or stillicides dependencies of ice.—Sir T. Browne.

stillness s. Attribute suggested by Still.

1. Calm; quiet; silence; freedom from noise.

He of the moonlight sleeps upon this bank!
Here will we sit, and let the sounds of music
Creep in our ears; soft stillness and the night Become the touches of sweet harmony. Shakespeare, As You Like It, v. 1.

When black clouds draw down the lab'ring skies,
Ere yet abroad the winnowed thunder thins,
An horrid stillness first invades the ear;
And in that silence we the tempest hear. Dryden, Aeneas Redux, 5.

Virgil, to heighten the horror of Æneas' passing by this coast, has prepared the reader by Cajeta's funeral and the stillness of the night.—Id., Translation of the Æneid, preface.

If a house be on fire, those at next door may escape, by the stillness of the weather.—Swift.

2. Habitual silence; taciturnity.

The gravity and stillness of your youth
The world hath noted. Shakespeare, Othello, ii. 3.

stillroom s. Room for distilling; a common name in old English housekeeping for the apartment where the distillation of the several liquors from carraways, anise, roses, and similar simples, was carried on; when now used, it means the housekeeper's room, or the apartment for confectionery: (used adjectively, as 'a stillroom woman').

stillstand s. Absence of motion.

The tide, swell'd up into his height,
Then makes a stillstand, running neither way.
Shakespeare, Henry IV. Part II. ii. 3.

stilly adj. Still. Rhetorical.

On in the stilly night,
Ere shadow's reign has bound me,
Fond memory brings the light
Of other days around me. T. Moore, Irish Melodies.

stilly adv. In a still manner.

1. Silently; not loudly; gently.

From ramp to camp, through the foul womb of
night,
The hum of either army stilly swells.
Shakespeare, Henry V. iv. chorus.

2. Calmly; not tumultuously.

Thus, mindless of what idle men will say,
He takes his own, and stilly goes his way.
Dr. H. More, Philosophical Poems, p. 306, 1657.

stilt v. a. Raise on stilts; make higher by stilts.

This antick prelude of grotesque events,
Where dwarfs are often stilted.
Tennyson, Night Thoughts, night vi.

Stilt. s. In Ornithology. Bird so called from the length of its legs; black-winged stilt (Himantopus melanopterus).

Sir Robert Sibbald first recorded the black-winged stilt as a visitor to these islands from two specimens that were killed in Scotland; and Mr. Don, in his account of the native plants and the animals of Scotland, has noticed two others, also killed in Scotland.—Yarrell, History of British Birds.

Stilt. s. pl. [Dutch, stelt; German, stelze.] Supports on which boys raise themselves when they walk.

Some could not be content to walk upon the battlements, but they must put themselves upon stilts.—Hawth, English Travels.

The heron and such like fowl that live of fishes walk on long stilts like the people in the marshes.—Dr. H. More, Antidote against Atheism.

Sundry inhabitants of the water make more or less prolonged excursions on land. Eels migrate at night from one pool to another. There are fish with specially-modified stilts, and the rays serving as stilts, which, when the rivers they inhabit are partially dried-up, travel in search of better quarters. And while some kinds of crabs do not make land-excursions beyond high-water mark, other kinds pursue lives almost wholly terrestrial.—Herbert Spencer, Inductions of Biology, § 100.

Used metaphorically.

Men must not walk upon stilts.—Sir E. R. L'Estrange.

Stimulant. adj. [Lat. stimulus, -antis, pres. part. of stimulo - I incite with a stimulus, i. e. goad, sting.] Acting as a stimulus.

The solution of copper in the nitrous acid is the most acrid and stimulant of anything with which we are acquainted.—Falcover.

Stimulant. s. That which acts as a stimulus. Stimulants produce pain, heat, redness.—Chemists.

After the peroration, a plentiful allowance of brandy was served out to the audience, and when the brandy had been swallowed, a bishop pronounced a benediction. Thus duly prepared by physical and moral stimulants, thearrison, consisting of about fourteen thousand infantry, was drawn up in the vast meadow which lay on the Clare bank of the Shannon.—Marsden, History of England, ch. xvii.

Stimulate. v. n. Act as a stimulus; excite. Extreme cold stimulates, producing first a rigor, and then a glowing heat: those things which stimulate in the extreme excite pain.—Arbuthnot, On Diet.

Stimulate. v. a. Excite to action; apply a stimulus.

With this view [Louis XIV.] bribed and stimulated both parties in turn, pensioned at once the members of the crown and the chiefs of the opposition, encouraged the court to withstand the sedulous encroachments of the Parliament, and conveyed to the Parliament intimations of the arbitrary designs of the court.—Macaulay, History of England, ch. ii.

Stimulation. s. [Lat. stimulatio, -onis.] Stimulus.

The presidential stimulations and excitations of the conscience.—Bishop Ward, Sermon, January 30, 1875.

Some persons, from the secret stimulations of vanity or envy, despise a valuable book, and throw contempt upon it by wholesale.—Watts, Improvement of the Mind.

Whether certain muscular contractions are produced by the stimulation of an insect's optic nerve, or by the stimulation of a nerve of touch supplying one of its legs, matters not in so far as the psychological meaning of the phenomenon is concerned.—Herbert Spencer, Principles of Psychology, § 185.

Stimulate. adj. Having a tendency to stimulate.

Uphilas, as a true missionary of the Prince of Peace, aspired not merely to convert his disciples to Christianity, but to powerful habits. In his translation of the scriptures he left out the Book of Kings, as too congenial and too stimulative to their warlike propensities.—Milman, History of Latin Christianity, b. iii. ch. ii.

Stimulus. s. Excitement; exciting cause. Pain, anguish, pulsation, and irregular action, are things purely vital. They are the sensibilities and functions of the organ excited, and hurried, and hurried by the present stimulus of inflammation.—Dr. P. M. Latham, Lecture on Subjects connected with Clinical Medicine, comprising Diseases of the Heart.

Sting. s. [A.S.]

1. Poisonous (sometimes also puncturing) organ of animals, as in the bee, wasp, and sea-nettle, and of vegetables, as the nettle.

Reptiles have venomous teeth, which are mistaken for their sting.—Bacon, Natural and Experimental History.

His rapier was a hornet's sting, it was a very dangerous thing. For if it chanced to harm the king, it would be long in healing.—Dragon, Nymphidia.

2. Anything that gives pain.

The Jews receiving this book originally with much sting in it, shows that the authority was high.—Forbes.

3. Point of an epigram.

It is not the jerk or sting of an epigram, nor the seeming contradiction of a poor antithesis.—Dryden.

Sting. v. n. [A.S. stingan, stynqan.]

1. Pierce, goad, venom, or poison, with a sting.

The snake, rolled in a flowery bank, With shining checkered slouch, dith sting a child, That for its beauty thinks it excellent.—Shakespeare, Henry VI, Part II, iii. 1.

2. Cause acute pain: (as that of a sting).

His own kindness, That stripped her from his benediction, turned her To foreign casualties, gave her dear rights To his degenerated daughters, these things sting His mind so venomously, that burning shame Detains him from Cordelia.—Shakespeare, King Lear, iv. 3.

No more I wave To prove the hero—slander stings the brave.—Pope.

Sting. v. n. Use a sting; practise stinging.

That snake and viper sting and transmit their mischief by the tail is not easily to be justified, the poison lying about the teeth, and communicated by the bite.—Sir T. Browne, Vulgar Errors.

Stinger. s. One who, that which, stings.

Professor E. Forbes states that only a small minority of the medium of our seas are stingers, and amongst these the yamca capillata is a formidable one, and the terror of tender-skinned bathers.—Quoy, Lectures on Comparative Anatomy, lect. ix.

As the second element of a compound, in horse-stinger.

Stingfish. s. Native fish of the genus Trachinus (viper); weever; otter-pike.

Whether the supposed venomous quality of the sharp spines is justly founded, is difficult to determine; but it appears to be a fact that the wounds inflicted by these offensive weapons usually exhibit symptoms of great inflammation and pain, and which has given rise to the vulgar name of stingfish. It is caught sometimes in the shoynets or seines about Triguemouth and Torrevosa, rarely exceeding five or six inches in length.—Montagu.

Stinginess. s. Atrilute suggested by Stingy; closeness in matters of expenditure; uncharity in money matters; avarice; covetousness; niggardliness.

Another sort... out of stinginess, or some other folly, will apply themselves only to quacks and mountebanks.—Goodman, Winter Evening Conference, pt. iii.

The squire and his son, Frank, were large-hearted, generous creatures in the matter of money, as in all things less skimpily dealt out. And seeing that Leonard Fairfield would offer no plaster to Randal Leslie, they made awards for his stinginess by their own prodigality.—Lord Lytton, My Novel, b. iii. ch. xv.

Stinging. part. adj. Pungent as a sting.

When Rutlia hounds at you her fiercest aunt, or Ruspina expects you to cherish and fuddle her viper sister, whom she has propitiously taken into her bosom, to try stinging conclusions upon your constancy, they must not complain if the house be rather thin of suitors.—Lamb, Essays of Elia, Popular Fallacies, Love me and Love my Dog.

Stingless. adj. Having no sting.

To tread under foot the head of their lustre, as of a stingless serpent.—Martin, Marriage of Friends, Act. ii. l. 1560.

What lurid can there be in a stingless snake?—Bishop Hall, Bala of Gilead.

This merry jest you must excuse, You are but a stingless nettle.

Bishop Percy, Reliques of Ancient Poetry, iii. 15.

He lures this viper when he thinks it stingless.—Dr. H. More, Decay of Christian Piety.

Stingo. s. [?] Strong ale: (according to Johnson a cant word).

Returning with a large quart of mighty ale, that might compare with stingo, for it would cut a feather, they tossed the raminikin lovingly one to another.—Compendium on Chaucer, p. 3: 1065.

Shall I not a cup of old stingo at your elbow?—Addison, Drummer.

Stingy. adj. [? N.Fr. chinche, chice; see Chinche and Chittyface.] Covetous; niggardly; avaricious.

A stingy narrow-hearted fellow that had a deal of choice fruit, had not the heart to touch it till it began to be rotten.—Sir R. L'Estrange.
God can easily accomplish whatsoever he promises or threatens; he can be straitened in nothing, nor need anything, having all things in himself, and consequently of that, it is impossible to en relieve him as a narrow-hearted, stingy being, that can envy or malign his creatures; but contrariwise, he must be unspeakably good, and take delight in nothing more than in communicating of his own fulness to them.—Goodman, Winter Evening Conference, pt. iii.

He relates it only by parcels, and won't give us the whole; which forces me to speak his friends to engage him to lay aside that stingy humour, and gratify the publick at once.—Arbuthnot, History of John Bull.

'A stingy old dog he is,' said Jonas.—Dickens, Martin Chuzzlewit, ch. xxiv.

Stink. v. n. pret. stunk, stank; the latter somewhat archaic. [A.S. stincan.]

1. Emit an offensive smell: (common of putrefaction).

Chloris, this costly way to stink give o'er, 'Tis throwing sweet into a common shore; Not all Arabia would succumb to; Thou smell'st not of thy sweets, they stink of thee.—Gravell.

2. Figuratively. Have a bad reputation; be in bad odour.

When the children of Ammon saw that they stank before David, the children of Ammon sent and hired Syrians.—2 Samuel, x. 6.

Stink. s. [A.S. stinc.] Stinking smell.

These stinks which the nostrils straight abhor are not the most pernicious, but such airs as have some similitude with man's body, and so betray the spirits.—Bacon, Natural and Experimental History.
They share a sin, and such proportions fall, That like a stink, 'tis nothing to them all. Pope.
By what criterion do ye eat, d'ye think, If this is prized for sweetness, that for stink?

Id. Imitations of Horace, b. ii. sat. ii.

Stinkard. s. Polcat.

You perpetual stinkard, go; talk to tapsters and outlers, you slave.—B. Jonson, Portator.

Stinker. s. That which stinks; Stinkpot. (For example see under Stink pot.)

Stinking. part. adj. Emitting a stink.

John, it will be stinking law for his breath.—Shakespeare, Henry VI, Part II, iv. 7.

What a foul thou art to leave thy mother for a nasty stinking post.—Sir R. L'Estrange.

Stinkpot. s. Pot, or jar, of stinking materials: (in the first extract it applies to disinfectants; in the second, to the common chamber-pot; in the third, where its application is most specific, to an offensive implement in naval warfare).

The air may be purified... by burning of stinkpots or stinkers in contagious lanes.—Harvey, Discourse on Consumption.

Mrs. Wrenzel, enraged to find herself in such a pickle... arose in her shift, and with the heel of her shoe, which she found by the bedside belaboured the captain's bald pate till he roared 'Murder.' 'I'll teach you to empty your stinkpots on me,' cried she, 'you pitiful hop-o'-my-knobs excrement.'—Emmett, Roderick Random, ch. xii.

Stinkpot [is] an earthen jar, or shell, charged with powder grenades and other materials of an offensive and suffocating smell. It is sometimes used by privateers to annoy an enemy whom they design to board; for which purpose it is furnished with a lighted fuse, at the opening or touch-hole.—Falcover, Nautical Dictionary. (Burney.)

Stinkstone. s. Variety of limestone. See extract.

Among the inferior limestones, we may enumerate many varieties, such as common marble; bituminous limestone, abundant upon the Avon, near Bristol, and known under the name of swine-stone or stinkstone, from the peculiar smell which it affords when rubbed.—Brande, Manual of Chemistry, p. 656: 1848.

Stinkweed. s. In Botany and Pharmacy. Herb, akin to the Goosefoots, used as a vermifuge, anthelmintic, or remedy for intestinal worms; Chenopodium anthelminticum, and perhaps also C. olidum.

A native of the United States of America, where it is known by the names of wormseed, Jerusalem oak and stinkweed.—Pereira, Elements of Materia Medica and Therapeutics, p. 1300: 1850.

Stint. v. a. [A.S. stintan = stop.] Limit; check.

Then hopeless, heartless, can the cunning thief Persuade us else, to stint all further grief.

Spenser, Faerie Queen, i. 9. 22.
The reason hereof is the end which he hath proposed, and the law whereby his wisdom hath stinted the efforts of his power in such sort, that it doth not work infinitely, but correspondently unto that and for which it worketh.—Hooker, Ecclesiastical Polity.

Nature wisely stints our appetite,
And craves no more than undisturbed delight.

Dryden.

I shall not go about to extenuate the latitude of the curse upon the earth, or stint it only to the production of weeds, but give it its full scope in an universal diminution of the fruitfulness of the earth.—Woodward.

A supposed heathen deity might be so poor in his attributes, so stinted in his knowledge, that a pagan might hope to conceal his perjury from his notice.—Adams.

There are few countries which, if well cultivated, would not support double their inhabitants, and yet fewer where one third are not extremely stinted in necessities.—Swift.

She stints them in their meals, and is very scrupulous in what they eat and drink, and tells them how many fine shapes she has seen spoiled in her time for want of such care.—Law.

Nor was [Mr. Finch] stinted in his draughts of wine; but on the contrary, renouncing Mr. Pecksniff's speech, attacked the bottle with such vigour, that every time he filled his glass anew, Mrs. Chisely, despite her amiable resolves, could not repress a fixed and stony glare, as if her eyes had rested on a ghost.—Dickens, Martin Chuzzlewit, ch. v.

It is observed by the admirable Charron, that 'judgment and wisdom is not only the best, but the happiest portion God Almighty hath distributed amongst men; for though this distribution be made with a very uneven hand, yet nobody thinks himself stinted or ill-drawn with, but that hath never so little is contented in this respect.'—Lord Lytton, My Novel, b. x. initial chapter.

Stint. v. n. Cense; leave off; stop; stay.

The pretty wench left crying, and said Ay: . . .
And, pretty fool, it stinted, and said, Ay: . . .
Shakespeare, Romeo and Juliet, l. 3.

Older form of spelling, stent.

Oh would she tell
Her wretchedness, and cursing never stent
To sob and sigh.

Backville, Mirror for Magistrates, induction.

Stint. s.

1. Limit; bound; restraint.

We cannot come at the truth to some pause: for if every thing were to be desired for some end without any stint, there could be no certain end proposed unto our actions, we should go on as we know not whither.—Hooker, Ecclesiastical Polity.

The exterior of mourning, a decent funeral, and black habits, are the usual stints of common husbands.—Dryden.

2. Proportion; quantity assigned. Obsolete.

Touching the stint or measure thereof, rites and ceremonies, and other external things of the like nature, being hurtful unto the church, either in respect of their quality, or in regard of their number; in the former there could be no doubt or difficulty what would be done; their deliberation in the latter was more difficult.—Hooker, Ecclesiastical Polity.

Our stint of woe
Is common: every day a soldier's wife,
The masters of some merchant, and the merchant,
Have just our thome of woe.

Shakespeare, Tempest, ll. 1.

He that gave the hint,
This letter fit to print,
Must also pay the stint. Stir J. Denham.

How much wine drink you in a day? my stint in company is a pint at noon.—Swift.

My most zealous wish and fervent prayer in your behalf, and in my own too, in case the thing is not done already for us—in, that the great gifts and endowments both of wit and judgment, with everything which usually goes along with them—such as memory, fancy, genius, eloquence, quick parts, and what not, may this precious moment, without stint or measure, let or hindrance, be poured down warm as each of us could bear it.—Stowe, Tristram Shandy, vol. III. ch. xx.

Their faithful correspondence indeed had maintained the chain of sentiment unbroken. But details are only for conversation. Each poured forth his mind without stint.—B. Disraeli, Coningsby, b. vii. ch. ii.

Stint. s. [stunt, stunted = small.] In Ornithology. Native bird of the genus Tringa (species minuta and Temminckii); little stint; little sandpiper.

The little sandpiper, or little stint, as it is also called, from its diminutive size, goes through seasonal changes of colour in its plumage, like those observed to take place in the curlew, sandpiper, and the knot, already described; but is more common in autumn than at any other period of the year. The species was first mentioned by Pennant as a British bird from a specimen killed in Cambridgeshire, and is most frequent on the southern and eastern shores of this country. . . . This diminutive stint, named after M. Temminck, is still smaller in size than the little stint last described, and is the smallest of the British sandpipers. It is also much more rare than the little stint, and somewhat different in its habits, frequenting the borders of rivers and fresh-water lakes at a distance from the coast, like our common sandpiper, T. hypoleucos; but is sometimes found on the sandy or muddy creeks and shores of the sea.—Tarrell, History of British Birds.

Stintance. s. Restraint; stoppage. Rare.

Nay, I cannot weep you extempore: marry, some two or three days hence I shall weep without any stintance.—The London Prodigal, l. 1.

Stinted. part. adj. Limited; bounded; narrowed; contracted; checked in growth; undeveloped.

His [Dr. Johnson's] intellectual weakness and prejudices had something in them of strength and greatness; they were the exuberance and excess of a rich mind, not the stinted growth of a poor one.—Craik, History of English Literature, vol. II. p. 308.

Stintor. s. One who, that which, stints, restrains, or cramps.

Let us see whether a set form or extemporary way of praying by the spirit be the greater hinderer and stintor of it.—South, Sermons, II. 112.

Stipend. s. [Lat. stipendium.] Wages; settled pay.

All the earth,
Her kings and tetrarchs, her tributaries;
People and nations pay thee hourly stipends.

J. Johnson, Catiline's Conspiracy, l. 4.

St. Paul's zeal was expressed in preaching without any offerings or stipend.—Jeremy Taylor.

Stipend. v. a. Pay by settled wages. Rare.

I, sir, am a physician; and am stipended in this island to be so to the governors of it. Continuation of Shelton's Translation of Don Quixote, ch. xlvii.

Stipendiary. adj. [Lat. stipendiarius.] Receiving salaries; performing any service for a stated price.

His great stipendiary prelates came with troops of evil appointed horsemen not half full.—Knolles, History of the Turks.

Place rectories in the remaining churches, which are now served only by stipendiary curates.—Swift.

Stipendiary. s. One who performs any service for a settled payment, salary, or stipend.

Money from thee!
From a boy! a stipendiary! one that lives
At the devotion of a stipendiator.
And the uncertain favour of a lord;
I'll eat my arms first.

Manning, A New Way to Pay Old Debts, l. 1.
This whole country is called the kingdom of Tunis; the king whereof is a kind of stipendiary unto the Turk.—Abbot.

If thou art become
A tyrant's vile stipendiary, with grief
That valour thus triumphant I behold,
Which, after all its danger and brave toil,
Deserves no honour from the gods or men. Glover.

Stipple. v. a. [? diminutive of stop and stopple.] Work in Stippling.

Stippled. part. adj. Worked in Stippling.

The interlacing of small pieces cannot altogether avoid a broken, stippled, spotty effect: it cannot be alive. As it is strong and hard, we can tread it under foot on a pavement, and it is still bright as ever; but in the church, the hall, or the chamber, it is an enameled wall—but it is a wall; splendid decoration, but wanting to none of the latter excellencies of art.—Milman, History of Latin Christianity, b. xiv. ch. x.

Stippling. verbal abs. See extract.

Stippling is a mode of engraving on copper by means of dots; and is contradistinguished by this word stippling from that mode of art which consists of courses of continued lines. The dots in stippled engravings are either round, that is to say, each dot forms a small circle in the copper, whose apex is downwards; or they are triangular, each dot forming a peak, or small isosceles triangle, on the surface of the plate; or when the dot consists of more than one of these peaks, as is commonly the case in engraving in the chalk manner, its form is of course subtriangular. The round dots in stippling are performed by means of a dry needle or an etching point, and the angular dots by means of that well-known steel instrument which is termed a graver. Stippling with a graver is also much used in the art of engraving on wood.—Rees, Cyclopaedia.

Stipule. s. [Lat. stipula = straw.] In Botany. Leaf, leaflet, or representative of a leaf, at the base of a leaf-stalk.

When the rudimentary leaf of Liiodendron tulipifera is like a small cone, there is no trace of any lateral inequality. The base of the cone is afterwards seen to extend obliquely on each side on the axis of the bud; these extensions finish by forming two projecting tumours which cover the top of the axis in such a way that their edges touch one another on the side opposite the apex of the leaf. These two tumours are nothing but the stipules. If the entire organ is now isolated, an incompletely closed spur is obtained, the top of which corresponds with the apex and lamina of the leaf, while the edges represent the stipules. On unravelling this leaf and its stipules, a lyre is obtained, the petiole being still imperceptible.—Lindley, Introduction to Botany.

Stipules, in Botany, [are] small scales or appendages situated on each side, at the base of the petioles or leaf-stalks, most commonly of a leathery texture than the latter, and having a scissile termination.—C. W. Johnson, Farmer's Cyclopaedia.

Stipulate. v. n. [Lat. stipulatus, pret. part. of stipulari; stipulation, -onis; Fr. stipuler.] Contract; bargain; settle terms; agree.

Their bargains [in the Isle of Man] are completed, and confirmed, by the giving and taking of as much matter as a straw; as of oysters, 'per traditionem stipulum'; from whence the phrase of stipulation came.—Sadler, Rights of the Kingdom, p. 175: 1619.

The Romans very much neglected their maritime affairs; for they stipulated with the Carthaginians to furnish them with ships for transport and war.—Arbuthnot.

The Great Charter first provides for the rights of the English church. It next stipulates with the barons, but not superfluous maintenance, for the precise amount of feudal obligations, by which the barons and other military tenants of the crown should be thenceforth bound.—Sir E. Cross, History of England, pt. I. ch. xi.

Stipulated. part. adj. Determined by stipulation; agreed on.

He asserts, as a known historical fact, that the kingdom of Spain had formerly belonged, by special right, to St. Peter; and by virtue of this inalienable claim, he grants to a certain count six Roman territories which he should recover from the Moors, to be held in fief from the Holy See by a stipulated rent.—Hollan, Treatise of the State of Europe during the Middle Ages, pt. II. ch. vii.

The vast acquisitions of landed wealth made for many ages by bishops, chapters, and monasteries, began at length to excite the jealousy of sovereigns. They perceived that, although the prelates might send their stipulated proportion of vassals into the field, yet there could not be that active co-operation which the spirit of feudal tenures required, and that the national arm was palsied by the diminution of military nobles.—Ibid.

Stipulation. s. Bargain.

Nor any political composition made by mutual stipulation. Poth. rhy. Altheimadix, p. 165: 1622.

We promise obediently to keep all God's commandments; the wages given by the gospel depend on our performance of that stipulation.—Rogers.

Stir. v. a. [A.S. stiran, stirigan, styr.]

1. Move; remove from its place.

My foot I had never yet in five days been able to stir but as it was lifted.—Sir W. Temple.

Other spirits
Shook through their tracts, and distant muscles all:
This sovereign, by his arbitrary nod,
Restains or sends his ministers abroad,
Swift and obedient to his high command,
They stir a finger, or they lift a hand. Sir R. Blackmore.

2. Agitate; bring into debate.

Preserve the right of thy place, but stir not questions of jurisdiction, and rather assume thy right in silence than voice it with claims.—Baron.

One judgement in parliament, that cases of that nature ought to be determined according to the common law, is of greater weight than many cases to the contrary, wherein the question was not stirred; yea, even though it should be stirred, and the contrary affirmed.—Sir M. Hale.

Elements, near me,
Be mingled and stirred;
Know me, and hear me,
And leap to my word.

Byron, The Deformed Transformed, l. 1.

3. Incite; instigate; animate.

With him is come the mother queen;
An Até, stirring him to blood and strife.

Shakespeare, King John, II. 1.

If it be you that stir these daughters' hearts Against their father, fool me not so much
To bear it tamely. Ibid., King Lear, II. 4.

The subtle Pyliz orator next up and downe the field, Embattelling his men at armes, and stirring all to blowes. Chapman.

4. Raise; excite.

The soldiers love her brother's memory;
And for her sake some mutiny will stir. Dryden.

Stir up.

a. Incite; animate; instigate.

The greedy thirst of royal crown,
That knows no kindred, no regards, no right,
Stirred Porrex up to put his brother down. Spenser.

This would seem a dangerous commission, and ready to stir up all the Irish in rebellion.—Ibid., View of the State of Ireland.

The words of Judas were very good, and able to stir them up to valour.—2 Maccabees, xiv. 17.
Having overcome and thrust him out of his kingdom, he stirred up the Christians and Numidians against him.—Knolles, History of the Turks.
The vigorous spirit of Montrose stirred him up to make some attempt, whether he had any help or no.—Lord Clarendon, History of the Grand Rebellion.
The improving of his own parts and happiness stir him up to no notable a design.—Dr. H. More, Anti-dote against Atheism.

Thou with rebel insolence didst dare
To own and to protect that hoary ruffian,
To stir the seditious rabble up to arms.

Brow.

5. Put in action; excite; quicken.

Hail from beneath is moved for thee to meet thee
As thy coming; it stirreth up the dead for thee.—Isaiah, xiv. 9.

Such [mirth] the jocund flute or game pipe
Stir up among the loose unletter'd hinds.

Milton, Comus, 173.

To stir up vigour in him, employ him in some constant bodily labour.—Locke.

The use of the pumious is to stir up the mind, and put it upon action, to awake the understanding and to enforce the will.—Addison.

Stir. v. n.

1. Move one's self; go out of the place; change place.

No power he had to stir, nor will to rise.

Spenser.

They had the semblance of great bodies behind on the other side of the hill, the falsehood of which would have been manifest as soon as they should move from the place where they were, and from whence they were not to stir.—Lord Clarendon, History of the Grand Rebellion.

2. He in motion; not be still; pass from inactivity to motion.

3. Become the object of notice.

If they happen to have any superior character, they fancy they have a right to talk freely upon everything that stirs or appears.—Watts.

4. Rise in the morning.

If the gentlewoman that attends the general's wife be stirring, tell her, there's one Camio entrain'd of her a little favour of speech.—Shakespeare, Othello, iii. 1.

Is my lady stirring?—

Her presence answers for us all.

Massinger, A New Way to pay Old Debts, l. 2.

Stir. s.

1. Tumult; bustle.

What hallooing and what stir is this to-day?
These are my mates, that make their wills their law,
Have some unhappy passenger in chase.

Shakespeare, Two Gentlemen of Verona, v. 4.

Tumultuous stirs upon this strife ensue.

Dryden.

He hath spun a fair thread, to make all this stir for such a necessity as no man ever denied.—Bishop Bramhall.

Tell, said the soldier, ven'erable sir,
Why all these words, this clamour, and this stir,
Why do disputes in wrangling spend the day?

Sir J. In-sham, Of Prudence.

The great stirs of the disputing world are but the conflicts of the humour.—Glanville.

After all this stir about them, they are good for nothing.—Archbishop Tillotson.

Consider, after so much stir about genus and species, how few words we have yet settled definitions of.—Locke.

Silence is usually worse than the fiercest and loudest accusations; since it proceeds from a kind of numbing or stupidity of conscience, and an absolute dominion obtained by sin over the soul, so that it shall not so much as dare to complain or make a stir.—South, Sermons.

2. Commotion; public disturbance; tumultuous disorder; seditious uproar.

Whensoever the earl shall die, all these lands are to come unto her majesty; he is like to make a final stir there, though of himself of no power, yet through suppliance of some other who lie in the wind.—Spenser, View of the State of Ireland.

He did make these stirs, grieving that the name of Christ was at all brought into those parts.—Abbott, Description of the World.

Being advertised of some stirs raised by his unnatural sons in England, he departed out of Ireland without a blow.—Sir J. Davies, Discourse on the State of Ireland.

Raphael, thou hear'st what stir on earth,
Ratan from hell's wound through the darkness gulf,
Hath raised in paradise, and how disturb'd
This light the human pair.

Milton, Paradise Lost, v. 224.

3. Agitation of thoughts; conflicting passion.

He did keep

The dock, with glove, or hat, or handkerchief
Still waving, as the fits and stirs of a mind
Could best express how slow his soul sail'd on,
How swift his ship.

Shakespeare, Cymbeline, l. 4.

Stirabout. s. Dish, formed of oatmeal boiled in water to a certain consistency, and then eaten either with a bit of cold butter put into it and salt, or with milk: (a common breakfast among the lower orders in the north of Ireland).

'You must have heard, for as short a time as you have been in Kenilworth, that it is haunted by the spirit of Arthur ap Mervyn... murdered, as they say, in that same tower which bears his name.' 'Oh, I have heard the tale five hundred times,' said Lambourne, 'and how the ghost is always most voracious when they boll leeks and stirabout, or fry toasted cheese, in the culinary regions.'—Sir W. Scott, Kenilworth, ch. xix.

Stirious. adj. [Lat. stirius = icicle.] Resembling icicles. Rare.

Crystal is found sometimes in rocks, and in some places not much unlike the stirious or stilledious dependences of ice.—Sir T. Brown, Vulgar Errours.

Stirp. s. [Lat. stirps.] Stock; race; family; generation. Rare.

Supplry nations got footing in that land, of the which there yet remain divers great families and stirps.—Spenser.

Democracies are less subject to sedition than when there are stirps nobles.—Bacon.

All nations of might and fame resorted hither; of whom we have some stirps and little tribes with us at this day.—Id.

Stirrage. s. Motion; act of stirring. Rare.

'They cannot sleep soundly, but the rowing of the cock, the noise of little birds... every small stirrage waketh them.'—Granger, Commentary on Ecclesiastes, p. 320: 1021.

Stirrer. s. One who stirs.

1. One who is in motion; one who puts in motion.

Here's one outlived his peers,
And told forth fourscore years;
He vexed time, and busied the whole state;
Troubled both fox and friends,
But ever to no end;
What, did this stirrer but die late?
How well at twenty had he fall'n or stood,
For three of his fourscore he did no good.

B. Jonson, Underwoods.

2. Riser.

Come on; give me your hand, sir; an early stirrer.

Shakespeare, Henry IV. Part II, iii. 2.

3. With up. Inciter; instigator.

A perpetual spring, not found elsewhere but in the Indies only, by reason of the sun's neighbourhood, the life and stirrer up of nature in a perpetual activity.—Sir W. Raleigh.

Will it not reflect on thy character, Sir, to turn barometer in thy old days; a stirrer up of quarrels betwixt thy neighbours?—Arbutnot.

Stirring. verbal abs. Act of stirring, of bestirring one's self, of moving.

The great Judge of all knows every different degree of human improvement, from these weak stirrings and tendencies of the will, which have not yet formed themselves into regular purposes, to the last entire consummation of a good habit.—Addison, Spectator.

We acknowledge a man to be mad or melancholy, who fancies himself to be glass, and so is afraid of stirring; or, taking himself to be wax, dares not let the sun shine upon him.—Law.

Stirrup. s. [A.S. stigerap.] Iron suspended by a strap, in which the horseman sets his foot when he mounts or rides.

Neither is his manner of mounting unseemly, though he lack stirrups; for in his getting up, his horse is still going, whereby he gaineth way; and therefore the stirrup was called so in scorn, as it were a stay to get up, being of the old English word sty, which is to get up, or mount.—Spenser.

First thou not kind in hand, and held my stirrup.—Shakespeare, Henry VI. Part II, iv. 1.

His horse hipped with an old mothy saddle, the stirrups of no kindred.—Id., Taming of the Shrew, iii. 2.

My friend, judge not me,
Thou seest I judge not thee.
Between the stirrup and the ground,
Merry I ask'd, merry I found.

At this the knight began to cheer up,
And raising up himself on stirrup,
Cried out, Victorious I lie thus there.

Then damels played the leech's part,
And wounds were heal'd with syrup;
And knights would often lose the heart,
But never lose the stirrup.

W. M. Praed.

Stitch. v. n. [stitch.]
1. Sew; work with a needle on anything.

2. Join; unite, generally with some degree of clumsiness or inaccuracy.

Having stitched together these animalverions touching architecture and their ornaments.—Sir H. Wotton.

Stitch up. Mend what was rent.

I wish a needle and thread stick'd up the artery and the wound.—Wiseman, Surgery

Stitch. v. n. Practise needlework.

Stitch! stitch! stitch!

In poverty, hunger, and dirt.

T. Hood, Song of the Shirt.

Stitch. s.

1. Pass of the needle and thread through anything.

2. Sharp lacerating pain.

If you desire the spleen, and will laugh yourself into stitches, follow me; you'd gull Malvolio is turned head bent, a very renege.—Shakespeare, Twelfth Night, iii. 2.

A simple bloody sputation of the lungs is differenced from a pleurisy, which is ever painful, and attended with a stitch.—Harsnet, Discourse on Consumption.

3. Furrow or ridge.

Many men at plow he made, and drove earth here and there,
And turn'd up stitches orderly.

Chapman, Translation of the Iliad.

4. Link of yarn in knitting.

There fell twenty stitches in his stocking.—Motestus.

As the first element in a compound.

A stitch-fall's cluck, that hangs below the jaw,
Such wrinkles as a skilful hand would draw
For an old granian ape.

Dryden, Translation of Juvenal, x. 309.

Stitchery. s. Needlework. Contemptuously.

Come, lay aside your stitchery; play the idle housewife with us this afternoon.—Shakespeare, Coriolanus, l. 3.

Stitchwort. s. In Botany. Native plant, akin to the chickweeds, of the genus Stellaria.

There are eight indigenous species of stitchwort, one or two of which are annual, the others perennial.—C. W. Johnson, Farmer's Cyclopaedia.

Stith. s. Stithy.

Determined to strike on the stith while the iron was hot.—Greene, Tord of Fanny: 1808.

Stithy. s. [Icelandic, stedi.]

1. Anvil.

2. Smith's workshop; forge.

My imaginations are as foul as Vulcan's stithy.

Shakespeare, Hamlet, iii. 2.

Stithy. v. n. Forge (as a smith).

The forge that stith'd Mars his helm.

Shakespeare, Troilus and Cressida, iv. 3.

Stive. v. a. pret. and past part. stove. Stuff; cram.

You would admire if you saw them stive it in their shops.—Sundyn, Journey to Aleppo.

His chamber was commonly stived with friends or suitors of one kind or other.—Sir H. Wotton.

Birds brasts and reptiles stived up as in a close hutch.—Parker, Bibliotheca Sheldoni, vol. i. p. 283.

Stiver. s. [Dutch, stuiver.] Dutch coin of the value of about a halfpenny.

I would not give, so I might live,

A stiver or a skilling.

To tame and kiss the varicose mis

That leaks in Ballypillin.

Swift.

I carry it, continued he, thus—holding up his naked scynater, his mule moving on slowly all the time, on purpose to defend my nose.—It is well worth it, gentle stranger, replied the wintell.—'Tis not worth a single stiver, said the handy-legged drummer—'tis a nose of parchment.—Stearns, Tri-gram Shandy, vol. iv. ch. li.

Stoa. s. Greek for portico or porch; suggested, as in the extract, by its derivatives Stoic, Stoical, and Stoicism, as applied to the philosophy so called. Rhetorical.

But above all, the mysticism of Fichte might astonish us. The cold, solemn, adamantine spirit, standing erect and clear, like a Cato major among degenerate men; fit to have been a teacher of the Stoa, and to have discoursed of beauty and virtue in the groves of Academic!—Carlyle, Critical and Miscellaneous Essays, State of German Literature.

Stoat. s. [A.S. stod-hors = stallion; how it applies to the animal in question is uncertain.] In Zoology. Native animal of the genus Mustela (ermine); ermine; miniver. See, also, under Weasel.

No armed knight ydrad in war,
With lion force will I compare;
No judge unjust with furred gown;
Harming no secret guile the flocks;
No priest unworth of God's coat
To swine ydrunk or filthy stout.

Prior, Eric Robert's Misc.
When coloured red it is generally named the stout, when white the ermine.—W. Magilligan, in Na- tionalist's Library, British Quadrupeds.

Stoebh. s. [Gaelic, stocach, stoachach, stochean—idler.] Boy in attendance; hanger-on.

The strength of all that nation in the kerna, sailoplane, stocak, horseman, and horseboy.—Spenser,
View of the State of Ireland.

He holdeth himself a gentleman, and scorneth to work, which, he saith, is the life of a peasant; but thenceforth hecometh a horse-boy, or a stocak, to some kern, inuring himself to his sword, and the gentlemanly trade of stealing.—Ibid.

Stoekade. s. See Stockade.

Stoekade. s. [Spanish.] In Fencing. Thrust with a rapier; stock.

You stand on distance, your paces, stoekades, and I know not what.—Shakespeare, Merry Wives of Windsor, ii. 1.

And so, as the shades of dusk thicken in that Bois-de-Boulogne, we behold two men with lion-look, with alert attitude, side foremost, right foot advanced; flourishing and thrusting, stoekade and stoekade, in three and quart; intent to skewer one another.—Carlyle, The French Revolution, pt. ii.
h. iii. ch. iii.

Stoekastio. adj. [Gr. στοχαστικός = conjectural, from στοχάζομαι = I guess.] Conjectural: (in the extract used substantially).
Rare.

Though he were no prophet, nor son of a prophet, yet in that faculty which comes nearest to the excellent, i.e. the stoekastio, wherein he was seldom mistaken as to future events, as well public as private.—Whitefoot, Life of Browne, (Ord MS.)

Stoek. s. Stoekado. Rare.

To see thee here, to see thee there; to see thee pass thy minutes, thy stoek, thy reverse.—Shakespeare, Merry Wives of Windsor, ii. 2.

Stoek. s. [A.S. stoc; N.F. estoc.]

1. Trunk; body of a tree.

That furious beast
His previous horn, sought of his enemies,
Strikes on the stoek, no thence can be released.
Spenser.

There is hope of a tree, if it be cut down, that it will sprout again, and that the tender branch thereof will not cease, though the root was old in the earth, and the stoek thereof die in the ground.—
Joh. xiv. 7.

2. Trunk into which a graft is inserted.

The elm over-rulch the stoek quite; and the stoek is passive only, and giveth alient but no motion to the graft.—Bacon.

An fruits ungrateful to the planter's care,
On savage stoeks inserted, learn to bear;
The surest virtues thus from passions shot,
Wild nature's vigour working at the root.
Pope, Essay on Man, ii. 181.

3. Log; post.

Men, serving either calamity or tyranny, did ascribe unto stones and stoeks the incommunicable Name.—Wisdom of Solomon, xiv. 21.

Them who kept thy truth so pure of old,
When all our fathers worshipp'd stoeks and stones, Forget not.
Milton, Sonnets, xviii. 3.

Why all this fury? What's the matter,
That oaks must come from Thrace to dance?
Must stupid stoeks be taught to flatter?
And is there no such wood in France?
Prior, An English Ballad on the
taking of Namur.

4. Men proverbially stupid.

What tyranny is this, my heart to thrall,
And eke my tongue with proud restraint to tie,
That neither I may speak nor think at all,
But like a stupid stoek in silence die?
Spenser.

Let's be no stoeks, nor no stoeks
Shakespeare, Taming of the Shrew, i. 1.

5. Handle of anything.

6. Race; lineage; family.

Say what stoek he springs of.—
The noble house of Marcius.
Shakespeare, Coriolanus, ii. 3.

His early virtue to that ancient stoek
Gave as much honour as from thence he took.
Waller.

The like shall sing
All prophecy, that of the royal stoek
Of David, so I name this king, shall rise
A son, the woman's seed.
Milton, Paradise Lost, xii. 326.

Then hast seen one world begin, and end,
And man, as from a second stoek, proceed.
Ibid. xii. 3.

To no human stoek
We owe this three-uniform; but the rock,
That cloven rock produced three.
Waller.

Thy mother was no goddess, nor thy stoek
From Dardanius; but in some horrid rock,
Perfidious wretch, rough Caucasus thou bred.

Sir J. Denham, Passion of Dido.
As we follow the stream of time backwards towards its source, it is natural that the difference, not only of dialect, but even of language, should become less and less; so that what are now distinct main branches of our great stoek, may at a very remote period have formed the as yet undivided elements of one common trunk.—Arnold, History of Rome, ch. xxiv.

7. Principal; capital; store.

Prodigal men
Feel not their own stoek wasting.
R. Johnson, Catiline's Conspiracy.

A king, against a storm, must foreuse to a convenient stoek of treasure.—Bacon.

Let the exportation of home commodities be more in value than the importation of foreign; so the stoek of the kingdom shall yearly increase; for the than balance of trade must be returned in money or bullion.—Id., Advice to Villiers.

'Tis the place where God promises and delights to dispense larger proportions of his favour, that he may fix a mark of honour on his sanctuary, and recommend it to the wits of men, upon the stoek of their own interest as well as his own glory.—South, Sermons.

Yet was she not profuse; but fear'd to waste,
And wisely managed that the stoek might last;
That all might be supplied, and she not grieve,
When crowds appear'd, she had not to relieve:
Which to prevent, she still increased her store;
Laid up and stored, that she might give the more.
Dryden, Eleonora, 63.

Beneath one law [have] live,
And with one common stoek their traffic drive.
Id., Translation of the Georgics, iv. 226.

Nor do those ill on single bodies prey,
But on her lying the nation to decay,
And sweep the present stoek and future hope away.
Ibid. iii. 713.

If parents die without actually transferring their right to another, why does it not return to the common stoek of mankind?—Locke.

When we brought it out, it took such a quantity of air into its lungs, that it swelled almost twice as big as before; and it was perhaps on this stoek of air that it lived a minute longer the second time.—
Addison, Travels in Italy.

Be ready to give, and glad to distribute, by setting apart something out of thy stoek for the use of some charities.—Bishop Atterbury.

Of those stars, which our imperfect eye
Has deem'd and fix'd to one eternal sky,
Each by a native stoek of honour great,
May dart strong influence, and diffuse kind heat, Itself a sun.
Prior, Solomon, l. 516.

Though they spent their income, they never mor-gaged the stoek.—Arbuthnot.

She has divided part of her estate amongst them, that every one may be charitable out of their own stoek, and each of them take it in their turn to provide for the poor and sick of the parish.—Law.

In the plural.

We cast our eyes upon all sorts of good that is to be done: The poor in extremity must be helped;
orphans and aged must be provided for, our poor friends that are behind-hand; prisoners and distressed householders, young tradesmen that want stoeks, must be thought on.—Dr. White, Sermon,
p. 89: 1615.

8. Quantity; store; body.

He proposes to himself no small stoek of fame in future ages, in being the first who has undertaken this design.—Arbuthnot.

9. Cattle.

In the phraseology of agriculturists, the animals maintained on the farm are called live stoek, the implements and carriages dead stoek. . . In one particular only, that of sheep, in Great Britain on a general level with other countries. There is nearly a sheep to every head of population. But of horned cattle there is only one to about every five; of pigs, one only to every nine. Were the amount of horned cattle in France proportionate only to that of Great Britain, France would have a little more than 14,000,000. The same may be said of Austria. In many of the German states the proportion is higher still. In Denmark the cattle are not very much less numerous than the population. In the United States there is rather more than one head to every two of population. In France and Prussia, pigs are one to seven; in Austria, one to four and a half. Taking the whole of Europe, the proportion is one to six. In the United States there are more pigs than population. Had the returns supplied us with information as to poultry, the deficiency of Great Britain would have been still more striking. In the year 1865 this country imported more than 400,000,000 eggs, if the hundred of eggs be taken, as it has been from the earliest time, at 120. This deficiency is not greatly supplemented by importation. Small as the stoek of cattle is, the annual importations do not amount to more than one-twentieth of the ordinary stoek, while that of sheep is, as a rule, but one-fifth. During the present year even these quantities must have undergone a serious diminution. Nor is the import of meat large. The most important item is that of beef. But even here the largest estimate will not give more than the equivalent of 300,000 pigs. The beef seems to be about equal to the supply of 50,000 oxen.—J. R. T. Rogers, in Brande and Cox, Dic- tionary of Science, Literature, and Art.

10. Government scrip.

The language of the Stock Exchange is eminently metaphorical. . . Bull [is] a person who buys stoek on account, not intending to hold it, but simply, as a date agreed on between the dealers, to pay or receive the difference between the price at which he bought it, and that at which it actually stands on the day specified.—Bear [is] a person who sells stoek on account in the same terms, and with the purpose.—Lame Duck [is] a defaulter at the settle.

At the close of the day, the price of the stoek is settled on the pillars of the Stock Exchange: the dreaded black board.—Blackboard [is] a consideration given to keep back the delivery of stoek, when the price is lower for time than for money. Continuation of contract in the premium given when the price of stoek in which a person has a jobbing account open, is higher for time than for money, and the settling day is arrived, so that the stoek must be taken at a disadvantage. In this case a percentage is paid to put off the settlement and continue the account open.—Jolter [is] a term applied to those who accommodate buyers and sellers of stoek with any desired quantity.—J. R. T. Rogers, in Brande and Cox, Dictionary of Science, Literature, and Art.

Used affectionally, the sense being that of Stocks in commerce: (as, in Stock- exchange).

11. In Botany. Stock-gillflower.

Stoek. v. a.

1. Fill sufficiently; store.

If a man will commit such rules to his memory, and stoek his mind with portions of Scripture answerable to all the heads of duty, his conscience can never be at a loss.—South, Sermons.

I, who before with shepherds in the groves,
Sung to my own pipe their rural loves,
Matured the globe, and stoek'd the fruitful plain.
Dryden.

The world began to be stoeked with people, and human industry drained those uninhabitable places.
—Bishop Burnet.

Springs and rivers are by large supplies continually stoeked with water.—Woodward.

2. Lay up in stor: (as, 'He stoeks what he cannot use').

Stoek. v. a.

1. Put into the stocks.

Call not your stocks for me: I serve the king.
On whose employment I was sent to you:
You shall do small respect, show too bold malice
Against the grace and person of my master, Stocking his messenger.—Shakespeare, King Lear, ii. 4.

2. Extirpate: (sometimes with up).

The time shall quickly come, thy grove and pleasant spring,
Where to the mirthful merle the warbling warble sings.

The painful labourer's hand shall stoek the roots to burn.
Dryden, Polydoron, song xiv.

The wild bear not only gnaws her branches, but stoeks up her roots.—Dr. H. More, Decay of Chris- tian Piety.

Stoek. v. a. Pierce.

Oh! the brave age is gone; in my young days
A chevalier would stoek a needle's point
Three times together.

Beaumont and Fletcher, Love's Cure, iii. 4.
(Parody by H. and W.)

Stoekade. s. Enclosure or fence made with pointed stakes.

Rothwood was not, however, without defences;
no habitation, in that disturbed period, could have been so, without the risk of being plundered and burnt before the next morning. A deep fosse, or ditch, was drawn round the whole building and filled with water from a neighbouring stream. A double stoekade, or palisade, composed of pointed beams, which the adjacent forest supplied, defended the outer and inner bank of the trench. There was an entrance from the west through the outer stoek- ade, which communicated by a drawbridge, with a similar opening in the interior defences. Some precautions had been taken to place those entrances under the protection of projecting angles, by which they might be flanked in case of need by archers or sappers.—Sir W. Scott, Jonathan, ch. ii.

Stoekbroker. s. One who deals in stock, or the public funds.

A day was fixed for selling out and transferring the stock, and of waiting, with that view, upon Wilkins Fisher, Esq., stoekbroker, of somewhere near the Bank.—Diogenes, Pickwick Papers ch. iv.

Stockdove. s. Woodpigeon, so named from often building in pollard trees, or trees reduced to the trunk and few thick leafy branches at the top of it.

Stockfish. s. Dried cod, so called from its hardness.

Keltish, stockfish, nor herring.
It is not for your wearing. Shelton, Poems, p. 185.
He's to be made more tractable, I doubt not.—
Yes, if they saw him as they do white-leather
Upon an iron, or beat him soft like stock-fish.
Beaumont and Fletcher, The Captain.

Stockily flower. s. Native and garden plant of the genus Matthiola.

Stocking. s. Covering of the leg.

In his first approach before my lady he will come to her in yellow stockings, and 'tis a colour she abhors.—Shakespeare, Twelfth Night, ii. 3.

By the loyalty of that town he procured shoes, stockings, and money for his soldiers.—Lord Clarendon, History of the Grand Rebellion.
He spent half a day to look for his odd stocking, when he had them both upon a leg.—Sir R. L. Estlin.

At sundown Flavin is the stocking thrown,
That very night he lumps to lie alone.
Pope, Imitations of Horace, b. l. ep. 1.

The families of farmers live in flitch and pastures, without a shoe or a stocking to their feet.—Swift.
[The clothing of the legs formerly consisted of a single garment . . . it was afterwards cut in two at the knees, leaving . . . kirtle-breeches . . . or upper-stocks, and under-stocks, or stockings. . . In these terms the elements of stock is to be understood in the sense of stump or trunk, the part of the body left when the limbs are cut off.—Wedgwood, Dictionary of English Etymology.]

Used adjectively, or as the first element in a compound.

This stocking-frame, which is the great implement of huckery, is totally different from the rectangular denudation which constitutes cloth, as the slightest inspection of a stocking will show; for this, instead of having two distinct systems of thread, like the warp and the weft, which are woven together, by crossing each other at right angles, the whole piece is composed of a single thread knitted or looped in a peculiar manner, which is called stocking-stitch, and sometimes chain-work.—Ure, Dictionary of Arts, Manufactures, and Mines.

Stocking. v. a. Dress in stockings. Rare.
Stocking'd with loads of fat town-sirt he goes.
Dryden, Translation of Juvenal, iii. 307.

Stockish. adj. Hard; blockish.
The poet
Did feign that Orpheus drew trees, stones, and floods;
Since thought no stockish, hard, and full of rage,
But music for the time doth change his nature.
Shakespeare, Merchant of Venice, v. 1.

Stockjobber. s. Dealer in the funds on speculation.
The stockjobber thus from 'Change-alley goes down,
And tips you the green an a whisk;
Let me have but your vote to serve for the town,
And here is a picture to drink.
Swift.
The Londoner, musician and the Alhambra had both been disposed of, and well: the first to the new French Ambassador, and the second, to a grey-headed stock-jobber, very rich, who, having no society, determined to make solitude amusing.—B. Marriot, The Young Duke, b. v. ch. xii.

Necker, in the National Assembly, is making money, as usual, about his deficit; barriers and counterpoises burnt; the taxgatherers hunted, not hunting; his Majesty's Exchequer all but empty. The remedy is a loan of thirty millions; then, on still more enticing terms, a loan of eighty millions; neither of which loans, unhappily, will the stock-jobbers venture to lend. The stockjobber has no country, except his own black pool of Agle.—Carlyle, The French Revolution, pt. i. b. vii. ch. i.

Stockjobbing. s. Act of buying and selling stock in the public funds for the turn of the scale, or on speculation.
Projects for improving old manufactures, or setting up new ones, should not be despised in a trading country; but the making them pretences for stockjobbing hath been a fatal imposition.—Berkley, Essay on Great Britain.
A system, that ought to be plainest and fairest imaginable, will become a dark, intricate, and wiled mystery of stockjobbing.—Bolingbroke, On Parties, letter xvii.

Stocklock. s. Lock fixed in wood.
There are locks for several purposes: as street-door-locks, called stock-locks; chamber-door-locks, called spring-locks, and cupboard-locks.—Moson, Mechanical Exercises.

Stocks. s.
1. In Law. Wooden frame confining the legs, by enclosing the ankles within two semicircles, too small to allow the withdrawal of the feet, set-up in most of the parishes of England, for the restraint, as much as for the punishment, of vagrants, disorderly people, and small offenders. Derived by Minsheu from the stock of a tree, as being made of wood; by others connected with stocking. Connected with stock—obstruct, detain, confine. Probably, always plural. In Composition, however, the form is singular. Generally with the, i. e. the parish-stocks.

Fetch forth the stocks;
As I have life and honour, there shall he sit till noon.
Shakespeare, King Lear, ii. 2.
There dwells, and within call, if it please your worship.

A potent monarch, called the countable,
That does command a citadel called the stocks,
Whose guards are certain files of rusty billmen.

Mansinger, A New Way to pay Old Debts, i. 1.
Matrimony is expressed by a young man standing, his legs being fast in a pair of stocks.—Pearson.
The stocks hinder his legs from obeying the determination of his mind, if it would transfer his body to another place. —Locks.

As the first element of a compound, and in the singular number.
Tian is whipt from tything to tything, stock-parished and imprisoned.—Shakespeare, King Lear, iii. 4.

2. Wooden work upon which ships are built. Each day brings fresh supplies of arms and men, and ships which all but winter were abroad, And such as fitted since the flight had been, Or new from stocks were fall'n into the road.
Dryden, Annus Mirabilis, c.

3. In Commerce. The Funds.
An artificial wealth of funds and stocks was in the hands of those who had been plundering the public.—Swift.
Statesmen and patriots ply alike the stocks,
Peers and butler share alike the box.
Pope, Moral Essays, iii. 130.

Stockstill. adj. [two words rather than a true compound.] Motionless as a stock or log.
The polype fish sits all the winter long Stock-still, through sloth.
Sir J. Davies, Witte's Pilgrimage, sign. G. 1.

Our preachers stand stockstill in the pulpit, and will not so much as move a finger to set off the best sermon.—Addison.

Stoeky. s. Stout. Rare.
They had no titles of honour among them, but such as denoted some bodily strength or perfection; as, such an one the tall, such an one the stoeky, such an one the gruff.—Addison, Spectator, no. 433.

Stodge. v. n. [German, steigen = go.] Stir; move. Obsolete.

Stoie. s. [Gr. στῆναι, from στειν = porch.] Disciple of the philosopher Zeno, who taught under a piazza or portico in the city of Athens; and maintained, that a wise man ought to be free from all passions, to be unmoved either by joy or grief, and to esteem all things governed by unavoidable necessity.

Certain philosophers of the Epicureans and of the Stoicks encountered him.—Arta, xvii. 18.
The Stoick last, in philosophick pride,
By him call'd virtue.
Milton, Paradise Regained, iv. 300.
The Stoie of the woods, the man without a tear.
Campbell, Gertrude of Wyoming.

Demons herole; Demons who were
The form of the Stoie
And sophist of yore.
Byron, The Deformed Transformed, i. 1.

Balsae said of Scarron, that he had gone further in immobility than the Stoicks, who were satisfied in appearing immovable to pain; but Scarron was gay, and amused all the world with his sufferings.—J. DIsraeli, Curiosities of Literature, Scarron.

Stoie. adj. Belonging to the Stoics; cold; stiff; austere; affecting to hold all things indifferent.

O foolishness of men! that lend their ears
To those huge doctors of the Stoick fur.
Milton, Comus, 706.

The Stoick philosophers discard all passions in general.—Addison, Spectator, no. 397.

Stoical. adj. Having the character of, relating to, supported by, a Stoic.

It is a common imputation to Seneca, that though he declaimed with so much strength of reason, and a stoical contempt of riches and power, he was at the same time one of the richest and most powerful men in Rome.—Talbot, no. 170.

I defy the best gallage planter that ever existed, . . . I defy him to go on coolly, critically, and canonically, planting his cabbage one by one, in straight lines, and stoical distances, especially if all in postcoats are mowed up, without error and anon straddling out, or sliding into some lastardy digression.—Sterne, Tristram Shandy, vol. viii. ch. i.

His [Werner's] fundamental principle of morals we have seen in part already; it does not exclusively or primarily belong to himself; being little more than that high sort of entire self-forgetfulness, that merges of the Me in the Ide; a principle which recurs both in Moine and christian ethics, and is at this day common, in theory, among all German philosophers, especially of the transcendental class.—Carlyle, Critical and Miscellaneous Essays, Writings of Werner.

Stoically. adv. After the manner of the Stoics; austere.

He not stoically mistaken in the equality of sin.
—Sir T. Browne, Christian Mystics, iii. 12.

Stoicalness. s. Attribute suggested by Stoical.

Stoicism. s. Opinions and maxims of the Stoics.

To pretend to virtue and holiness without reference to God and a life to come, is but to fall into a more dull and flat kind of Stoicism.—Dr. H. More, Conjectura Cabalistica, p. 193: 1683.

Stoicism, which was the pedantry of virtue, ascribes all good qualifications of what kind soever to the virtuous man.—Addison, Spectator, no. 223.

We have the greatest admiration for this learned doctor (Calanus); with what scientific stoicism he walks through the land of wonder, unwondering.—Carlyle, Critical and Miscellaneous Essays, Signs of the Times.

Both were by principle and habit Stoics; yet Johnson with the greater merit, for he alone had very much to triumph over; farther, he alone ennobled his stoicism into devotion. To Johnson life was as a prison, to be endured with faith; to Hume it was little more than a foolish Bartholomew-Fair show-booth, with the foolish crowdings and elbowings of which it was not worth while to quarrel.—Ibid. Boswell's Life of Johnson.

Fichte's metaphysical theory may be called in question, and readily enough misapprehended; but the midline stoicism of his sentiments must and some response in many a heart.—Ibid. State of German Literature.

Stoke. v. a. [?] Feed and attend to a furnace. (For extract see under Stoking.)

Stoker. s. One who looks after the fire.
a. In a brewery.

As the plague of happy life,
I run away from party-strife;
A prince's cause, a church's claim,
I've known to raise a mighty flame,
And priest, as stoker, very free
To throw in peace and charity.
Green, The Spleen: 1764

b. In the furnace of a steam-engine. (For extract see under Stoking.)

Stoking. verbal abs. See extract.

Stoking [is] the operation of replenishing a furnace with coal, and of keeping it in proper order, by clearing away the ash and clinkers, so as to maintain a vigorous combustion. Much skill is needed to stoke the furnace of a steam boiler successfully; and one stoker will often be able to keep the steam well up when another of equal strength and diligence will fail altogether. One main indication to be fulfilled is to spread the coal evenly over the bars of the grate, and to leave no holes or open places in the fire, through which the cold air will rush, and diminish the temperature of the furnace.—Brands and Cox, Dictionary of Science, Literature, and Art.

Stole. s. [Lat. stola; A.S. stol; N.Fr. stole.] Long vest.

Over all a black stole she did throw,
As one that lay in mould.
Of sable stole or cypress lawn
Over thy decent shoulders drawn.
Milton, Il Penseroso, 35.

Groom of the stole. See extract.
Groom of the stole . . . is a great officer of the king's household, whose precinct is properly the king's bedchamber, where the lord chamberlain hath nothing to do.—Jacob, Law Dictionary.

Stoled. adj. Wearing a stole or long robe.
After them flew the prophets, brightly stoled
In shining lawn. G. Fletcher, Christ's Victory.

As the second element in a compound.
In vain with timbrell'd anthems dark
The stole-stoled sorcerers bear his worship art.
Milton, Ode on the Nativity, 112.

STOL

Stolen, part. adj. Obtained by stealth.
Stolen waters are sweet, and bread eaten in secret is pleasant.—Proverbs, ix. 17.

Stolid, adj. [Lat. stolidus.] Stupid; foolish.
Stolidity, s. Stupidity; want of sense.

To the end his prince might never, by opening his eyes, come to the knowledge of his own stolidity.—Translation of Boetius, p. 97: 1623.
These are the fools in the text, indolent untractable fools, whose stolidity can baffle all arguments.—Bentley, Sermons, i.

Stomach, s. [Fr. estomac; Lat. stomachus.]

1. Digesting part of the intestinal canal.

This stilly smile, this beasty line,
Quite turns my stomach.

Pope, Epilogue to the Satires, dialogue II.

The gastric juice, or the liquor which directs the food in the stomach of animals, is of this class. Of all menstrua it is the most active, the most universal. In the human stomach, for instance, consider what a variety of strange substances, and how widely different from one another it in a few hours reduces to one uniform pulp, milk, or manure.—Paley, Natural Theology, ch. vii.

The human stomach is a somewhat oblong and rounded membranous bag, situated in the epigastric region. It is largest on the left side (or cardiac end), and gradually diminishes towards the right or pyloric orifice, which is called the pylorus. Like the intestines, the stomach has three coats or membranes, connected together by cellular membrane. The exterior or peritoneal coat is a dense firm membrane; the interior or villous coat is soft, mucous, and vascular; the central coat is muscular, and the glands of the stomach are situated between it and the villous coat. The stomach is largely supplied with nerves, which come from the eighth pair and sympathetic. They are derived chiefly from the cardiac or solar plexus, and are accompanied by veins which empty themselves into the vena portæ. The lymphatics of the stomach proceed directly to the thoracic duct.—Owen, in Brander and Cox, Dictionary of Science, Literature, and Art.

As the first element in a compound.

If you're sick at sea,
Or st. each-quail'd at land, a dram of this
Will drive away distemper.

Shakespeare, Cymbeline, iii. 4.

2. Appetite; desire of food.

Tell me, what's that takes from thee
Thy stomach, pleasure, and thy golden sleep?

Shakespeare, Henry IV, Part I, ii. 3.

Will fortune never come with both hands full,
But write her fair words still in fouled letters?
She either gives a stomach, and no food,
Such as the poor in health; or rise a feast,
And takes away the stomach; such the rich,
That have abundance, and enjoy it not.

Ibid., Part II, iv. 4.

If you've a stomach, a odd luke-meat's ready.
Messinger, A New Way to Pay Old Debts, i. 2.
An appetite or stomach to meat is a sign of health in the body, so is this hunger in the soul a vital quality, an evidence of some life of grace in the heart; whereas decay of appetite, and the no manner of stomach, is a most desperate prognostick.—Hammond.

3. Inclination; liking.

He which hath no stomach to this fight,
Let him depart.

Shakespeare, Henry V, iv. 3.

The unusual distance of time made it subject to every man's note, that it was an act against his stomach, and put upon him by necessity of state.—Bacon, History of the Reign of Henry VII.
The very trade went against his stomach.—Sir R. L'Estrange.

4. Anger; violence of temper.

Disdain he called was, and disdain'd
To be so call'd, and who so ill him call:
Stern was his look, and full of stomach vain,
His portance terrible, and stature tall.

Spenser.

Is't near dinner time?—I would it were,
That you might kill your stomach on your meat,
And not upon your maid.

Shakespeare, Two Gentlemen of Verona, i. 2.

Instead of trumpet and of drum,
That makes the warrior's stomach come.

Rutler, His library, i. 2, 107.

5. Sullenness; resentment; stubbornness.

Some of the chiefest laity professed with greater stomach their judgments, that such a discipline was little better than popish tyranny disguised under a new form.—Hooker, Ecclesiastical Polity.
They plainly saw, that when stomach doth strive with wit, the match is not equal.—Ibid.
Whereby the ape in woud rous stomach woe,
Strongly encouraged by the crafty fox.

Spenser.

That nought should such stomachs bear!
I myself fight not once in forty year.

Shakespeare, Henry VI, Part I, i. 3.

It stuck in the rascal's stomach, that bulls should be armed with horns, and that a creature of his also should be left defenceless.—Sir R. L'Estrange.

This sort of crying proceeding from pride, obstinacy, and stomach, the will, where the fault lies, must be bent.—Locke, Thoughts on Education.

STOM

6. Pride; haughtiness.

Arise, a subtle-witted and a marvellous fair-spoken man, was discontented that one should be placed before him in honour, whose superior he thought himself in desert, because through envy and stomach prone unto contradiction.—Hooker, Ecclesiastical Polity.

He was a man

Of an unbounded stomach, ever ranking Himself with princes.

Shakespeare, Henry VIII, iv. 2.

Stomach, v. a. Resent; remember with anger and malignity. Obsolete.

Believe not all; or, if you must believe,

Stomach not all.

Shakespeare, Antony and Cleopatra, iii. 4.

Jonathan loved David, and the people applauded him; only Saul stomach'd him, and therefore hated him.—Bishop Hall, Contemplations.

The lion began to show his teeth, and to stomach the affront.—Sir R. L'Estrange.

Stomach, v. a. Be angry.

Let a man, though never so justly, oppose himself unto those that are disordered in their ways, and what one amongst them commonly doth not stomach at such contradiction, storm at refusal, and hate such as would reform them?—Hooker, Ecclesiastical Polity.

Stomached, adj. Filled with passions of resentment.

High stomach'd are they both, and full of ire;

In rage deaf as the sea, hoary as fire.

Shakespeare, Richard II, i. 1.

Stomacher, s. Ornamental covering worn by women on the breast.

Instead of a stomacher, a girding of sackcloth.—Isaiah, iii. 24.

Golden gowns and stomachers,

For my lack to give their tears.

Shakespeare, Winter's Tale, iv. 3, song.

Thou marry'st at every year
The lyrick lark and the grave whispering dove,
The sparrow that neglects his life for love,
The household bird with the red stomacher.

Dunne.

I shouldn't ha' thought of your entertaining me with your old father's pipe and Peggy Trundle's stomachers—if you're come here to run away with me, why do the thing at once, and let's have no more talk about it.—O'Keefe, Fountainsbleau, iii. 2.

Stomachful, adj. Sullen; stubborn; perverse.

A stomachful Esau knows that his good father cannot but be displeased with his pagan matches.—Bishop Hall, Remains, p. 134.

A stomachful joy put to school, the whole world could not bring to pronounce the first letter.—Sir R. L'Estrange.

Obstinate or stomachful crying should not be permitted, because it is another way of encouraging those passions which 'tis our business to subdue.—Locke.

Stomachfully, adv. In a stomachful manner.

While so many thousand Israelites were alive, that had stomachfully desired the idol, Aaron, that in weakness condescended, is both pardoned the past and afterwards laden with honours from God.—Bishop Hall, Contemplations, (Ord M.)

Stomachfulness, s. Attribute suggested by Stomachful; stubbornness; sullenness; obstinacy.

Pride, stomachfulness, headiness . . . avall but little.—Granger, Commentary on Ecclesiastes, p. 233: 1621.

Stomachic, adj. Relating to the stomach.

An hypochondriac consumption is an extraneous, occasioned by an infection and obstruction of the stomachic vessels through melancholy humours.—Harvey.

That he was a wine-bibber, a gross liver, glutinously fond of whatever would yield him a little solacement, were it only of a stomachic character, is undeniable enough.—Chapin, Critical and Miscellaneous Essays, Boswell's Life of Johnson.

Used substantively. Medicine for the stomach.

Stomachical, adj. Stomachic.

By a catarrh the stomachical ferment is vitiated.—Sir J. Floyer.

Stomaching, verbal abs. Resentment.

This is no time for private stomaching.

Shakespeare, Antony and Cleopatra, ii. 2.

Stomachless, adj. Wanting stomach.

Thy sleep broken, thy meals stomachless.—Bishop Hall, Balm of Gilead.

Stomachous, adj. Stout; angry; sullen; obstinate. Obsolete.

That stranger knight in presence came,
And goodly served them; but nought again
Him answered, as courtesy became;

STON

{STOLEN STONE

But with stern looks, and stomachous disdain,
Gave signs of grudge and discontentment vain.

Spenser.

Stómata, s. pl. [plural of the Gr. στόμα, stoma, = mouth.] In Botany. Small microscopic orifices in the surface of leaves; (the singular form is so rare, that it would be difficult to say what it is; stoma, however, is the only correct one, inasmuch as the final t is not found either in the nominative or the accusative case singular; stomates as a masculine form is, as stoma is neuter, an impossible form; stomatini, from a singular stomatium, is a better, though a different word. See extract from Lindley).

In most plants the cuticle has certain openings of a very peculiar character, which appear connected with respiration, and which are called stomata, stomata, or stomatia. Stomata are passages through the cuticle, having the appearance of an oval or circular space, in the centre of which is a slit that opens or closes according to circumstances, and thus allows cavity in the subjacent tissue.—Lindley, Introduction to Botany, b. i. ch. ii. sect. 1.

In the flowering plants the perfect stomata appear as roundish or squarish elongations in the epidermal layer, occurring regularly at the meeting angles or sides of four, or more, epidermal cells. Griffith and Heuser, Micrographical Dictionary.

Stone, s. [A.S. stán.]

1. Mineral body, more or less compound and resistant, smaller in bulk than rocks, and larger than pebbles, earthy rather than metallic, and commoner than gems (precious stones). With all of these, however, the ordinary stone has a common general character. See extracts from Woodward and Hill.

Five sharp smooth stones from the next brook he chose,

And fit them to his shing.

Cowley, Davideis.

Rebelling time, destroying power,

Whom stone and brass obey.

Parnell.

Stones are bodies insipid, hard, not ductile or malleable, nor soluble in water.—Woodward, Method of Fossils.

Stones are, the softer and the harder. Of the softer stones are, 1. The foliaceous or flaky, as talk. 2. The fibrous, as the asbestos. 3. The granulated, as the gypsum. Of the harder stones are, 1. The opake stones, as limestones. 2. The semi-transparent, as marble. 3. The pellucid, as crystal and the gems.—Sir J. Hill, Materia Medica.

Of the philosopher's stone, he [Ashmole] says, he knows enough to hold his tongue, but not enough to speak. This stone has not only the power of transmuting any imperfect earthy matter into its utmost degree of perfection, and can convert the basest metals into gold, but into stone, &c., but it has still more virtuous virtues, when the arcanum have been entered into, by the choice fathers of hermetic mysticism. The vegetable stone has power over the nature of man, beast, fowls, fishes, and all kinds of trees and plants, to make them flourish and bear fruit at any time. The magical stone discovers any person wherever he is concealed; while the angelical stone gives the apparitions of angels, and a power of conversing with them. Ashmole, in one of his chemical works, prefixed a frontispiece, which, in several compartments, exhibited Phœbus on a lion, and opposite to him a lady, who represented Diana, with the moon in one hand and an arrow in the other, sitting on a crab; Mercury on a tripod, with the scheme of the heavens in one hand, and his caduceus in the other. These were intended to express the materials of the stone, and the way for the process.—J. Disraeli, Curiosities of Literature, Alchemy.

2. Piece of stone cut for building.

Should I go to church,

And see the holy edifice of stone,

And not bethink me straight of dangerous rocks?

Which touching but my gentle vessel's side,

Would scatter all her spices on the stream.

Shakespeare, Merchant of Venice, i. 1.

The English used the stones to reinforce the pier.

Sir J. Hargrave.

The contrast in this respect [durability], of the works of modern architects, especially in Great Britain, is very humiliating to those who boast so loudly of social advancement; for there is scarcely a public building of recent date which will be in existence one thousand years hence. Many of the most splendid works of modern architecture are hastening to decay, in what may be justly called the very infancy of their existence, if compared with the date of those erected in ancient Italy, Greece, and Egypt. This is remarkably the case with the three bridges of London, Westminster, and Blackfriars: the foundations of which began to perish most visibly in the very lifetime of their construction.

tern. Every stone intended for a durable edifice ought to be tested as to its durability, by immersion in a saturated solution of sulphate of soda, and exposure during some days to the air.—Ure, Dictionary of Arts, Manufactures, and Mines.

5. Gem; precious stone.

I thought I saw
Wedges of gold, cross anchors, heaps of pearl,
Inestimable stones, unvalued jewels.
Shakespeare, Richard III., l. 4.

4. Anything made of stone.

Lend me a looking-glass;
If that her breath will mist or stain the stone,
Why then she lives.
Shakespeare, King Lear, v. 3.

3. Calculous concretion in the kidneys or bladder; the disease arising from a calculus; calculus.

A specific remedy for preventing of the stone I take to be the constant use of alcohol-ale.—Sir W. Temple.

A gentleman supposed his difficulty in urinating proceeded from the stone.—Wierman, Surgery.

6. Case which in some fruits contains the seed, and is itself contained in the fruit.

—To make fruits without core or stone is a curiosity.

7. Testicle.

A nun that is . . . crookbackt, or a dwarf, or that hath a bluish in his eye, or be scurvy, or scabbed, or hath his stones broken.—Leviticus, xxi. 10.

8. Weight containing fourteen pounds: (a stone of meat is eight pounds).

Does Wood think that we will sell him a stone of wool for his counters?—Swift.

9. Funeral monument: (common in composition, as gravestone, even when the material is other than stone).

Should some relenting eye
Glance on the stone where our cold reliques lie,
Pope, Epistle to Abclard.

10. State of torpidity and insensibility.

Though cold like you, unmoved and silent grown,
I have not yet forgot myself in stone.
Pope, Epistle to Abclard.

Used to express intensity.

What need you be so lust'rous rough?
I will not struggle, I will stand alone still.
Shakespeare, King John, iv. 1.
And there lies Wharum by my side,
Stone dead, and in his own blood dyed.
Batter, Hudibras, ii. 3, 1141.

The fellow held his breath, and lay alone still, as if he was dead.—Sir R. L. Estange.
She had got a trick of holding her breath, and lying at her length for stone dead.—Id.
The cottagers having taken a country-dance together, had been all out, and stood alone still with amazement.—Pope.

Used adjectively.

[You'd] rail upon the hostess of the house,
And say you would prevent her at the lect,
Because she brought alone juke, and no seal'd quarts.
Shakespeare, Twelfth Night, ii. 2.

Leave no stone unturned. Do everything that can be done for the production or promotion of any effect.

Women, that left no stone unturn'd
In which the cause might be concern'd,
Brought in their children's spoons and whistles,
To purchase swords, carbines, and pistols.
Batter, Hudibras, ii. 2, 777.
He crimes invented, left unturn'd no stone
To make my guilt appear, and hide his own.
Dryden, Translation of the Kneid, ii. 133.

Stone. v. a.

1. Pelt or beat or kill with stones.

What shall I do unto this people? They be almost ready to stone me.—Exodus, xvii. 4.

2. Harden.

Oh perfur'd woman! thou dost stone my heart;
And mak'st me call what I thought to do,
A murder, which I thought a sacrifice.
Shakespeare, Othello, v. 2.

3. Remove stones.

(See under Stoning, verbal abs. 2.)

Stonewall. s. Crossbow which shoots stones.

Hailstones full of wrath shall be cast as out of a stone-bow.—Wisdom of Solomon, v. 22.
O for a stone-bow to hit him in the eye.
Shakespeare, Twelfth Night, ii. 3.

Stonewreck. s. In Botany. Anglicized form of Saxifraga, or Saxifrage; from saxum = stone + frango = I break. An artificial translation, rather than a true vernacular name.

Stonchat. s. Native bird so called; Saxicola rubetra: (the prefix stone is said to be from the noise, like that of the clicking of stones, rather than from the habitat of the bird; the generic name, however, Saxicola, to which the older name syloia has been changed, indicates the contrary).

The stonchat has much the habits of the whinchat, frequenting commons and sunny places, where they sit upon the uppermost sprays, and dart at every fly that passes, frequently returning to the same place again like the flycatcher, to which they seem as nearly allied as the cold finch or pied flycatcher, insects and worms being their only food.—Montagu, Dictionary of British Birds.

Stoncreay. s. [P] In Falconry. Disease in hawks.

Stoncrop. s. [A.S. stancrop.] In Botany. At present the Sedum acre; the plant of the extract being a different one.

Stoncrop tree is a beautiful tree, but not common.—Mortimer, Husbandry.

Stone-carrlew. s. [two words.] In Ornithology. Thick-knee.

Stoncutter. s. One whose trade is to hew stones.

A stoncutter's man had the vesiculae of his lungs so stuffed with dust, that, in cutting, the knife went as if through a heap of sand.—Derham, Physico-Theology.

My predecessor provided me a monument at the stoncutter's, and would have erected it in the parish church.—Swift.

Stoney. s. Fly of the Caddis, Caddis-worm, or straw-worm.

Stonefruit. s. Fruit of which the seed is covered with a hard shell enveloped in the pulp; botanically, by a drupe.

We gathered ripe apricocks and ripe plums upon one tree, from which we expect some other sorts of stonefruit.—Bay.

Stonetail, or Stonehawk. s. Hawk, for which the Latin name is Lithofalco (λίθος = stone + falco = falcon). Word for word, the first is the fuller form of Stanial.

Stonehearted, or Stony-hearted. adj. Hardhearted; cruel; pitiless.

The stony-hearted villains know it well enough.—Shakespeare, Henry IV. Part I., ii. 2.
Weep, ye stone-hearted men! Oh, read and pity!
W. Browne, Britannia's Pastorals, ii. li. 509.

Stonhorse. s. Horse not castrated.

Where there is most arable land, stonhorses or geldings are more necessary.—Mortimer, Husbandry.

Stonopit. s. Quarry.

There's one found in a stonopit.—Woodward.

Stonopitch. s. Hard inspissated pitch.

The Egyptian mummies are reported to be as hard as stonopitch.—Bacon, Natural and Experimental History.

Stoner. s. One who strikes, beats, or kills with stones.

It was the character of Jerusalem to be the killer of the prophets, and the stoner of them who were sent unto her.—Barrow, Exposition on the Creed.

Stonescast, or Stonecast. s. Distance to which a stone may be thrown.

A madder thing to see them ride, though not half a stonecast.—Sir T. Herbert, Relation of some Years' Travels into Africa and the Great Asia, p. 314.

About a stone-cast from the wall,
A sluice with blacken'd water slept,
And o'er it many, round and small,
The clustered marsh-mosses crept.
Tennyson, Mariana.

Stonesmith, or Stonesmickle. s. Stonchat.

Stonesquarer. s. One who shapes stones into squares.

Solomon's builders and Hiram's builders did hew them, and the stonesquarers.—1 Kings, v. 18.

Stoneware. s. Variety of pottery, consisting of stone in powder in addition to the clay.

The second kind (of pottery) consists of an infusible mixture of earth, which is refractory in the kiln, and continues opaque. This is pottery, properly so called; but it comprehends several species, which are earthenware, stoneware, flintware, fayence, delftware, iron-stone china, &c. The earliest attempts to make a compact stoneware with a painted glass, seem to have originated with the Arabians in Spain about the ninth century, and to have passed thence into Majorca, in which island they were carried on with no little success.—Ure, Dictionary of Arts, Manufactures, and Mines.

Stonework. s. Building of stone.

They make two walls with flat stones, and fill the space with earth, and so they continue the stonework.—Mortimer, Husbandry.

Stoniness. s. Attribute suggested by Stony.

1. Quality of having many stones.

The name Hexton owes its original to the stoniness of the place.—Hoarne.

Small gravel or stoniness is found therein.—Mortimer, Husbandry.

2. Hardness of mind.

He hath some stoniness at the bottom.—Hammond.

Stoning. verbal abs.

1. Act of one who stones, either by pelting or by castration.

Crucifixion was a punishment unknown to the Jewish laws, among whom the stoning to death was the punishment for blasphemy.—Stepens, Sermons.

2. Clearing the ground of stones.

As the stones were laid together in the wall for defence; so they were gathered off from the soil, to avoid offence. But to what purpose is the fruitful stoning, if the ground yield a plentiful crop of briars, thistles, weeds?—Bishop Hall, Fast-Sermons: 1623.

Stony. adj.

1. Made of stone.

Nor stony tower, nor walls of beaten brass,
Can be retentive to the strength of spirit.
Shakespeare, Julius Caesar, i. 2.

Nor slept the winds
Within their stony caves, but rush'd abroad
From the four hinges of the world, and fell
On the vast wilderness, whose tallest pines,
Though rooted deep as high and sturdiest oaks,
Bow'd their stiff necks, laden with stony blasts,
Or torn up sheer.
Milton, Paradise Regained, iv. 413.

Here the marshy grounds approach your fields,
And there the soil a stony harvest yields.
Dryden, Translation of Virgil, Eclogues, l. 67.

As in spires he stood, he turn'd to stone;
The stony make retain'd the figure still his own.
Id., Translation from Ovid, The Trigan War.
They suppose these bodies to be only water petrified, or converted into these sparry or stony icicles.
—Woodward.

2. Abounding with stones.

From the stony Marahus
Bring your ducks, and live with us.
Milton, Arcades, 102.

3. Petrifying.

Now let the stony dart of countless cold
Pierce to my heart, and pass through every side.
Spenser.

4. Hard; inflexible; unrelenting.

The stony hardness of two many patrons' hearts,
Not touch'd with any feeling in this case.—Hooker, Ecclesiastical Polity.

Thou art come to answer
A stony adversary, an inhuman wretch,
Uncapable of pity.
Shakespeare, Merchant of Venice, iv. 1.

It will clear their senses dark,
What may suffice, and soften stony hearts
To pray, repent, and bring obediences due.
Milton, Paradise Lost, iii. 183.

Indifference, clad in wisdom's guise,
All fortitude of mind supplies;
For how can stony bowels melt,
In those who never pity felt?
Swift, On the Death of Dr. Swift.

Sir Pitt had judged correctly, that he would not quit the premises. She contented herself by preserving a solemn and stony silence, when in company of Pitt and his rebellious wife, and by frightening the children in the nursery by the ghastly gleam of her demeanour.—Thackeray, Vanity Fair, ch. xli.

Stook. s. [N.Fr. estoque.] Set of sheaves, as arranged at harvest, for carting or leading off the land.

Stool. s. [Lat. stolo.] Shoot from the trunk of a tree.

Stool. s. [A.S. stol.]

1. Seat without a back, so distinguished from a chair.

If a chair be defined a seat for a single person, with a back belonging to it, then a stool is a seat for a single person without a back.—Watts, Logic.

Thou fearful fool,
Why tak'st not of the same fruit of gold?
No sitst down on that same silver stool,
To rest thy weary person in the shadow cold?
Spenser.

Now which were wise, and which were fools?
Prior Alma sits between two stools!
The more she reads, the more perplex.
Prior, Alma, l. 220.

2. Fecal evacuation.

There be medicines that move stools, and not urine; some other urine, and not stools: those that purge by stool, are such as enter not all, or little, into the urinary vein; but either at the first are not digestible by the stomach, and therefore move immediately downwards to the guts; or else are afterwards rejected by the urinary vein, and so turn likewise downwards to the guts.—Bacon, Natural and Experimental History.

The peristaltic motion, or repeated changes of contraction and dilation, is not in the lower guts, else one would have a continual need of going to stool.—Arbuthnot, On the Nature and Choice of Aliments.

Stool of Repentance, or cutty stool. Punishment in the discipline of the kirk of Scotland, somewhat analogous to the pillory. It is elevated above the congregation. In some places there may be a seat in it; but it is generally without, and the person stands therein who has been guilty of fornication, for three Sundays, in the forenoon; and after sermon is called upon by name and surname, the beadle or kirk-officer bringing the offender, if refractory, forwards to his post; and then the preacher proceeds to admonition. Here too are set to public view adulterers; only these are habited in a coarse canvas, analogous to a hairy or monastic vest, with a hood to it, which they call the sack or sackcloth, and that every Sunday throughout a year, or longer.

Unequal and unreasonable judgement of things brings many a great man to this stool of repentance.—Sir R. L'Ettrange.

Stoolball. s. Play where bulls are driven from stool to stool.

While Betty dances on the green,
And Sam is at stoolball woen. Prior, Alma, l. 309.
Kind service cannot be checked from hand to hand like a shuttlecock or stoolball.—Sir W. Scott, Ivanhoe, ch. xxvii.

Stoop. See Stoup.

Stoop. v. n. [A.S. stupian.]

1. Bend down; bend forward.

Like unto the boughs of this tree he bended downward, and stooped toward the earth.—Sir W. Raleigh.

2. Lean forward standing or walking.

When Pelopidas and Iamenes were sent to Artaxerxes, Protopidas did not unworthy; but Iamenes let fall his ring to the ground, and stooping for that, was thought to make his adoration.—Bishop Stillingfleet.

[He] stooping, open'd my left side, and took from thence a rib. Milton, Paradise Lost, viii. 463.
So, stooping down, as needs he must,
Who cannot sit upright,
He grasped the issue with both his hands,
And ran with all his might. Cowper, John Gilpin.

3. Yield; bend; submit.

I was the son of Henry the fifth,
Who made the dauphin and the French to stoop. Shakespeare, Henry VI. Part III. l. 1.
Mighty in her ships stood Carthage long,
And swept the riches of the world from far;
Yet stoop'd to Rome, less wealthy, but more strong. Dryden, Annus Mirabilis, v.

4. Descend from rank or dignity; condescend.

Where men of great wealth stoop to husbandry, it multiplieth riches exceedingly.—Bacon.
He that condescended so far, and stooped so low, to invite and to bring us to heaven, will not refuse us a gracious reception there.—Boyle, Seraphick Love.

No man ever so much feared death, to avert which he stooped to every nuisance and sought every remedy. His physician had sworn that, if he were dissolved, the king would not survive a week; and Louis, embolden'd by sickness and terror, bore the rudest usage from this man, and endeavoured to secure his services by vast rewards.—Italian, View of the State of Europe during the Middle Ages, pt. ii. ch. i.

5. Yield; be inferior.

Death his death-wound shall then receive,
And stoop ignominious. Milton, Paradise Lost, iii. 251.
These are arts, my prince,
In which your Zama does not stoop to Rome. Addison, Cato.

6. Sink from resolution or superiority; condescend.

They, whose authority is required unto the satisfying of your demand, do think it both dangerous to admit such concourse of divided minds, and unwear that their laws, which, being once solemnly established, are to exact obedience of all men and to constrain thereto, should so far stoop as to hold themselves in suspense from taking any effect upon you, till some disputer can persuade you to be obedient.—Hooker, Ecclesiastical Polity.

7. Come down on prey as a fulcon.

When they stoop, they stoop with the like wing. Shakespeare, Henry V. l. v. 1.
Here stands my dove: stoop at her, if you dare. R. Jonson, Alchemist.

8. Alight from the wing.

[Satian] ready now
To stoop with waried wings and willing feet,
On the bare outside of this world. Milton, Paradise Lost, iii. 73.
Twelve swans behold in beautiful order move,
And stoop with closing pinions from above. Dryden, Translation of the Æneid, l. 544.

9. Sink to a lower place.

Cowering low
With blandishment, each bird stoop'd on his wing. Milton, Paradise Lost, viii. 350.

Stoop. v. a.

1. Submit.

Role cause that stoops
Their grandeur to man's eye. Young, Night Thoughts, night ix.

2. Bend forward, as a vessel of liquor.

To stoop this vinero to the very loam.—Nachtel, Life of Archbishop Williams, p. 55.

Stoop. s.

1. Act of stooping; inclination downward.

2. Descent from dignity or superiority.

Can any loyal subject see
With patience such a stoop from sovereignty?
An ocean pour'd upon a narrow brook? Dryden, Spanish Friar, iv. 2.

3. Fall of a bird upon his prey.

Now will I wander through the air,
Mount, make a stoop at every fair. Waller.
An eagle made a stoop at him in the middle of his exaltation, and carried him away.—Sir R. L'Ettrange.

Stooping. verbal abs. Act of one who, that which, stoops. In Fulcurey. See extract.

Stooping is when a hawk, being upon her wings at the height of her pitch, lendeth violently down to strike the fowls, or any other prey.—Latham, Fulcurey.

Stoopingly. ado. In a stooping manner; with inclination downwards.

Nani was noted to tread softly, to walk stoopingly, and to raise himself from benches with laborious gesture.—Sir H. Wotton.

Stoop. v. a. [N.Fr. estouper.]

1. Hinder from progressive motion.

From the oracle
They will bring all; whose spiritual counsel had,
Shall stop or spur me. Shakespeare, Winter's Tale, ii. 1.

2. Hinder from successive operation.

Can any dreamer find a way
To stop the approaches of decay,
And mend a ruin'd fate? Earl of Dorset.

3. Hinder from any change of state, whether to better or worse.

4. Hinder from action or practice.

As the truth of Christ is in me, no man shall stop me of this boasting.—2 Corinthians, xi. 10.
Friend, 'tis the duke's pleasure,
Whose disposition, all the world well knows,
Will not be rubb'd nor stopp'd. Shakespeare, King Lear, ii. 2.

5. Put an end to the motion or action of anything; intercept.

Almon falls, old Tyreus' eldest care,
Pierced with an arrow from the distant war:
Fix'd in his throat the flying weapon stood,
And stopp'd his breath, and drank his vital blood. Dryden, Translation of the Æneid, vii. 741.

6. Repress; suspend.

Every bold winner, when about to engage in the commission of any known sin, should arrest his confidence, and stop the execution of his purpose with this question: Do I believe that God has denounced death to such a practice, or do I not?—South, Sermons.

7. Suppress.

He, on occasion of stopping my play, did me a good office at court, by representing it as long ago unadvised.—Dryden.

8. Regulate musical strings with the fingers. In instruments of strings, if you stop a string high, whereby it hath less scope to tremble, the sound is more treble, but yet more dead.—Bacon, Natural and Experimental History.

9. Close any aperture.

You shall smite every fenced city, and every chieftain city, and shall fell every good tree, stop all wells of water.—2 Kings, iii. 19.

They refused to hearken, and pulled away the shoulder, and stopp'd their ears, that they should not hear. Jeremiah, vii. 11.

A hawk's bill, the holes stopp'd up, hang by a thread within a bottle-glass, and stop the glass close with wax.—Bacon.

His majesty stopp'd a leak that did much harm.—Id.

Celaus gives a precept about bleeding, that when the blood is good, which is to be juded by the colour, that immediately the vein should be stopp'd.—Arbuthnot.

10. Obstruct; encumber.

Mountains of ice that stop the imagined way. Milton, Paradise Lost, x. 201.

11. Garnish with proper punctuation.

Stop. v. n.

1. Cease to go forward.

Some strange commotion
Is in his brain; he bites his lip, and starts;
Stops on a sudden, looks upon the ground,
Then lays his finger on his temple; straight
Springs out into fast gait, then stops again. Shakespeare, Henry VIII. iii. 2.

When men pursue their thoughts of space, they stop at the confusions of body, as if space were there at an end.—Locke.

If the rule throng pour on with furious pace,
And hap to break thee from a friend's embrace,
Stop short, nor struggle through the crowd in vain. Gay, Trivia, iii. 87.

2. Cease from any course of action.

Encroachments are made by degrees from one step to another; and the best time to stop is at the beginning.—Leesley.

Stop. s.

1. Cessation of progressive motion.

Thought's the slave of time, and life time's fool;
And time, that takes survey of all the world,
Must have a stop. Shakespeare, Henry IV. Part I. v. 1.

The markid, whose courier's face
Eclipses the sun, and doth unluck
Her at his rise, at his full stop Tacks and shuts up her poudy shop. Cleveland.

A lion, musing for his prey, made a stop on a sudden at a hideous yelling noise, which startled him.—Sir R. L'Ettrange.

2. Hindrance of progress; obstruction; act of stopping.

In weak and tender minds we little know what misery this strict opinion would breed, besides that stops it would make in the whole course of all men's lives and actions.—Hooker, Ecclesiastical Polity.

My praise the Fault claim,
And then great hero, greatest of thy name,
Orleân'd in war to move the sinking state,
And by delays to put a stop to fate. Dryden, Translation of the Æneid, vi. 1165.

Occult qualities put a stop to the improvement of natural philosophy, and therefore have been rejected.—Sir I. Newton, On Opticks.

Brokers hinder trade, by making the circuit which the money goes larger, and in that circuit more stops, so that the returns must necessarily be slower and smaller.—Locke.

Female zeal, though proceeding from so good a principle, if we may believe the French historians, often put a stop to the proceedings of their kings, which might have ended in a reformation.—Addison.

3. Repression; hindrance of operation.

'Tis a great stop towards the mastery of our desires to give this stop to them, and shut them up in silence.—Locke.

4. Cessation of action.

Look you to the guard to night;
Let's teach ourselves that honourable stop,
Not to outstrip discretion. Shakespeare, Othello, ii. 3.

5. Interruption.

Thou art full of love and honesty,
And wretch's thy words before thou giv'st them
breath;
Therefore these stops of thine fright me the more. Shakespeare, Othello, iii. 3.

6. Prohibition of sale.

If they should open a war, they foreclose the consumption France must fall into by the stop of their wine and sa, wholly taken off by our two nations.—Sir W. Temple.

7. That which obstructs; obstacle; impediment.

The proud Darcia, full of wrathful spite
And fierce disdain to be affronted on,
Inferred her purple heat with all her might,
That stop out of the way to overthrow. Spenser, Faerie Queene.

On indeed they went; but O! not far;
A fatal stop traversed their headlong course.

Daniel.
Blamed be that God who cast rubs, stops, and hindrances in my way, when I was attempting the commission of such a sin.—South, Sermons.
So melancholy a prospect should inspire us with zeal to oppose some stop to the rising torrent, and check this overflowing of ungodliness.—Rogers.

8. In Music.

a. Hole or vent in a wind-instrument which is stopped by the finger.

You would play upon me, you would seem to know my stops; you would pluck out the heart of my mystery.—Shakespeare, Hamlet, iii. 2.

Blot are those,
Whose blood and judgement are so well commingled,

That they are not a pipe for fortune's finger,
To sound what stop she please.

A variety of strins may be observed on their harp, and of stops on their tibia; which shews the little foundation that such writers have gone upon, who, from a short passage in a classical author, have determined the precise shape of the ancient musical instruments, with the exact number of their pipes, strings, and stops.—Addison, Travels in Italy.

b. Gradation of the scale made by the fingers on the strings of a lute.

The further a string is strained, the less superstraining goes to a note; for it requires good winding of a string before it will make any note at all; and in the stops of lutes, the higher they go, the less distance is between the frets.—Bacon.

c. Mechanism of the organ, by which a certain range of pipes is opened or closed.

The organ-sound a thum survives the stop,
Before it doth the dying note give up.

Daniel, Civil Wars of York and Lancaster.

Had work, and rested not; the solemn pipe,
And dulcimer, all organs of sweet stop.

Milton, Paradise Lost, vii. 504.

The sound
Of instruments, that made metellous chime,
Was heard of harp and organ; and who mured
Their stops, and chords, was seen; his volant touch Instinct through all proportions, low and high,
Fled, and pursued transverse the resonant fugue.

Ibid., xi. 351.

9. Point in writing, by which sentences are distinguished.

Even the iron-pointed pen,
That notes the track down of men,
Wet with tears still'd from the eyes
Of the flinty destinies,
Would have learn'd a softer style,
And have been ashamed to spoil
His life's sweet story by the lasts
Of a cruel stop ill-plac'd.

Cranhaw.

stopcock. s. Pipe made to let out liquor, stopped by a turning cock.

No man could spit from him without it, but would drive like some paralytick or fool; the tongue being as a stopcock to the air, till upon its removal the spittle is driven away.—Grew, Compendio Sacra.

stopgap. s. Something substituted; temporary expedient.

stoppage. s. Act of stopping; state of being stopped.

The effects are a stoppage of circulation by too great a weight upon the heart, and suffocation.—Arbuthnot.

The stoppage of a cough, or spitting, increases phlegm in the stomach.—Sir J. Floyer, Proternatural State of the animal Humours.

stopper. s.

1. One who closes any aperture.

The ancients of Gebel, and the wise men thereof, were in these thy calkers, [in the margin stoppers of chinks].—Ezekiel, xxvii. 2.

2. Tobacco-stopper.

Little tube of mighty power, . . .
With my little stopper prov'd.

J. H. Browne, Imitation of A. Philips.

stopless. adj. Not to be stopped; irresistible.

Making a civil and staid senate rude,
And stopless as a running multitude.

Sir W. Davenant, On King Charles II.'s Return.

stopple. s. That by which any hole or the mouth of any vessel is filled up.

Bottles swung, or carried in a wheel-barrow upon rough ground, fill not full, but leave some air; for if the liquor come close to the stopple, it cannot flow.—Bacon.

There were no shute or stopples made for the ears, that any loud or sharp noise might awaken it, as also a soft and gentle murmur provoke it to sleep.—Bay, On the Wisdom of God manifested in the Works of the Creation.

Storage. s. Laying up as a stock or store.

The first and most natural cry would be for irrigation, and this, no doubt, is one of the best cures for famine. But irrigation itself means only the storage and distribution of a natural water supply, and this supply depends upon the rainfall of the season.—Times Newspaper, February 25, 1860.

stora. s. [Gr. stira; Lat. styrax.] In Botany and Pharmacy. Balsam of the styrax; liquidamber: (stora is the English, styrax the Latin form).

I yielded a pleasant odour like the best myrrh, as galbanum and onyx, and sweet stora.—Eccelesiasticus, xxiv. 13.

Stora, styrax, flows from the twigs and the trunk of the Liquidamber styraciflua, a tree which grows in Louisiana, Virginia, and Mexico. Liquidamber, as this resin is called, is a brown or ash-gray substance, of the consistence of turpentine, which dries up rapidly, has an agreeable smell, like benzoin, and a bitterish, sharp, burning taste. It dissolves in four parts of alcohol and affords 1-4 per cent. of benzoic acid.—Ure, Dictionary of Arts, Manufactures, and Mines.

store. s.

1. Large number; large quantity; plenty.

The ships are fraught with store of victuals, and good quantity of treasure.—Bacon.

None yet, but store hereafter from the earth
Up hither like aerial vapours flow.

Of all things transitory and vain, when sin
With vanity had fill'd the works of men.

Milton, Paradise Lost, iii. 444.

With store of Indies, whose bright eyes
Rain influence, and judge the prize
Of wit and arms, while both contend
To win her grace whom all commend.

Ibid., L'Allegro, 121.

Give, grant me length of life, and years good store
Heap on my bending back.

Dryden, Translation of Juvenal, x. 301.

2. Stock accumulated; supply hoarded.

We lived as momecern'd and happily
As the first age in nature's golden scene,
Supine amidst our flowing store,
We slept securely, and we dreamt of more.

Dryden, Threnodia Augustalis, 11.

Divine Cecilia came,
Inventress of the vocal frame;
The sweet enthusiast from her sacred store
Enlarged the former narrow bounds,
And added length to solemn sounds.

Ibid., Alexander's Feast, 161.

Ther, goddess, thee, Britannia's isles adores:
How oft in fields of death thy presence sought!
Nor think the mighty prize too dearly bought.
Addison, Letter from Italy to Lord Halifax, 127.

3. State of being accumulated; hoard.

Is not this laid up in store with me, and sealed up among my treasures?—Deuteronomy, xxxii. 34.

4. Storehouse; magazine.

Sulphurous and nitrous fumes,
Concocted and adust, they ruin'd
To blacked grain, and into store convey'd.

Milton, Paradise Lost, vi. 513.

Store. adj. Hoarded; laid up; accumulated.

What floods of treasure have flowed into Europe by that action, so that the cause of Christendom is raised since twenty times told: of this treasure the gold was accumulated and store treasure; but the silver is still growing. Bacon, Advertisement touching a Holy War.

store. v. a. [N.Fr. estorer, estorement = provisions, from Lat. instauro = I repair anything.]

1. Furnish; replenish.

Wise Plato said the world with men was stored,
That succour each to other might afford.

Sir J. Denham, Of Prudence.

Her face with thousand beauties blent;
Her mind with thousand virtues stored;
Her power with boundless joy content,
Her person only not adored.

Prior, Ode on the Death of Queen Mary, xxxv.

2. Stock against a future time.

Some were of opinion that it were best to stay where they were, until more aid and store of victuals were come; but others said the enemy were but lately stored with victuals, and therefore could not long hold out.—Knutley, History of the Turks.

One having stored a pond of four acres with carps, tench, and other fish, and only put in two small pikes, at seven years' end, upon the draught, not one fish was left, but the two pikes grown to an excessive bigness.—Sir M. Hale.

The mind reflects on its own operations about the ideas got by sensation, and thereby stores itself with a new set of ideas, which I call ideas of reflection.—Locks.

3. Lay up; hoard.

Let the main part of the corn be a common stock, laid in and stored up, and then delivered out in proportion.—Bacon.

Storehouse. s.

1. Magazine; treasury; place in which things are hoarded and repositied against a time of use.

By us it is willingly confessed, that the Scripture of God is a storehouse abounding with inestimable treasures of wisdom and knowledge, in many kinds over and above things in this kind barely necessary.
—Hooker, Ecclesiastical Polity.

Joseph opened all the storehouses, and sold unto the Egyptians.—Genesis, xli. 56.

Suffer us to famish, and their storehouses cramm'd with grain!

Shakespeare, Coriolanus, i. 1.

To these high powers a storehouse doth pertain,
Where they all arts and general reasons lay;

Which in the soul, even after death, remain,
And no Lethæan flood can wash away.

Sir J. Davies, On the Immortality of the Soul.

My heart hath been a storehouse long of things
And sayings laid up, portending strange events.

Milton, Paradise Regained, ii. 103.

The image of God was refulgent in man's practical understanding, that storehouse of the soul, in which are treasured up the rules of action and the seeds of morality.—South, Sermons.

As many different sounds as can be made by single articulations, so many letters there are in the storehouse of nature.—Holler.

Early in the spring Athlon and Cohorn had, by a bold and dexterous move, surprised Givet, and had utterly destroyed both storehouses and stores.—Macaulay, History of England, ch. xxii.

2. Great mass repositied.

They greatly joyed merry tales to feign,
Of which a storehouse did with her remain.

Spenser, Faerie Queen.

Storekeeper. s. One whose business is to look after and keep stores.

The Stationary Office in London . . . consists of a comptroller, a storekeeper, and about thirty clerks and other subordinate officers, and has a branch establishment at Dublin.—R. J. Courting, in Brands and Cox, Dictionary of Science, Literature, and Art, Stationery.

Storer. s. One who lays up.

A wench of a storer, or Your mother's wife.

H. Jonson, Devil is an Ass.

Storied. adj. Furnished with stories; adorned with historical pictures.

Let my due feet never fail

To walk the stonious cloister pale,
And love the high-embow'd roof,
With m-tick pillar, massy proof;
And storied windows, richly dight,
Casting a dim religious light.

Milton, Il Penseroso, 155.

Some greedy minion or imperious wife
The trophical arches, stor'd with baits, invade.

Pope, Essay on Man, iv. 376.

Can storied urn or animated bust
Back to its mansion call the fleeting breath?

Can honour's voice provoke the silent dust,
Or flattery soothe the dull cold ear of death?

Gray, Elegy written in a Country Churchyard.

Place it where sweetest sunlight falls
Upon the storied walls.

Trappson, Ode to Memory.

Storied. s. Historian; relater of stories.

Obsolete.

The storie . . . made of three most famous and credible storied stories in Greek land.—Bishop Peock, in Lewis's Life of him, p. 117.

Storifying. part. adj. Historical. Rare.

Tacitus complains his storifying vein is becalmed —Christian Religion's Appeal, p. 70.

Stork. s. [A.S. stora.] Bird of the genus

Ciconia.

The stork in the heaven knoweth her appointed thine.—Jeremiah, viii. 7.

Who bid the stork, Columba like, explore Heavens not his own, and worlds unknown before?

Who calls the comel, states the certain day,
Who forms the phalanx, and who points the way?

Pope, Essay on Man, iii. 105.

In the days of Merrett, Willoughby, and Ray, the white stork was considered a very rare visitor to this country. Dr. Turner even mentions that he had only seen it in confinement; but Mr. Thomas

Brown, writing at Norwich, says, 'I have seen this bird in the fens, and some have been shot in the marshes between this and Yarmouth.' Bewick says that Wallis, in his History of Northumberland, mentions one which was killed near Chollerford

Bridge, in the year 1766. . . This species is recorded by Dr. Harvey to have been killed at Ferryway, in Ireland. Dr. Edward Moore, on the authority of Mr. Gooding, says, that three birds have been observed in Devonshire. One killed in Hampshire in 1805, by the gamekeeper of John Ganton, Esq., of Little Park, near Wickham. One has been killed near Salisbury: one bird, out of a flock of four, was shot in Oxfordshire. Two have been killed in Kent;

one of them in Romney Marsh; the second near Sandwich. One was killed at Mildenhall, in Suffolk, in 1850. Several have been killed in Norfolk. I learn from Frederick Holme, Esq., that a flock of four or five white storks haunted the pools of Keady Common in the East Riding of Yorkshire, for some time in the spring of 1880; and one of them was shot. One specimen has been killed in Scotland, communicated to me by Thomas M. Grant, Esq.; and two examples are said to have been killed in Scotland. W. R. Fisher, Esq., sent me word that a white stork was shot at Halverston, seven miles from Yarmouth, in May, 1882; another was shot at Breeden, near Yarmouth, in 1882; and Thomas Thornhill, Esq., favoured me with notice of one killed in Essex during the same year. The first occurrence of the black stork in a wild state in this country, was made known by Colonel Montagu in a paper read before the Linnean Society on the 2nd of May, 1818; and I am not aware that more than three or four other examples of this bird have occurred since.—Yarrell, History of British Birds.

Storkbill. s. In Bulany. Native plant of the genus Erodium (centaureum and moschatum). Like Cranesbill, which is an approximate translation of Geranium (Gr. geraneion = crane) and Heronsbill (which is a better rendering of Erodium, heron, than the present word) the name is taken from the beaklike character of the fructification. The etymological equivalent of storkbill is Pelargonium.

Storm. s. [A.S.]

1. Tempest; commotion of elements.

We hear this fearful tempest sing,
Yet seek no shelter to avoid the storm.
Shakespeare, Richard II. ii. 1.
Then she utters, unmissed the while Herself, though faintest unsupported flower,
From her best prop so far, and storm so nigh.
Milton, Paradise Lost, ix. 451.
Sulphurous hail shot after us in storm.
Ibid. i. 172.
Then stay, my child! storms beat and roll the main;
Oh! beat those storms, and roll the seas in vain.
Pope, Translation of the Odyssey, ii. 414.
" follow thro' through sunshine and through " storm."
H. Taylor, Philip van Artevelde, Part I. ii. 3.

2. Assault in a fortified place.

Or how the storm the walls were won,
Or how the victor sack'd and burnt the town.
Dryden.

3. Commotion; sedition; tumult; clamour; bustle.

Whilst I in Ireland nourish a mighty band,
I will stir up in England some black storm.
Shakespeare, Henry VI. Part II. iii. 1.
Her sister
Began to scold, and raise up such a storm,
That mortal ears might hardly endure the din.
Id., Taming of the Shrew, i. 1.
4. Affliction; calamity; distress.
A brave man struggling in the storms of fate,
And greatly falling with a falling state.
Pope, Prologue to Addison's Cato.

5. Violence; vehemence; tumultuous force.

As oft as we are delivered from those either imminent or present calamities, against the storm and tempest whereof we all instantly craved favour from above, let it be a question what we should render unto God for his blessings, universally, specially, and extraordinarily bestowed. Hooker, Ecclesiastical Polity.

(See also under STRESS.)

Storm. v. a. Attack by open force.

From ploughs and harrows went to seek renown,
They fight in fields, and storms the slaken town.
Dryden.
There the brazen tower was storm'd of old,
When Jove descended in almighty gold.
Pope, Translation of the First Book of the Thebais of Statius.

Storm. v. n.

1. Raise tempests.

So now he storms with many a sturdy stoure,
So now his blustering blast each coast doth scour.
Spenser.

2. Rage; fume; be loudly angry.

Hoarse, and all in rage,
As mock'd they storm.
Milton, Paradise Lost, xii. 58.
When you return, the master storms, the lady scolds.—Swift.
While time they rail, and scold, and storm,
It passes but for common form.
Id., Journal of a Modern Lady.
Then the music touch'd the gates and died;
Rose again from where it seemed to fall,
Storm'd in oris of song, a growing tale.
Tennyson, The Vision of Sin.

Stormbeast. s. Injured by storm.

O turn thy rudier hitherward awhile;
Here may thy storm-bet vessel safely ride.
Spenser, Faerie Queen.

VOL. II.

Stormbird, or Stormcock. s. Name for the mistle-bird, mistle-thrush, or mistletoethrush; Turdus viscivorus.

Stormfal. adj. Stormy.

The savage Prussians, with their amber-fishing, their bear-hunting, their bloody idolatry, and stormfal untutored energy, are brought vividly into view. Carlyle, Criticism and Miscellaneous Essays, Writings of Werner.

Nature too is putting forth her green hopes, under bright sunshine defied by the stormfal east.—*Id.,
The French Revolution*, pt. ii. li. i. ch. vii.

Storming. verbal abs. Taking by storm.

Three landed men at arms I think it was,
You freely fell upon with sword in hand,
After the storming of the fort at Sas.
H. Taylor, Philip van Artevelde, Part I. i. 2.

Stormwind. s. Blast of a tempest.

And now the stormwind came, and it
Was terrible and strong;
It struck with its creaking wings,
And chased us south along.
Coleridge, Ancient Mariner.

Stormy. adj.

1. Tempestuous.

The rising of some stormy flood,
Mycor for Magistrate, p. 624; 1670.
Bellowing clouds burst with a stormy sound,
And with an armed winter strew the ground.
Addison.
The tender apple from their parents rent
By stormy shocks, must not neglected be.
J. Phillips, Cyder.

Ye mariners of England,
Who guard our native seas;
Whose flag has braved a thousand years,
The battle and the breeze:
Your glorious standard launch again,
To meet another foe;
As ye sweep, through the deep,
While the stormy tempest blows;
While the battle rages loud and long,
And the stormy tempest blows.
Campbell.

2. Violent; passionate.

Story. s. Floor; flight of rooms.
Avoid enormous heights of seven stories, and the contrary fault of low distributed fronts.—*Sir H.
Wotton, Elements of Architecture.*
Sonnets or pieces to Chloë
Might raise a house about two stories;
A lyric ode would skate; a catch
Would tile; an epicurean would thatch.
Swift.

Story. v. a. [Y.N.Fr. extorer (from Lat. instaurare) = construct.] Range one under another.

Because all the parts of an undisturbed fluid are of equal gravity, or gradually placed or storied, according to the difference of it; any construction that can be supposed to be naturally and mechanically made in such a fluid, must have a like structure of its several parts; that is, either be all over of a similar gravity, or have the more ponderous parts nearer to its basis. Hentley, Sermons.

Story. [Lat. historia; Gr. istoria.]

1. History; account of things past.

The fable of the dividing of the world between the three sons of Saturn arose from the true story of the dividing of the earth between the three brothers, the sons of Noah.—Sir W. Raleigh.
"I have heard relating what was done
For my remembrance: now hear me relate
My story, which perhaps thou hast not heard."
Milton, Paradise Lost, viii. 203.

Matters of fact, concerning times, places, persons, actions, which depend upon story, and the relation of others, these things are not capable of being proved by such scientific principles.—Bishop Wilkins.

Governments that once made such a noise, as founded upon the deepest counsels and the strongest law; yet by some slight misarrangement, which let in ruin upon them, are now so utterly extinct, that nothing remains of them but a name; nor are there the least traces of them to be found but only in story.—South, Sermons.

2. Small tale; petty narrative; account of a single incident.

In the road between Bern and Solenne, a monument erected by the republic of Bern tells us the story of an Englishman not to be met with in any of our own writers.—Addison.

3. Idle or trifling tale; petty fiction; euphemism, or mild term, for a lie; fib.

These flaws and starts would well become
A woman's story at a winter's fire,
Authorised by her grandmother.
Shakespeare, Macbeth, iii. 4.

This scene had some bold Greek or British bard
Rebeld of old, what stories had we heard
Of fabrics, satyrs, and the nymphs their dams,
Their feasts, their revels, and their amorous flames!
Sir J. Denham, Cooper's Hill.

His ego verisimile feel, built after homocor-
I wrote the lines;—claim'd them; he told stories.
Barham, Topsy-turvy, l. 9, 10.
Note on the Quagmire.

Drops of compassion tremble on my eyelids, Ready to fall as soon as you have told your pitiful story.—

Story. God bless you, I have more to tell, sir,
Only last night, a drinking of the Chequers.
This poor old hat and breeches, as you see, were Torn in a scuffle.

Cunning. P. story of the Autopsia, Fictal of Hansbury and the Kufegreider.

Voltaire has a curious essay to show that most of our best modern stories and plots originally belonged to the eastern nations, a fact which has been made more evident by recent research. I. Disraeli, Curiosities of Literature, Prince's House, l. 1.

Story. v. a. Tell in the manner of; deliver as, history; give an account of anything; relate; narrate. Rare.

How worthy he is, I will leave to appear hereafter, rather than story him in his own hearing.—*Shake-
spear, Cymbeline*, i. 3.

'Tis not vain or fabulous
What the same poets, taught by the heavenly muse,
Story'd of old in high immortal verse,
Of dire chimæras and enchanted isles,
And rifted rocks, whose entrance leads to hell.
Milton, Comus, 511.

It is storied of the brazen Colossus, in the island of Rhodes, that it was seventy cubits high; the size of it being so big, that no man could grasp one of the arms with both his arms.—Bishop O'Brien.

Storybook. s. Book containing stories or tales; collection or repertory of stories, tales, or fables.

My maid left on the table one of her story-books, which I found full of strange impertinence, of poor servants who come to be ladies.—Swift.

Storyteller. s.

1. One who relates tales in conversation;
historian, in contempt.

In such a satire all would seek a share,
And every fool will fancy he is there;
Old storytellers too must pine and die,
To see their antiquated wit laid by;
Like her who miss'd her name in a lampoon,
And grieved to find herself drow'd so soon.
Dryden.

Company will be no longer pestered with dull, dry, tedious storytellers.—Swift, Polite Conversation.

2. One who tells fibs.

Storytelling. s. System, habit, amusement or pastime, of telling stories; practice or art of a storyteller.

a. In the way of narrative.

A Christmas party was gathered round a fire—a heating, roaring, jovial coal fire—and indulging in the orthodox amusement of story-telling. Sold Dutch Pictures, Wild Mr. Will.

b. As lies or fibs.

Stot. s. [A.S. stotte = hack-horse; stod-hors = stallion.] Young bullock or steer.

Stound. v. n. Be in pain or sorrow.

Stound. s. [A.S. stunian = dash, strike, stun.]

1. Sorrow; grief; mishap.

Begin and end the bitter babbling stound, Spenser.
The fox his copmate found,
To whom complaining his unhappy stound,
He with him faced some better chance to find. Id.

2. Shooting pain.

Keep your corpse from the car-bull stounds
That in my carriage carcase abounds. Spenser.

3. Noise.

With that he roar'd aloud, as he were wood,
That all the palace quaked at the stound. Spenser.

4. Astonishment; amazement.

Thus we stood as in a stound,
And wet with tears, like dew, the ground.
Gay, Prologue to the Shepherd's Week.

5. Hour; time; season; small space of time.

Till that stound could never wight him harme
By audacity, nor slight, nor might, nor mighty charme. Spenser.

Marks that will be ever found,
To remember this glad stound. B. Jonson, Masques.

Stoup. s. [A.S. stoppa.]

1. Cup of liquor.

Come lieutenant, I have a stoop of wine; and here without are a brace of gallants, that would fain have a measure to the health of Othello.—Shakespeare, Othello, ii. 2.

There's nothing more in me, sir, but may be squeezed out without racking; only a stoop or two of wine.—Sir J. Denham, The Stoupy.

A caldron of fat beef, and stoup of ale,
On the hussling mob shall more prevail,
Than if you give them, with the newest art,
Ragouts of peacocks' brains, or filbert tart.
King, Art of Cookery.
Each of these empty stoups, now, which my upplew and his drunken comrades have swilled off, Should have been a matter of profit to one in my line, and I must set them down a dead loss.—*Sir W.
Scott, Kenilworth*, ch. ii.

2. Post fastened in the earth: (a northern word).

It might be known hard by an ancient stoup,
Where grew an oak in elder days.

Tunred and Gismunda.

Stour. s. [A.S. styrung = stirring.] Assault;
incursion; tumult.

And he that harrow'd hell with heavy stour,
The faulty souls from thence brought to his heavenly boon.

Spenser.

Love, that long since has to thy mighty power
Per force subdued my poor enslaved heart,
And making now therein with restless stours,
Dost tyrannize in every weaker part.

Id.

The giant struck so woefully methinks,
That could have overthrow a stony tower,
And were not heavenly grace that him did bless,
He had been ponder'd all as this as flower,
But he was wary of that deadly stower.

Id.

Stout. adj. [N.Fr. estout; Dutch; German, stolz = proud.]

1. Strong; lusty; valiant.

When I was young,
I do remember how my father said,
A stouter champion never handled sword.

Shakespeare, Henry VI. Part I. iii. 4.

Some captain of the land or fleet,
Might of his hands, but of a soldier's wit;
'Tis I, I have sense to serve my turn in stout,
And let's a rascal who pretends to more.

Dryden, Translation of Persius, iii. 143.

Off, working by her husband's side,
Ruth does what Simon cannot do;
For she, with warty rime of pride,
Is stouter of the two.

Wordsworth, Simon Lee.

2. Brave; bold; intrepid.

He had the character of a bold, stout, and magnanimous man, which he had been long reputed to be.—Lord Clarendon, History of the Grand Rebellion.

3. Obstinate; pertinacious; resolute; proud.

The looks all stand,
To clear their cause most resolutely stout. Daniel.
The virtue not stout labour pass'd the guard,
Those only friends that could not be debarr'd.

Bathurst.

4. Strong; firm.

The stoutest vessel to the storm gave way,
And suck'd through bowen'd planks the rushing sea.
Dryden, Translation of the Æneid, l. 170.

Stout. s. Strongest kind of porter.

Should but his nose descending drop
A shew of bread and mutton-chop,
Or kindly, when his credit's out,
Surprise him with a pint of stout;
Exalted in his mighty mind,
He flies and leaves the stars behind.

Swift.

Stout-hearted. adj. Brave.

The stout-hearted are spoiled.—Psalm, lxxvi. 5.

Stoutly. adv. In a stout manner; boldly;
obstinately.

The general and his wife are talking of it,
And she speaks for you stoutly.
Shakespeare, Othello, iii. 1.

If the western Christians should stoutly invade Turkey with any likelihood to prevail, the Greeks therein would run to aid them.—Fulter, Holy War,
p. 175.

The cock, with lively din,
Scatters the roar of darkness thin;
And to the stack or the barn-door
Shoutly struts his dantes before.

Milton, L'Allegro, 40.

Stoutness. s. Attribute suggested by Stout.

1. Strength; valour.

2. Boldness; fortitude.

His bashfulness in youth was the very true sign of his virtue and stoutness after.—Ackam, Schoolmaster.

3. Obstinacy; stubbornness.

Come all to ruin, let Thy mother rather feel thy pride, than fear
Thy dangerous stoutness: for I mock at death
With as stout heart as thou.

Shakespeare, Coriolanus, iii. 2.

Stove. s. [A.S. stofa.]

1. Hot-house; place artificially made warm.

Fishermen who make holes in the ice, to dip up such fish with their nets as swim thither for breathing, light on swallows congregate in clouds, of a sunny substance, and carrying them home to their stoves, the warmth recovereth them to life and flight.—

Carew, Survey of Cornwall.
Stoves, which could autumn of cold winter make,
Fountains in autumn to bring winter back.

Beaumont, Pyrrhus.

The heat which arises out of the lower spiracles bring forth nitre and sulphur; some of which it affixes to the tops and sides of the protuberances, which are usually so long as to serve for natural stoves or sweating-vaults.—Hoodward.

The most proper place for unction is a stove.—
Winman, Surgery.

2. Place in which fire is made, and by which heat is communicated.

If the season prove exceeding piercing, in your great house kindle some charcoal; and when they have done smoking put them into a hole sunk a little into the floor, about the middle of it. This is the safest stove.—De Lyn.

Stove is a fireplace, more or less close, for warming apartments. When it allows the burning coals to be seen, it is called a stove-grate. Hitherto stoves have rarely been had recourse to in this country for heating our sitting rooms, the cheerful blaze and ventilation of an open fire being preferred. When coals are burned very slowly in an iron box, the carbonic acid gas which is generated, being half as heavy again as the atmospheric air, cannot ascend in the chimney at the temperature of the 300° F.; but regurgitates into the apartment through every crevice of the stove, and poisons the atmosphere. The large stoves are stoves of France and Germany are free from the view; because, being fed with fuel from the outside, they cannot produce a reflux of carbonic acid into the apartment, when their draught becomes feeble, as inevitably results from the secretly burning stoves, which have the doors of the fireplaces and not put immediately above the hearth-stone.
Ure, Dictionary of Arts, Manufactures, and Mines.

Stove. v. a. Keep warm in a house artificially heated.

For December, January, and the latter part of November, take such things as are given all winter; orange-trees, lemon-trees, and myrtles, if they be stoved; and sweet marjoram warm set.—Bacon.

Stover. s. [N.Fr. estover.] Fodder for cattle; coarse hay or straw; and sometimes straw for thatch.

The turf mountains, where live nibbling sheep,
And flat meads thatch'd with stovers, them to keep.

Shakespeare, Tempest, iv. 1.

Sedge and reed, for thatch and stover fit.

Dryden, Polydorus, book xiv.

Their browse and stover waxing thin and scant.

Id., Mucedon, Elphius.

Stow. s. [A.S. stow.] Place; (chiefly retained as a topographical name: as, Stow, Longstow, Walthamstow, &c.).

Stow. v. a. Lay up; reposit in order; lay in the proper place.

Foul thief! where hast thou stow'd my daughter?

Shakespeare, Othello, i. 2.

I th' holders, at his saddle-bow

Two aged jousts he did stow.

Burton, Hudibras, l. 1, 391.

Some stow their cars, or stop the leaky sides.

Dryden, Translation from Ovid, Cyre and Alcyon.

All the patriots were belated, stowed in dungeons, or condemned to work in the mines.—Addison.

No grieves th' advent'rous merchant, when he throws

All his long-toll'd-for treasure his ship stows

Into the angry main.

Carew.

Stowage. s.

1. Room for laying up.

What were all the fusts and humiliations of the late reformers, but the forbearing of dinners? that is, the enlarging the stowage, and the restoring the appetite for a larger supper!—Smith, Soranus, viii. 8.

In every vessel is stowage for immense treasures, when the cargo is pure bullion, or merchandise of as great a value.—Addison.

2. State of being laid up.

'Tis plate of rare device, and jewels
Of rich and exquisite form, their value's great;
And I am something curious, being strange,
To have them in safe stowage.

Shakespeare, Cymbeline, l. 7.

3. Things stowed.

We ha' ne'er better luck,
When we ha' such stowage as these trinkets with us.

Beaumont and Fletcher, Sea-Voyage.

4. Money paid for stowing of goods.

Strabismus. s. [Lat.; Fr. strabisme.]

Medical term for squinting.

Strabismus... [is] an affection of the eye by which a person sees objects in an oblique manner, from the axis of vision being distorted.—Hooper,
Medical Dictionary.

Straddle. v. n. [stride.] Stand or walk with the feet removed far from each other to the right and left; part the legs wide.

Unskilful statuettes suppose

In forming a Columbus, if they make him
straddle enough, strut, and look big and gape,
Their work is goodly. Chapman, Mummy of Ambols.

A fourth straddled betwixt a pair of long crutches, like the mummy of a felon hanging in chains; a fifth was bent into a horizontal position, like a mounted telescope, shoved in by a couple of chairmen; and the sixth was the bust of a man, set upright in a wheel machine, which the waiter moved from place to place.—Smollett, Expedition of Humphrey Clinker.

Straddling. part. adj. Standing, or walking, with the legs far apart laterally.

Let man survey himself divested of artificial charms, and he will find himself a forked straddling animal, with lanky legs.—Pope and Arbuthnot.

What the Italians call Caricatura... including many sorts of grotesque inventions, whimsical in-congruities, such as those arabesques found at Herculaneum, where Auchines, Æneas, and Acanthus are misquipped by heads of apes and pigs, or Arius, with a grotesque motion, is straddling a great trout;
or like that ludicrous parody which came from the hand of Raphael, in a playful hour, when he sketched the Lacoon, whose three figures coming of apes.—
J. Diapari, Curiosities of Literature, The History of the Caricature.

Strage. s. [Lat. strages.] Destruction;
slaughter. Rare.

I have not dreaded famine, fire, nor strage.
Webster, Appian and Virginia, (Nares by
H. and W.)

Stragggle. v. n. [stray.] Wander apart from others, as left behind, or without any certain direction.

But stay; like one that thinks to bring his friend
A mile or two, and sees his journey's end,
I straggled on too far.

Sir J. Hacking.
Trim off the small superfluous branches on each side of the hedge that straggles too far out.—Mortimer, Husbandry.

Straggler. s.

1. One who straggles; one who forsakes his company; one who rambles without any settled direction.

The last should keep the countries from passage of stragglers from those parts, whence they use to come forth, and oftentimes use to work much mi-chief.—Spenser, View of the State of Ireland.

Let's whip these stragglers o'er the sea again,
Lest hence these overweening rags of France.

Shakespeare, Richard III., v. 3.

Bottles minding are supposed to be half stolen by stragglers, and the other half broken.—Swift.

2. Anything that pushes beyond the rest, or stands single; outlier.

Let thy hand supply the pruning knife,
And crop luxuriant stragglers, nor be loth
To strip the branches of their leafy growth.

Dryden, Translation of the Georgics, ii. 302.

Off in his harden'd hand a good he bears,
Like one who late unyoked the sweating steers;
Sometimes his pruning hook corrects the vines,
And the loose stragglers to their ranks confines.

Pope, Vertumnus and Pomona

Yolks! I'll bring in the stragglers. I'm the boy

To fill the rooms, and empty the bottles.—O'Keefe,
Fountainhead, ii. 2.

The beauty of the night is hardly felt, when day comes leaping up. Yohol! Two stages, and the country roads are almost changed to a continuous street... just market-gardens, rows of houses, villas, crescents, terraces, and squares; past war-grouse, conchus, carts; past early workmen, late stragglers, drunken men, and sober carriers of loads; past brick and mortar in its every shape; and in among the rattling pavements, where a jaunty seat upon a coach is not so easy to preserve.—

Dickens, Martin Chuzzlewit, ch. xxvi.

Straggling. part. adj.

1. Wandering, roving, or ranging loose, as left, separated, lost, or thrown out of order.

Having passed the Sirens, they came between Scylla and Charybdis, and the straggling rocks, which seemed to cast out great store of flames and smoke.—Sir W. Raleigh.

He likewise enriched poor straggling soldiers with great quantity.—Shakespeare, Timon of Athens, v. 1.

They found in Burford some of the straggling soldiers, who, out of weariness, stayed behind.—
Lord Clarendon, History of the Grand Rebellion.

To our feelings, this entire episode runs like straggling hindwood through the whole growth of the piece, not so much uniting an encumbering and choking up what it meets with; in itself, perhaps, a green, and rather pretty weed; yet how superfluous, and, like any other weed, deserving only to be altogether cut away.—Carlyle, Criticism and Miscellaneous
Essays, Writings of Werner.

2. Outlying; dispersed; standing apart.

A wolf spied out a straggling kid and pursued him.—Sir R. L. Knollys.

Wide was his parish, not contracted close
In streets, but here and there a straggling house;
Yet still he was at hand.

Dryden, Character of a Good Person.

Form straggling mountaineers for publick good,
To rank in tribes, and quit the savage wood;
Houses to build, and then contiguous make,
For cheerful neighbourhood and safety's sake.

Tate, Translation of Juvenal, xv. 194.

straight, or straighten, &c. See Strait and Straiten, &c.

Strain. s. [A.S. strynd, from streonan, stryman = beget.]

1. Race; generation; pedigree; descent; genealogy; blood; breeding.

Thus far I can praise him; he is of a noble strain.

Shakespeare, Much Ado about Nothing, II. 1.

Twelve Trojan youths, born of their noblest strain,

I took alive; and, yet enraged, will empty all their veins

Of vital spirits. Chapman, Translation of the Iliad.

Why dost thou flatterly fright

Thyself a Shilvey? from which noble strain

He sprung, that could so far exalt the name

Of love? Waller.

Turn then to Pharamond, and Charlemagne,

And the long heroes of the Gallick strain.

Prior, Carmen Seculare for the Year 1700.

Where is the wisdom of mortal strain?

That may match with the Baron of Triemmain?

She must be lovely, and constant and kind,

Holy and pure, and humble of mind,

Milke of cheer, and gentle of mood,

Courteous and generous, and noble of blood,

Noble her blood as the currents that meet,

In the veins of the noblest Plantagenet.

Such must her form be, her mood and her strain,

That shall match with Sir Roland of Triemmain.

Sir W. Scott, The Bride of Triemmain, I. 2.

2. Hereditary disposition.

Am I not these sweet knaves and all this country

The strain of man's bred out into lunacy and madness?—Shakespeare, Timon of Athens, I. 1.

Intemperance and lust breed diseases, which propagated, spoil the strain of a nation. Archbishop

Tillotson.

3. Rank; character.

But thou who, lately of the common strain,

Wert one of us, if still thou dost retain

The same ill habits, the same follies too...

Still thou art bound to vice, and still a slave.

Dryden, Translation of Persius, v. 164.

4. Turn; tendency; inborn disposition.

Because heretics have a strain of madness, he applied her with some corporal chastisements, which with respect of time might imply reduce her to good order.—Sir J. Haycraft.

Strain. v. a. [N.Fr. estruindre; Lat. stringo.]

1. Filter.

Earth doth not strain water so freely as sand.—

Bacon.

Their allment ought to be light rice-boiled in whey and strained.—Arbuthnot, On the Nature and Choice

of Aliments.

2. Squeeze in an embrace.

I would have strain'd him with a strict embrace

But through my arms he slipped and vanished in the place Dryden, Translation from Ovid,

Metamorphoses, lxxxv.

Old Evander, with a close embrace,

Strain'd his departing friend; and tears o'erflow'd his face. Id., Translation of the Æneid, viii. 740.

3. Weaken by too much violence.

Prudes decay'd about my back,

Strain their necks with looking back. Swift.

4. Put to its utmost strength.

By this we see, in a cause of religion, to how desperate adventures men will strain themselves for relief of their own part, having law and authority against them.—Hucker, Ecclesiastical Polity.

Too well I wote my humble name,

And how my rhimes been ragged and unkempt;

Yet as I can my cunning I will strain. Spenser.

'Twas mine enemy fell,

And thus I set my foot on his neck; even then

The princely blood flows in his cheek, he sweats,

Strains his young nerves, and puts himself in posture

That sets my words. Shakespeare, Cymbeline, III. 3.

My earthly by his heavenly overpowered,

Which it had long stood under, strain'd to the height.

In that celestial colloquy sublime,

As with an object that excels the sense,

Dazzled and spent, sunk down.

Milton, Paradise Lost, viii. 453.

Mark how the lark and linnet sing!

With rival notes

They strain their warbling throats,

To welcome in the spring.

Dryden, On the Death of Mr. Percell.

Nor yet content, she strains her malice more,

And adds new ills to those contriv'd before.

Dryden, Translation of the Æneid, viii. 538.

It is the worst sort of good husbandry for a father not to strain himself a little for his son's breeding.

—Locke.

5. Make strait or tense.

A bigger string more strained, and a lower string less strained, may fall into the same tone.—Bacon.

Thou, the more he varies Rome, beware

To strain his fetters with a stricter care.

Dryden, Translation of the Georgics, iv. 593.

The people of this town had a bedstead on which they laid travellers who asked to rest. If any one was too long for it, they cut off his legs; and if he was shorter than the bedstead, they strained him to its head and foot.—I. Ivaradi, Curiosities of Lita- vature, Rabbinical Stories.

6. Push beyond the proper extent.

See they suffer death,

But in their deaths remember they are men,

Strain not the laws to make their torture grievous.

Addison, Cato.

There can be no other meaning in this expression,

however some may pretend to strain it.—Swift.

Your way is to wrest and strain some principles maintained both by them and me, to a sense repugnant with their other known doctrines.—Bishop

Waterland.

With a double meaning.

The jury make no more scruple to pass against an Englishman and the queen, though it be to strain

their oaths, than to drink milk unstrained.—Spenser,

View of the State of Ireland.

7. Force; constrain; make uneasy or unnatural.

It is the lark that sings so out of tune,

Straining harsh discords and unpleasing sharps.

Shakespeare, Romeo and Juliet, III. 5.

He talks and plays with Fatima, but his mirth

Is forced and strain'd, and in his looks appears

A wild distracted fierceness.

Sir J. Denham, The Sophy.

Strain. v. n.

1. Make violent efforts; pull.

To build his fortune I will strain a little,

For 'tis a bond in men.

Shakespeare, Timon of Athens, I. 1.

You stand like cry-bands in the ships,

Straining upon the start. Id., Henry V. III. 1.

They strain.

That death may not then fly find to attend

Their certain host, but work to meet their end.

Daniel.

Straining with too weak a wine,

We needs will wate ourselves to the king.

Pope, Imitations of Horace, b. II. sat. I.

2. Filter.

Cesar thought that all sea-sands had natural springs of fresh water; but it is the sea-water;

because the pit filed according to the measure of the tide, and the sea-water passing or straining through the sands, leaveth the saltness behind them.

—Bacon.

Strain. s.

1. Injury by too much violence.

Credit is gained by custom, and seldom recovers a strain; but if broken, is never well set again.—Sir

W. Temple.

In all pain there is a deformity by a solution of continuity, as in cutting; or a tendency to solution,

as in convulsions or strains.—Greve.

2. Style or manner of speaking.

According to the genius and strain of the book of Proverbs, the words wisdom and righteousness are used to signify all religion and virtue.—Archbishop

Tillotson.

In our liturgy are as great strains of true sublime eloquence, as are any where to be found in our language.—Swift.

3. Song; note; sound; (compare Tone, from Gr. tonos = tension).

Will thou love such a woman? what, to make thee

an instrument, and play false strains upon thee?

—Shakespeare, As you like it, IV. 3.

Orpheus self may have his head

From golden slumber on a bed

Of heavenly Elysian flowers, and hear

Such strains as would have won the ear

Of Pluto, to have quite set free

His half-regain'd Eurycle. Milton, L'Allegro, 143.

Their heavenly harm a lower strain began,

And in soft undertone mourn the fall of man. Dryden.

When the first bold vessel dared the sea,

High on the stern the Thracian raised his strain,

While Argos saw her kindred trees

Descend from Pollen to the main.

Pope, Ode to St. Cecilia's Day.

Some future strain, in which the muse shall tell

How science dwindles, and how volumes swell.

Tony.

Stay, little cheerful Robin I stay,

And at my comment sing,

Though it should prove a farewell lay,

And this our parting spring.

G & A

Though I, alas! may ne'er enjoy

The promise in thy song;

A charm, that thought can not destroy,

Doth to thy strain belong.

Ursinoweth, To a Redbreast (in Sickness).

It was the pleasing melodies of Wism, the pathetic airs of Clarke, the majestic movements of Blow, and the sublime strains of Purcell, which at once proved the good sense as well as the genius of these masters;

and at the same time the powers which vocal music might have upon the mind, when so managed that sound might be subservient, or rather assistant, to sense.—Mason, Essay historical and critical on

English Church Music, ch. II.

4. Manner of speech or action.

Such take too high a strain at the first, and are maximous more than that of years can uphold,

as was Scipio Africanus, of whom Livy saith, 'ul-timus primis cedebat.'—Bacon.

Strainable. adj. Capable of being strained.

Rare.

A thing cautious and strainable.—Bacon, On the Controversies of the Church of England.

Strainer. s. One who, that which, strains.

1. Instrument of, apparatus for, filtration.

The excrementitious moisture passeth in birds through a flur and more delicate strainer than it doth in beasts; for feathers pass through quills, and hair through skin.—Bacon.

Slave the god's shaggy beard, lest thou too late

In vain should'st seek a strainer to dispel.

Philips.

The lucky torments dress from purer must.

Philips.

The stomach and intestines are the press, and the lactal vessels the strainers, to separate the pure emulsion from its feces.—Arbuthnot.

These, when condensed, the airy region pours

On the dry earth in rain or gentle showers;

The insinuating drops sink through the sand,

And pass the porous strainers of the land.

Sir R. Blackmore.

2. One who exerts his utmost strength.

Is he therefore to be deemed

Rude, or savage? or esteemed

but a sorry entertainer,

'Cause he is no common strainer

After painted nymphs for favours?

H. Johnson, Entertainments.

Straining. verb. abs.

1. Act of filtration; substance strained.

2. Act of putting to the utmost stretch.

Our words flow from us in a smooth continued stream, without those straining of the voice, motions of the body, and majesty of the mind, which are so much celebrated in the orators of Greece and Rome.—Bishop Atterbury.

Straint. s. Violent tension; straining.

Sir Arcton...

Upon his iron roller gripped fast,

That with the strain his wretch high he brast.

There are many several sorts of crooked lines; but there is only one which is straight.—Dryden.
Water and air the varied form command;
The straight looks crooked, and the square grows round.
A bell or a cannon may be heard beyond a hill which intercepts the sight of the sounding body, and sounds are propagated as readily through crooked pipes as through straight ones.—Sir I. Newton, On Opticks.

Go straight. Act honestly.

'I shall have finished my job by noon,' said Warner; 'and then, please God, we shall leave our feet.' 'It is yet two hours to noon,' said his wife; 'and Barber always keeps you so long! I cannot hear that Barber. I dare say he will not advance you in any way again, as you did not bring the job home on Saturday night. If I were you, Philip, I would go and sell the piece unfinished at once to one of the cheapshops.' 'I have gone straight all my life,' said Warner. 'And much would it have done you,' said his wife.—B. Barret, Sybil, b. ii. ch. xiii.

Strait, adv. Straightway.

If the devil come and roar for them,
I will not send them. I will after straight,
And tell him so.

Those stinks which the nostrils straight inhale and expel, are the most pernicious.—Bacon, Natural and Experimental History.

I know thy generous temper well;
Fling out the appearance of disloyalty on it,
It straight takes fire, and mounts into a blaze.
—Addison, Cato.

Strait, s.

1. Narrow, pass, or frail.

Phant garrius in command the straights and narrow passages.—Spenser.
'They went forth unto the straits of the mountain.'—Judith, xiv. 11.
Honour travels in a straight so narrow,
Where one but goes alone.

—Shakespeare, Troilus and Cressida, iii. 3.

2. Distress; difficulty.

The independent party, which abhorred all motion towards peace, were in as great straightness (the other how to carry out their designs).—Lord Clarendon, History of the Grand Rebellion.
It was impossible to have administered much advice to the king, in the straight he was in, which being pursued might not have proved inconvenient.—Ibid.

Thyself

Bred up in poverty, and straights at home,
Lost in a desert here, and hunger-lit.

—Milton, Paradise Regained, ii. 411.

Thus Adam, some time, reply'd:
O! Heav'n! in evil straight this day I stand Before my Judge. —Id., Paradise Lost, x. 124.
'Tis hard with me, whatever choice I make,
I must not merit you, or must forsake;
But in this straight, to honour I'll be true,
And leave my fortune to the gods and you.

—Dryden.

Some modern authors, observing what straits they have been put to in all ways to find out water enough for Noah's flood, say Noah's flood was not universal, but a national inundation.—T. Burnet, Theory of the Earth.

Let no man who owns a Providence grow desperate under any calamity or straight whatsoever, but compose the anguish of his thoughts into this one consideration, that he comprehends not these strange unaccountable methods by which Providence may dispose of him.—South, Sermons.
She watches their time of need and adversity, and if she can observe that they are in great straights or affliction, she gives them speedy relief.—Law.

Strait, v. a.

1. Put to difficulties; straiten.

If your loss
Interpretation should abuse, and call this
Your lack of love or bounty, you were straited
For a reply; at least, if you make care
Of happy holding her.

—Shakespeare, Winter's Tale, iv. 3.

2. Make strait.

One man draws out the wire, another straights it, a third cuts it, a fourth points it.—Adam Smith, Wealth of Nations, b. i. ch. I. (Ord MS.)

Straiten, v. a.

1. Make narrow.

If this be our condition, thus to dwell
In narrow circuit, straiten'd by a few,
Sultry or violent. —Milton, Paradise Lost, ix. 322.
Whatever straitens the vessels, so as the channels become more narrow, must heat; therefore strait clothes and cold bath heat.—A. Bouthnot, On Diet.

2. Contract; confine.

Feeling me give up a notion of all ideas that enter at the eye, except colours; but it is very much straiten'd and confined to the number, bulk, and distance of its objects.—Addison.

The causes which straiten the British commerce, will enlarge the French.—Id., State of the War.

3. Make tight; intend.

Stretch them at their length,
And pull their straiten'd cords with all your strength.
—Dryden, Indian Emperor, v. 2.
Morality, by her false guardians drawn,
Chicane in furs, and casuistry in lawn,
Gains, as they straiten at each end the cord,
And dies when Dulness gives her legs the word.

—Pope, Dunciad, iv. 27.

In the ninth century, the dukes of Brittany first homage to Charles the Bald, the right of which was transferred afterwards to the dukes of Normandy. This formality, at that time no token of real subjection, led to consequences beyond the views of either party. For when the feudal chains, that had hung so loosely upon the shoulders of the great vassals, began to be straiten'd by the dexterity of the court, Brittany found herself drawn among the rest to the same centre.—Hallam, View of the State of Europe during the Middle Ages, pt. ii. ch. I.

4. Deprive of necessary room.

Waters when straiten'd, as in the falls of bridges, give a roaring noise.—Bacon, Natural and Experimental History.

He could not be straiten'd in room or provisions, or compelled to fight.—Lord Clarendon, History of the Grand Rebellion.

The airy crowd

Swarm'd, and were straiten'd.

—Milton, Paradise Lost, l. 776.

Several conversations had themselves very much straiten'd, and if the most increase, I wish it may not drive many ordinary women into meetings.—Addison, Spectator.

5. Distress; perplex.

Men by continually striving and fighting to enlarge their bounds, and encroaching upon one another, seem to be straiten'd for want of room.—Roy.

6. Make strait.

A crooked stick is not straiten'd, except it be as far bent on the chan contrary side.—Hooker, Ecclesiastical Polity.

If ourselves being so apt to err, the only way which we have to straiten our paths is, by following the rule of his will, whose footsteps naturally are right.—Id.

A finger is not bent and straiten'd, without the contraction of two muscles taking place.—Poole, Natural Theology, ch. ix.

Straitening, verbal abs. Act of one who, that which, straitens; condition resulting therefrom. In the extracts, confining; contracting; limiting.

The straitening and confining the profession of the common law, must naturally extend and enlarge the jurisdiction of the chancery.—Lord Clarendon, History of the Grand Rebellion.

The landed man finds himself aggrieved by the falling of his rents, and the straitening of his fortune, whilst the moneyed man keeps up his gain.—Locke.

Straitforward, adj. Direct; simple; open.

Instruction, that mysterious communicating of wisdom with ignorance, is no longer an inflexible tentative process requiring a study of individual aptitudes and a perpetual variation of means and methods to attain the same end; but a secure, universal, straightforward business, to be conducted in the gross, by proper mechanism, with such intellect as comes to hand. —Carlyle, Critical and Miscellaneous Essays, Signs of the Times.

Strait-handedness, s. Niggardliness.

They were not more liberal than our Romish divines are miserably.—Id. the Romish doctrine makes the strait-handedness so much more injurious.—Bishop Hall, Cases of Conscience, iv. 3.

Straitlaced, adj.

1. Girded with stays.

Let nature have scope to fashion the body as she thinks best; we have few well-shaped that are straitlaced, or much tampered with.—Locke, Thoughts on Education.

2. Stiff; constrained.

He had to do with certain holy and straitlaced hucksters.—Martin, Marriage of Figaro, K. 4: 1550.

I know not what philosopher he was, that would have women loose but thrice around all their time: to be baptised, married, and buried; but he was too straitlaced.—Barton, Anatomy of Melancholy, p. 632.

Witnesses, like watches, go just as they're set, too fast or slow; And, where in coincidence they're straitlaced, 'Tis ten to one that side is east.

—Bulter, Hudibras, ii. 2. 361.

Men of a more sanguine and cheerful temper are not so straitlaced in their principles.—Goodman, Winter Evening Conference, pt. I.

Straitly, adv. In a strait manner.

1. Narrowly.

2. Strictly; rigorously.

Those laws he straitly requireth to be observed without breach or blame.—Hooker, Ecclesiastical Polity.

3. Closely; intimately.

Straitness, s. Attribute suggested by Strait.

1. Narrowness.

The town was hard to break, and uneasy to come unto, by reason of the straitness of all the places.—Shakespeare, Tit. And.

It is a great error, and a narrowness or straitness of mind, if any man think that nations have nothing to do with another, except there be an union in sovereignty, or a conjunction in fact.—Bacon, Advertisement touching a Holy War.

2. Strictness; rigour.

If his own life answer the straitness of his proceeding, it shall become him well.—Shakespeare, Measure for Measure, iii. 2.

Among the Romans the laws of the twelve tables did exclude the females from inheriting, and had many other straitnesses and hardships which were successively repealed.—Sir J. Hale.

3. Want; scarcity; distress.

The straitness of the conveniences of life amongst them had never reached so far, as to the use of fire, till the Spaniards brought it amongst them.—Locke.

Straitway, adv. In a strait or direct manner.

Let us here for aye in peace remain,
Or straightway on that last long voyage fare.

Take to a ship, that, having 'scaped a tempest,
Is straightway slain, and boarded with a pirate.

—Shakespeare, Henry VI. Part II, iv. 3.
The Turks straightway breaking in upon them, made a bloody fight.—Kauley, History of the Turks.

Straitways, adv. [The s the sign of the genitive case rather than of the plural number.] Straitway.

As soon as iron is out of the fire, it dreads the straightways.—Bacon.

The sound of a bell is strait; continually some time after the percussion; but ceaseth straightways if the bell or string be touched.—Id., Natural and Experimental History.

Strake, s. [?] Iron rim of a cart-wheel. Also, a blade, &c. &c. The strake of a raft whereon the spokes lay set. —Sir T. Egdot, Dictionary, 1558. (Nares by H. and W.)

Strale, s. [German, strahl = ray.] Pupil. Rare.

The strale of the eye, pupilla.—Withal, Dictionary, p. 278: 1698. (Nares by H. and W.)

Stramæsson, s. [Fr. estrumeçon.] Blow; punch. Rare.

I being led to take the deadly advantage that lay before me of his left side, made a kind of stramæsson, ran him up to the hilts through the doublet. —J. Jonson, Every Man out of his Humour, iv. 3. (Nares by H. and W.)

Stramineous, adj. [Lat. stramineus, from stramen = straw.]

1. Strawy; consisting of straw. Rare.

Upon a sudden approach of the warm electric, the stramineous ladies will, at first, a little recede. —Dr. Robinson, Erasmus, p. 123: 1659.

2. Light; chuffy; like straw.

Other discourse, dry, barren, stramineous, dull, and heavy.—Barton, Anatomy of Melancholy, p. 140.

Stramonium, s. Plant, used in medicine, of the genus Datura (stramonium).

Stramonium acts as a sedative of the nerves of the bronchi.—Dr. Keant, Lectures on Medicine.

Strand, s. [German, strahn.] String of which a rope (of so many strands) is made.

Strand, s. [A.S.] Verge of the sea or of any water.

I saw sweet branty in her face;
Such as the daughter of Agnor had,
That made great love to humble him to her hand,
When with his knees he kiss'd the Gitan strand.

—Shakespeare, Timing of the Shrew, l. 1.
Some wretched lines from this neglected land
May find my hero on the foreign strand,
Warm'd with new fire. —Prior, Celia to Damon, 72.

Strand, v. a. Dry or force upon the shallows.

Tarchon's alone was lost, and stranded stood,
Stuck on a bank, and beaten by the flood.

—Dryden, Translation of the Æneid, x. 420.

Strange, adj. [N. Fr. estranger; Modern Fr. étrange; Lat. extraneus; extra from ec = out.]

1. Foreign; of another country.

I do not condemn the knowledge of strange and divers tongues.—Ancham, Schoolmaster.

The natural subjects of the state should bear a sufficient proportion to the strange subjects that they govern.—Bacon.

2. Not domestic.

As the man loves least at home to be,
That hath a stiltish house, haunted with sprites;
So she, impatient her own faults to see,
Turns from herself, and in strange things delights.
Sir J. Davies, Immortality of the Soul.

3. Wonderful; causing wonder.

It is evident, and it is one of the strange secrets in sounds, that the whole sound is not in the whole air only; but is also in every small part of the air.—Bacon, Natural and Experimental History.
Rated at length, ere long I might perceive Strange alteration in me.
Milton, Paradise Lost, ix. 588.

Thus the strange cure to our split blood apply'd,
Sympathy to the distant wound down guide.
Chapman.

It is strange they should be so silent in this matter, when there were so many occasions to speak of it, if our Saviour had plainly appointed such an infallible judge of controversies.—Archbishop Tillot-
son.

Strange to relate, from young Ithob's head
A lambent flame arose, which gently spread
Around his brows, and on his temples fed.
Dryden, Translation of the Æneid, ii. 850.

4. Odd; irregular; not according to the common way.

I dreid my man's shade, where I did leave him:
He's strange and peevish.
Shakespeare, Cymbeline, i. 7.

A strange proud return you may think I make you, madam, when I tell you it is not from everybody I would be thus obliged.—Sir J. Sackling.

5. Unknown; new.

Long custom had inured them to the former kind alone, by which the latter was new and strange in their ears.—Hosker, Ecclesiastical Polity.
Joseph saw his brethren, and he knew them, but made himself strange unto them.—Genesis, xlii. 7.
Here is the hand and seal of the duke; you know the character, I should not; and the signet is not strange to you.—Shakespeare, Measure for Measure,
iv. 2.

Here passion first I felt,
Connexion strange!
Milton, Paradise Lost, viii. 530.

6. Remote.

She makes it strange, but she would be best pleased
To be so near'd with another letter.
Shakespeare, Two Gentlemen of Verona, i. 2.

7. Uncommonly good or bad.

This made David to admire the law of God at that strange rate, and to advance the knowledge of it above all other knowledge.—Archbishop Tillotson.

8. Unacquainted.

They were now, like sand without lime, ill bound together, at a gaze, looking strange one upon another, not knowing who was faithful.—Bacon.

Used as an interjection.

Strange! what extremes should thus preserve the snow,
High on the Alps, or in deep caves below. Waller.
Strange! that fatherly authority should be the only original of government, and yet all mankind not know it.—Locke.

Strange. v. n. Wonder; be astonished.

Rare.
Were all the assertions of Aristotle such as these;
how pronounceth inquiries, which we strange and at from one, of whom a father saith, 'Nec Deum cuius rei curavit.'—Claudian.
Whereat I should strange more, but that I find,
&c.—Fuller, Holy War, p. 160.

Strange. v. a. Estrange. Rare.

Strangening them from their God.—Wadsworth,
French and English Grammar, p. 364; 1023.

Strangeful. adj. Strange. Rare.

O frantic France! why hast not thou made use Of strangeful signs, whereby the heavens induce Thee to repentance. Sylvester, Translation of The Burtas, day ii. week i. (Ord MS.)

Strangely. adv. In a strange manner.

1. With some relation to foreigners.
As by strange fortune
It came to us, I do in justice charge thee
That thou encounter it strangely to some place
Where chance may move or end it.
Shakespeare, Winter's Tale, ii. 3.

2. Wonderfully; in a way to cause wonder, but commonly with a degree of dislike.
My former speeches have but hit your thoughts,
Which can interpret further: only, I say,
Things have been strangely borne.
Shakespeare, Macbeth, iii. 6.

How strangely active are the arts of peace,
Whose restless motions less than wars do cease;
Peace is not freed from labour, but from noise;
And war more force, but not more pains, employs.
Dryden.

In a time of affliction the remembrance of our good deeds will strangely cheer and support our spirits.—Calamy, Sermons.

It would strangely delight you to see with what spirit he converses, with what tenderness he re-proves, with what affection he exhorts, and with what vigour he preaches.—Law.
How strangely crowds misplace things and mis-call!

Madness in one is liberty in all. Harte.

Strangeness. s. Attribute suggested by Strange.

1. Foreignness; state of belonging to another country.

If I will obey the Gospel, no distance of place, no strangeness of country, can make any man a stranger to me.—Bishop Sprat.

2. Uncommunicativeness; distance of behaviour.

I gird thy strangeness, and tell me what I shall vent to my lady. Shakespeare, Twelfth Night, iv. 1.
Will you not observe
The strangeness of his altered countenance?
Id., Henry VI. Part II. iii. 1.

3. Remoteness from common manners or notions; uncommonness.

More worthy than himself
Here tend the savage strangeness he puts on;
And undergo, in an observing kind,
His humours premeditation.
Shakespeare, Troilus and Cressida, ii. 3.

An original man . . . is not made altogether by the common pattern; one whose pleasures and conceits cannot be prophesied of, even approximately;
though, indeed, by their very newness and strange- ness they meet of all private prophecy.—Carlyle,
Critical and Miscellaneous Essays, Miscell.

4. Mutual dislike; coldness of feeling; want of intimacy.

In this piece there was an article that no Englishman should enter into Scotland, and no Scottishman into England, without letters commendatory; this might seem a means to continue a strangeness between the nations; but it was done to lock in the borderers. Bacon.

5. Wonderfulness; power of raising wonder.

If a man for curiosity or strangeness sake, would make a puppet pronoun a word, let him consider the motion of the instruments of voice, and the like sounds made in inanimate bodies.—Bacon, Natural and Experimental History.
This raised greater tumults and boldness in the hearts of men, than the strangeness and seeming unreasonableness of all the former articles.—South, Sermons.

Stranger. s.

1. Foreigner; one of another country.

I am a most poor woman, and a stranger.
Born out of your dominions; having here
No judge indifferent. Shakespeare, Henry VIII. ii. 4.
Your daughter hath made a gross revolt;
Tying her duty, liberty, wit, and fortunes
To an extravagant and wheeling stranger.
Of here and every where. Id., Othello, i. 1.

There is no place in Europe so much frequented by strangers, whether they are such as come out of curiosity, or such who are obliged to attend the court of Rome.—Addison, Travels in Italy.

After a year's interregnum from the death of Romulus, the senate of their own authority chose a successor, and a stranger, merely upon the fame of his virtues.—Neft.

2. One unknown.

Strangers and foes do wonder, and not kiss.
Shakespeare, All well that ends well, ii. 3.
We ought to acknowledge, that no nations are wholly aliens and strangers the one to the other.—Bacon.

His perusal of the writings of his friends and strangers.—Bishop Hall, Life of Hammond.
Thus the majestic mother of mankind,
To her own charms most amably blind,
On the green margin innocently stood;
And gazed indulgent on the crystal flood;
Survey'd the stranger in the painted wave,
And, smiling, praised the beauties which she gave.
Young, Lines of Fame, vi. 581.

Used adjectively.
You did void your rheum upon my beard,
And foot me, as you spurn a stranger cur
Over your threshold.
Shakespeare, Merchant of Venice, i. 3.
They came and near him placed the stranger
guest.
Id.,

3. Guest; one not a domestic.

He will vouchsafe
This day to be our guest: bring forth and pour Abundance, fit to honour and receive
Our heavenly stranger.
Milton, Paradise Lost, v. 313.

4. One unacquainted.

My child is yet a stranger in the world:
She hath not seen the change of fourteen years.
Shakespeare, Romeo and Juliet, i. 2.
I was no stranger to the original: I had also studied Virgil's design, and his disposition of it.—Dryden.

5. One not admitted to any communication or fellowship.

I unspeak my detraction; here abjure
The taints and stains upon myself,
For strangers to my nature.
Shakespeare, Macbeth, iv. 3.

Melons on beds of ice are taught to bear,
And strangers to the sun yet ripen here.
Graville.

Stranger. v. a. Estrange. Rare.

Will you with these infirmities also owe, Dower'd with our curse, and stranger'd with our oath,
Take her or leave her?
Shakespeare, King Lear, i. 1.

Strangle. v. a. [Lat. strangulo; pass. part.

strangulatus; strangulatio, -onis.]

1. Choke; suffocate; kill by intercepting the breath, through compression of the windpipe.

The lion did fear in pieces enough for his whole,
and strangled for his bones, and filled his body with prey, and his den with ravin.—Nahum, ii. 12.

Dost thou not know, said they, that thou hast strangled three husbands?—Job, iii. 8.
Shall I not then be stilled in the vault,
To whose foul mouth no breathsome air breathes in,
And there be strangled ere my Ruinous comes?
Shakespeare, Romeo and Juliet, iv. 3.

So heinous a crime was the sin of adultery, that our Saxon ancestors compelled the adulteress to strangle herself; and he who dethroned her was to be hanged over her grave.—Ayliffe, Parergon Jacobi Canovici.

2. Suppress; hinder from birth or appearance.

By the clock, 'tis day;
And yet dark night strangles the travelling lamp:
Is 't night's predominance, or the day's shame?
Shakespeare, Macbeth, ii. 6.

Strangled. part. adj. Killed by strangulation.

His face is black and full of blood,
His colour further out than when he lived,
Staring full ghastly like a strangled man.
Shakespeare, Henry VI. Part II. iii. 2.

Strangler. s. One who strangles.

The hand that seems to tie their friendship together, will be the very strangler of their unity.—
Shakespeare, Antony and Cleopatra, ii. 6.

Strangles. s. [plural, with the.] Swellings in a horse's throat.

Strangling. verbal abs. Death by stopping the breath.

My soul chooseth strangling and death rather than my life. Job, vii. 15.

Strangulation. s. [Lat. strangulatio, -onis.]

Act of strangling; suffocation; state of being strangled.

A spume is mischievous, not in itself, for its powder is harmless; but because, being received into the stomach, it swells, and occasioning its continual distension, induceth a strangulation.—
Sir T. Browne, Vulgar Errors.

The reduction of the jaws is difficult, and if they be not timely reduced, there happens paralysis and strangulation.—Wismann, Surgery.

Strangurious. adj. Denoting the pain of strangury.

I was often fretted with strangurious symptoms.
—Cheney, English Malady, p. 321; 1733.

Strangury. s. [Gr. stranguryia.] Painful retention, or difficulty of voiding urine.

The liquor of the birch is most powerful for the dissolving of the stone in the bladder, bloody water, and strangury.—Krylen.

I hope they get better of their reds, conchs, claps, toothaches, fevers, stranguries, scissions, swellings, and sore eyes.—Steele, Tristram Shandy, vol. viii.
ch. iii.

Strap. s. [A.S. strapp.]

1. Narrow long slip of cloth or leather.

These clothes are good enough to drink in, and so be these boots too; an they be not, let them hang themselves in their own straps.—Shakespeare,
Twelfth Night, i. 3.

I found but one husband, a lively cobbler, that kicked and spurred all the while his wife was carrying him on; and had scarce passed a day without giving her the discipline of the strap.—Addison, Spectator.

One word bred another, a shocking midship;
She gave me the lie and I gave her the strap.
Song, probably founded on the prose extract.

Now don't let Satan . . . take advantage of any one spot of rising ground to get astride of your imagination, if you can anyways help it; or if he is so nimble as to slip on—let me beg of you, like an unback'd filly, to frisk it, to squirt it, to jump it, to rear it, to bound it—and to kick it, with long kicks and short kicks, till, like Tickleto's mare, you break a strap or a crupper, and throw his worship into the dirt.—Sterne, Triumphant Shandy, vol. iii. ch. xxvii.

2. Specially as a part of dress; i.e. a short strap connecting the two sides of each leg of a pair of trowsers by passing under the shoe or boot, the object being to keep the trowsers well over the ankles; the use of which was more common in the last generation than in the present.

We then need to consider such raw-looking lads, who never missed chapel; who were high-boys and no straps; who walked two hours on the Trumpington-road every day of their lives, who carried off the coldest scholarships, and who decorated themselves in hall. We were premature in pronouncing our verdict of youthful nobility. The man without straps fulfilled his destiny and duty. He eased his old governor, the curate in Westmoreland, or helped his sisters to set up the lady's school. He wrote a Dictionary, or a Treatise on Comic Sections, as his nature and genius prompted. Heed a fellow-scholar; and then took to himself a wife, and a vicar. He presides over a parish now, and thinks it rather a dashing thing to belong to the Oxford and Cambridge club; and his parishioners love him, and adore under his sermons. No, no, he is not a snob. It is not straps that make the gentleman, or high-boys that unmake him, he may ever so thick. My son, it is you who are the snob if you lightly despise a man for doing his duty, and refusing to shake an honest man's hand because it wears a Berlin glove.—Thackeray, Book of Snobs, ch. xv.

As the second element in a compound.

He walked into the market... it was the same market as of old, crowded by the same buyers and sellers; drab with the same business; noisy with the same confusion of tongues and clattering of wheels in coaches... dainty with the same array in hieiders' baskets of small shining-glases, hoes, braces, trowsers-straps, and hardware.—Dickens, Martin Chuzzlewit, ch. xxxvi.

Strap. v. a. Bent with a strap.

Strapped. s. Kind of military punishment formerly practised in drawing up an offender to the top of a beam, and letting him fall; in consequence of which, dislocation of a limb usually happened.

Were I at the strapped, or all the racks in the world, I would not tell you on compulsion.—Shakespeare, Henry IV. Part I. v. 4.

Would you have him tortured?—I would have him proved.

Best try him then with goods, or barbarous iron; Put him to the strapped. H. Jonson, Volpone. They would meet every where with coons and strapped. Glaucille, Sermons, p. 213.

Strapped. v. a. Punish, or torture, by the Strapped.

I had neither been laid into your gibbets at Lambeth, nor strapped with an oath or whip by your bowmen of the arches.—Milton, Animal-vegetation upon a Defence of the Humble Knaves-Straw.

Strapping. adj. Lusty; bulky; big; well-grown.

Sir, we'll maintain you no longer.—Then your wives shall, old Acton. There are five-and-thirty strapping officers since this morning to live at free quarters in the city.—Farquhar, The Constant Couple, l. 1.

Stratagem. s. [Gr. στρατηγικα, -αγω; στρατηγικω = I command as a general, from στρατις = army + ηγουμεν = I lead.]

1. Artifice in war; trick by which an enemy is deceived.

See thou as fine and cunning a stratagem as can be devised, for I hope I may be led to use this word, seeing of late it hath found such good entertainment amongst us.—Florio, World of Wonders, 1608.

John Talbot, I did send for thee, To tutor thee in stratagems of war. Shakespeare, Henry VI. Part I. iv. 3.

Every minute now Should be the father of some stratagem. Id., Henry IV. Part II. i. 1.

It seemeth reasonable, and in piety allowable, that stratagems and artifices may be used in the war, yet with such caution, as the same may stand with fidelity and honour; for fraud being used, contrary to contracts and agreements made with the enemy, is mere treachery.—Sir W. Raleigh, Arts of Empire, ch. xiii.

2. Artifice; trick by which some advantage is obtained.

Round up your courage, call up all your counsels, And think on all those stratagems which nature keeps ready to encounter sudden dangers.

Sir J. Denham, The Sophy.

Those oft are stratagems which errors seem; Nor is it flower nodes, but we who dream.

Pope, Essay on Criticism, l. 178.

Stratagematical. adj. [the full form would be stratagematical; see under Stratagem.] Having the character of a stratagem.

His wife, to gain entirely his affections, sent him this stratagematic epistle. Swift, in the Tripos assigned to him by Dr. Barret.

Strategy. s. Art of conducting a campaign.

On what principle then can it be maintained that he was at liberty to exercise the former power without consulting anybody, but that he was bound to exercise the latter power in conformity with the advice of a minister? Will it be said that an error in diplomacy is likely to be more injurious to the country than an error in strategy? Surely not.—Macaulay, History of England, ch. xvii.

Strath. s. [Welsh, ystud.] Valley; bottom: (common in geographical compounds).

They dwelt in valleys or straths, bountied on each side by ridges of hills.—Bishop Morley's Biblical Criticism, vol. iv. p. 68.

Armore is situated in a narrow valley or strath, called Strathgarry, from its being intersected by the river Spey.—Garnett, Tour, ii. 34.

Stratification. s. Arrangement of different matter; arrangement in beds or layers.

A mass in which there is no stratification.—Dr. Hutton, Theory of the Earth, li. 367: 1785.

The first examination of structure, when a young geologist seeks to familiarise himself with the rocks of which the earth's surface is made up, brings to light a peculiarity which cannot fail to attract notice. It is the appearance of bedding, or stratification, presented in the great majority of cases, when the superficial coating of vegetable soil is removed, or a vertical section seen—an appearance indicating clearly the mechanical origin of the formation; or, on the other hand, when this is not the case, a peculiar crystalline structure is observable unaccompanied by any regular stratification, and apparently caused by the gradual cooling of a rock from a state of igneous fusion. Now it is one great object of a geologist, in making himself acquainted with the structure of a district not yet familiar to him, to determine the facts as to whether the rocks are stratified or unstratified; for upon this depends in a great measure their aqueous or igneous origin; and thus the result of a mere cursory and superficial observation becomes a step in the general classification of rocks.—Anders, Geology, Introductory, Practical, and Scientific, pt. i. ch. i.

Stratified. part. adj. Ranged in beds, layers, or strata: (common in Geology, as applied to those portions of the earth's crust which overlap one another, the undermost being the oldest, and the uppermost the newest, like a series of sediments from water; sedimentary).

It requires but little study to discover that every one of the most common and daily operations is concerned more or less in the formation of stratified rocks... Every shower of rain... every brook or river... every wave that dashes against a projecting rock on the sea-coast, or washes into a hollow bay... each... is concerned in the formation of new strata.—Anders, Geology, pt. i. ch. i.

Stratify. v. a. [Fr. stratifier.] Range in beds or layers.

Steel is made from the purest and softest iron, by keeping it red hot, stratified with coal-dust and wood-ashes, &c.—Sir J. E. Hill, Materia Medica.

Stratigraphical. adj. [Gr. γραφω = I write, describe; the result of its connection with the Latin stratum, being a hybrid compound.] Arrangement, disposition, or classification, of anything, according to the stratum to which it belongs; e.g. in a geological collection when we find the remains of widely different plants or animals placed together because they occur in the same or similar strata, the disposition is stratigraphical, as opposed to zoological or botanical; these last being the terms applied when remains from different strata, but of the same genera or families, are associated on the strength of their structural affinities.

If our 'cold area' were to be raised above the surface, so that the deposit at present in progress upon its bottom should become the subject of examination by some geologist of the future, he would find this to consist of a barren sandstone, including fragments of older rocks, the scanty fauna of which would in great degree bear a boreal character; whilst if a portion of our 'warm area' were elevated at the same time with the 'cold area,' the geologist would be perplexed by the stratigraphical continuity of a corallaceous formation, including not only an extraordinary abundance of sponges, but a great variety of other animal remains, several of them belonging to the warmer temperate region, with the barren sandstone whose scanty fauna indicates a widely different climatic condition, which he would naturally suppose to have prevailed at a different period.—Dr. Carpenter, On Deep-Sea Drifts, Proceedings of the Royal Society, December 17, 1858.

Stratocracy. s. [Gr. στρατις = army + κρατος = power. Contrast the o in the Greek with i in the Latin compound Stratify.] Military government.

Ever since the invasion of Kouli Khan, Indonesian, from being a well-regulated government, became a scene of mere anarchy of stratocracy; every great man protecting himself in his tyranny by his soldiers.—Guthrie, Geography, India.

Stratum. s. [Lat. stratus, -a, -um; pass. part. of sterno = I strew.] Layer; (horizontal) extension of any material or substance of appreciable thickness, and with an approximate parallelism (this distinguishing it from a wedge) of its surfaces.

Another was found in a perpendicular fissure of a stratum of stone in Langron iron-mine, Cumberland.—Woodward.

We are thus led to regard the atmosphere of air... as an aerial ocean, of which the surface of the sea and land constitutes the bed, and whose inferior portions or strata, within a few miles of the earth, contain by far the greater portion of the whole mass... It may therefore be considered as consisting of successively superposed strata or layers, each of the form of a spheroidal shell, concentric with the general surface of the sea and land, and each of which is rarer, or specifically lighter than that immediately beneath it; and denser, or specifically heavier than that immediately above it. This at least is the kind of distribution which alone would be consistent with the laws of the equilibrium of fluids above it.—Sir J. Herschel, Outlines of Astronomy, §§ 55-57.

Strata the plural form.

The terrestrial matter is disposed into strata, or layers, placed one upon another: in like manner as any earthly sediment, settling down from a fluid, will naturally be.—Woodward.

With how much wisdom are the strata laid, Of different weight and of a different kind, Of similar forms for sundry ends designed! Sir R. Hookmore.

Straw. s. [A.S. strow, strew.]

1. Stalk on which corn grows, and from which it is threshed.

I can counterfeit the deep transgression, Tremble and start at wagging of a straw, Intending deep suspicion.

Shakespeare, Richard III. iii. 3.

Plat sin with gold, And the strong lauer of justice harkens breaks; Aris it in rags, a pigny's strawe dith jowen it. Id., King Lear, iv. 6.

Apples in lay and straw ripened apparently; let the apple in the straw cure.—Bacon, Natural and Experimental History.

2. Anything proverbially worthless.

Thy arms, thy liberty, beside All that's on the outside of thy hide, Are mine by military law, Of which I will not hate one straw.

Butler, Hudibras, i. 3. 691.

'Tis not a straw matter whether the main cause be right or wrong. Sir R. L. Estlin.

Why the dove should Mrs. Buttol blow me a kiss? I would not kiss her for all the world. Why do I grin when I see her, as if I was blighted? Am I? I don't care a straw for Mrs. Buttol.—Thackeray, Book of Snobs, ch. xviii.

Strawberry. s. [A.S. straw-berie, strew-berie, strew-berge.—The import of the first syllable is uncertain; it has been connected with the verbs stray and straggle, from its runners, and with straw, from the habit of gardeners to lay it between the plants.] Plant and fruit of the genus Fragaria.

Content with food, which nature freely bred, On wildings and on strawberries they fed. Dryden, Translation from Ovid, The Golden Age.

Of the strawberry there are numerous sorts, by some botanists distinguished as species, by others considered as only varieties. Knight, (Hort. Trans. vol. iii. p. 367) considers the grandiflora or pine, the chilensis or Chile, and the virginiana or common scarlet (the first supposed to be a native of Surinam, the second of Chile, and the third of Virginia) to be varieties only of one species, as all may be made to breed together indiscriminately. The fruit has received its name from the ancient practice of laying draw between the rows, which keeps the ground moist and the fruit clean. The cultivated strawberries are natives of temperate or cold climates, as of Europe and America. The fruit, though termed a berry, is in correct botanical language a fleshy receptacle studded with seeds.—London, Encyclopædia of Gardening.

As the first element in a compound: (in the extracts the strawberry-leaves are those of the ducal coronet, with which the compound is nearly synonymous).

More than one of the other great 'civil and religious' families—the families who in one century plundered the church to gain the property of the people, and in another century changed the dynasty to gain the power of the crown—had their brows circled with the strawberry-leaf.—H. Disraeli, Sybil, l. i, ch. iii.

Lord Marquis was spared the pang of the catastrophe... he died in the full faith of dukedom; worshipping the duke, and believing that ultimately he should himself become a duke. It was under all the circumstances a euthanasia; he expired leaning as it were on his white wand and babbling of strawberry-leaves.—Ibid.

Look at the Marquis of Carabas and his two carriages. My Lady Marchioness comes on board, looks round with that happy air of unalloyed terror and imperturbable distinction her ladyship, and rushes to her carriage, for it is impossible that she should mingle with the other souls on deck. There she sits, and will be ill in private. The strawberry-leaves on her chariot-wheels are carved on her ladyship's heart.—Thackeray, Book of Snobs, ch. xxi.

Strawberry-tree. s. Shrub so called from the likeness of its fruit to a strawberry, of the genus Arbutus (medo); arbutus.

The arbutus, or strawberry-tree, is a native of Europe, Asia, and North and South America. They are of easy culture, in sandy loam, or loam and peat; and they are readily propagated, the common kinds of layers, cuttings, or seeds, and the rare and tender sorts, by grafting on those that are more common and hardy. All the species have the outer bark more or less tinged with red.—Leon, Arboretum et Fruticetum Britannicum.

The only variety necessary to be enumerated in these pages is the Arbutus medo, or strawberry-tree. The Greeks called this tree scorpus, and the fruit scorpus; the Latins named the tree Arbutus; but in Pliny's time, when Rome abounded in wine and oil, they called the tree Umedo, which abridgement of 'Cum edo, medo' means 'You will eat but one.' It has the name of strawberry-tree in its, because its berries so nearly resemble in appearance that delicious fruit.—G. H. Johnson, Farmer's Cyclopædia.

Strawbulla. adj. Made up of straw.

They on the smooched plunk,
The suburbs of their strawbulla emble,
New rub'd with balm, exaltate and confer
Their state affairs. —Milton, Paradise Lost, l. 772.

Strawcoloured. adj. Of a light yellow.

I will discharge it in your strawcoloured beard.—Shakespeare, Midsummer-Night's Dream, l. 2.

Strawlike. adj. Resembling, having the character of, a straw.

How is man's heart by vanity drawn in,
On the swift circle of retaining toys World, strawlike, round and round, and then in-gulf'd!
Where gay delusion darkens to despair.
Tennyson, Night Thoughts, night viii.

Strawstuffed. adj. Stuffed with straw.

So rides he mounted on the market-day
Upon a straw-stuffed pannel all the way.
Bishop Hall, Satire, iv. 2.

Strawworm. s. Cuddis; caddis worm.

Strawy. adj.

1. Made of straw; consisting of straw.

In a field of corn, blown upon by the wind, there will appear waves of a colour differing from that of the rest; the wind, by depressing some of the ears, and not others, makes the one reflect more from the lateral and strawy parts than the rest.—Boyle, On Colours.

2. Like straw; light.

There the strawy Greeks, ripe for his edge,
Fall down before him, like the mower's swath.
Shakespeare, Troilus and Cressida, v. 5.
Lather with these words: the epistle... in contentious, swelling, dry, strawy.—Kant, Charity Maintained, &c. in Chillingworth, ch. ii. § 8.

Stray. v. a. [N.Fr. estrayer; Lat. extra = without, beyond.]

1. Wander; rove.

My eye, descending from the hill, surveys
Where Thames among the wanton valley strays.
Sir J. Denham, Cooper's Hill.
Lo, the kind pale o'er all her beauty strays,
Breathes on her lips, and in her bosom plays.
Pope, Imitations, Waller.

2. Move out of the way; range beyond the proper limits.

What grace hath thee now hither brought this way?

Or doest thy feeble feet unwotting hither stray?

Sponser.

No way can I stray,
Save back to England; all the world's my way.
Shakespeare, Richard II., l. 1. 3.

She doth stray about
By holy crosses, where she kneeling prays
For happy wedlock hours.
Id., Merchant of Venice, v. 1.

Wand'rest thou within this lucid orb,
And stray'd from those fair fields of light above,
Amidst this new creation want'st a guide
To reconduct thy steps?
Dryden, State of Innocence, ii. 2.

3. Deviate from the right.

We have erred and strayed from thy ways like lost sheep.—Book of Common Prayer, General Confession.

Stray. v. a. Misdlead. Obsolete.

Hath not else his eye
Stray'd his affection in unlawful love?
Shakespeare, Comedy of Errors, v. 1.

Stray. s.

1. Any creature wandering beyond its limits; anything lost by wandering.

She hath herself and only well defended,
But taken and impounded as a stray
The king of Needs. —Shakespeare, Henry V., l. 2.
Should I take you for a stray,
You must be kept a year and day.
Hunter, Hudibras, ii. 1, 600.

When he has traced his talk through all its wild rambles, let him bring home his stray; not like the lost sheep with joy, but with tears of penitence.—
Dr. H. More, Government of the Tongue.
Seeing him wander about, I took him up for a stray. —Dryden, John Sebastian, l. 1.
He cries out, Neighbour, hast thou seen a stray
Of bullocks and of helleys pass this way?
Addison, Translation from Deid, Transformation of Belshazzar.

2. Act of wandering.

would not from your love make such a stray,
To match you where I hate.
Shakespeare, King Lear, l. 1.

Stray. adj. Wandering.

The firing had become by this time a kind of target-practice on a large scale, and Commander Mottel used to signify himself by picking off stray fellows on shore with a main-deck thirty-two, very neatly and creditably indeed. —Hannay, Singleton Fortenoy.

Strayer. s. One who strays.

Hulderlin, an old divine of Oxford; a great strayer abroad in all quarters of the realm. — For, Acts and Monuments, Bishop Latimer.

Straying. verbal nbs. Act of one who strays;
act of going astray.

Do you see thousand little moles and stumps wandering up and down in a sun-beam? It is God that so peopled it; and he guides their innumerable and irregular strayings. — Bishop Hopkins, Propositions and Discourses, p. 257.

Streak. s. [A.S. strice, strice.] Line of colour different from that of the ground.

The west yet glimmers with some streaks of day;
Now spurs the late traveller apace,
To gain the timely morn. —Shakespeare, Macbeth, iii. 3.
What mean those colour'd streaks in heaven,
Distended, as the brow of God appeareth?
Milton, Paradise Lost, xi. 870.

The night comes on, we eager to pursue,
Till the last streaks of dying day withdrew,
And doubtful moonlight did our rage deceive.
Dryden.

Ten wildings have I gather'd for my dear;
How ruddy, like your lips, their streaks appear!
Id., Amaryllis, 20.

While the fantastick tulip strives to break
In two-fold beauty, and a parted streak.
Prior, Solomon, l. 76.

The fire at this instant burst another window, and shot out in a thin clear streak, like a golden branch.
—Hannay, Singleton Fortenoy.

Streak. v. a.

1. Stripe; variegate in hues; dapple.

All the younglings which were streak'd and pied,
Should fall as Jacob's hire.
Shakespeare, Merchant of Venice, l. 3.

To-morrow, ere fresh morning streak the east,
With first approach of light we must be ris'n,
And at our pleasant labour, to reform
Yon flowery wilderness. —Milton, Paradise Lost, iv. 623.

Now let us leave this earth, and lift our eye
To the large convex of your azure sky;
Behold it like an ample curtain spread,
Now streak'd and glowing with the morning red;
Now at noon in flaming yellow bright,
And chusing sable for the peaceful night.
Prior, Solomon, l. 453.

2. Stretch. Obsolete.

She lurks in midst of all her den, and streaks
From out a ghastly whirlpool all her necks;
Where, glistening round her rock, to fish she falls.
Chapman, Translation of the Odyssey.

Streaky. adj. Striped; variegated by hues.

When the hoary head is hid in snow,
The life is in the leaf, and still between
The fits of falling snows appears the streaky green.
Dryden, The Mower and the Loaf, 164.

Stream. s. [A.S.]

1. Running water; course of running water; current.

He brought streams also out of the rock, and caused waters to run down like rivers. — Isaiah, lxviii. 14.

As plays the sun upon the glassy streams,
Twinkling another counterfeited beam,
Shakespeare, Henry VI. Part I., v. 3.

Coelebs named, of lamentation loud
Heard in the rustful stream; fierce Phlegon,
Whose waves of current fire inflame with rage;
Far off from these, a slow and silent stream,
Lethe, the river of oblivion, rolls
Her wat'ry labyrinth. — Milton, Paradise Lost, li. 579.

O could I flow like thee, and make thy stream
My great example, as thou art my theme!
Thou' deep yet clear, thoo' gentle yet not dull,
Strong without rage, without o'rfloving full.
Sir J. Denham, Cooper's Hill.

Thus from one common source our streams divide,
Ours is the Trojan, yours the Arcadian tide.
Dryden, Translation of the Aeneid, viii. 1st.

Divided interests, while thou think'st to sway,
Draw like two brooks thy middle stream away.
Id., Conquest of Granada, Part I., l. 1.

2. Anything issuing from a head, and moving forward with continuity of parts.

The length of the Lord, like a stream of brimstone, doth kindle it. — Isaiah, xxi. 33.

You, Druides, never want a stream of words.
Dryden, Translation of the Aeneid, xi. 582.

The stream of beauteous hath, by several rivulets which have since fallen into it, wonderfully enlarged its current. — Bishop Atterbury.

3. Anything forcible and continued.

Had their cables of iron chains had any great length, they had been unportable; and being short, the ships must have sunk at any anchor in any stream of weather. — Sir W. Raleigh.

It is looked upon as insolence for a man to adhere to his own opinion against the current stream of antiquity. — Locke.

His eyes were dark and deep, and the clear brow
Which shadowed them was like the morning sky.
The cloudless Heaven of Spain, when in their flow
Thine the bright air, the soft winds as they blow
Make the green world—his gestures did obey
The oracular wind that made his features glow.
And where his curved lips half open lay,
Passion's divinest stream had under impetuous way.
Shelley, R. Coll of Isola.

4. Course; current.

The very stream of his life, and the lustrous in-bath inebriated, must give him a better proclamation.
— Shakespeare, Measure for Measure, iii. 2.

Stream. v. n.

1. Flow; run in a continuous current.

God made the ground be dry.
All but between those banks where rivers now
Stream, and perpetual draw their bound train.
Milton, Paradise Lost, vii. 304.

On all sides round
Streams the black blood, and smokes upon the ground.
Pope, Translation of the Odyssey, iii. 550.

2. Emit a current; pour out water in a stream; be overflown.

3. Issue forth with continuance, not by fits.
Now to impartial love, that god most high,
Do my sighs stream.
Shakespeare, All's well that ends well, ii. 3.

4. Throw a stream: (in the extract, of light).
A thousand suns will stream on thee,
A thousand moons will quiver;
But not by thee my steps shall be
For ever and for ever. — Tennyson, A Farewell.

Stream. v. a.

1. Pour; send forth.

She at length will stream
Sour dew of grace into my wither'd heart,
After long sorrow and consuming smart.
Sponser, Hymn to Heavenly Beauty.

2. Mark with colours or embroidery in long tracks.

The herald's mantle is stream'd with gold.—
Bacon.

Streamers. s.

1. Ensign; flag; pennon; anything flowing loosely from a stock, stand, or flagstaff.

His brave fleet,
With silken streamers the young Phoenix fanning.
Shakespeare, Henry V. iii. chorus.
Brave Rupert from afar appears.
Whose waving streamers the ideal general knows.
Dryden, Annus Mirabilis, cv.
The man of sense his must devour;
But only smells the peal and flowers:
And he must be an idle dreamer,
Who leaves the pie, and gnaws the streamer.
Pope, Alms, l. 383.

2. Northern light; Aurora Borealis.
And he knew by the streamers that shone so bright,
That spirits were riding the northern light.
Sir W. Scott, Lay of the Last Minstrel.

Streaming, part. adj. Flowing in; emitting a stream of anything.

Then grateful flocks with streaming eyes would raise
Historic marvels to record his praise.
Pope, Translation of the Odyssey, l. 303.
From opening skies may streaming glories shine,
And saints embrace thee with a love mine.
Id., Elms to Abchurch.

She, as her carol sadder grew,
From brow and bosom slowly down,
Thru' ray taper fingers drew
Her streaming curls of deepest brown
To right and left. Trangman, Mariana in the South.

Streamlet, s. Small stream.
Unnumber'd glittering streamlets play'd,
And hurled every where their waters sheet.
Thomson, Castle of Indulgence.

Nature'll court in her sequester'd haunts,
By mountain, meadow, streamlet, grove, or cell:
Where the poised lark his evening ditty channels,
And health, and peace, and contentment dwell.
Southey, Ode to Independence.

His last cascade . . . is formed by the same stream which runs through Virgil's grove, but somewhat moderated by a low streamlet which it meets in its passage. Graces, Recollections of Shakspeare,
p. 64.

Streamy, adj.

1. Abounding in running water.
Arcadia.
However streamy now, arid and dry,
Dew'd the goddess water: where deep Melas,
And rocky Cratis flow, the clarion summons
Obscure with rising dust.
Prior, First Hymn of Callimachus.

2. Flowing with a current.
Before him standing his voracious shield,
Like the broad sun, illumined all the field;
His nodding helm emits a streaming ray.
Pope, Translation of the Iliad.

Streave, adj. ? Stray. Rare.
Why did he counterfeit his prince's hand,
Nor some streave lordship of concealed land?
Bishop Hall, Satires, v. 1. (Nares by H. and W.)

Streck, v. a. [stretch] Lay out a dead body. Rare.

Streking, verbal abs. Laying out of a dead body.

Durand gives a pretty exact account of some of the ceremonies used at laying out the body, as they are at present practised in the north of England, where the laying out is called streking.—Braun,
Observations on Popular Antiquities, ii. 141.

Street, s. [A.S. stret.]

1. Way, properly a paved way, between two rows of houses.

He led us through fair streets; and all the way we went there were antient people on both sides, standing in a row.—Bacon.
The streets are no larger than alleys.—Sandys.
When night
Darkens the streets, then wander forth the sons
Of Hell, flown with insolence and wine;
Witness the streets of London.
Milton, Paradise Lost, l. 300.

The Italians say the ancients always considered the situation of a building, whether it was high or low, in an open square, or in a narrow street, and more or less deviated from their rule of art.—Addison,
Travels in Italy.

When you tattle with some crony servant in the same street, leave your own street-door open.—Swift, Advice to a Servant.

2. Proverbially, a public place.

That there be no breaking in, nor going out; and that there be no complaining in our streets.—Paulina,
c. 14.

Let us reflect upon what we daily see practised in the world, and can we believe, if an apostle of Christ appeared in our streets, he would retract his caution, and command us to be conformed to the world?—Rogers, Norma.

Used adjectively.

Our public ways would be so crowded, that we should want street-rooms.—Addison, Spectator.

Street-door, s. [two words.] Door of a house opening into the street, as opposed to one which opens upon some part of the interior of the house.

"Would cure an author's for ever of the fun and folly of opening his street-door, and calling in his neighbours and friends, and kinfolk, with the devil and all his legions, with their humours and engines, &c., only to observe how one sentence of mine follows another, and how the plan follows the whole.—
Sterne, Tristram Shandy, vol. viii. ch. 11.

Mr. Tuckle no sooner got into the open air, than he was seized with a sudden desire to lie on the curb-stone; Sam thought it would be a pity to contradict him, and so let him have his own way. As the rick-et would have been spoilt if left there, Sam very considerately flattered it down on the head of the gentleman in lute, and putting the big stick in his hand, propped him up against his own street-door, rang the bell, and walked quietly home.—Dickens,
Pickwick Papers, ch. xxv.

Keremunt was about to speak when the street-door was opened.—B. Disraeli, Sybil, b. iv. ch. viii.

Streetwalker, s. Prostitute that plies in the open street.

Streight, adj. [Lat. strictus.] Strict;
limited; spare. Rare.

Whereas he meant his corollaries t' apply,
And with streight diet tame his stubborn mabudy.
Spenser, Faerie Queen, ii. 10, 23.

Used adverbially. Strictly.

My lord no went, and streight beight
To seek occasion. Spenser, Faerie Queen, ii. 4, 43.

Strain, s. [strain = race.] ? Tread (of an egg). Obsolete.

If you shall perceive the tunicle salatrice to be hurt and broken, you shall then take xij straines of
. . . the new laid eggs of white hens, and put them into a mortar.—Burrough, Method of Physick, 1684.
(Nares by H. and W.)

Strainable, adj. Constraining; violent.
Rare.

It chanced that a Portuguese shippe was driven and drowned by force of a streynable tempest, ware unto the shore of one of the Scottish isles.—Mollisshod. (Nares by H. and W.)

Strength, s. [A.S. strengð.]

1. Force; vigour; power of the body.
For strength from truth divided, and from just,
Haudable, might merits but disquiesce.
Milton, Paradise Lost, vi. 331.
Thou must outlive
Thy youth, thy strength, thy beauty. Id., xl. 638.
The humbling Trojan cause,
And menaced us with force, our fleet with flame;
Was it the strength of his tongue-valiant lord,
In that black hour, that saved you from the sword?
Dryden.

2. Power of endurance; firmness; durability;
toughness; hardness.
Not founded on the brittle strength of bones.
Milton, Paradise Lost, l. 427.

Firm Dorick pillars found the solid base,
The fair Corinthian crown the higher mass,
And all below is strength, and all above is grace.
Dryden.

3. Vigour of any kind; power of any kind.

God in all things wise and just,
Hinder'd not Satan to attempt the mind
Of man, with strength entire, and free-will arm'd.
Milton, Paradise Lost, x. 7.

This act
Shall bruise the head of Satan, crush his strength.
Id., xii. 429.

He was troubled at a charm withdrawn
Thus suddenly; that sceptre ruled no more—
That even from god the dreadful strength was gone,
Which once made all things subject to its power.
Shelley, Revolt of Islam, v. 28.

4. Power of resistance; sureness; fastness.
Our castle's strength
Will laugh a siege to scorn.
Shakespeare, Macbeth, v. 5.

5. Support; security; that which supports.
Beware me not thy aid,
Thy counsel in this uttermost distress,
My only strength and stay.
Milton, Paradise Lost, x. 919.

6. Power of mind; force of any mental faculty.
Aristotle's large views, sentences and penetration of thought, and strength of judgement, few have equalled.—Locke.
He enjoyed the greatest strength of good sense,
and the most exquisite taste of politeness.—Addison.
We, like friendly colours, found our hearts unite,
And each from each contract new strength and light.
Pope, Epistle to Mr. Jarvis.

7. Spirit; animation.

Methinks I feel new strength within me rise,
Wings growing, and dominion given.
Milton, Paradise Lost, x. 243.

Adam and first matron Eve
Had ended now their solemn, and found Strength added from above, new hope to spring
Out of despair. Milton, Paradise Lost, xl. 136.

8. Vigour of writing; nervous diction; force opposed to softness, in writing or painting.
Leave such to tune their own dull rhymes, and know.

What's roundly smooth, or languishingly slow,
And praise the easy vigour of a line,
Where Denham's strength and Waller's sweetness join. Pope, Essay on Criticism, ii. 309.
Caracci's strength, Correggio's softer line,
Paulo's free stroke, and Titian's warlike divine.
Id., Epistle to Mr. Jarvis.

9. Potency of liquors.

10. Fortification; fortress.

The rashness of talking should not only be retarded by the guard of our heart, but fenced in by certain strengths placed in the mouth.—B. Jonson, Discoveries.

He thought
This inaccessible high strength to have seized,
Milton, Paradise Lost, vii. 140.

Betray'd in all his strengths, the wood beast;
All instruments, all arts of ruin met.
Sir J. Denham, Cooper's Hill.

11. Support; maintenance of power.

What they listed would be a mischief to us, you are providing shall be one of our principal strengths.
—Bishop Sprat, Sermons.

12. Legal force; validity; security.

13. Confidence imparted.

Certain services were due from the soldier to his captain, and from the captain to the prince, and upon the strength of such tenure, in after times, the descendants of these people and their kings did submit and make their wars. Dr. Juvencat.
The allies, after a successful summer, are too apt, upon the strength of it, to neglect their preparations for the ensuing campaign.—Addison.

14. Armament; force; power.

What is his strength by land?
Shakespeare, Antony and Cleopatra, ii. 2.
Nor was there any other strength designed to attend about his highness than his regiment.—Lord Clarendon, History of the Grand Rebellion.

15. Persuasive prevalence; argumentative force.

This presupposed, it may then stand very well with strength and soundness of reason, thus to answer.—Hooker, Ecclesiastical Polity.

Strength, v. a. Strengthen. Rare.

Edward's happy-order'd reign, most fertile breeds
Plenty of mighty spirits, to strength his state.
Daniel, Civil Wars of York and Lancaster.

Strengthen, v. a.

1. Make strong, or stronger.

Thou who streaked fire,
From the fountains of the past,
To glorify the present; oh, haste,
Visit my low desire!
Strengthen me, enlighten me!
I faint in this obscurity,
Thou dewy dawn of memory.
Tennyson, Ode to Memory.

2. Confirm; establish.

Authority is by nothing so much strengthened and confirmed as by custom; for no man easily distrusts the things which he and all men have been always bred up to.—Sir W. Temple.

Thou, O Lord! longin' all the Nine inspire,
And bless your critic with a poet's fire;
An ardent judge, who, zealous in his trust,
With warmth given sentence, yet in always just;
Whose own example strengthens all his laws,
And in himself that great sublime he draws.
Pope, Essay on Criticism, iii. 679.

If it were true that women were thus naturally valuable and light, then how much more valuable is that education, which seems contrived to strengthen and increase this fully.—Law.

2. Animate; fix in resolution.

Charge Joshua, and encourage him and strengthen him.—Deuteronomy, iii. 28.
Let us rise up and build; so they strengthened their hands for this good work.—Nehemiah, ii. 18.

4. Make to increase in power or security.

Let noble Warwick, Cobham, and the rest,
With powerful policy strengthen themselves.
Shakespeare, Henry VI. Part III. l. 2.

Strengthen, v. n. Grow strong.

Oh men for flattery and deceit renown'd!
Thus when ye are young ye learn it all like him,
Till, as your years increase, that strengthens too,
T' undo your maids. Shakespeare, Othello, i. 1.
The young disease which must subdue at length, Grows with his growth, and strengthens with his strength. Pope, Essay on Man, ii. 138.

Strengthen, s.

1. That which gives strength; that which makes strong.

Garlick is a great strengtheners of the stomach upon decays of appetite or indigestion.—Sir W. Temple.

2. Medicine which adds to the strength of the body, stimulants (cordials) merely exciting that which already exists.

Strengtheners add to the bulk and firmness of the solids; cordials are such as drive on the vital actions; but these such as confirm the stamina.—Quincy.

strengthening, verbal abs. Process by which anything is strengthened; act of that which strengthens.

They that were in the tower shut up the Israelites round about the sanctuary, and sought always their hurt and the strengthening of the heathen.—1 Mac-cabees, vi. 18.

strengtheness, adj.

1. Wanting, deprived of strength.

Yet are these best, whose strengtheness stay is numb, Unable to support this lump of clay.

Shakespeare, Henry VI. Part I. li. 5.

As the wretch, whose fever-weak'd joints, Like strengtheness hings, buckle under life Impatient of his fit, breaks like a fire Out of his keeper's arms.

Id., Henry IV. Part II. l. 1.

2. Wanting potency; weak.

This liquor must be inflammable or not, and yet subtle and pungent, which may be called spirit; or else strengtheness or insipid, which may be named phlegm.—Boyle.

Strenuous, adj. [Lat. strenuus.]

1. Brave; bold; active; valiant; dangerously laborious.

Nations grown corrupt Love bondage more than liberty; Bondage with ease than strenuous liberty.

Milton, Samson Agonistes, 253.

Would any true son of the Church of England seriously maintain that a man who was a strenuous royalist till after the battle of Naseby, who then went over to the Parliament, who, as soon as the Parliament had been purged, became an obsequious servant of the King, and who, as soon as the King had been ejected, professed himself a faithful subject of the Protector, was more deserving of the respect of Christian men than the stout old cavalier who bore true faith to Charles the First in prison and to Charles the Second in exile.—Macaulay, History of England, ch. xiv.

2. Zealous; vehement.

He resolves to be strenuous for taking off the tax, against the maxims of all wise Christian governments, which always had some established religion, leaving at best a toleration to others.—Id., Letter to Pope.

He gave up his indefinite prerogative of reserving benefices, and received only a small stipulated patronage. This convention met with strenuous opposition in France; the parliament of Paris yielded only to force; the university hardly stopped short of secession.—Hallam, View of the State of Europe during the Middle Ages, pt. ii. ch. vii.

Strenuously, adv. In a strenuous manner.

1. Vigorously; actively.

Many can use both hands, yet will there divers remain that can strenuously make use of neither.—Sir T. Browne, Vulgar Errors.

2. Zealously; vehemently; with ardour.

Writers dispute strenuously for the liberty of conscience, and inveigh largely against all ecclesiasticks under the name of high church.—Swift.

Strenuousness, s. Attribute suggested by Strenuous; state of being strenuous; earnestness; laboriousness.

Strépent, adj. [Lat. strepsens, -entis, pres. part. of strepo = I make a noise.] Noisy; loud.

Peace to the strepsent horn! Let no harsh ciuonance disturb the morn; No sounds inelegant and rude Her sacred solitude profane.

Shelton, Ode to Rural Elegance.

Stréperous, adj. [Lat. streperus.] Loud; noisy.

Porta conceives, because in a streperous eruption it smelt against fire, it doth therefore resist lightning.—Sir T. Browne.

Stress, s. [N.Fr. estrouisir = straiten, contract.]

1. Importance; important part.

The stress of the fable lies upon the hazard of having a numerous stock of children.—Sir R. L'Estrange.

This, on which the great stress of the business depends, would have been made out with rascous sufficient.—Locke.

2. Importance imputed; weight ascribed.

A body may as well lay too little as too much stress upon a dream; but the less we heed them the better.—Sir R. L'Estrange.

It showed how very little stress is to be laid upon the precedents they bring.—Lea.
Consider how great a stress he laid upon this duty, while upon earth, and how earnestly he recommended it.—Bishop Atterbury.

3. Violence; force; either acting or suffered.

By stress of weather driven,
At last they landed.

Dryden, Translation of the Æneid.
Though the faculties of the mind are improved by exercise, yet they must not be put to a stress beyond their strength.—Locke.

Shall they who by the stress of grinning toll
Wrest from the unwilling earth his luxuries,
Perish for crime, while his foul blood may boil,
Or creep within his veins at will?—Arise!
And to high justice make her chosen sacrifice.

Shelley, Revolt of Islam, v. 32.

Storm and stress. Translation of a German combination, as in extract.

The literary period is called the Sturm-und-Drang Zeit, the Storm-and-Stress Period; for great indeed was the rage and fury of these power-men. Beauty, to their mind, seemed synonymous with strength. All passion was poetical, so it were but fierce enough. Their head moral virtue was pride; their heart-blood of mischief was some transcript of Milton's Devil. Often they inverted Holbrooke's plan, and, instead of patronising Providence, did directly the opposite, raging with extreme animation against Fate in general, because it enthralled free virtue; and with clenched hands, or sounding shields, hurling defiance towards the vault of heaven.—Carlyle, Critical and Miscellaneous Essays, State of German Literature.

Stress, v. a. Distress; put to hardships or difficulties.

Stirred with pity of the stressed plight
Of this sad realm.

Spenser.

If the magistrate be so stressed that he cannot protect those that are pious and peaceable, the Lord help.—Waterhouse, Apology for Learning, p. 155.

Stretch, v. a. [A.S. streccean.]

1. Extend; spread out to a distance.

Stretch thine hand unto the poor, that thy blessing may be perfected.—Revelations, vii. 32.
Take thy rod, and stretch out thine hand upon the waters of Egypt.—Exodus, vii. 19.

Eden stretch'd her line

From Anran, eastward to the royal towers
Of great Seleucus, built by Grecian kings.
Milton, Paradise Lost, iv. 210.

2. Elongate, or strain to a greater space.

Regions to which
All thy dominion, Adam, is no more Than what this garden is to all the earth,
And all the sea, from one entire globe
Stretch'd into longitude.

Milton, Paradise Lost, v. 760.

3. Expand; display.

Leviathan on the deep,
Stretch'd like a promontory sleep.
Milton, Paradise Lost, vii. 413.
What more likely to stretch forth the heavens, and lay the foundation of the earth, than infinite power?—Archbishop Tillotson.

4. Strain to the utmost.

This kiss, if it durst speak,
Would stretch thy spirits up into the air.
Shakespeare, King Lear, iv. 2.

5. Make tense.

6. Carry by violence farther than is right; strain: (as, to stretch a text; to stretch credit).

Stretch, v. n.

1. Be extended, locally, intellectually, or consequentially.

What I will the line stretch out to th' crack of doom?
Shakespeare, Macbeth, iv. 1.
This to rich Ophir's rising morn is known,
And stretch'd out far to the burnt swartly zone.

Cowley.

Your dungeon stretching far and wide beneath.
Milton, Paradise Lost, ii. 1003.

2. Bear extension without rupture.

The inner membrane, that involved the liquor of the egg, because it would stretch and yield, remained unbroken.—Boyle.

3. Sully beyond the truth.

What an alloy do we find to the credit of the most probable event, that is reported by one who uses to stretch?—Dr. H. More, Government of the Tongue.

Stretch, s.

1. Extension; reach; occupation of more space.

At all her stretch her little wheel she spread.
And with her feather'd arms embraced the dead:
Then flickering to his pallid lips, she strove
To print a kiss. Dryden, Translation from Ovid, Ceyx and Alcyon.

Disruption, as strong as they are, the bones would be in some danger of, upon a great and sudden stretch or contortion, if they were dry.—Ray, On the Wisdom of God manifested in the Works of the Creation.

2. Force of body extended.

He thought to swim the stormy main,
By stretch of arms the distant shore to gain.
Dryden, Translation of the Æneid.

3. Effort; struggle: (from the act of running).

Upon this alarm we made incredible stretches towards the south, to gain the fastnesses of Preston.—Addison.

With on.

Those put a lawful authority upon the stretch to the abuse of power, under the colour of prerogative.—Sir R. L'Estrange.

His friend's discourse was preface with a question, 'How he liked the company of the preceding evening?' 'Why, excellently well,' said Lord Clevearch; 'only I should have liked the wit better had it seemed to flow more freely. Every man's invention seemed on the stretch, and each extravagant simile seemed to set one half of your men of wit into a brown study to produce something which should out-herald it.'—Sir W. Scott, The Fortunes of Nigel, ch. xiii.

The variety of these devices, and the frequency of their recurrence, kept Sir John de Walton's anxiety so perpetually upon the stretch, that he at no time thought himself exactly out of the Black Douglas's reach any more than the good Christian approaches himself out of reach of the wiles of the Devil.—Id., Castle Dangerous.

4. Utmost extent of meaning.

Quotations, in their utmost stretch, can signify no more than that Luther lay under severe agonies of mind.—Bishop Atterbury.

5. Utmost reach of power.

This is the utmost stretch that nature can,
And all beyond is fulsome, false, and vain.

Granville.

Stretched, part. adj. Extended; made tense.
So the stretched cord the shackled dancer tries.

Smith.

Strétcher, s.

1. Anything used for extension.

His hopes entiled
His strength, the strétcher of Ulysses' string.

Chapman.

2. Term in bricklaying.

Tooth in the stretching course two inches with the strétcher only.—Moran, Mechanical Exercises.
Strétcher in architecture [is] a block of stone, or a brick, laid horizontally with its length in the direction of the face of a wall. A stretching-course has the bricks or stones in its composition laid horizontally with their length in the direction of the wall.—Brande and Cox, Dictionary of Science, Literature, and Art.

3. Timber against which the rower plants his feet.

This fiery speech inflames his fearful friends,
They tug at every oar, and every strétcher bends.
Dryden, Translation of the Æneid, v. 110.

They now appeared on the scene—three desperadoes, as became their calling, with features aroused by the tropical sun under which they had pursued it. They rushed at once among the crowd, lying about them with their strétchers; and, forcing their way up to Cleveland, speedily delivered him from the hands of the officers, who were totally unprepared to resist an attack so furious and so sudden, and carried him off in triumph towards the quay.—Sir W. Scott, The Pirate, ch. xxiii.

4. Wooden frame on which violent persons are fastened, in order to transport them from place to place.

Stretching, verbal abs. Act of one who, that which, stretches.

The stretching out of his wings shall fill the breadth of thy land.—Isaiah, vii. 8.

Stretching-course, s. Term in bricklaying. (For example see Strétcher, in second sense.)

Strow, v. a. often spelt strow; pass. part. strowed, struwed, strowed, strawn, strawn. [A.S. strewian, strewian.]

1. Spread by being scattered.

Angel forms lay entranced
Thick as autumnal leaves that strow the brooks
In Vallombrosa. Milton, Paradise Lost, i. 501.
Come, come, come!
Leave the bed, low, cold, and red,
Strowed beneath a nation's dead.

Shelley, Prometheus Unbound.

I think that he who would wish to have his own hair honoured when time has strewed it with silver, should so rein his worth when in the presence of the young, as may show in what respect he holds innocence.—Sir W. Scott, Castle Dangerous.

2. Spread by scattering.

I thought thy bride-bed to have deck'd, sweet maid,
And not have strew'd thy grave.

Here be tears of perfect mean,
Wept for thee in Helicon;
And some flowers and some bays,
For thy horse, to strew the ways.
Milton, Epitaph on the Marchioness of Winchester.
All the ground
With silver'd armour strove.

Id., Paradise Lost, vi. 584.
Come, shepherds, come, and strow with leaves the plain.
Such funeral rites your Daphnis did ordain.

Dryden, Translation of the Georgics, v. 59.
With oser founts the sparkling water strow,
With massy stones make bridges if it flow.
Id., Translation of the Georgics, iv. 37.

3. Scatter loosely.

But little need to strow my store.
He took the calf which they had made, and burnt it in the fire, and around it to powder, and strewed it upon the water, and made the children of Israel drink of it.—Exodus, xxi. 20.

With furies and metrical ories fired . . .
Whom 'er'n the savage heads had spared, they kill'd,
And strew'd his mangled limbs about the field.

Dryden, Translation of the Georgics, iv. 756.
There have been three years' dearth of corn, and every place strew'd with beggary.—Swift.

Stréwing. verb. abs. Anything strewn, or fit to be strewn.

The herbs that have on them the cold dew o' the night
Are strewings fit't for graves.

Shakespeare, Cymbeline, iv. 2.
Stréwment. s. Anything scattered in decoration.

Her death was doubtful. . . For charitable prayers,
Shards, flints, and pebbles should be thrown on her;
Yet here she is allow'd her virgin chaste,
Her maiden strewments, and the bringing home
Of bell and burial. Shakespeare, Hamlet, v. 1.

Stríes. s. pl. [Lat.]

1. Small channels or threadlike lines.

The salt, leisurely permitted to shoot of itself in the liquor, exposed to the open air, did shoot into more fair crystalline stries, than those that were poured out of the remaining part of the same liquor
by a more hasty evaporation. — Boyle.

2. In Architecture. Fillets between the flutes of columns.

Stríate. adj. Formed in striae.

Don Carlos imagines this earth once to have been a sun, and so the centre of a lesser vortex, whose axis still kept the same posture, by reason of the striate particles fluting in fit pores for their passages, but only in this direction. — Ray.

Stríate. v. a. Mark with striae.

Stríated. part. adj. Marked with striae.

These effluvia fly by striated atoms and winding particles, as Don Carlos conceiveth, or glide by streams attracted from either pole unto the equator.
— Sir T. Browne, Vulgar Errors.
Crystal, when incorporated with the fibrous tales, shows, if broke, a striated or fibrous texture, like those tales. — Woodward.

Stríation. s. Marking in striae.

Stríature. s. Disposition of striae.

Parts of tuberculous leucostitis show several variations in the crista, striature, and texture of the body.
— Wagland.

Strích. s. [Gr. σπίξ; Lat. strix.] Bird of bad omen.

The ill-favoured owl, death's dreadful messenger,
The hoarse night-raven, trumpet of doleful drear,
The leather-winged bat, day's enemy,
The fearful strích, still waiting on the bier. Spenser.

Strícken. part. adj. Struck.

The cunningest mariners were so conquered by the storm, as they thought it best with stricken sails to yield to be governed by it. — Sir P. Sidney.

That shall I show, as sure as bound
The strícke deer doth challenge by the bleeding wound. Spenser.

Stríckle, Stríckler, Stríckles. s.

1. Piece of wood used in measuring corn, which strikes the corn to level it with the bushel or strike.

The striker is a thing that goes along with the measure, which is a straight board with a staff fixed at the side, to draw over corn in measuring, that it exact the height of the measure. — Holme,
Academy of Armoury, p. 371.

This level measure of grain is here provincially termed strikes and strickles. — Shaw, History of Staf- fordshire.

2. Instrument used to whet scythes with.

Stríct. adj. [Lat. strictus, pass. part. of stringo = I bind.]

1. Exact; accurate; rigorously nice.

Then't fall into deception unaware,
Not keeping strict watch.

As legions in the field their front display,
To try the fortune of some doubtful day,
And move to meet their foes with sober pace,
Stríct to their figure, though in wider space. Dryden.

He checks the bold design;
And rules as strict his labour'd works confine,
As if the Stagyrite o'erlook'd each line.

Pope, Essay on Criticism, l. 186.
The French ministers anxiously expected him to say something, but . . . he observed strict silence.
How to interpret that silence they scarcely knew.
They were certain only that it could not be the effect of unconcern. — Macaulay, History of Eng- land, ch. xiii.

2. Severe; rigorous; not mild; not indulgent.

Implore her, in my voice, that she make friends
To the strict deity.

Shakespeare, Measure for Measure, l. 3.

By nature free, not over-ruled by false luxuriance, or strict necessity.

Milton, Paradise Lost, v. 626.
If a strict hand be kept over children from the beginning, they will in that age be tractable; and if,
as they grow up, the rigour be, as they deserve it, gently relaxed, former restraints will increase their love. — Locke.

Nimble the rites of strict religion knew;
On every altar laid the license due.

Prior, Curia Secularis for the Year 1700.

3. Confined; not extensive.

As they took the compass of their commission stríct or larger, so their dealings were more or less moderate. — Hooker, Ecclesiastical Polity.

4. Close; tight.

The lustful god, with speedy pace,
Just thought to strain her in a strict embrace.

Dryden, Translation from Ovid,
Transformation of Sappho.

The fatal noose performed its office, and with most strict ligature squeezed the blood into his face.
— Arbuthnot.

5. Tense; not relaxed.

We feel our fibres grow strict or lax according to the state of the air. — Arbuthnot.

Stríctly. adv. In a strict manner.

1. Exactly; with rigorous accuracy.

His horse-troops, that the vanguard had, he stríctly did command
To ride their horses temperately. Chapman.

The other parts being grosser, composed not only water, stríctly so called, but the whole mass of liquid bodies. — T. Burnet, Theory of the Earth.

Charles him stríctly
Not to proceed, but wait my further pleasure.

Dryden, Spanish Friar, iii. 3.

2. Rigorously; severely; without remission or indulgence.

In the discharge of thy place, set before thee the best examples; and after a time set before thee thine own, and examine thyself stríctly whether thou didst not best at first. — Bacon.

God may with the greatest justice stríctly require endeavour from us, and without any inconsistency with his goodness inflict penalties on those who are wanting. — Rogers.

A weak prince again disposed the people to new attempts, which it was the clergy's duty to endeavour to prevent, if some of them had not proceeded upon a topic that, stríctly followed, would enslave all mankind. — Swift.

3. Closely; tightly; with tenseness.

Stríctness. s. Attribute suggested by Stríct.

1. Exactness; rigorous accuracy; nice regularity.

Such of them as cannot be concealed connive at, though in the stríctness of your judgement you cannot pardon. — Dryden.

Who were made privy to the secrets of Heaven, but such as performed him revealed will at an higher rate of stríctness than the rest. — Moth, Sermons.
Eusebius, who is not in stríctness to be reckoned with the Ante-Nicenes. — Bishop Waterland.

Though in stríctness our Saviour might have pleaded exemption from the Jewish tribute, he exercised his divine power in a miracle to pay it. — Rogers.

The stríctness used with remnants, which much increased from 1570 or 1580, had the usual consequence of persecution, that of multiplying hyper-critism. — Hallam, Constitutional History of England,
ch. iii.

If legislative power be essential to sovereignty, we cannot in stríctness meet the king of France to have been sovereign beyond the extent of his dominion territory. — Hallam, View of the State of Europe during the Middle Ages, pt. i. ch. ii.

As ours is emphatically styled a government by king, lords, and commons, we cannot perhaps in stríctness carry it further back than the admission of the latter into parliament; so that, if the constant representation of the commons is to be referred to the age of Edward I., it will be nearer the truth to date the English constitution from that than from any earlier era. — Ibid., pt. iii. ch. viii.

2. Severity; rigour.

These commissioners proceeded with such stríct- ness and severity as did much obscure the king's mercy. — Dana, History of the Reign of Henry VII.

3. Closeness; tightness; not laxity.

Strícture. s.

1. Stroke; touch.

The God of nature implanted in their vegetable natures certain passive stríctures, or signatures of that wisdom which hath made and ordered all things with the highest reason. — Sir M. Hale.

2. In Medicine. Contraction; closure by contraction.

As long as there is thirst, with a free passage by urine, and strícture of the vessels, so long is water safely taken. — Arbuthnot.

3. Slight touch upon a subject; not a set discourse.

Thus have I past through all your letter, and given myself the liberty of these stríctures by way of reflection on all and every passage. — Hammond.

Stríde. s. [A.S. stríde.] Long step; step taken with great violence; wide divarication of the legs.

I'll speak between the change of man and boy,
With a reel voice, and turn two mincing steps
Into a manly stríde.

Shakespeare, Merchant of Venice, iii. 4.

The monster, moving onwards, came as fast,
With horrid strides. Milton, Paradise Lost, ii. 675
Her voice theatrically loud,
And masculine her stríde.

Pope, Imitations, Earl of Dorset.

Stríde. v. n. pret. strúde, or stríd; past part.
stríden.

1. Walk with long steps.

Mars in the middle of the shining shield
Is graced, and strides along the liquid field.
Dryden, Translation of the Æneid, viii. 623.

2. Stund with the legs far from each other.

Stríde. v. a. Pass by a stride.

See him stride,

Valleys wide.

Gay, Lilliputian Ode to Quinbus Flestrin.

Stríding-place. s. Place for striding over anything.

This stríding-place is called the Strid,
A name which it bore of yore;
A thousand years hath it borne that name,
And shall a thousand more.
And hither is young Remilly come,
And what may now forbear
That he, perhaps for the hundredth time,
Shall bound across the Strid?

Wordsworth, The Force of Prayer.

Stríder. s. [Lat.] Quick loud noise; clup.

Inturna from afar beheld her fly,
And knew the ill omen by her screaming cry,
And stríder of her wings.

Dryden, Translation of the Æneid, xii. 123.

Strídulous. adj. [Lat. strídulus.] Making a small noise; hissing; creaking; chattering.

Not a strídulous jay, not a petulant sparrow. —
Bishop Hall, Beauty and Unity of the Church.

It arises from a small and strídulous noise, which,
being firmly rooted, maketh a division of parts. —
Sir T. Browne.

A thin thread of water trickling through a leaden tube yields a strídulous and plaintive sound compared with the full volume of sound corresponding to the full volume of water. — De Quincey, Works, Autobiographic Sketches, vol. xiv. p. 18.

Strífe. s. [stríve.]

1. Contentious; contest; discord; war; lawsuit.

I and my people were at great strífe with the children of Ammon. — Judges, xii. 2.

Some indeed preach Christ even of envy and strífe, and some also of good-will. — Philippians, i. 13.
He is proud, knowing nothing; but doing about questions and strífe of words. — 1 Timothy, vi. 4.

Acts of hateful strífe, hateful to all.

Milton, Paradise Lost, vi. 526.

These vows, thus granted, raised a strífe above
As twist the rod of war and queen of love.
Dryden, Palamon and Arcite, ii. 576.

"Is this that shakes our country with alarms,
And gives up Rome a prey to Roman arms,
Produces frail, and cruel, and strife. Addison.
Born to no pride, inheriting no strife,
Nor marrying discord in a noble wife.
Pope, Epistle to Arbuthnot.

2. Contest of emulation.

Thus gods contended, noble strife!
Who most should ease the wants of life. Congreve.
By wise governing, it may be so ordered, that both sides shall be at strife, not which shall flatter most, but which shall do the prince and the publick the most honour and the most faithful service.—*Sir W.
Taverner.*

3. Opposition; contrariety; contrast.

Artificial strife
Lives in those touches, livelier than life.
Shakespeare, Timon of Athens, l. 1.

Strife, adj. Contentions; discordant.

Th' age was strifeful and ambitious,
And the fox gullible and most covetous. Spenser.
I know not what new creation may creep forth from the strifeful heap of things, into which, as into a second chaos, we are fallen.—Dr. Maule.

Strigent. a. [Lat. strigmentum, from stringo = scrape.] Scrimping.

Many, besides the strigents and audacious sollutions from men's hands, acknowledge that nothing proceedeth from gold in its usual devotion.—*Sir T.
Browne, Vulgar Errors.*

Strike. v. a. pret. struck, or struck; past part. struck, stricken, stricken, or struck.

1. Act upon by a blow; hit with a blow.

He at Philippi kept
His sword etched like a dancer, while I struck
The lean and wrinkled Cassius. Shakespeare, Antony and Cleopatra, iii. 9
We will deliver you the cause,
Why I, that did love Caesar when I struck him, Proceeded thus. Id., Julius Caesar, iii. 1.
I must
O' the wail his fall, whom I myself struck down.
Id., Macbeth, iii. 1.

2. Punish; afflict.

To punish the just is not good, nor to strike princes for equity.—Proverbs, xvii. 26.

3. Dash; throw by a quick motion.

They shall take of the blood, and strike it on the two side-pieces. Exodus, xii. 7.

4. Notify by sound.

The drums presently striking up a march, they plucked up their ensigns, and forward they ran.— Knutley, History of the Turks.

A judicious friend moderates the pursuit, gives the signal for action, presses the advantage, and strikes the critical minute.—Collier, Essays, of Friendship.

5. Stamp; impress.

The memory in some men is very tenacious; but yet there seems to be a constant decay of all our ideas, even of those which are struck deepest, and in minds the most retentive.—Locke.

6. Contract; lower; wail: (only used in the phrases to strike sail, or to strike a flag).

How many nobles then would hold their places,
That must strike sail to storms of vile sort!
Shakespeare, Henry IV. Part I. v. 2.

To this all differing passions and interests should strike sail, and, like swelling streams, running different courses, should yet all make haste into the sea of common safety.—Sir W. Temple.

They strike sail where they know they shall be mastered, and murder where they can with safety.
—Dryden.

Now, did I not so near my labour's end
Strike sail, and haw't'ning to the harbour tend,
My song to how'ry gardens might extend.
Id., Translation of the Georgics, iv. 175.

7. Alarm; put into emotion; surprise.

The rest, struck with horror stood,
To see their leader cover'd o'er with blood. Wallen.

Jack Straw at London-stone, with all his rout,
Struck not the city with so loud a shout.
Dryden, The Cuck and the Fox, 742.

We are no sooner presented to any one we never saw before, but we are immediately struck with the idea of a proud, a reserved, an affable, or a good-natured man.—Addison.

His virtues render our assembly awful,
They strike with something like religious fear.
Id., Cato.

Didst thou but view him right, thou'dst see him black
With murder, treason, sacrilege, and crimes,
That strike my soul with horror but to name them.
Id.,

Nice works of art strike and surprise us most upon the first view; but the better we are acquainted with them, the less we wonder.—Bishop Altbury.

Court virtues bear, like gums, the highest rate,
Born where heaven's influence scarce can penetrate;
In life's low vale, the soil the virtues like,
They please as beauties, here as wonders strike.
Pope, Moral Essays, l. 141.

8. Make a compact or agreement of any kind. Lutinism, from lutinus ferire.

Sign but his paces, he vows he'll ne'er again
The sacred names of Jove and Jove profane;
Strike up the bargain quickly; for I swear,
As times go now, he offers very fair.

Dryden, Prologue to Don Sebastian.
I came to offer peace, to reconcile Past enmities; to strike perpetual leagues With Vance. A. Phillips, Briton.

9. Produce by sudden action.

The court paved, struck up a great heat in summer, and much cold in winter.—Bacon, Essays, of Building.

Warlike wide her myrtle wand,
She strikes an universal peace through sea and land.
Milton, On the Morning of Christ's Na-

These men are fortune's jewels, mounted bright,
Brought forth with their own fire and light;
If I her vulgar stone for either took,
Out of myself it must be struck. Cowley.

Take my engines!
With this the infernal ghosts I can command,
And strike a terror through the Stygian strand. Dryden.

10. Affect suddenly in any particular manner.

When verses cannot be understood, nor a man's good will seconded with the forward child understanding, it strikes a man more dead than a great reveling in a little room. Shakespeare, As you like it, iii. 2.

Strike her young hours,
Ye taking airs, with languors. Id., King Lear, ii. 4.

He that is stricken blind cannot forget
The precious treasure of his eye-sight lost. Id., Romeo and Juliet, i. 1.

So censured the rival crew, when Purcell came,
They sang no more, or only sung his fame;
Struck dumb, they all admired. Dryden, On the Death of Purcell.

Violently disarms envy, and strikes it dead.—
Collier.

Then do not strike him dead with a denial,
But hold him up in life. Addison, Cato.

I have sometimes wondered why we are not struck with mechanism in animal bodies as readily and as strongly as we are struck with it at first sight, in a watch or a mill.—Paley, Natural Theology, ch. ix.

Among German writers of this stamp, we would ask any candid reader of them . . . whether had taste struck him as a prevailing characteristic.— Carlyle, Critical and Miscellaneous Essays, State of German Literature.

11. Cause to sound by blows: (with up only emphatical).

Strike up the drums, and let the tongue of war Plead for our interest, and our being here. Shakespeare, King John, v. 2.

12. Forge; mint.

Though they the lines on golden anvils beat,
It looks as if they struck them at a heat. Tate.
Some very rare coins struck of a pound weight, of gold and silver, Constantine sent to Chilperick.—
Arbuthnot.

Strike off.

a. Erase from a reckoning or account.

Deliver Helen, and all damage else
Shall be struck off. Shakespeare, Troilus and Cressida, ii. 2.

I have this while with leaden thoughts been prest;
But I shall in a more convenient time
Strike off this score of absence. Id., Othello, iii. 4.

When any willful sin stands charged on our account, it will not be struck off till we forsake and turn away from it.—Kellierworth.

Ask men's opinions: Needs now shall tell
How trade increases, and the world goes well:
Strike off his pension, by the setting sun,
And Britain, if not Europe, is undone. Pope, Moral Essays, l. 168.

b. Separate by a blow, or any sudden ac- tion.

Germany had stricken off that which appeared corrupt in the doctrine of the church of Rome;
but seemed nevertheless in discipline still to retain therewith great conformity.—Hooker, Ecclesiastical Polity.

They followed so fast that they overtook him, and without further delay struck off his head.—Knutley, History of the Turks.

He was taken prisoner by Surina, lieutenant-general for the king of Persia, who struck off his head.—Hakewell, Apology.

A mass of water would be struck off and separate from the rest, and tent through the air like a flying river.—T. Burnet, Theory of the Earth.

c. Print: (as, 'five hundred impressions were struck off').

Strika out.

a. Produce by collision.

My thoughtless youth was wing'd with vain desires;
My manhood, long misled by wandering fires,

Follow'd false lights; and, when their glimpses were gone,
My pride struck out new sparks of her own. Dryden, Hind and Panther, l. 72.

b. Blot; efface.

By expurgatory animadversions, we might strike out great numbers of hidden qualities, and having once a corrected list, with more safety attempt their removal.—Sir T. Brown.

To methodize is as necessary as to strike out.—
Pope.

c. Bring to light.

d. Form at once by a quick effort.

Whether thy hand strike out some free design,
Where life awakes and dawns at every line,
Or blend in tumultuous tints the colour'd mists,
And from the canvass call the mimic face. Pope, Epistle to Mr. Jenkins, 5.

Struck, or stricken, in years. Being of an advanced age.

The king
Is wise and virtuous, and his noble queen
Well struck in years; fair, and not jealous. Shakespeare, Richard III. l. 1.

Strike. v. n.

1. Make a blow.

I in mine own was charn'd,
Could not find death, where I did hear him groan;
Nor feel him where he struck. Shakespeare, Cymbeline, v. 3.

It pleased the king
To strike at me upon his misconstruction;
When he tript me behind. Id., King Lear, ii. 2.

2. Collide; clash.

Holding a ring by a thread in a glass, tell him that lodgeth it, it shall strike so many times against the side of the glass, and no more.—Bacon, Natural and Experimental History.

3. Act by repeated percussion.

Did thy mistress, when my drink is ready,
She strike upon the bell. Shakespeare, Macbeth, ii. 1.

Those antique ministers, sure, were Charleslike kings,
Cities their ladies, and subjects' hearts their strings;
On which with so divine a hand they struck,
Consent of motion from their breath they took. Waller.

4. Sound by the stroke of a hammer.

Cesar, 'tis at seven o'clock. Shakespeare, Julius Caesar, ii. 2.

Deep thoughts will often suspend the senses so far, that about a man clocks may strike and he be ring, which he takes no notice of.—Grew.

5. Make an attack.

Is not the king's name forty thousand names?
Arm, arm, my name; a young subject strikes
At thy great glory. Shakespeare, Richard II. iii. 2.

When, by their designing leaders taught,
To strike at power which for themselves they sought,
The vulgar, gild'd into rebellion, arm'd,
Their blood to action by their prize was warm'd. Dryden, Astraea Redux, 31.

6. Act by external influx.

Consider the red and white colours in porphyry;
hinder light but from striking on it, and its colours vanish.—Locke.

7. Sound with blows.

Whilst any trumpet did sound, or drum struck up,
His sword did ne'er have striking in the field. Shakespeare, Henry VI. Part I. i. 3.

8. Be dashed; be stranded.

The admiral galley, wherein the emperor was,
struck upon a sand, and there stuck fast.—*Knutley,
History of the Turks.*

9. Pass with a quick or strong effect.

Now and then a glittering beam of wit or passion strikes through the obscurity of the poem: any of these effect a present liking, but not a lasting admiration.—Dryden.

10. Pay homage, as by lowering the sail.

We see the wind sit sore upon our sails;
And yet we strike not, but securely perish. Shakespeare, Richard II. ii. 1.

I'd rather chop this hand off at a blow,
And with the other fling it at thy face,
Than bear so low a sail, to strike to thee. Id., Henry VI. Part III. v. 1.

The interest of our kingdom is ready to strike to that of your poorest fishing-towns: it is hard you will not accept our services.—Self.

11. Be put by some sudden act or motion into any state; break forth.

It struck on a sudden into such reputation, that it seems any longer to sculk, but owns itself publicly.—Dr. H. More, Government of the Tongue.

Strike in with. Conform; suit itself to; join with at once.

Those who, by the prerogative of their age, should frown youth into sobriety, imitate and strike in with them, and are really vicious that they may be thought young.—South, Sermons.

They catch at every shadow of relief, strike in at a venture with the next companion, and, so the dead commodity is taken off, care not who be the champion.—Norris.

The cares or pleasures of the world strike in with every thought. Addison.

He immediately struck in with them, but described this march to the temple with so much horror, that he shivered every joint.—Id., Frederick.

Strike out. Spread or rove; make a sudden excursion.

In this plain was the last general rendezvous of mankind; and from thence they were broken into companies and dispersed, the several successive generations, like the waves of the sea, over-reaching one another, and striking out farther and farther upon the land.—T. Burnet, Theory of the Earth.

When a great man strikes out into a sudden irregularity, he needs not question the respect of a fortune.—Collier.

Strike, s.

1. Joint action on the part of a body of workmen, or persons employed in any department of business, by which each and all refuse to work except under certain prescribed conditions; often with the means of sustenance, or some approximate equivalent to the loss of wages thereby incurred, provided for by a common fund.

That apart from the 'seventeen thousand utterly necessitous, dying on Montmartre,' most of whom, indeed, have not passed, and been dismissed into space 'with four shillings,' there is a strike, or union, of domestics out of place; who assemble for public speaking; next, a strike of tailors, for even they will strike and speak; further, a strike of journeyman cordwainers; a strike of apothecaries; so dear in brawl. All these, having struck, must speak; generally under the open canopy; and pass resolutions;—Lafayette and his patrols watching them suspiciously from the distance. Carlyle, The French Revolution, pt. i. li. vi. ch. v.

'I have seen a many things in my time,' said Mr. Trotman; 'some ribbons and some strikes, and as stiff turn-outs as may be. But to my fancy there is nothing like a strike in prosperous time.'—B. Disraeli, Sybil, li. vi. ch. li.

2. In Geology. Vertical, or oblique direction of strata, the dip and strike being at right angles to one another.

3. Dry measure of capacity; four pecks. See Strickle, with which this word is connected, and, therefore, originally meaning the act of measuring rather than the measure itself.

Whig, cartilage, and bushel, peck, strike, ready at hand.

Five Hundred Points of good Husbandry.
What dowry has she?—Some two hundred bottles,
And twenty strikes of tails.

Benjamin and Fletcher, Two Noble Kinsmen.

Strikeblock, s. See extract.

A strikeblock [in] a plane shorter than the jointer, having its sole made exactly flat and straight, and it is used for the shooting of a short joint.—Norton, Mechanical Exercises.

Striker, s. One who, that which, strikes.

Musick, the most divine striker of the senses.—Sir P. Sidney.

A bishop then must be blameless . . . not given to wine, no striker.—1 Timothy, iii. 3.

The striker must be dense, and in its best velocity.—Sir K. Hygh.

Striking, part. adj. Affecting; surprising.

Though colour be the lowest of all the constituent parts of beauty, yet it is vulgarly the most striking.—Spence, Crith.

We have lost many good things of Cervantes, and other writers, through the tribunal of religion and dinnets. One Amelius Palenarius was sensible of this, and said that the Inquisition was a poniard aimed at the throat of literature. The image is striking, and the observation just; but the ingenious observer was in consequence immediately led to the stake.—I. Disraeli, Curiosities of Literature, Cervantes.

Striking, verbal abs. Act of one who strikes: (in the extracts, old slung for stealing).

The cutting a pocket, or picking a purse is called striking.—R. Greene, Art of Concealing. (Nares by H. and W.)

I must borrow money,
And that some call a striking. Shirley, Gentleman of Venice. (Nares by H. and W.)

Strikingly, adv. In a striking manner; so as to affect or surprise.

The force of many strikingly poetic passages has been weakened or unperceived, because their origin was unknown, unexplored, or misunderstood.—Marton, Preface to Milton's Smaller Poems.

String, s. [A.S. string, streng.]

1. Slender rope; small cord; any slender and flexible band.

Any lower bullet hanging upon the other above it must be conceived as if the weight of it were in that point where its string touches the upper.—Bishop Wilkins, Dædalus.

2. Ribband.

Round Ormond's knee thou test the mystic string.
That makes the knight companion to the king.

Prior, Carmen & culare for the Year 1700.

3. Thread on which things are filed.

Their priests pray by their beads, having a string with a hundred of misdeeds upon it; and the repeating of certain words with them they account meritorious.—Bishop Stillingfleet.

4. Set of things filed on a line.

I have caught two of these dark undermining vermin, and intend to make a string of them, in order to hang them up in one of my papers.—Addison, Spectator.

5. Chord of a musical instrument.

Thus when two brethren strings are set alike,
To move them both, but one of them we strike.

Cowley.

The string that jars
When rudely touch'd, ungrateful to the sense,
With pleasure feels the master's flying fingers,
Swells into harmony, and charms the hearers.

Ross.

Used adjectively.

By the appearance they make in marble, there is not one string instrument that seems comparable to our violin.—Addison.

6. Small fibre.

Duckweed putteth forth a little string into the water, from the bottom. Bacon.

In pulling brown up, the least strings left behind will grow. Mortimer, Husbandry.

7. Nerve; tendon.

The string of his tongue was loosed.—Mark, vii. 35.

The most piteous tale, which in recounting,
His grief grew piteous, and the strings of life
Began to crack. Shakespeare, King Lear, v. 3.

8. Bowstring.

Th' impatient weapon whizzes on the wing,
Sounds the tough horn, and twangs the quiv'ring string.

Pope, Translation of the Iliad, iv. 164.

9. Any concatenation or series: (as, 'a string of propositions').

To have two strings to the bow. To have two views or two expedients; have double advantage, or double security.

No lover has that power
To enforce a desperate amour,
As he that has two strings to 's bow,
And burns for love and money too.

Bulter, Hudibras, iii. 1, 1.

My lord loves music, as we know,
Has always two strings to his bow.

T. Moore, Twopenny Postbag.

String, v. a. pret. string, past part. strung.

1. Furnish with strings.

Has not wise nature strung the legs and feet
With strongest nerves, design'd to walk the street?

Guy, Trivia, iii. 241.

2. Put a stringed instrument in tune.

Here the muse so oft her harp has strung,
That not a mountain rears its head unsung.

Addison.

3. File on a string.

Men of great learning or genius are too full to be exact; and therefore chuse to throw down their pearls in heaps before the reader, rather than be at the pains of stringing them.—Spectator.

4. Make tense.

By chase our long-lived fathers earn'd their food;
Till strung the nerves and purified the blood.

Dryden, Epistle to his kinsman John Dryden, 88.

Stringed, part. adj. Having strings; produced by strings.

Praise him with stringed instruments and organs.

—Psalm, cl. 4.

Divinely warbled voice,
Answering the stringed noise,
As all their souls in blissful rapture took.

Milton, Ode, On the Morning of Christ's Nativity, 97.

Stringent, adj. [Lat. stringens, -entis, pres. part. of stringo—I bind.] Binding; contracting.

What down doth dive
Into the straiten'd canopy, needs must strive
With stringent bitterness, vexation.

Dr. H. More, Song of the Soul, iii. 3, 3.

Stringer, s. One who makes strings for a bow. Obsolete.

Stringers ought more diligently to be looked upon, . . . than either bowyer or fletcher.—Ackson, Zoophilus, h. li.

Stringhalt, less properly Springhalt, s. Sudden twitching and snatching up of the hinder leg of a horse much higher than the other, or an involuntary or convulsive motion of the muscles that extend or bend the hough.

Stringless, adj. Having no strings.

Nothing; all is said;

His tongue is now a stringless instrument.
Words, life, and all, old Lancaster hath spent.

Shakespeare, Richard II. li. 1.

Stringy, adj. Fibrous; consisting of small threads; filamentous.

A plain Indian fan, made of the small stringy parts of roots spread out in a round flat form.—Grew.

By melting expensive sweats, and an obstinate flux of the belly, the stringy parts of the tendons and membranes are left unrecruited.—Sir R. Blackmore.

Strip, v. a. [see under Stripling.]

1. Make naked; deprive of covering: (with of before the thing taken away).

They began to strip her of her clothes when I came in among them.—Sir P. Sidney.

They stript Joseph out of his coat.—Genesis, xxvii. 23.

Scarce credible it is how soon they were stript and laid naked on the ground.—Sir J. Heyward.

Hadst thou not committed Notorious murder on these thirty men
At Askalon, who never did thee harm?

Then, like a robber, stripp'd them of their robes?
Milton, Samson Agonistes, 1185.

You clothe all that have no relation to you, and strip your master that gives you food.—Sir R. L. Strangely.

He left the pillagers, to rapine bred,
Without control to strip and spoil the dead.

Dryden, Palamon and Arcite, l. 139.

A rattling tempest through the branches went,
That stript them bare. Ibid. li. 138.

[He] saw a beauteous maid
With hair dishevel'd, issuing through the shade,
Stript of her clothes.

Id., Theodore and Honoria, 107.

The bride was put in form to bed;
He follow'd stript. Swift.

2. Deprive, generally.

The apostle, in exhorting men to contentment, although they have in this world no more than bare food and raiment, giveth us to understand, that these are even the lowest of things necessary; that, if we should be stript of all these things, without which we might possibly be, yet these must be left.—Hooker, Ecclesiastical Polity.

Now this curious built Phœnix stript,
Returning from her convey, I will strip
Of all her striking matter.

Chapman, Translation of the Odyssey.

We strip and divest ourselves of our own will, and give ourselves entirely up to the will of God.—Duessa.

It is difficult to lead another by words into the thoughts of things, stripp'd of those specific differences we give them.—Locke.

One would imagine these to be the expressions of a man blessed with ease and affluence, not of one just stript of all those advantages, and plunged in the deepest miseries.—Bishop Atterbury.

3. Expose.

The astonish'd vulgar trembled when he tore
The mask from faces never seen before;
He stripp'd the impostors in the noon-day sun,
Shew'd that they follow'd all they seem'd to shun.

Cowper, Exposition.

4. Rob; plunder; pillage: (as, 'A thief stripp'd the house').

That which lays a man open to an enemy, and that which strips him of a friend, equally attacks him in all those interests that are capable of being weakened by the one, and supported by the other.—South, Sermons.

5. Reduce to strips.

If the leaves or dried stocks be stripp'd into small straws, they arise unto amber, wax, and other electrics, no other ways than those of wheat or rye.—Sir T. Browne, Vulgar Errors.

6. Deprive of all.

When some fond easy fathers strip themselves before they lie down to their long sleep, and settle their whole estates upon their sons, has it not been seen that the father has been requited with beggary?—South, Sermons.

7. Cnst off. Rare.

His unkindness,
That stript her from his benediction, turn'd her

To foreign casualties, gave her dear rights
To his daughter's daughters: them things being him. Shakespeare, King Lear, iv. 3.

8. Separate from something adhesive or connected. Rare.

Amongst men who examine not scrupulously their own ideas, and strip them not from the marks men use for them, but confound them with words, there must be endless disputes.—Locke.

With off.

He stripped off his clothes also, and prophesied before Samuel in like manner.—1 Samuel, xii. 24.
Locke helps us to strip off the outward disguise of things, and to behold and judge of them in their own nature.—Watts.

Strip. s. Narrow shred.

A plumed fan may shade thy chalked face,
And lawn stripes thy naked bosom grace.
Bishop Hall, Satires, iv. 4.
These two apartments were hung in close mourning, and only a strip of bays round the other rooms.
—Swift.

The consequence is, that in that spot, wealth was rapidly accumulated, the cultivation of knowledge quickly followed, and this narrow strip of land became the seat of Egyptian civilization; a civilization which, though grossly exaggerated, forms a striking contrast to the barbarism of the other nations of Africa, none of which have been able to work out their own progress, or emerge, in any degree, from the ignorance to which the poverty of nature has doomed them.—Buckle, History of Civilization in England, vol. i. p. 43.

Stripe. s. a.

1. Variegate with lines of different colours.

2. Beat; lash.

Stripe. s.

1. Linear variation of colour.

Gardeners may have three roots among an hundred that are rare, as purple and carnation of several stripes.—Bacon.

2. Shred of a different colour.

One of the most valuable trimmings of their clothes was a long stripe woven upon the garment, called latus clavus.—Arbuthnot.

3. Pattern; manner. Rare.

I shall go on; and first in differing stripe
The flood and's speech thus tune on ocean pipe.
W. Browne, Britannia's Pastoral, (Sarcas by H. and W.)

4. Weal, or discoloration made by a lash or blow.

This cur . . .
That wears my stripes impressed upon him.
Shakespeare, Coriolanus, v. 3.

5. Blow; lash.

A body cannot be so torn with stripes, as a mind with remembrance of wicked actions.—Hayward.
To those that are yet within the reach of the stripes and reproaches of their own conscience, I would address that they would not seek to remove themselves from that wholesome discipline.—*Dr. H.
More, Decay of Christian Piety.*

Stripling. s. [This is noted in the previous editions as a word of uncertain origin.
That strip and stripe are connected, and that this is connected with the two is probable; the sequence of ideas being tearing-off, lashing, peeling off in strips, denuding; stripling itself being a thin object like a strip or stripe, a mere stripe. See Wedgwood.] Youth; one in the state of adolescence.

Thwart the lane,
He, with two striplings, lads, more like to run
The country base than to commit such slaughter,
Made good the passage. Shakespeare, Cymbeline, v. 3.
Compositions on any important subjects are not matters to be wrung from poor striplings, like blood out of the nose, or the plucking of untimely fruit.—
Milton, Tractate on Education.

As when young striplings whip the top for sport,
On the smooth pavement of an empty court;
The wooden engine flies and whirls about.
Dryden, Translation of the Æneid, xl. 523.

As every particular member of the body is nourished with a several qualified juice, so children and striplings, old men and young men, must have divers diets.—Arbuthnot, On the Nature and Choice of Aliments.

We had better . . . take his commands how the stripling is to be dealt with.—Content am I, said the sroher; and first, methinks, I would just, in order to show that we know what belongs to such a case, ask the stripling a few questions. . . . 'I hope at all events,' said the minstrel, 'to have your favour for my son, who is a delicate stripling.'—Sir W. Scott, Castle Dangerous.

Stripling, a slender youth, from strip or stripe.—
G. C. L. (Sir G. O. Lewis), On English Diminutives, Philological Museum, vol. i. p. 638.

If he can't catch a lord, he will hook on to a baronet, or else the old wretch will catch hold of some headstrong young stripling of fashion, and show him 'lits' in various available and inaccessible quarters.—Thackeray, Book of Snobs, ch. xxi.

Used adjectively.

Now a stripling cherub he appears,
Not of the prime, yet such as in his face
Youth smiled celestial.

Milton, Paradise Lost, iii. 636.

Stripping. verbal abs.

1. Divesting; denudation.

2. Of milk. See Strokings.

Strive. v. n. pret. strove, anciently strived;
past part. striven. [Dutch, streven; N.Fr.
estriver.]

1. Struggle; labour; make an effort.

The immutability of God they strive unto, by working after one and the same manner.—Hooker, Ecclesiastical Polity.

Many brave young minds have, through hearing the praises and eulogies of worthy men, been stirred up to nobler like commendations, and so strive to the like deeds.—Spenser.

Strive with me in your prayers to God for me.—
Romans, xv. 30.

So have I strived to preach the gospel.—1 Thid. 20.

Was it for this that Rome's best blood he spilt,
With so much falsehood, so much guilt?

Was it for this that his ambition stroves

To equal Cæsar first, and after Jove?—Cooley.

Our blessed Lord commands you to strive to enter in; because many will fail, who only seek to enter.
—Law.

2. Contest; contend; struggle in opposition to another; (with against or with before the person opposed).

Strive for the truth unto death.—Ecclesiastics,

iv. 20.

Why dost thou strive against him?—Job, xxxiii. 13.

Charge them before the Lord that they strive not about words to no profit.—2 Timothy, ii. 14.

Do as adversaries do to hellaw.

Strive mightily, but eat and drink as friends.
Shakespeare, Twelfth Night, I. 2.

For my part

I will obey the time; it is in vain

To strive against the torrent.

Mansinger, The Roman Actor, I. 1.

Thus does every wicked man that contemns God;
who can save or destroy him who strives with his Maker?—Archbishop Tillotson.

If intestine broils alarm the hive,
For two pretenders off for empire strive.

The vulgar in divided factions jar;
And murmuring sounds proclaim the civil war.

Dryden, Translation of the Georgics, iv. 62.

3. Oppose by contrariety of qualities.

Now private pity strives with public hate,
Reason with rage, and eloquence with fate.

Sir J. Denham, On the Earl of Strafford's Trial and Death.

4. Vie; be comparable to; emulate; contend in excellence.

Not that sweet grove
Of Daphne by Orontes, and the inspired Castalian spring, might with this paradise
Of Eden strive. Milton, Paradise Lost, iv. 272.

Striver. s. One who labours; one who con- tends.

An imperfect striver may overcome sin in some instances; and yet in that do no great matter neither, if he lies down, and goes no further.—
Glaucille, Sermons, p. 46.

Striving. verbal abs.

Avoid foolish questions, and genealogies, and contradictions, and strivings about the law.—Titus, iii. 9.

This is warrantable conflict for trial of our faith;
so that these strivings are not a contending with superior powers.—Sir R. L'Edrange.

Stroke. s.

1. Blow; knock; sudden act of one body upon another.

The oars were alive,
Which to the tune of flutes kept stroke, and made
The water which they beat to follow faster,
As numerous of their strokes.
Shakespeare, Antony and Cleopatra, II. 2.

2. Caress; gentle rub.

His white-maned steeds that bow'd beneath the yoke

He cheer'd to courage with a gentle stroke,

Then urged his fiery chariot on the fax,
And rising, shook his lance in act to throw.

Dryden.

3. Hostile blow.

As cannons overcharged with double cracks,
So they redoubled strokes upon the foe.

Shakespeare, Macbeth, I. 2.

He entered and won the whole kingdom of Naples, without striking a stroke.—Bacon.

Both were of shining steel, and wrought so pure,
As might the strokes of two such arms endure.

Dryden, Palamon and Arcite, II. 175.

I had a long design upon the ears of Carl, but the rogue would never allow me a fair stroke at them, though my penknife was ready.—Swift.

4. Sudden disease or affliction.

Take this purge, thou whom the heav'n's plagues
Have humbled to all strokes.

Shakespeare, King Lear, iv. 1.

5. Sound of the clock.

What is't o'clock?—

Upon the stroke of four.

Shakespeare, Richard III. III. 2.

6. Touch of a pencil.

Oh, lasting as those colours may they shine!
Free as thy stroke, yet faintless as thy line.

Pope, Epistle to Mr. Johnson.

7. Touch; mastery or eminent effort.

Another in my place would take it for a notable stroke of good-breeding, to compliment the reader.

—Sir R. L'Edrange.

The boldest strokes of poetry, when managed artfully, most delight the reader.—Dryden, State of Innocence, preface.

As he purchased the first success in the present war, by forcing into the service of the confederates an army that was raised against them, he will give one of the finishing strokes to it, and help to conclude the great work.—Addison.

A verdict more puts me in possession of my estate; I question not but you will give it the finishing stroke.—Arbuthnot.

8. Effect suddenly or unexpectedly produced.

9. Power; efficiency.

These having equal authority for instruction of the young prince, and well serving, have equal stroke in divers families.—Sir J. Hayward.

Perfectly opaque bodies can but reflect the incident beams; those that are diaphanous refract them too, and that refraction has such a stroke in the production of colours, generated by the trajection of light through drops of water, that exhibit a rainbow through divers other transparent bodies.—
Boyle.

He has a great stroke with the reader when he condemns any of my poems, to make the world have a better opinion of them.—Dryden.

The subtle allusion of the male seed have the greatest stroke in generation.—Ray.

Stroke of grace. Finishing stroke in executing a criminal by breaking on the wheel. Gal- licism.

The victim having once got his stroke-of-grace,
the executioner can be considered as almost done.
There is small interest now in watching his long low moans; not only are his sharper agonies, what convulsive struggles he may make to resist the torture off from him; and how he lies extinct and cold, either wrapt like Cæsar in decorous mantle-folds, or unseemly sunk together, like our that had not the force even to die.—Carlyle, The French Revolution,
pt. II. b. I. ch. I.

Stroke. v. a. [A.S. stracan, stracian.]

1. Rub gently with the hand by way of kind- ness or endearment; soothe.

The senior weaned, his younger shall teach,
More strokes and made of, when ought it doth alle,
More gentle ye make it.

Tamer, Five Hundred Points of Good Husbandry.

Thy praise or dispraise is to me alike;

One doth not stroke me, nor the other strike.

B. Jonson.

He set forth a proclamation, stroking the people with fair promises, and humbling them with in-vectives against the king and government.—Bacon.

He dried the falling dew, and, yet more kind,
He stroked her cheeks.

Dryden, Translation from Ovid, Cinyras and Myrrha.

Come in, my friends, and let us practise death,
Stroke the grim lion till he grow familiar.

Id., Chromerus, iv. 1.

She pluck'd the rising flow'rs, and fed
The gentle beast, and fondly strook his head.

Addison, Translation from Ovid, Rups of Europa.

2. Rub gently in one direction.

Stroker. s. One who rubs gently with the hand; one who attempts to: cure diseases by such application of the hand to the part affected. Ben Jonson figuratively uses the word for a flatterer, this being a Latinism (pulpator—stroker, flatterer).

An eye-witness of several wonderful cures by the famous Irish stroker, Mr. Greatrix.—Thoreby to Bishop Nicholson, Epistolary Correspondence, I.
128: 1690.

Cures worked by Greatrix the stroker, in the mo-memory of our fathers; and those performed at the tomb of Abbe Paris in our own.—Warburton, Sermons, term. xxvii.

Striking. verbal abs.

1. Act of rubbing gently with the hand.

The manner of his cure in those imperfections is somewhat strange: he useth no bindings, but oils and strokes. Sir H. Wotton, Romaine, p. 402.

2. Act of rubbing gently in one direction.

The idle-odd'd cow with patience stand,
Waiting the strokes of the damsel's hand. Gog.

3. In the plural. Last milk that can be drawn from a cow: (Strippings has the same meaning).

Stroll. v. n. [Provincial German, strolchen.]

Wander; ramble; rove; gaul idly.

She's mine, and thine, and strolling up and down. Graciele.

Your wine lock'd up, your butter stroll'd abroad. Pope, Imitations of Horace, b. II. sat. II.

These mothers stroll, to beg sustenance for their helpless infants. Kieft.

- Stroll. s. Ramble: (a low expression; as, 'upon the stroll').

Stroll. s. One who strolls.

1. Vagrant; wanderer; vagabond.

The men of pleasure, who never go to church, form their idea of the piety from a few poor striders they often observe in the streets. Swift.

Two brother hermits, saints by trade,
Disguised in tattered habits, went
To a small village down in Kent;
Where, in the strider's canting strain,
They sang'd from door to door in vain. Id., Bawls and Philemon.

2. Strolling player.

Our Gallic-Encyclopedic friends, again, must have a 'Gaius-Mars, seen of all the world, or universe; and such a scenic exhibition, to which the Coliseum and amphitheatre was but a strider's barn, as this old piece of ours had never or hardly ever beheld. Cicely, The French Revolution, pt. II. b. I. ch. ix.

Strolling. part. adj. Vagrant; itinerant: (common with actor or player).

He was apparently about to proceed to do so, when Lieutenant Tapscott, who had been eyeing him with great curiosity, said with considerable scorn: 'Haven't I seen you at the theatre, sir?' 'Certainly,' replied the unabashed stranger. 'He is a strolling actor,' said the lieutenant, contemptuously, turning to Dr. Stammer. 'He acts in the piece that the officers of the 2nd got up at the Rochester Theatre to-morrow night. You cannot proceed in this affair, Stammer—impossible!' 'Quite!' said the dignified Paym. Dickens, Pickwick Papers, ch. III.

Strong. adj. [A.S. strang.]

1. Vigorous; forceful; of great ability of body.

The man the villain was so fierce and strong,
That nothing was so sturdy his furious force,
He cast him down to ground, and all along Drew him through dirt and mire. Spenser.
Oress the strong to greater strength must yield;
He, with Parthians, were by Raps kill'd. Dryden, Translation of the Æneid, x. 1063.

The Roman constitution of 300 was as short-lived as Simon de Montfort's provision of Oxford, or as some of the strongest measures of the long parliament. Arnold, History of Rome, ch. xvi.

As the first element in a compound.

The strong-wring'd Mercury should fetch thee up,
And set thee by Jove's side. Shakespeare, Antony and Cleopatra, iv. 13.

The Marsian and Sabellian race, Strong-limb'd and stout. Dryden, Translation of the Georgics, II. 230.

2. Fortified; secure from attack.

Within Troy's strong immures
The ravish'd Helen with wanton Paris sleeps. Shakespeare, Troilus and Cressida, prologue.

An army of English engaged between an army of a greater number, fresh and in vigour on the one side, and a town strong in fortification and strong in men on the other. Bacon.

3. Powerful; mighty.

While there was war between the house of Saul and the house of David, Abner made himself strong for the house of Saul. 2 Samuel, III. 4.

The merchant-adventurers bring a strong company, and well understood with rich men and good order, held out bravely. Bacon.

Those that are strong at us may easily bring them to what terms they please. Addison.

The weak, by thinking themselves strong, are induced to proclaim war against that which ruins them; and the strong, by conceiving themselves weak, are thereby rendered as useless as if they really were so. South, Sermons.

4. Supplied with forces: (it has in this sense a very particular construction; we say, 'a thousand strong'; as we say, twenty years old, or ten yards long).

When he was not six-and-twenty strong,
Sick in the world's regard, wretched and low,
My father gave him welcome to the shore. Shakespeare, Henry IV. Part I. iv. 3.

He was, at his rising from Kotel, between six and seven thousand strong. Bacon, History of the Reign of Henry VII.

In Britain's lovely isle a shining strong War in his cause, a thousand beauties strong.
Tieckel, Kipling, from a Lady in England to a Gentleman at Avignon.

5. Violent; forcible; impetuous.

A river of so strong a current, that it suffereth not the sea to flow up its channel. Herlin.

But her own kings she likens to his Thames,
With gentle course devolving fruitful streams;
Screw yet strong, majestic yet sedate,
Swift without violence, without terror great. Prior, Carmen Seculare for the Year 1700.

6. Hale; healthy.

Better is the poor, being sound and strong of constitution, than a rich man that is afflicted in his body. Reclamairens, xxx. 14.

7. Forcibly acting on the imagination.

This is one of the strongest examples of a personation that ever was. Bacon.

8. Ardent; eager; positive; zealous.

Her mother, ever strong against that match,
And drew for doctor Calus, hath appointed,
That he shall smother her away. Shakespeare, Merry Wives of Windsor, iv. 2.

In choice of committees for ripening business for the council, it is better to choose indifferent persons than to make an indifferency, by putting in those that are strong on both sides. Bacon.

The knight is a much stronger Tory in the country than in town, which is necessary for the keeping up his interest. Addison.

9. Full; having any quality in a great degree; affecting the sight forcibly.

By mixing such powders, we are not to expect a strong and full white, such as is that of paper; but some dusky obscure one, such as might arise from a mixture of light and darkness or from white and black, that is, a grey or dun, or russet brown. Sir Isaac Newton, Opticks.

Thus shall there be made two bows of colours, an interior and stronger, by one reflexion in the drops, and an exterior and fainter by two; for the light becomes fainter by reflexion. Id.

10. Potent; intoxicating.

Get strong beer to rub your horses' heels. Swift.

11. Affecting the taste forcibly; rancid.

However, there was plenty of porter in a tin can, and the cheese went a great way, for it was very strong. Dickens, Pickwick Papers, ch. xxxii.

12. Affecting the smell powerfully.

The priory of Cambay's daily food
Is asp, and basilisk, and toad;
Which makes him have so strong a breath,
Each night he stinks a queen to death. Butler, Hudibras, II. 1. 763.

The heat of a human body, as it grows more intense, makes the urine smell more strong. Arbuthnot.

As the first element in a compound.

Add pounded rails and ruses dry,
And with Ceropian thyme, strong-scented century.
Dryden, Translation of the Georgics, IV. 300.

13. Hard of digestion; not easily nutrimental.

Strong meat belongeth to them that are of full age. Hebrews, v. 12.

14. Furnished with abilities for anything.

I was stronger in prophecy than in criticism. Dryden.

15. Valid; confirmed.

In process of time, an ungodly custom grown strong, was kept as a law. Wisdom of Solomon, xiv. 14.

16. Violent; vehement.

In the days of his flesh when he had offered up prayers and supplications with strong crying and tears. Hebrews, v. 7.

The Scriptures make deep and strong impressions on the minds of men; and whosoever denies this, as he is in point of religion atheistical, so he is in understanding brutish. Bishop Curbed.

17. Cogent; conclusive.

Of strong prevail in unhardened youth.
Shakespeare, Midsummer-Night's Dream, I. 1.

What strong cries must they be that shall drown so loud a clamour of impiety? Dr. H. More, Decay of Christian Piety.

The strongest and most important texts are those which have been controverted; and for that very reason, because they are the strongest. Bishop Waterland.

18. Able; skilful; of great force of mind.

There is no English soul
More stronger to direct you than yourself.
Shakespeare, Henry VIII. I. 1.

19. Firm; compact; not soon broken.

Full on his ankle fell the ponderous stone,
Burst the strong nerves, and crash'd the solid bone. Pope.

20. Forcibly written; comprising much meaning in few words.

Take her sweet voice is thy harmonious song,
As high, as sweet, as easy, and as strong. Smith.

Strong-armed. adj. Stronghanded.

John, who was pretty strong-armed, gave him more a squeeze as made his eyes water. Arbuthnot, History of John Bull.

Strong-set. adj. Firmly compacted.

As to his person, he is described to be of middle stature; his body strong-set and bushy. Swift, Character of King Henry I.

Strong-water. s.

1. Distilled spirits.

2. ? Aqua-fortis, i.e. nitric acid and its allied corrosives the sulphuric and muriatic.

Metals receive in readily strongwaters; and strongwaters do readily pierce into metals and stones; and some will touch upon gold, that will not touch upon silver. Bacon, Natural and Experimental History.

Stronghand. s. Force; violence.

When their captain dieth, if the senility should descend to his child, and an infant, another would thrust him out by stronghand, being then unable to defend his right. Spenser, View of the State of Ireland.

They wanting land wherewith to sustain their people, and the Tuscan having more than enough, it was their meaning to take what they needed by stronghand. Sir W. Raleigh.

Stronghold. s. Trustworthy fortress.

In the English, as well as Scotch Chronicles, and in Rymer's Fœdera, occur frequent notices of the different officers intrusted by Edward with the keeping of this renowned stronghold (Dunstan Castle); especially Sir Robert de Clifton; ... his lieutenant, Sir Richard de Thurlow, ... and Sir John de Walton. Sir W. Scott, Castle Dangerous, introduction.

As two words.

It is no matter how things are; so a man observe but the agreement of his own imaginations, and talk conformably, it is all truth; such matter in the air will be as strong holds of truth as the demonstrations of Euclid. Locke.

Strongly. adv. In a strong manner.

1. With strength; powerfully; forcibly.

The colic is an enemy to any plant, because it draweth strongly the fattest juice of the earth. Bacon.

He saw at distance, or the dazzling light
Had flash'd too strongly on his aching sight.
Addison, Translation from Ovid, Story of Phædon.

Water impregnated with salt attenuates strongly. Arbuthnot.

When the attention is strongly fixed to any subject, all that is said concerning it makes a deeper impression. Watts.

2. With strength; with firmness; in such a manner as to last; in such a manner as not easily to be forced.

Great Dunstanus he strongly fortified. Shakespeare, Macbeth, v. 2.

Let the house be built, the place where they offered sacrifices, and let the foundations thereof be strongly laid. Ezra, vi. 3.

3. Vehemently; forcibly; eagerly.

All these accused him strongly. Shakespeare, Henry VIII. II. 1.

The ruinous consequences of Wood's patent have been strongly represented by both houses. Swift.

Strontia. s. In Chemistry and Mineralogy.

Oxide of Strontium: (see extract).

Strontia [is] an earth contained in a mineral, generally of a pale green tint and radiated crystalline texture, found at Strontian in Argyllshire. It is a carbonate of strontia. Strontia is the oxide of a metallic base, the properties of which are very imperfectly known, called strontium; the equivalent of strontia, or oxide of strontium (composed of 44 strontium and 8 oxygen), is 52. It has a caustic taste, an alkaline reaction, and a degree of solubility in water intermediate between lime and baryta. The salts of strontia are generally obtained by dissolving the natural or artificial carbonate in the acids; those which are soluble give the flame of burning bodies a fine rose-red colour: the nitrate of strontia is used for this purpose, and with beautiful effect, in theatrical exhibitions and fireworks. The sulphate of strontia is found native; it is an insoluble white powder when artificially prepared. Some of its native varieties have a pale blue tint, whence the term celestine. Very beautiful crystals of this variety have been found in the new red sand of Clifton and in the neighbourhood of Bristol. A colourless prismatic crystalline variety, of great beauty is found associated with the native sulphur of Sicily.—Brande and Cox, Dictionary of Science, Literature, and Art.

Strontianum. s. In Chemistry. Metal so called. See under Strontia.

Strop. s. [A.S. stropp.]

1. Leather on which a razor is sharpened.

Thank heaven, Pierie Stropum, which hath sent thee a subject, wherein, without derogating from thy rank, (since the honours of the Avenel family are beyond dispute,) thou mayest find a whetstone for thy witty compliments, a strop whereon to sharpen thine acute humor, a butt whereto to shoot the arrows of thy gallantry.—Sir W. Scott, The Monastery, ch. xv.

2. Piece of rope spliced into a circular wreath, and used to surround the body of a block, or for other purposes on board a ship.

Strôphe. s. [Gr. στροφή, from στρίψω = turn.]

Metrical division in lyric poetry founded upon the music, and probably named from the movements which, in the drama at least, accompanied it. Each strophe has a corresponding antistrophe, and when the system is complete, the pair are followed by an epode. This correspondence or correlation, is the fundamental element in the import of the word, which is sometimes used loosely for a long stanza.

The measure of verse used in the chorus is of all sorts, . . . without regard had to strophe, antistrophe, or epode, which were a kind of stanza framed only for the music.—Milton, Samson Agonistes, preface.

I entered a gondola by moonlight: one singer placed himself forwards, and the other aft, and thus proceeded to St. George's. One began the song: when he had ended his strophe the other took up the antistrophe, and so continued the song alternately. Throughout the whole of it, the same notes invariably returned, but, according to the subject-matter of the strophe, they had a greater or smaller stress, sometimes on one, and sometimes on another note, and indeed changed the enunciation of the whole strophe, as the object of the poem altered.—L. Disraeli, Curiousities of Literature, Venice.

Strôsser. s. Trowser.

The Italian close strôsser, nor the French standing collar.—Decker, Gulf's Hornbook. (Naves by H. and W.)

Strout. v. n. [German, strotzen.]

1. Strut.

2. Protuberant: swell out.

The dainty clover grows, of grass the only silke, That makes each nodder strout abundantly with milke.—Drayton, Polyolbion, song xiii.

Strout. v. a. Swell out; puff out; enlarge by affection.

I will make a brief list of the particulars in an historical truth nowise strouted, nor made greater by language.—Harvey.

Stroy. v. a. Destroy.

Diggarden, stroy willow, now may you at ease, Tamer, Five Hundred Points of Good Husbandry.

Structural. adj. Relating to, determined by, structure.

It seems that in each species of organism, there is a margin for functional oscillations on all sides of a mean state, and a consequent margin of structural variations; that it is possible rapidly to push functional and structural changes towards the extreme of this margin in any direction, both in an individual and in a race; but that to push these changes further in any direction, and so to alter the organism as to bring its mean state up to the extreme of the margin in that direction, is a comparatively slow process.—Herbert Spencer, Inductions of Biology.

Structura. s. [Fr.; Lat. structura.]

1. Act of building; practice of building.

His son builds on, and never is content, Till the last farthing is in structura spent.—J. Dryden, Jun., Translation of Juvenal, sat. vii.

2. Manner of building; form; make.

Several have gone about to inform them, but for want of insight into the structura and constitution of the terraqueous globe, have not given satisfaction.—Woodward.

3. Edifice; building.

Behold her structura vast there shows, And Hecatompylos her hundred gates.—Milton, Paradise Lost, iii. 280.

High on a rock of ice the structura lay; Steep its ascent, and slippery was the way.—Pope, Temple of Fame.

Ecclesiastical structurae were perhaps more splendid in France and England; but neither country could pretend to match the palaces and public buildings, the streets flagged with stone, the bridges of the same material, or the commodious private houses of Italy.—Hallam, View of the State of Europe during the Middle Ages, pt. i. ch. iii.

4. Constitution.

Lord Loughborough's . . . decisions evince little of the learning of his profession, and do not even show a very legal structura of the understanding.—Lord Brougham, Historical Sketches of Statesmen of the Reign of George III., Lord Loughborough.

Struggle. v. n.

1. Labour; act with effort; strive; contend; contest.

In the time of Henry VIII. differences of religion tore the nation into two mighty factions, and, under the name of Papist and Protestant, struggled in her bowels with many various evils.—Sir W. Temple.

He had the wisdom to see that the time was not come to struggle with success against such tyranny.—Milton, History of Latin Christianity, b. 2, ch.

Not for internal perfection, but for external embellishments and arrangements, for institutions, constitutions,—for mechanism of one sort or other, do they hope and struggle.—Carlyle, Critical and Miscellaneous Essays, Signs of the Times.

2. Labour in difficulties; be in agonies or distress.

Strong virtue, like strong nature, struggles still, Exerts itself, and then throws off the ill.—Dryden.

'Tis wisdom to beware, And better shun the bait, than struggle in the snare.—Id.

If men struggle through as many troubles to be miserable as to be happy, my readers may be persuaded to be good.—Spectator.

Struggle. s.

1. Labour; effort.

Gray pursued his unfortunate guest with the most queer and outrageous description of his struggles, misery, and poverty. He described how he cleaned the knives when they were first married; and how he used to drag the children in a little cart; how his wife could toss pater-noster; and what parts of his dress she made.—Thackeray, Book of Snobs, ch. xxv.

2. Contest; contention.

When, in the division of parties, men only strove for the first place in the prince's favour, an honest man might look upon the struggle with indifference.—Addison.

It began and ended without any of those unnatural struggles for the chair, which have disturbed the peace of this great city.—Rishup Atterbury.

The Saxons brought with them from their original forests at least as much roughness as any of the nations which overturned the Roman empire; and their long struggle with the Britons could not contribute to polish their manners.—Hallam, View of the State of Europe during the Middle Ages, pt. i. ch. viii.

In the struggle a tablet fell from her bosom on the ground: Arctura perceived and seized it: it was the letter that warning received from Glaucus.—Lord Lytton, Last Days of Pompeii, b. ii. ch. ix.

Favoured by nature we still remain; but in exact proportion as we have been favoured by nature, we have been persecuted by man. After a thousand struggles; after acts of heroic courage that Rome has never equalled; deeds of divine patriotism that Athens and Sparta, and Carthage, have never excelled; we have endured fifteen hundred years of supernatural slavery, during which, every device that can degrade or destroy man has been the destiny that we have sustained and baffled.—L. Disraeli, Coningsby, b. iv. ch. xi.

3. Agony; contortions of extreme distress.

Notable only are his sharper agonies, what convulsive struggles he may make to cast the torture off from him; and then finally the last departure of life itself.—Carlyle, The French Revolution, pt. ii. h. i. ch. i.

Struggler. s. One who struggles; one who contends; striver.

The Jews were hard-hearted and malicious strugglers against the truth.—Martin, Marriage of Priests, h. n. l.: 1390.

Struggling. part. adj. Striving with labour and effort.

In the struggling condition of Spanish liberty under Charles I. the crown began to neglect answering the petitions of cortes, or to use unsatisfactory generalities of expression.—Hallam, View of the State of Europe during the Middle Ages, ch. iv.

Struggling. verbal abs. Act of striving or contending.

No man is guilty of an act of intemperance but he might have forbore it, not without some trouble from the struggles of the contrary habit; but still the thing was possible.—South, Sermons.

Strum. v. n. Bring out the notes of a stringed instrument monotonously, or with more perseverance than skill.

Struma. s. [Lat.] Scrofula.

A gentleman had a struma about the instep, very hard and deep about the tendons.—Wicoma, Surgery.

Strumming. verbal abs. Persevering practice on a stringed instrument.

But the Carnival's coming,

Oh, Thomas Moore!

But the Carnival's coming,

Oh, Thomas Moore!

Masking and humming,

Fiddling and drumming,

Guitarring and strumming,

Oh, Thomas Moore!

Byron.

Piano strumming begins at six o'clock in the morning; it lasts till level fast, while but a minute's intermission, when the instrument changes hands, and Miss Emily practises in place of her sister Mary Maria. In fact, the constant instrument never stops: when the young ladies are at their lessons, Miss Wirt hummers away at those stunning variations, and keeps her amiable finger in exercise.—Thackeray, Book of Snobs, ch. xxvi.

Strumous. adj. Scrofulous.

How to treat them when strumous, scirrhous, or cancerous.—Wicoma, Surgery.

A plandulous consumption, such as does not affect the lungs with a rupture of its vessels, and coughing up blood, is produced by strumous or scrofulous humours.—Sir R. Blackmore.

Strumpet. s. [N Fr. strupre; Lat. stuprum.]

Whore; prostitute.

Never could the strumpet, With all her double vice, art, and nature, Owe sir my temper; but this virtuous maid Subdues me quite.—Shakespeare, Measure for Measure, ii. 2.

If to preserve this vessel for my lord From any other foul, unlawful touch, Be not to be a strumpet, I am now.—Id., Othello, iv. 2.

For my honour

I would not be his strumpet; and how low Can be dispensed with to become his wife, To me's a riddle.—Mumfry, The Roman Actor, i. 1.

Common fame is as false and impudent as a common strumpet.—Sir R. F. Estlin.

Honour had his due;

Before the lady press my vows were tied: So I came not a strumpet, but a bride.—Depledge, Signorina and Guinevere, 403.

Strumpet. adj. Like a strumpet; false; inconstant.

How like a yunker, or a prodigal The scarlet lark puts from her native bay, Hung'd and embraced by the strumpet wind! How like a prodigal doth she return, Lean, rent, and leagued by the strumpet wind!—Shakespeare, Merchant of Venice, ii. 4.

Strumpet. v. n. Make a whore; debauch.

If we two be one, and then deny false, I do digest it.—Id.

Being strumpeted by the son of Error, ii. 2.

Gilded honour shamefully:—Id.

And maiden virtue rode y strumpet.—Id.

Id., Sonnets, lxxi.

Oh! never may

Fair law's white reverend name be strumpeted, To warrant thefts!—Donne, Poems, p. 133.

Strumetrum. s. Tum-tom.

The strumetrum is made somewhat like a cittern; most of those that the Indians use are made of a large gourd cut in the middle, and a thin board laid over the hollow, and which is fastened to the sides; this serves for the belly, over which the strings are placed.—Dampier, Topog. (Rich.)

Strut. s. [F.] In Architecture. Kind of brace.

When a brace is used to support a rafter, it is called a strut.—Géol., Encyclopædia of Architecture, Glossary.

Strut. v. n. [German, strotzen.]

1. Walk with affected dignity; swell with stateline.

Adore our errors, laugh at us while we strut: To our confusion.—Shakespeare, Antony and Cleopatra, iii. 11.

Does he not hold up his head and strut in his gait?—Id., Merry Wives of Windsor, i. 4.

Thou thinkst strut not paint.

Yet art thou with shrunk up and old.—B. Jonson.

By this the widow had unbar'd the door,

And Chanticleer went strutting out before.—Dryden, The Cock and the Fox, 431.

It was soon rumoured that one of those warriors, who had brought on England guilt, for which she actually, in sackcloth and ashes, implored God not to enter into judgment with her, was strutting about the streets of her capital and boasting that he should ere long command her armies.—Macaulay, History of England, ch. xiv.

The poor silly jays, who trail a peacock's feather behind them, and think to simulate the gorgeous bird whose nature it is to strut on palace terraces, and to flaunt his magnificent fan-tail in the sunshine.—Thackeray, Book of Snobs, ch. xx.

2. Swell; protuberance.

The pow'r appressed, with winds sufficed the soil.
The belling canvas struffed with the gale. Dryden.
Strut, v. a. Swell out; make tumid.
Are not my struffed vessels full of wine?
Otis Sacra, Poema, p. 33: 1618.

Strut, s. Affectation of statelyness in the walk.
Certain gentlemen, by smirking countenances and an unmanly strut in their walk, have got preference. Swift.
Their manner of walking is truly theatrical; but this strut is probably the effect of the capote, or cloak, depending from one shoulder.—Byron, Note B. on the second canto of Childe Harold.
While Buckingham, in the antechamber, was mimicking the pompous Castilian strut of the secretary, for the diversion of Mistress Stuart, this stately don was ridiculing Ursula's sober comeliness to the king within, till his majesty cried with laughter and the chamberlain with vexation.—Macaulay, Critical and Historical Essays, Sir W. Temple.
Nearer one of us domestic birds but imitates the lanky pavonine strut, and shrill grunted scream.—Thackeray, Book of Snobs, ch. xx.

Strutter, s. One who struts; one who swells with statelyness; one who is blown up with self-conceit; bragger.
We have seen what a mere nothing it is, that this strutter has pronounced with such sonorous rhetoric.—Annals of the Illustration of the Pre-existence of Souls, 1682.
Strutting, part. adj. Bulging out.
As thy strutting legs with money rise,
The love of gain is of an equal size. Dryden.
Nor absent Phyllis could my care supply.
To house and feed by hand my wailing launds,
And drain the strutting udders of their duns.
Id., Translation of Virgil, Eclogues, vii. 20.

Strychnine, s. Strychnine.
Strychnine, s. In Chemistry and Pharmacy.
Active alkaloid, highly poisonous, principle of the Strychnos nux vomica.
Strychnine acts especially as an excitant of the motor filaments of the spinal cord, causing tonic muscular contractions, as in tetanus from spinal arachnitis, or from the distasteful action of a wound.—Dr. J. H. Bennett, Lectures on Medicine.
Stub, s. [A.S. styh, steb.]
1. Thick short stock of a tree left when the rest is cut off.
Dante's guided the horses so ill, that the wheel coming over a great stub of a tree, overturned the coach. Sir P. Sidney.
All about, old stocks and stubs of trees,
Whereon nor fruit nor leaf was ever seen,
Did lounge upon the rugged rocky knees. Spenser.
To lay at the stub is the best for the buyer,
More timely provision, the cheaper is free.
Tusser, Five Hundred Poems of Good Husbandry.
Upon cutting down of an old timber tree, the stub hath put out sometimes a tree of another kind.—Bacon, Natural and Experimental History.
We have
Live on tough roots and stubs; to thirst inured
More than the camel, and to drink so far;
Men to much misery and hardship born.
Milton, Paradise Regained, l. 338.
Or woods with knots and knees deform'd and old.
Dryden, Palamon and Arcite, ii. 635.

2. Log; block.
You shall have more ado to drive our dullest and briciest youth, our stocks and stubs, from the infinite desire of such a happy pasture, than we have now to haul our choicest wits to that amine feast of jaw-thistles and brambles.—Milton, Tractate on Education.
Stub, v. a. Force up; extirpate.
His two tusks serve for fighting and feeding; by the help whereof he stabs up edible roots out of the ground, or tears off the bark of trees.—Grew, Micrographia.
A person of our town,
To mend his barn, cut Bauris down;
At which the land to be well-wed
How much the other tree was grieved,
Trew scrubby, dry'd a-top, was stunted;
So the next person stubb'd and burnt it.
Swift, Baulis and Philomena.

Stubbed, adj.
1. Truncated; short and thick.
A pain he in his head-plees feels,
Against a stubbed tree he reels,
And up went poor Holgoblin's heels.
Drayton, Nymphidia.
To spite the coy nymphs,
Hang upon our stubbed horns,
Garlands, ribbons, and fine posies. B. Jonson.

2. Harsh; not delicate; not nice.

The harshness of stubbed vulgar constitutions renders them huxible of a thousand things, that fret and gall them delicate people, who, as if their skin was proofed off, feel to the quick every thing that touches them.—Bishop Berkeley, Siris, § 103.

Stubble, s. [N.Fr. estouble; Dutch, stoppel; Lat. stipula.] Stalks of corn left in the field by the reaper.
This suggested
At some time, when his soaring insolence
Shall reach the people, will be the fire
To kindle their dry stubble, and their blaze
Shall darken him for ever.
Shakespeare, Coriolanus, ii. 1.
His succeeding years afford him little more than the stubble of his own harvest.—Dryden.
Thrice happy Dick, employ'd in threshing stubble,
Thy toil is less'd and thy profits double. Swift.
After the first crop is off they plow in the wheat stubble.—Mortimer, Husbandry.
As the first element in a compound.
If a small red flower in the stubble-fields, called the winecup, open in the morning, be sure of a fair day.—Bacon.

Stubblegoose, s. Goose fed on the stubbles.
I'll make you a stubble-goose.
Bennett and Fletcher, Bloody Brother.

Stubborn, adj. [obstinate, unbending like a stub.]
1. Obstinate; inflexible; contumacious.
Stubborn Atin in their stubborn mind
Coals of contention and hot vengeance kind.
Spenser.
Then stood he neere the doore, and proud to draw
The stubborn bow, thrice tried, and thrice sav'd.
Chapman.
The queen is obstinate,
Stubborn to justice, apt to accuse it, and Dudainful to be tried by 't.
Shakespeare, Henry VIII., ii. 4.
He believ'd he had so humbled the garrison, that they would be no longer so stubborn.—Lord Clarendon, History of the Grand Rebellion.
I'll not flatter this tempestuous king,
But work his stubborn soul a nobler way. Dryden.

2. Persisting; persevering; steady.
All this is to be had only from the epistles themselves, with stubborn attention, and more than common application.—Locke.
3. Stiff; not pliable; inflexible; not easily admitting impression.
Love softens me, and blows up fires which pass Through my tough heart, and melt the stubborn mass. Dryden.
Take a plant of stubborn oak,
And labour him with many a sturdy stroke.
Id., Translation of the Georgics, iii. 638.

4. Hardy; firm.
Patient under torturing pain,
Where stubborn stocks would complain. Swift.
5. Harsh; rough; rugged.
We will not oppose any thing that is hard and stubborn, but by a soft answer deaden their force.—Barnes.
6. In all its uses it commonly implies something of a bad quality, though Locke has catchrestically used it in a sense of praise.

Stubbornly, adv. In a stubborn manner; obstinately; contumaciously; inflexibly.
Stubbornly he did repugn the truth,
About a certain question in the law.
Shakespeare, Henry VI. Part I., iv. 1.
He wilfully neglects his book, and stubbornly refuses any thing he can do.—Locke.
No close they cling, so stubbornly retire,
Their love's more violent than the chymist's fire.
Garth.

Stubbornness, s. Attribute suggested by Stubborn; obstinacy; vicious stoutness; contumacy; inflexibility: (Dryden has used it in commendation).
Happy is your grace,
That can translate the stubbornness of fortune
Into so quiet and so sweet a style.
Shakespeare, As you like it, ii. 1.
He chose a course least subject to envy, between stiff stubbornness and dilly dattory.—Sir J. Hayward.
Patriots, in peace, assert the people's right,
With noble stubbornness resisting might. Dryden.
Stubbornness, and an obstinate disobedience, must be mastered with blows.—Locke.
It failed, partly by the accidents of a storm, and partly by the stubbornness or treachery of that colony for whose relief it was designed.—Swift.

Stubby, adj. Short and thick; short and strong.
The base is surrounded with a garland of black and stubby bristles.—Grew, Micrographia.

Stubble, s. Nail broken off; short thick nail.

Stucco, s. [Italian; Fr. stuc.] Gypsum (plaster of Paris) plaster for walls.
Palladian walls, Venetian doors,
Grottesco roofs, and stucco floors.
Pope, Imitations of Horace, b. ii. sat. vi.

The plaster stone of the Paris basin contains about twelve per cent. of carbonate of lime. This body, ground and mixt with water, forms an adhesive mortar much used in building, as it dries very speedily. Works executed with pure gypsum never become so hard as those made with the calcareous kind; and hence it may be proper to add a certain portion of white shaken lime to our calcined gypsum, in order to give the stucco this valuable property. Coloured stuccos of great solidity are made by adding in a clear solution of glue, any desired colouring matter, and mixing in a proper quantity calcined calcareous gypsum.—Ure, Dictionary of Arts, Manufactures, and Mines.

Stucco, v. a. Plaster with stucco.

Stuccosed, part. adj. Plastered with stucco.
Palaces, as adorned with tapestry, are here contrasted with lowly sheds and smoky rafters. A modern poet would have written stuccosed halls.—Warton, Notes on Milton's Smaller Poems.

Stuck, s. Thrust.
I had a pass with a rapier, scabbard and all; and he gives me the stick in with such a mortal motion, that it is inevitable.—Shakespeare, Twelfth Night, iii. 4.

Stook, s. Stook.
Some paid their tythes in sheaf scattered about the field; some in stooks and cocks; others paid them, not in the field, but in the barn.—Dr. Colbatch, Case of Proctor, p. 101: 1741.

Stud, s. [A.S. studu; probably a Slavonic word; stado in Polish, and stodas in Lithuanic being the ordinary terms for herds, flocks, coveys, &c. of beasts and birds.] Collection of breeding horses and mares.
In the studs of Ireland, where care is taken, we see horses bred of excellent shape, vigour, and size.—Sir W. Temple.

Stud, s. [A.S. stod.]
1. Prop.
Sect not thilke same hawthorne studie,
How braggi he begins to buddle,
And utter his tender head 't.
Spenser, Shepherd's Calendar, March.
They that build houses of clay, must every where place studs, and pieces of timber and wood, to strengthen the building.—Uller, Golden Remains, p. 144.

It is a gross mistake in architecture, to think that every small stud bears the main stress and burthen of the building, which lies indeed upon the principal timbers.—Jeremy Taylor, Artificial Happiness, p. 11.
A barn in the country, that hath one single stud, or one bright of studs to the roof, is two shillings a foot.—Mortimer, Husbandry.

2. Nail with a large bright head driven in for ornament; any ornamental knob or protuberance.
Handles were to add,
For which he now was making studs.
Chapman, Translation of the Iliad.
A belt of straw, and ivy buds,
With coral clasps and amber studs. Marlowe.
Crystal and myrrhine cups embow'd with gems,
And studs of pearl.
Milton, Paradise Regained, iv. 110.

Upon a plane are several small oblong studs, placed regularly in a quincunx order.—Woodward, On Fossils.
A desk he had of curious work,
With glittering studs about. Swift.

Stud, v. a. Adorn with studs or shining knobs.
Thy horses shall be trapp'd,
Their harness studded all with gold and pearl.
Shakespeare, Taming of the Shrew, induction, sc. 2.

As the second element in a compound.
A silver-studded ax alike bestow'd.
Dryden, Translation of the Æneid, v. 404.

Studdery, s. Stud. Rare.
For whose breeds and maintenance . . . king Henry the Eighth erected a noble studery.—Holinshead, Description of England, b. ii. ch. xii.
The king of that nation [Pala in Syria] had usually a studerie of 30,000 mares and 300 stallions, as Strabo dooth remember.—Ibid., b. iii. c. i. (Rich.)

Studding-sail, s. [P.] In Navigation. Light sail set temporarily outside the principal sails of a vessel.

6. Any mixture or medicine.

I did compound for her
A certain stuff, which, being taken, would wiae
The present power of life.

Shakespeare, Cymbeline, v. 6.

7. Cloth or texture of any kind.

A writer of the thirteenth [century] asserts that all the world was clothed from English wool wrought in Flanders. This, indeed, is an exaggerated vanity; but the Flemish stuffs were probably sold wherever the sea or a navigable river permitted them to be carried.—Hallam, View of the State of Europe during the Middle Ages, pt. II. ch. ix.

8. Textures of wool thinner and slighter than cloth.

Let us turn the wools of the land into cloaths and stuffs of our own growth, and the hemp and flax growing here into linen cloth and cordage.—
Bacon, Advice to Villiers.

9. Mutter or thing. Contemptuous.

O proper stuff!
This is the very painting of your fear.

Shakespeare, Macbeth, III. 4.

Such stuff as madmen
Tongue and brain not.

Id., Cymbeline, v. 4.

At this stuffy stuff
The large Achilles, on his prest bed loling,
From his deep chest laughs out a loud applause.

Id., Troilus and Cressida, I. 2.

Please not thyself the flatt'ring crowd to hear,
This fulsome stuff to feed thy itching ear.

Dryden, Translation of P. Rains, iv. 123.

If nature could not, anger would indite
Such woful stuff as I or Shallow write.

Id., Translation of Juvenal, I. 121.

With all this paltry stuff
She sits tormenting every guest.

Swift, Journal of a Modern Lady.

The free things that among rivers pass for wit and spirit, must be shocking stuff to the ears of persons of delicacy.—Richardson, Clarissa.

STUFF. v. a.

1. Fill very full with anything.

When we're stuff'd
These pipes, and these conveyances of blood
With wine and feeding, we have suppler souls.

Shakespeare, Coriolanus, v. 1.

Each thing beheld did yield
Our admiration: shelves with chosen homin;
Sheds stuff with lambes and goats distinctly kept.

Chapman, Translation of the Odyssey.

Though plenteous, all too little seems
To stuff this war, this vast un-indelous corps.

Milton, Paradise Lost, x. 100.

Sometimes this crook drew inward-lungs adown,
And stuff'd her again wide with milk so brown.

Gay, Shepherd's Week, Friday, 40.

2. Thrust into anything.

Put roses into a glass with a narrow mouth, stuffing them close together, but without bruising,
and they retain smell and colour fresh a year.—
Bacon, Natural and Experimental History.

3. Fill by putting into anything.

Grief fills the room up of my absent child,
Lies in his bed, walks up and down with me,
Stuff's out his vacant garments with his form.

Shakespeare, King John, III. 1.

With inward arms the dry machine they load,
And iron bowsels stuff the dark abode.

Dryden, Translation of the Æneid, II. 23.

Obnoxious banes lay by
Two cushions stuff'd with straw, the seat to raise.

Id., Translation from Ovid, Metamorphoses and Phædon.

4. Swell out by putting something in.

I will be the man that shall make you great. I cannot perceive how, unless you give me your diamond, and stuff me out with straw.—Shakespeare,

Henry IV. Part II. v. 5.

Let the gods for sin
Should with a swelling drossy stuff thy skin.

Dryden, Translation of Persius, v. 252.

5. Fill with something improper or superfluous.

It is not usual among the best patriots to stuff
the report of particular lives with matter of public record.—Sir H. Wotton.

These accusations are stuff'd with odious generals, that the profane school make good.—Lord Clarendon,

History of the Grand Rebellion.

A week of such fatherly government as that of Lewis would have raised all England in arms from Northumberland to Cornwall. That there might be abundance at Paris, the people of Normandy and Anjou were stuffing themselves with nettles.—Macaulay,

History of England, ch. xx.

6. Obstruct the organs of scent or respiration.

These gloves the count sent me; they are an excellent perfume.—I am stuff'd, comin, I cannot smell.—Shakespeare, Much Ado about Nothing, III. 4.

7. Fill next with something of high relish.

She went for parody to stuff a rabbit.—Shakespeare,

Taming of the Shrew, IV. 4.

8. Form by stuffing.

An eastern king put a judge to death for an inequitous sentence, and ordered his hide to be stuffed into a cushion, and placed upon the tribunal.—
Swift.

9. Prepare the skins of animals for museums or collections, by mounting them on a rigid framework to represent the skeleton, and filling up the parts with soft matter and antiseptics, so as to retain the shape.

Just before his third journey Mr. Waterston takes leave of Sir Joseph Banks, and speaks of him with affectionate regret. 'I saw' (says Mr. W.) 'with
